The distinguished guest at the meeting of the board was our own Commissioner Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke, who visited Northfield on his final stretch of a strenuous itinerary which had covered many sections of the country. His time since his arrival in America, Oct. 11, had been shared with Canadian Baptists and Southern Baptists, as he represents all three organizations. In an illuminating report he described conditions in Europe as he had observed them, calling attention to the improvement in economic conditions in various countries, with the pitiful exception of Russia. He painted a most dismal picture of conditions which confront the Russian people during the coming winter. Starvation is inevitable, since the harvest of 1922 has been no larger than that of 1921. By January people will be dying in multitudes from lack of food. He outlined relief measures being undertaken, and urged with all his power that our denomination raise sufficient money to finance the relief work of the Foreign Mission Society for another year. An opportunity will be given our people in January to take a special offering for this purpose. He expressed deep gratification over the magnificent response being made to the appeal to forward clothing on the second "Ship of Fellowship." The announcement had previously been made that more than 4000 packages had already been sent to the warehouse, and that a preliminary estimate showed that nearly 1000 bales would constitute the shipment. Dr. Rushbrooke also told of the encouraging progress being made by the Baptists on the various countries and emphasized the importance of the great meeting of the Baptist World Alliance at Stockholm in July, 1923. It is hoped that there will be at least 500 delegates from Northern Baptists to this important convention.

Dr. Taylor's Report

Dr. Frederick E. Taylor, who with Dr. Carter Helm Jones had made an evangelistic tour of Czecho-Slovakia during the past summer, presented his formal report at the Tuesday evening session. In his vigorous picturesque style he described the great opportunity in that new republic, stating that in his judgment "Czecho-Slovakia presents a challenge and an opportunity to American Baptists that promises better results than almost any other European field at the present time." Two extracts from his report will be of interest to the readers of THE BAPTIST and are quoted herewith:

"This is the strategic hour for us as Baptists, with our ideals of religious liberty to foster in every way possible the Baptist cause in that country. This is the challenge of a country white unto the harvest. After our first meeting in Mukacevo we realized the heart hunger of these people for the gospel. How they listened and how they responded! The people would crowd the largest building;

they would stand for hours, and would stay as long as we would preach. Often it was difficult to get away after a three-hour service. Their gratitude was pathetic. They would seek in every way to show their appreciation. They would almost quarrel over the privilege of carrying our baggage. They would come to the station and meet us and again bid us Godspeed, while the tears in their eyes indicated their sadness at our departure. I have never preached in a foreign country before but I doubt if there is any other land where the people are so ready for the gospel as they are in Czecho-Slovakia.

"In every place scores and hundreds responded to the invitation to accept Christ as Savior and Lord. The terms of the invitations given by Dr. Jones and myself were as hard as we could possibly make them. Although the people knew that persecution was almost certain if they confessed Christ and joined a Baptist church, they boldly and gladly confessed him. The only danger now is that we shall see a great harvest of souls and no provision to care for them.

Died of Starvation

"Every minister in Czecho-Slovakia suffers daily for the necessities of life. The war has left its mark on all of them. Dr. Prochatz came back from years of service in the war to find that his father and mother had died of starvation. Dr. Tolar spent four years in the army and much of that time in prison. Once when crossing a river after hours of terrible marching he felt as though it would be glorious to drop over into the water and die. It would be such a relief after the terrible trial and suffering he had endured. Just then an old man seized him and said, 'Don't let me drown, I can make it.' Dr. Tolar summoned all his reserve strength and succeeded in saving the man and himself. Indeed, whether he realizes it or not that is exactly what he is always doing, saving others at any cost to himself. When he returned he found his wife dying of starvation. She had given the rations of food that were hers to the three children. She saved them and died two weeks after he returned. None of these people are bitter. They accept their condition calmly and carry on. Without money, without books, without buildings, these worthy ministers are toiling to give Christ to the people, and the church members are just as loyal and brave as their leader.

"They are persecuted constantly for the faith. Down at Mukacevo I talked to a cultured gentleman who had lost practically everything he had, including his home, because he had become Protestant. At the same place a woman, who could speak English because she had spent several years in America, told me how her husband had just been discharged from the position of caretaker of a great castle, after many years of faithful service, because he had confessed Christ and united with the Baptist church. With the tears coming down her face she said, 'It is hard to be a Christian here.' Yet none of them would deny their faith nor do these persecutions deter others. Although they know the danger they come out boldly for Christ."

Another report to which the board gave extended consideration was that by Foreign Secretary J. C. Robbins, describing his observations on his secretarial visit to the British India missions last year. His description of mission stations was so vivid and his outline of problems and opportunities was so clear that members of the board in their imagination could see the places that he saw, feel the challenge of the opportunities as he felt them, sympathize with the missionaries in their problems as he did and realize what wonderful blessing God has given to the work of the missionaries in India and what a bright future is before the work if the denomination will prayerfully and financially give it adequate support. His report has been published in book form by the Publication Society, under the title "Following the Pioneers." Every Baptist interested in missionary activity in India ought to have a copy of this book.

It was a pleasure to have Dr. J. Y. Aitchison, director of the Board of Promotion, at this meeting. He brought encouraging and optimistic reports from the field, stating that there was wide interest on the part of our people in the work of the denomination and that the fine spirit which had prevailed at the various state conventions gives assurance that the financial obligations for the work of the current year would be met successfully.

Doubtless the most sacred hour during the whole series of sessions came when four candidates appeared before the board and requested appointment as missionaries. They were Mr. and Mrs. James W. Gainfort and Mr. and Mrs. Ralph C. Ostergren. With sympathetic interest the board listened to their stories of Christian experience and call to missionary service. If only the entire denomination might have the privilege of sitting with the board during such an occasion; might feel the deep spiritual atmosphere that pervades the entire session; and might experience the recognized presence of Christ who becomes very real and near during the hour when young men and women place themselves unreservedly on the altar of missionary service. It was a solemn occasion for these young people who were appointed unanimously as missionaries of our Foreign Mission Society. With simple quiet dignity Chairman Anderson addressed them and welcomed them into the fellowship of the society, telling them that they were joining a noble company of men and women and that they could depend on the prayers of the churches at home for the success of their work. It remains for these churches at home to substantiate Dr. Anderson's promise. With an inspiring, tender prayer commending these young people to the Fatherly care of God and his journeying mercy Dr. Hagstrom brought this sacred hour to a close. All realized that the presence of Christ himself had been in their midst.

Dollar Day

By ABBY GUNN BAKER

"THE last lap of the race," as Mrs. Montgomery expressed it in a recent number of Missions, for the Seven Union Christian Colleges of the Orient is on, and Washington's part in the event is to be of a decidedly signal character.

It will be remembered that the race started in Washington last year at the time the college day luncheons were inaugurated, which are still being given in the leading cities of the country. At that time churches of nearly all denominations of the Capital City united in a campaign for the seven Union Christian Colleges and succeeded in raising $25,000. Now Washington is having her full share in the closing triumphs that are being staged in all parts of the country to finish the work for the colleges.

Mr. Rockefeller's gift of $1,000,000 from the Laura Spelman Rockefeller Fund to the Union Colleges, provided the women of the United States would raise two million, is too well known to be repeated. To obtain the remainder of the amount before the time limit on the Rockefeller gift expires, Jan. 1, 1923, Mrs. Peabody, chairman of the building committee for the colleges, devised plans for inaugurating a day of dollar gifts, which by a nation-wide popular movement would bring in all money that is still lacking. She selected Saturday, Dec. 9, as the date of the Dollar Day, and the project is in full swing all over the country to make the day such a splendid success that it will result in becoming a million dollar day.

A short time ago Mrs. Peabody came to the capital and laid before the government officials the greatness of this adventure in international friendship, whereby the people of the United States were putting $3,000,000 in educational institutions, seven high standard colleges and medical schools for the girls of India, China and Japan. "Mr. Secretary," said Mrs. Peabody and a member of her committee who was with her, "We have secured two million of the three million dollars necessary to put up the building and equip these colleges. There is no question but what the people of the country will give the other million provided we can give the plan the publicity it needs to reach them. Now, how could

The Manly Man

THE world has room for the manly man with the spirit of manly cheer; The world delights in the man who smiles when his eyes keep back the tear; It loves the man who, when things go wrong, can take his place and stand. With his face to the fight and his eyes to the light, and toil with a willing hand.

The manly man is the country's need, and the moment's need, forsooth, With a heart that beats to the pulsing tread of the allied leagues of truth; The world is his, and it waits for him and it leaps to hear the ring Of the blows he strikes and the wheels he turns and the hammers he dares to swing; It likes the forward look in his face, the poise of his noble head, And the onward lunge of his tireless will and the sweep of his dauntless tread.

Hurrah for the manly man who comes with sunlight on his face, And the strength to do and the will to dare and the courage to find his place! The world delights in the manly man, and the weak and evil flee When the manly man goes forth to hold his own on land or sea!

—American Israelite.

publicity be obtained in a better way than by a radio broadcasting that would be nation-wide?"

"It is an international adventure in education as well as friendship, my dear madam," replied the wise and courteous secretary. And then after much thought and consideration, much planning and manipulation it was arranged through our broad-minded commissioner of education, John J. Tigert, that there would be sent out through the Arlington Radio, the largest radio broadcasting station in the world except the one at Paris, a story of the seven colleges and the plan of the Dollar Day.

As the matter developed there will be two evenings devoted to nation-wide broadcasting of the Dollar Day plan for the Union Christian Colleges. On Monday evening, Dec. 4, the great broadcasting station at Arlington will be used. Mrs. Coolidge, wife of the vice-president of the United States, will introduce the speaker who will represent Dr. Ida Scudder to the people of the nation in the interest of the colleges. Then over the Arlington radio the story of the seven colleges will be told and also some of Miss Scudder's experiences as president of one of the seven colleges, the Woman's Medical School at Vellore, India.

The Story Broadcasted

On Saturday evening, Dec. 3, the radio broadcasting will be done through the courtesy of Woodward and Lothrop who generously offered their big radio broadcasting station for the colleges. Bishop William F. McDowell will make an introductory address introducing the colleges and presenting Dr. Scudder. That indefatigable missionary physician will then tell the people of the country the story of the seven Women's Union Christian Colleges, three in India, three in China and one in Japan. On that same evening Dr. Mott will speak for the colleges at a New York broadcasting station. Dr. Robert Speer will speak in the same manner at a station in New Jersey and at the same time well-known speakers will broadcast the story of the colleges from Pittsburgh, Chicago, Denver, Seattle and San Francisco.

In addition to this through the Associated Press an announcement of the plan and a story of Dollar Day will be sent out by that far-reaching medium.

On Sunday, Dec. 3, Dr. Scudder will speak for the colleges at several important places in Washington. At the Sunday school hour in the morning she appears before the Burrall Class of Calvary Baptist Church. During the morning services she will speak at Foundry Methodist Church. In the afternoon a mass meeting will be held at Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church, when leading officials, church, business and club women will be present and where an audience of 1500 people will greet her. In the evening she will be honor guest at the famous Episcopal school for girls, the Cathedral, on the heights of Georgetown.

Do you ask how the plan for the Dollar Day is to be worked out? In the same way that has been used by the Red Cross and the Near East Relief—dollar gifts from the millions! Every one who reads these lines is going to give, on Saturday, Dec. 9, at least one dollar toward these seven wonderful Union Christian Colleges. Moreover, will not every one try to get some one else to give also in order that the Dollar Day will become the Million Dollar Day?

The Carey Mission Centennial

By BLANCHE GLASS

THE BAPTISTS of Niles, Mich., had an unusual experience Oct. 19-22—an experience full of memories, reverence, pride and happiness. They have been celebrating the centennial of the founding of Carey Mission, the site of which is located about a mile and a quarter straight west of the Baptist church.

On Oct. 9, 1822, Issac McCoy, a Baptist missionary at Fort Wayne, Ind., and a group of few faithful followers started out to establish an Indian mission in what is now southern Michigan. After traveling for more than one hundred miles through the woods with hardly a trail to follow, with lots of mud as much of the time it rained, with Indians lurking around—enduring hardships that all pioneers endured, on Oct. 19 this little band chose the site mentioned above for its mission. The next day divine services were held and on the following day earnest work began. Trees were cut and log cabins built. Issac McCoy named the mission Carey in memory of the great English missionary.

After a month Issac McCoy returned to Fort Wayne for his wife, Christiana, and family, and for the families of the workers and other interested people. It took a month to make the trip and again on the nineteenth of the month, this time December, McCoy arrived at Carey Mission.

A Good Investment

By spring fifty acres had been cleared and corn and wheat were planted which gave an abundant harvest. A blacksmith shop and gristmill, which served patrons for miles around as years went by, were built. More land was cleared, hogs and cattle were raised and Carey mission proved a good investment agriculturally.

As years sped by the mission formed the beginning of the present city of Niles, although the city lies to the east of the mission. It was a foundation of which the city has a just right to be proud. This mission was the first Protestant work among southern Michigan Indians, the others nearest being at Fort Wayne and a little later one in Grand Rapids—each more than a hundred miles away.

With the progress of the white man westward came the ever persistent bootlegger who undid much of McCoy's successful labor. So after ten years McCoy decided to abandon the Carey mission and to still farther west to the present Kansas and Oklahoma. Here he performed a magnificent piece of work, both for the Indians and the nation. Several trips were made to Washington in the interests of the Redmen and finally territory was set aside exclusively for their use. While the Carey mission itself was given up, its influence has spread, no one can tell how far, and still permeates the entire region.

The centennial celebration opened in the parlors of the church Oct. 19 with a dinner served to more than a hundred people. Afterwards all adjourned to the auditorium to hear the initial address of the celebration delivered by Dr. H. P. Klyver, state pastor of the Baptist church. He spoke upon the subject of "What We Owe the Past," dwelling with particular emphasis upon our present day institutions that are the result, not of the thought and labor of the twentieth century, but the legacy of those exploits of great faith and love for man in days of long ago. He pointed out the fact that missions, practically the greatest work of the churches today, are but a continuance of work started by true martyrs of past generations.

The celebration was continued with special services all day Sunday, Oct. 22. In the morning the pastor, Alfred Trenerry, spoke upon "Landmarks" taking his text from Proverbs 22:28. He spoke of what landmarks meant to the children of Israel under the Mosaic code. Then he spoke especially upon the landmarks of our spiritual inheritance.

The second service of the day was held at 2:30 at the church, at which time Prof. H. H. Severn of Kalamazoo College talked on "Achievement in Religion," part of which follows: "Issac McCoy was the founder of a spiritual community. Judged superficially, the religious progress of the past is not great since there are apparently so many individuals in town and surrounding country who are to all appearances as yet untouched by the religious life of the city of Niles. But when viewed in its underlying aspects, the community is seen to be permeated by the spirit of the religion brought by McCoy and fellow workers a hundred years ago. How, then, shall we, heirs of Issac McCoy in the things of the spirit treat this heritage of vital religion? Shall we treasure it as a deposit from the past, too precious for anything but careful preservation in its pristine form, or as a spiritual stock in trade, a capital stock to be traded with, that it may produce more of its kind? This makes of religion a conquest, an achievement of the present, out of the past, for the future, rather than a finished product of the past."

Following this service, which was a union meeting of all the Protestant churches in the city, nearly a hundred people motored out to the site of the mission where two songs were sung, a few brief remarks made by the pastor and prayer was offered by Mr. Scherer of the Presbyterian Church.

Conscience

A CONSCIENCE is a funny thing,
You don't know it's along,
Until the times you start to do Something you know is wrong.
And then it hammers at your breast
With all its might and main,
And gives you not a minute's rest
Until you're right again.

For weeks and weeks you travel on
And never know it's there.
It doesn't interfere with you
So long as you are fair.
But when you start some shady trick
That later you'll be rueing,
Your conscience then is very quick
To ask you what you're doing.

You cannot fool your conscience much,
It's always onto you.
It knocks exactly all the time
The things you want to do.
It's just as still as it can be
When you are going right.
But, when you stoop to trickery
It's then it starts to fight.

—EDGAR A. GUEST, in Detroit Free Press.

All churches again united for the closing service in the evening. Thomas Hance, a layman from the Niles Presbyterian Church, gave a splendid talk on the topic, "The Local Setting of the Mission." He brought out the idea that the early history of America is centered around the exploration of the French and the home-building of the English and as a result France lost the continent to England. The early pioneers recognized the idea that education and conversion of the Indians should travel hand in hand and therefore we find among the very first buildings erected a schoolhouse where a splendid bit of academic and vocational work was accomplished. There are now about 3000 church and 2000 Sunday school members in this vicinity as a result of his work. McCoy also realized that the location was a future agricultural and industrial center, its products now being found in all corners of the earth.

Pioneering Involves Hardihood

Following Mr. Hance's talk Dr. L. C. Barnes of New York City, national secretary of all Indian work for the Northern Baptist Convention, gave an address on "A Missionary Statesman in Western Michigan." He opened his address with the statement, "Five superlative qualities—any one of them worthy of studious attention—were all combined in the first settlement of Western Michigan one hundred years ago this month. Issac and Christiana McCoy, with their children and comrades, embodied to an extent seldom equaled pioneering enterprise, indomitable courage, utter altruism, comprehensive service and broad statesmanship. Real pioneering, like that of the McCoy's, involves indomitable courage, even hardihood. It was the opposite of brute courage. It was a moral courage. Issac McCoy was an exceedingly gentle man and had a frail body. Sickness again and again marked the story of his travels. Paul's account of his own perils in travel is no exaggeration of what McCoy endured. We who are traveling sons of a softer age can not by any possibility meet the physical hardships which he constantly endured. If we are to have a courage like his, we must face up indomitably to moral problems of the stiffest kind. He did that, too, for he was often misunderstood and was seldom adequately backed up by those who ought to have supported him.

"His pioneering enterprise and his indomitable courage were created and sustained by the quality of utter altruism. Not only was he shaping settlements from higher motives than his own material betterment: he positively refused to receive the material rewards which were thrust upon him. In some of the later years of his life after serving the churches and the government to the utmost he was in dire personal want. But to the end he courageously lived for others. In that respect he was absolutely ruled by the Spirit of Jesus Christ. No monk in the shelter of a monastery ever matched Issac McCoy in self renunciation, and no Jesuit on the Indian missionary trail ever surpassed him in positive devotion of life to the needy. He actually lived out, here in Michigan and everywhere 'thy neighbor as thyself.' Are we doing that?"

What the New World Movement Has Made Possible in Western Washington

By CHARLES ALVIN BROOKS

THE dedication of two new church buildings on two successive Sundays in one community is something of an event under any circumstances. But when these two buildings are what they are and represent what they do in this instance, it is historic and significant. On Sunday, Oct. 15 was dedicated the new Japanese Baptist Church and Christian Center in Seattle. On Sunday, Oct. 22, was dedicated the new Chinese Baptist Church and Christian Center in the same city.

Outcome of Enlarged Vision

These buildings are the direct outcome of the enlarged vision and achievement of the New World Movement. The Baptists of Western Washington through their convention program have done a splendid thing in conceiving and carrying through these two projects. For one of our western conventions which has not had the invested reserves of our eastern conventions and which is still in the period of laying foundations and meeting the heavy demands of a new country—this achievement ranks as one of the most notable in the records of the denomination and to this must be added another very important consideration. Any friendly interest manifested in Orientals on the western coast is a distinctive mark of high Christian character. It is not popular nor is it easy to enlist public sentiment in favor of this kind of a project. Yet in spite of popular prejudice and dislike the Baptists in Western Washington have registered their testimony and borne witness to the reality and genuineness of their Christian love and faith as a world faith and love. These buildings are at once a pledge to Japan and China that Christians do not accept the cheap political estimate of their nationals in this country and at the same time a guarantee to America that the prosecution of Christian service and the proclamation of the Gospel is the one sure and safe corrective of all the ills of our human society.

The properties represent an investment of $42,500 for the Japanese and $37,500 for the Chinese, respectively. Of this amount the Baptists of Western Washington have contributed $12,500 for each building. The Home Mission Society to date has contributed $20,000 and loaned $10,000. The Woman's Home Mission Society has received and paid in from designated gifts on the Chinese property somewhat over $2,800. The Japanese church has pledged $8,750 and paid in to date $6,000. Of this amount friends over the country have contributed to aid the Japanese in meeting their obligation. The Chinese have pledged $6,500 and are to become responsible for an additional amount, and have paid in $5,000.

The buildings have been well constructed and the contracts economically administered under the supervision of Secy. J. F. Watson to whom credit is due for the vision and interest as well as the enterprise and management which has carried these projects to completion. The architect of both buildings, Mr. Schack, is a Christian man who has taken a more than professional interest in this work.

On the day of dedication of their building the Japanese Sunday school met at 9:30 a. m. in the old building and marched in triumph to the new. The Sunday school numbered over 300 actual members. The problem of organizing the work in the new building is an interesting one. It will tax the present building almost to capacity, but it is proceeding along departmental lines. The first church service witnessed the baptism of twenty-five new disciples, an impressive and never-to-be-forgotten sight.

The dedication took place in the afternoon and friends crowded the building beyond capacity. Dr. Watson presided and Pastor Okazaki made a brief address reviewing the history of this church of which he has been pastor for thirty years, during which time he has baptized over 300 members. The first convert baptized became an evangelist and is still laboring with success in Japan.

The young people and choruses impressed us profoundly. In fact it is this group of promising young people which challenges us in this enterprise. The sermon was preached by Secretary Brooks of the Home Mission Society and greetings were brought from the Woman's Home Mission Society by one of the vice-presidents, Mrs. H. W. Foster of Seattle. The dedicatory prayer was offered by Dr. Hicks of Tremont Church and appropriate Scripture read by Rev. F. P. Matthews of the University Church.

The building provides an attractive church auditorium, with a standard gymnasium, showers, class and club-rooms and kindergarten quarters. The interior finish is simple and attractive; the entire plant adapted to an all-the-week program of activity.

The Workers

In addition to the pastor, Rev. F. Okazaki, the staff consists of Miss Florence Rumsey, field missionary (principally in the outlying districts), Miss Esther McCullough, who has special charge of the day school and home classes, Miss May Herd, visitor and especially in charge of girls' activities, Miss Harriet Dithridge, kindergartner and a volunteer helper in the kindergarten who deserves honorable mention. Mr. Paul Gates is in charge of work with young men and boys. He was formerly a missionary in Japan.

There are 6000 Japanese in Seattle and several thousand more in the rural regions and outlying settlements. Our work is the most flourishing and aggressive of any work being done among the Japanese in America and for it we have every right to be profoundly grateful. Members of the church are scattered over America and some are in Japan. The future is full of promise.

The building of the Chinese church is located in a different section, but well-situated for the work it is to do. It was over-crowded on dedication day. The gallery was filled early in the service with the two children's choruses who gave way later to make room for adults. Dr. Watson presided, Secretary Brooks preached the sermon, Mrs. H. W. Foster again brought greetings from the Woman's Home Mission Society. Dr. A. M. Bailey of First Church read the Scriptures and Pastor Dark of the Tabernacle Church offered the dedicatory prayer. Words of welcome were brought in English by Mr. Hwang, one of the officers of the church, followed by Pastor Lum Ming Tak, pastor for nine years. The Chinese consul, who is a member of the church, gave an address of felicitation. The missionary workers under appointment by the woman's board are Miss Jane Skiff, who has been on the field for fifteen years and rendered most faithful and efficient service; Miss Alice Snape, who has been there some four or five years, is happy in a most fruitful service. A night school is under the direction of Mrs. Shepherd assisted by a corps of volunteer teachers. Mrs. Randall and Miss Dayton are on the staff of night-school and Sunday-school teachers. There are fifty-four young men in this school and a number of conversions are reported from the ranks of the pupils.

Chinese Hospitality

The beautiful flowers which were conspicuous everywhere were the gift of the Chinese Merchants' Association. A banquet was served to the officers and guests who were directly interested in this project, with the characteristic Chinese hospitality and beautiful generosity.

The denomination has reason to be grateful for this unique achievement at the gateway to the Orient. The work is not yet complete and will not be until good dormitories for young men are provided as an additional unit of each of these buildings. The forces of evil are active and tireless. The influences of a non-Christian social life are insidious and constant. The buildings are dedicated to the service of God in furnishing a wholesome Christian atmosphere and fellowship which will offset the other influences which are so un-American and un-Christian. It is time for some one to come forward and provide these two dormitories to complete the equipment. We must all pray that this advanced step may be the sequel of a great spiritual quickening throughout the Oriental colony not only in Seattle, but upon the entire western coast. Let us finish triumphantly the task to which we have set our hands—the New World Movement! For this achievement is only a part of what is on the program of Western Washington and other states.

YOU might read all the books in the British Museum (if you could live long enough), and remain an utterly "illiterate," uneducated person; but if you read ten pages of a good book, letter by letter—that is to say, with real accuracy—you are forevermore in some measure an educated person.

—John Ruskin.

Religious Education

Church Week-Day Schools

By THOMAS S. YOUNG

Information concerning two notable events occurring within the last few weeks is worthy of wide circulation.

Gary, Indiana

The religious education department of the Publication Society completed arrangements with Gary, Ind. through the Baptist pastor, Rev. O. B. Sarber, whereby five young women from the Chicago Baptist Missionary Training School go to Gary each week and render nine days of service. Note the results: These five young women will secure experience and get a vision of church week-day schools which will make them a great asset to the churches. The Gary Baptist Church is raising an additional $225 to take care of these teachers locally. The Indiana state board is adding to this local support to the extent of $100. These teachers will be able to give 600 children of Gary each week two periods of forty-five minutes each in religious education, impossible except for this arrangement. And all this is made possible by the appropriation of $250 of mission funds by the Publication Society, to pay railroad fare to and from Chicago. This is a case in which money talks in a most delightful Christian way. Help the educational department of your society to repeat this. It can be done in many places if the money is forthcoming.

Salina, Kansas

In Salina, after nearly a year of careful planning and preparation in which our Baptist pastor, Rev. Alpha Ingle had a prominent part, a church week-day school, type 2, has been opened. Type 2 school is one which is in cooperation with a community board of religious education, but its entire inner life is controlled by the church with which it is connected. It is known as a type 2 or denominational community school.

The White public schools of Salina have enrolled in the first eight grades 2,195 pupils. The matter of registering for the religious school was carefully explained. The pupils were shown two things:

First: Attendance was to be absolutely voluntary;

Second: That there could be no shifting about; they must abide by their written choice, either to attend the religious school or continue in the class-room at work. With this clear understanding, the first week gave an enrolment in the religious session of 1,835. At the second session, it reached 1,920.

The Negro schools enrolled 120. Of this number, fifty-five have enrolled for religious instruction, and it is confidently believed that when the school opens, the very large majority will have come in.

There are twelve churches representing nine denominations in the movement. Schools are held in ten church buildings.

An account of this wonderful accomplishment has been written in detail by the pastor, Mr. Ingle, and will appear in the January number of our Baptist Sunday-school journal, The Sunday School Worker. It should be in the hands of every pastor.

Removing the Bushel

Out in the country some eight or ten miles from the city I know there is a little church where a few men are working hard to support Sunday-school and other weekly services. A couple of weeks ago a class of men heard about this church. They talked things over at one of their meetings and then they took action. A day was set for a visit to this quiet country place. A vote was taken to go out and hearten the neighbors with songs and prayers and short addresses. When the day came fifty men volunteered for this service. Cars were provided for all, and when they came back they reported that they had had a splendid time. The day surely will never be forgotten by those who received the inspiration of that visit. Men who never had known what it was to take part in a meeting of that kind found their voices. They sang, they made prayers, they stood on their feet and spoke out of the depths of their hearts.

Inspired by their success on this occasion, two weeks later a similar meeting was held by men from the same class in a church eighteen miles away, and the success gained was no less striking than in the first instance. Candle lighted, the bushel set aside, the light lifted to the candlestick, and all in the house made glad!

Think of the power there is in every city school to do things of this kind! And the need is so great! The people of the country school and churches are hungry for the touch of a warm hand. Many of these schools are decadent. If they do not receive help they will die. The city owes a tremendous debt to the rural communities. For generations the country has fed the city with its very best. Now the time has come to pay back all possible extent the debt thus incurred.

Jesus was not speaking a glittering generality when he said, "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven." He meant what he said. His whole heart was in it. He did that very thing as long as he was here on earth; and now, if that light is to keep on shining, you and I must lift away the bushel and let the beams shine afar.—EDGAR L. VINCENT in The Men's Class.

International Sunday School Lesson for December 17

JESUS AMONG FRIENDS AND FOES

Lesson: Luke 10:38—11:54. Golden Text:

John 15:14

Introductory

Between the two portions of the lesson, so widely separated in spirit, Luke records the giving of the Lord's Prayer, Jesus' words concerning the efficacy of prayer, the casting out of a devil, further words to the multitude. The house of the two sisters and Lazarus was at Bethany on the way from Jerusalem to Jericho. The second scene of the lesson takes place in the house of a Pharisee who has invited Jesus to dine with him.

Lesson

Jesus placed value upon human friendship. He sought the companionship of his disciples; in the great hours of his life he took three of them with him. He visited at the home of Mary and Martha. That he was always giving in these intimacies does not mean that he was not also gaining something. There were two totally different women, both good and noble in the little house of Bethany. When Jesus came there was rejoicing, and each in her characteristic way made him welcome. Martha's way was to think immediately what could be done for his physical comfort—Mary's was to sit at his feet and drink in his words. Martha, bustling about, looked upon Mary as something of a shirk and appealed to the guest that he should bid her sister to help her. And he answered, in loving reproof: "Martha, Martha, thou art anxious and troubled about many things. . . . Mary hath chosen the better part which shall not be taken away from her."

From this loving intimate scene of Jesus among his friends we pass to see him among his enemies in the house of the Pharisee who had invited him to dinner. "Woe unto you!" Three times he pronounced it. How different is his denunciation of the sins of the Pharisees from his reproof of Martha's untimely but well meant busy-ness. Never did the gentleness of Jesus keep him silent when there was error to be reproved. Fearlessly he attacked the great men of the times—the men who had it in their power to do him harm if they would.

Leading Thoughts

1. Jesus was absolutely fearless, unequivocal alike in dealing with friend and foe. 2. Covering up evil only helps it in its festering work—exposure to the sunlight of righteousness brings its doom. 3. Artificiality and insincerity kill friendship; sincerity often changes foes to friends.

The Chimney Corner

To Avoid the Rush

THE Ladies-Who-Give-Gifts-For-Christmas were scurrying around in a most prodigious hurry when the calm little Spirit of Christmas whispered in their ears: "If you please, oh, if you please, had you thought of giving something that would help Christmas spread an inch or two further around the globe?"

"Now what in the world are you talking about?" asked the ladies, halting in their tracks, with their list suspended in midair.

The Spirit of Christmas trailed soothing fingers across the wrinkles of worry on their brows: "Christmas," the Spirit explained, "is the day when Christ was born; on the day when Christ was born the angels sang to the shepherds that the glad tidings should be to all people; but in spite of nineteen hundred and twenty-two years, half of those 'all people' are living in darkness, as if it were still B. C. You could help push Christmas several miles further around the world if you gave certain gifts to your friends."

"Oh!" said the worried ladies, with one doubtful eye on their lists and one doubtful eye on this friendly little Spirit: "but surely this wouldn't apply to Christmas cards?"

"It would!" was the triumphant reply, "it most assuredly would! For there are two perfectly lovely new Christmas cards just issued, the proceeds of which will all go to the fund for the Union Colleges of the Orient, did you ever hear of them?"

"Y—yes," said Lady Number One, vaguely, "it s—seems to me I read something just recently, didn't I?"

"You did!" said Lady Number Two intelligently. "Don't you remember in last week's Chimney Corner the little article on 'A. B. or The Seven Thank You's'?"

"Of course I do! Now I place them—seven wonderful Christian colleges for women: three in China, three in India, and one in Japan. But how about the Christmas cards?"

"Simply this," the Spirit of Christmas explained, "there are two very colorful new cards for sale, the proceeds of which will help those colleges. Every bit as dainty as any card you can find anywhere, for one of them is in shades of blue and orange—inside of a stunning blue wreath (topped by a Christmas star!) is a seven-branched candlestick with yellow candles burning for the 'seven lamps of Asia,' a beautiful four-lined Christmas greeting is exactly what you want to say to your friends—appropriate for any one! The other card is like those quaint old illuminated parchment texts for sale in Italy—lovely scrolly little medallions of color scattered here and there throughout the sixteen-line poem which is a clever acrostic on the sixteen letters forming the words 'Union College Fund.'

"Oh, they are the very things I want!" cried Lady Number One.

"So do I," echoed Lady Number Two, "I like to think that by sending those cards I will be helping to build missionary colleges large enough for all the girls clamoring to enter—"

"And pushing the darkness of B. C. a little further off the map," added Lady Number One; "where can we send for these artistic cards?"

"Write to 'Union Colleges of the Orient, 300 Ford Building, Boston, Massachusetts,'" the Spirit of Christmas smiled, delighted to see them jot down the address and cross "cards to be shopped for" off from their lists.

Then Lady Number One said eagerly: "I don't suppose you can suggest anything for ten cents that isn't exactly a card—just a bit more presentable—can you?"

"I can," laughed the Spirit of Christmas, "for there's a very clever little cook book for ten cents called 'League of Rations'—really delicious new recipes garnered in America from the old kitchens of Europe, the most tasty morsels of food! And the book has a prim red-and-white checked cover, like dish-towel-ing—"

"The very thing!" chuckled Lady Number One.

"Didn't you read all about it in the Chimney Corner on October 28?" asked Lady Number Two.

"So we did!" the others replied, writing "League of Rations" opposite the names of certain housewives on their lists.

Then one of them said hopefully: "Is there anything in booklet form that costs about a quarter?"

"Indeed there is!" the Spirit answered, "there's that charming 'Book of Remembrance.' It's one of those interesting long narrow booklets with a beautiful gold and brown cover in an artistic design, illustrated inside, and it has daily Bible readings, prayers and the birthday dates of all our Baptist missionaries and officers.

It brings the Baptist work of the entire world to a person's front door."

"For Mrs. Shut-In, Miss Wide-Awake, Mrs. Vision," wrote Number One busily.

"For Miss Visionless, Mrs. Prayerful, Mrs. Earnest," wrote Number Two.

Then Number Three said smiling: "I read about this 'Book of Remembrance' in the Chimney Corner on October 21, the little article was called 'Kitchen Kaleidoscope,' and I've been planning ever since then to send it to Mrs. Many Children, Mrs. Tied-At-Home, and Mrs. Does-Her-Own-Work. I thought it would give them a share in things, even if they can't get out to meetings regularly."

"Aren't we finishing up our lists in fine shape? But there's one thing on my list that you shan't change, you ardent little Spirit of Christmas, for I always give Mrs. Poetically-Inclined a pair of those lovely hand-dipped tapering candles, she says she lights them in her little apartment one night every week and sits there dreaming! So nothing would cause me to change this gift!"

The Spirit smiled quaintly: "Just add fifty cents to the gift, dear lady, and send her a copy of 'Lighted to Lighten!' It's a charming new book on India, and she can brood over it by candleglow."

"Lovely! Lovely! Candles and light, of course!" cried Ladies Numbers One, Two and Three diligently noting the title, whereupon the Spirit of Christmas added briskly: "'The League of Rations,' 'The Book of Remembrance' and 'Lighted to Lighten' can all be ordered—money enclosed—from Literature Department, General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y."

"And is there a book for boys?" asked Number One, without much hope of a cheering reply. But the Spirit was never more elated than in recommending "Jungle Tales" by Howard A. Musser (George H. Doran Company).

"It's one continuous thrill from cover to cover! It's Mr. Musser's own experiences with lions and tigers and crocodiles and wild men while he was living in India as head of a boy's school. He knows boys! You never knew a dollar and a half to buy a finer blend of spell-bound adventure, heroism, and missions. And it all happened!"

"For Ted," wrote Number One.

"For Bob," wrote Number Two.

"For Tom, Dick and Harry," wrote Number Three, disposing of three scattered nephews whose gifts were her usual Christmas bugbears! Yet behold the bugbear laid at one fell swoop.

"Any book for high school girls?"

"The Bells Of The Blue Pagoda," by Jean C. Cochran (Westminster Press)," the Spirit of Christmas chuckled, "It's REMEMBER God's bounty in the year. String the pearls of his favor. Hide the dark parts, except so far as they are breaking forth in light! Give this one day to thanks, to joy, to gratitude.

—HENRY WARD BEECHER.

one of these sparkling real stories with its scenes laid in China, girls all devour it in rapt eagerness."

"For Sally," wrote Number One, enthusiastically.

"For Nelly," wrote Number Two, exuberantly.

"For Molly and Polly and Dolly," wrote Number Three, explosively—for when had she ever discovered a missionary novel that was a real novel? A spellbinding story?

"And if you want a book to grip the men and women on your list," the Spirit of Christmas added helpfully, "just spend two dollars for 'The Wonders of Missions' by Caroline Atwater Mason (George H. Doran Company). All the skill that went into the making of 'The Little Green God,' 'The Lily of France' and 'The Spell of Italy' is here in this new book a hundredfold. A man I know sat up till midnight reading it."

"For my father," wrote Number One.

"For my husband," wrote Number Two.

"For my minister," wrote Number Three.

So the haste and the worry of gift-getting was eased as if by magic by these tried-and-true suggestions, for the three books mentioned may be ordered at any bookstore. And as for wiping away the tragic B. C. state of mind in half the earth—Just figure it out for yourself whether, with the quickened interest of minds young and old, the day may not be hastened when the new good-will of men will cause more peace on Earth?

Teacher: "What is a vacuum?"

Pupil (vaguely): "A vacuum is a—er—er—well, it's all in my mind, but I can't seem to get it out!"

Contributor: "You sit down on every joke I write."

Editor: "Well, I wouldn't, if there was any point to them!"

Little Eleanor gazed long and thoughtfully at the young man who was calling on her grown-up sister Kate. "May I climb up on your knee, Mr. Smith?"

"Oh do, do!" smiled the poor young fellow, delighted to make a hit with even this youngest member of the family, "did you want to pull my hair?"

"No, I want to see if I can find that word."

"Word? What word?" he asked, much puzzled.

"Why, Kate said this morning that if ever a man had the word 'idiot' written all over his face it was you."

Old lady: "There now, don't cry, my boy. What is the matter?"

Little boy: "My brother has lost his hat."

Old lady: "Of course that's too bad, but why should you cry when your brother loses anything?"

Little boy: "You see, I was wearing it when he lost it!"

"No," said the old shoemaker sternly, "I will not do it. Never have I sold anything by false representation and I will not begin now. It is an inferior grade of shoe, and I will never pass it off as anything better. Mark it 'A shoe fit for a queen' and put it in the window. A queen does not have to do much walking."

Teacher in geography class: "John, tell what you know about the Mongolian race."

John: "I wasn't there, I—I went to the ball game instead."

Cabman (angrily): "You remember that horse you sold me last week?"

Horse-dealer: "Yes. What about him?"

Cabman: "He fell dead yesterday."

Dealer: "Well, I never! Of course I warned you that he had some funny little ways, but honestly, I never knew him to do that before."

Old gentleman: "Are you in pain, my little man?"

Small boy: "No sir, the pain is in me."

Why?

The Value of Dots and Dashes

PEGGY and Bill have been having such fun puzzling over this stanza that maybe you will enjoy working it out, too, for it really makes sense!

A funny old man told this to me
I fell in a snowdrift in June said he
I went to a ball game out in the sea
I saw a jelly-fish float up in a tree
I found some gum in a cup of tea
I stirred my milk with a big brass key
I opened my door on my bended knee
I beg your pardon for this said he
But 'tis true when told as it ought to be
'Tis a puzzle in punctuation you see.

A Puzzling Wedding Breakfast

Just recently Bill has been sick in bed with a sore throat and everybody sent him puzzles to guess; Peggy tried them, too, of course, and they both thought that the cleverest was this one:

Belinda Irene Jones loved a printer bold,
For her daddy possessed many millions in gold,
And bestowed on his daughter wealth untold.
She was wooed and won in the usual way,
And this breakfast was served on her wedding day:

THE GLORIOUS GAINS OF FIDELITY

Rev. 2:1-10.

By F. C. STIFLER

"Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of Life." Here is one of the glorious paradoxes of Scripture. It strikes a note that rings out clearly through all the Christian centuries.

Think, now, of all the great men and women who have made the wonderful age in which we live. Think of Stephen. Does Stephen still live? Had he not been faithful unto death we should never have heard of him and many who have suffered persecution and martyrdom that Christ might reign would never have had the light of truth shed upon their path. Some think that God used Stephen to start Saul of Tarsus toward conversion. It was just before Paul went to Damascus that he had been standing by while Stephen was stoned. It is quite possible that Stephen's fidelity lighted the fires of Paul's great spirit. And what of Paul? Does he still live? He remade the philosophy of religion and still dictates the most of our Christian thinking. Read his life over again. He was faithful unto death.

What about our Puritan forefathers? Just half of them who came over in the Mayflower died during the first winter. Why is North America different from South America? Principally because of the Puritan idea of life that struck deep root in Massachusetts. The Puritans were faithful unto death. Do they still live?

Consider our Baptist forebears roaming about in the trackless woods of Rhode Island. Do they still live? They were faithful unto death through the long colonial period to the conviction that men should be allowed to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience. Do they still live? It is not too much to say that that element in our American constitution is what is making the United States the hope of the nations at this terrifying hour. This is the crown of life given to our Baptist forefathers.

And today God holds for every individual, every young people's society, every church, a crown of life bestowed on all who are faithful unto death. Fidelity is a word that some banks have taken as a part of their name. There could be none better. There is no remote possibility of failure for one who makes deposits of life in fidelity. The returns are sure and their power lasts forever. Against every enemy, over every obstacle, before every temptation, be true to the Christ who saves you and whatever else may come, though it be death, the ultimate reward will be life—life for you and life more abundant for countless children of unborn generations!

(Extract from minutes, March, 1916)

"Resolved, that in view of existing world conditions, this Executive Committee requests the Executive Committee of the Baptist Young People's Union of America to undertake the task imposed on this committee by the World's Baptist Young People's Committee appointed in Philadelphia, in June, 1911.

"Resolved, further, that all the records of this Executive Committee, and the cash balance remaining in this treasury after the expenses of the committee shall have been paid (such balance amounting to $60 more or less), be turned over to the Executive Committee of the Baptist Young People's Union of America.

"Resolved, further, that the Executive Committee of the Baptist Young People's Union of America, whenever it may find it impossible to carry out the purpose of the World's Baptist Young People's Committee, be requested to communicate with the members of said committee, or the survivors thereof, or any other committee which may have been appointed for a similar purpose with a world's representation, before positively terminating its efforts. It was Voted, that the secretary be authorized to send a copy of these resolutions to the secretary of the Executive Committee of the Baptist Young People's Union of America, and to each member of the World's Baptist Young People's Committee. It was Voted, that the secretary and treasurer be instructed to turn over all records and funds of the Executive Committee of the World's Young People's Committee to the Executive Committee of the Baptist Young People's Union of America, after the necessary expenses have been paid. It was Voted, that the treasurer and secretary be requested to notify the chairman of the committee when this shall have been done. It was Voted, that the Executive Committee of the World's Baptist Young People's Committee adjourn sine die.

From Russia

(Translation)

To the Committee of the World Wide Union of Baptists, London.

Dear Brethren in Christ:

The Baptist young people, successors to the whole work of our great union are in need of nurture, education and organization.

Up to now work among the Baptist young people was carried on in the majority of cases in circles organized in churches and local unions of young people.

The conditions of present day life, however, principally unbelief, point to the necessity of forming a World Wide Union of Baptist Young People in which the Baptist young people of the whole world could work together with the Baptist World Alliance.

The executive board of the All-Russian Unions of Baptist Young People begs the committee of the Baptist World Alliance to call at the same time with the Congress of Baptists in Stockholm in 1923 a world-wide conference of young people: taking upon itself all the work and expense of organizing the above named conference, which expenses will, we hope, be reimbursed to you with thanks after the World Wide Union of the Baptist Young People has been organized.

At the time of the visit in Moscow of our esteemed brother, Dr. Rushbrooke, we spoke to him about convoking a world wide conference of Baptist young people, to which Brother Rushbrooke gave his consent in principle.

Asking God's blessing on your labor, the executive board begs to inform it concerning whatever may be done.

With brotherly greeting,

Stockholm den 24th October, 1922.

Rev. James Asa White, D. D.

Dear Dr. White,

Many times I have been about to write to you as to the Baptist World Congress in Stockholm next year. I have felt that we at this congress ought to do something special for our Baptist young people throughout the world. I was going to write you and Dr. Shakespeare in London, when a letter from the Russian brethren reached me. By this letter they suggest that the committee of the Baptist World Alliance may call together a world-wide conference of young people to be held at the same time with the Stockholm Congress in the end of July, 1923. Because of this proposal I have been corresponding with Dr. Shakespeare and Rev. Edward E. Hayward, and I take the liberty to enclose a couple of copies of these letters, that you may know my opinion on this matter.

I also want to quote what I in my last letter have written to Dr. Shakespeare, saying: "I think the very first task of the new organization must be to bring the young Baptists in real fellowship and in close touch with each other. Surely it isn't so easy to work that through, and probably a special world-wide secretary will be needed. Dr. James Asa White, the young people man of the Northern certainly will outline a very good plan."

So I have written to Dr. Shakespeare, and I am sure you have had letter from him about this question and know the Russian proposal. I am sure too, that you heartily agree with the Russian brethren that the Baptist young people are in need of nurture, education and organization. Surely the awakening Central Europe and Russia with their multitudes of converted young people need our advice and help.

I am sure that you with your big organization and your great resources will rejoicingly back up the attempt to strengthen and organize the wonderful work in Europe these days—especially the young people mission. Certainly it is possible to form a strong and prosperous young people movement in Europe, if we are willing to try it just now. I think we have seriously to consider this important matter and ask what God's call upon us means in this special case.

When I have read in the American papers, that more than 8,000 delegates gathered together to your last annual convention in St. Paul, and that more than 600 then consecrated themselves to the call of Christ, then I feel quite sure that our proposed world-wide union can in the future be a most important instrument in the hand of Almighty God.

And I am very glad that we in Sweden shall have the great favor and honor to welcome the constitutional meeting for this very union. We are especially glad to expect the American friends. . . . In America you have so much of "the biggest in the world" that we are a little bit afraid of you, but we are still proud of the opportunity to welcome you here in our fine little country, which has given you so many good citizens.

I should, indeed, be very glad to get some lines from you later on. As editor for our young people's paper I am going to request information about the unions in other countries, including photos of their leaders and other particulars about their organization and work. I hope it will be possible in this way to introduce our dear expected guests before our meeting in Stockholm.

Hoping to hear from you, I am, yours very sincerely, (Signed) C. GUNNAR WESTIN, president of B. Y. P. U. of Sweden.

Baptist Young People's Union of America

Headquarters, 125 North Wabash Avenue,

November 14, 1922.

Chicago, Ill.

To the Committee of Twenty-five:

Members of this committee will recall their appointment by the Baptist World Alliance, meeting in Philadelphia, 1911. A copy of the minutes of your Executive Committee, dated March, 1916, is enclosed herewith. This action of your committee is self-explanatory.

I am taking the liberty of enclosing herewith copy of a communication from Mr. P. G. Westin, president of the Swedish Baptist Young People's Union, dated Stockholm, October 24, 1922, also copy of communication from Rev. E. E. Hayward, Baptist Church House, Southampton, Row, London, W. C. 1, and copy of letter from Mr. M. Timoshenko of the executive board of the All-Russian Union of Baptist Young People. These letters explain themselves.

This letter is addressed to you in accordance with the instructions attached herewith and for the purpose of seeking advice.

The Baptist Young People's Union of America looks with favor upon the proposed plan of organizing a World's Baptist Young People's Union, and although our board has not voted officially as yet, I feel quite sure I am in accord with the wishes of the board when I say that we are ready to do our share in connection with such organization. We will have representatives at the Baptist World Alliance in Stockholm who will have full authority to deal with such matters as may come to the attention of the various young people's workers who will be in attendance.

Unquestionably, the time is opportune for some concerted move among the Baptist young people of the world. May I ask, therefore, that members of the committee advise me at once if it is the wish of the old committee to function further, or, does the action of your executive committee constitute sufficient authority for the Baptist Young People's Union of America, taking the initiative in the plan under consideration? An early reply will be greatly appreciated. Very cordially yours,

JAMES ASA WHITE, General Secretary.

Oskies at State Convention

By EDITH WALKER

The Oskie convention banquet was held in the Presbyterian Church of Centralia, Wednesday evening, Oct. 18, with some 300 Oskies in evidence. Pres. Harold J. Howard of Mt. Vernon filled the office of toastmaster as only our retiring president can.

Preliminary to the feed was the presentation of those newly elected officers who were in attendance, as well as a number of prominent Oskies of whom Illinois Baptist young people are duly proud. The absence of one of the latter was easily explained when notice of the approaching marriage of Claud E. Tilton, of Fairmount, was read and due recognition given, when a motion to send a message of commiseration to the absentee carried.

The usual display of Oskie pep plus the instigation of some Bostonian high spirits led up to the grand finale, when Rev. Albert H. Gage of Chicago, Dr. Herbert Hines of Kankakee and Dr. James A. White of Chicago, gave the Oskies the best they had in the market, and we thank you, Albert, Herbie, and Jim. Come again!

The following are the state officers for the ensuing year: President, August Seibold, Peoria; vice-presidents: North, Anna Eaton, Rockford; South, Dorwin Wright, Murphysboro; West, Albert Miller, Canton; South, Dale Gilbert, Mattoon; secretary, Edith Walker, Cairo; treasurer, Carl Rutenberger, Carlinville.

Indiana

Dear Dr. White:

We sure had a most delightful time in Richmond last Sunday. We perfected Flat Rock Association organization. In the afternoon we had a life-service meeting and at the close I think there were twenty-five joined the league. Oh, what a wonderful spirit! The Lord was there. It seemed as though you could almost see and feel him. We also had three accept Christ as their Savior and join the church, a young married couple, I imagine about twenty-eight years, and a boy about fourteen or fifteen. The Lord is still on his throne and is just as willing to bless us as in the days of old.

I am sure Jack Cox has sent you the names by this time. He will anyway or see that you get them.

They held a B. Y. P. U. institute all last week with a young man from Texas as leader. I think his name is Chastain. They all spoke very highly of him and from the appearance he did a great work. I would like to have the following: 200 Christian Culture Course booklets; 200 Standard of Excellence folders same as enclosed; 200 Group Plan leaflets. If any charges please let me know and will send check.

I would also like to have a sample of all the literature you will use for the Tithers' and Daily Devotions League Campaigns.

Am very sorry you cannot come to the state convention rally. I am wondering if you can give me some dates and we will go into some of our associations and shake them up. We must have them all organized this year.

We are urging all the young people to pray for our state work and workers and I am sure we will see some great things done this year.

With best wishes for your work, I am, very sincerely in his service,

FORD.

Resolutions were drafted by a committee appointed by the Western Baptist Orphanage and Home, Pittsburgh, expressing regret at the removal of Secretary E. A. Harrar to Camden, N. J., where he has assumed the pastorate of First Church.

Our Own Folks

A Day of Devotion

By AUGUSTINE S. CARMAN

There seems to have been in recent times in our denomination a deepening of devotional experience and an unashamed expression of it. Our Northern Baptist Convention will halt its most momentous business sessions for 'impromptu seasons of prayer; the head of a nation-wide business enterprise, presiding at a conference, called in a financial crisis of our missionary work, will hold the leaders brought from across the continent for a single day for nearly half of that day in prayer before devoting his and their splendid business acumen to the specific problem; and a little book on prayer has formed the subject-matter of thousands of study classes in this and foreign lands, and of congregational and private use by many thousands more.

Prayer Life More Evident

I am inclined to believe that the prayer life in our colleges and seminaries is more in evidence than when I was a student; for we never had such delightful and remarkable experiences as those, for example, of the all-day prayer-meetings, two or more of which are held each year at the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary in Chicago. One held a few days ago began in the morning at 8:30 with an hour of fellowship, experience, and prayer led by President Taft, which brought about a more intimate spiritual acquaintance among students and faculty than many ordinary weeks of school life could do. There followed a tender address by Rev. Joseph C. Dent on the ministry of the Holy Spirit, supplemented by Dr. Jacob Speicher, who spoke out of his rich experience of years in China, the whole being followed by definite and earnest prayers, spontaneous and heart-stirring. Then the assembly broke up into separate groups, in different rooms,—faculty, men students (in two groups), and young women, each group with a leader from among themselves; and the report from each group meeting was of a remarkable closeness of approach to God.

Meeting again in one assembly at two o'clock, a student was in charge, as far as any human leadership affected the course of the meeting, where definite objects of prayer were presented and remembered with an earnestness and faith that made the act an experience of reality, and not what Lowell seemed to consider it, a mere "pumping phrases for the ineffable." It was refreshing and inspiring to hear the students as they prayed at a mark instead of spluttering their petitions vaguely out over the universe. They prayed for their seminary and for other seminaries, for this student having some problem in the church he was serving, for another having special spiritual interest in his work, for recent alumni engaged in evangelistic meetings, for one now on the seas sailing for China, for the work some of the students are doing each Friday evening at the Pacific Garden Mission, and for God's blessing on their intellectual tasks and their spiritual life. Then came the closing and culminating hour of devotion and heart-searching, led by Rev. Albert Johnson, an alumnus of the seminary and pastor of the Albany Park Church, which has just passed through a successful evangelistic campaign.

Yes, it is very evident that the church has not lost its way on the path between earth and heaven. Even if the other evidences which were mentioned at first did not exist, no one could look into the faces or listen to the voices of the upstanding, vigorous, keen-eyed young students at such a prayer service or at one of the summer student conferences, without feeling a reinforcement of faith in the mission of the conquering Christ.

A Church Home for Polish Baptists

For more than five years the Polish Baptists of Chicago have been without a home and have been forced to move from place to place to continue their work. During this period they have moved seven times. Three times the opposition of Catholic priests forced them to vacate moving picture houses which they had rented for Sunday morning services. They were fortunate to secure three church buildings at various times in which to hold their services. But two of these were again needed by the churches for their own congregations, and one of the church buildings was sold.

At last after these years of always "being moved on" they have come into their own and will take up their home in the church building at the corner of Augusta and Robey Streets, formerly owned by the German Methodists which has been transferred to the Executive Council. The Home Mission Society has had its share in bringing this to pass.

The building is attractive in appearance and is substantially constructed of brick and stone. The church auditorium seats 400, the Sunday-school rooms 300. There is also a nine-room apartment building on the property. The cost is $19,000, but under present prices the cost of duplicating would probably be double that amount.

NEW POLISH CHURCH

It is planned to form here a Christian center in which helpful activities will thrive every day and evening of the week. One of the first movements to be carried out will be a Sunday school conducted in the English language. Week classes for instruction in English will also be started.

Progress and Prospects in Burma

By WAYNE GARD

That Baptist missionary work in Burma has borne worthwhile fruit during the past year was evident from reports given at the thirty-sixth annual meeting of the Burma Baptist Missionary Conference, held at Rangoon, Oct. 10-14. Although the financial strain which involved a cut of 25 per cent in appropriations has necessitated economy and a certain amount of retrenchment, the work is going forward without serious handicap.

Reports on evangelistic work were encouraging, though the amount of progress did not differ materially from that of previous years. From the last government census, it is apparent that Christianity has reached one in fifty of the whole population of Burma, and that five of every eight Christians in the country claim to be Baptists. The appointment of an experienced missionary to do evangelistic work in needy places over the whole field is facilitating further advancement in this line.

In spite of the annual output of the seminaries, there is still a great need for trained indigenous pastors and evangelists. The blind cannot lead the blind. Several months ago a Karen teacher was talking with a group of converts who had been in the habit of observing Saturday as a day of rest, and was explaining to them that it might be better for them to observe Sunday instead. When asked for his reason, the teacher replied that Joshua made the sun stand still for one day, so people, after that, rested on Sunday instead of Saturday. His logic was accepted.

In educational work, more definite progress was noted. Judson College has more than regained the enrolment which was lost through the student strike of 1920. The present enrolment includes forty-eight women. The moral tone of the college is distinctly Christian, as 69 per cent of the present student body is made up of Christians. The completion of the science department in equipment and staff has made possible the offering of a bachelor's degree in science.

The Anglo-vernacular high schools of the mission are rapidly becoming standardized, and it is anticipated that further advancement will be made in this field when the educational secretary, requested last year, is appointed. In several of the larger schools, modern intelligence tests have been introduced to assist in sectioning the students according to their mental ability.

Since the turning over to the government of the trade school built by the mission at Moulmein, more definite attention is being given to the agricultural school which is being established at Pynmana. The purpose of this institution is not to teach rich Burmans how to manage their estates, but rather to train poor boys to earn their living in farm work. Every student is to be required to do a certain amount of practical work while in school.

School Control

The Buddhists of Burma are recognizing that the Christians are outstripping them in the matter of schools. U Ottama, a Buddhist monk who is one of the leaders in the nationalist movement, recently urged the Council of Burmese Associations to give more attention to educational endeavor by pointing out that the Christians of the country are proportionately much better educated than the Buddhists. Under the Burma Reforms Act which is soon to come into effect, a Burman is to be appointed as minister of education, and the whole school system will eventually come under Burmese control. It is not yet known just how this change will affect the mission schools. The question of devolution, or the turning over to indigenous Christians of more responsibility for more missionary work, was discussed at length in the conference. While the ideal of devolution is held to by the missionaries in general, it was not found advisable to take any radical steps at present toward turning over to indigenous workers the responsibility for work beyond that for which they are able to undertake the financial support as well as the control.

The 1922 conference was marked by the attendance of a number of indigenous Christians, several of whom appeared on the program. One of these, in illustrating the difficulties which missionaries and Burmans have in understanding each other, described a typical conversation held at the home of a station missionary. A Burman comes to his door, and is asked if he has any business to transact. He replies no, that he has come only to visit. He waits an hour, and then another hour, and another. Finally, he makes known the purpose of his call. After he departs, the missionary wonders impatiently why so much of his time was wasted. The Burman, however, goes away wondering if, after all, he did not speak too soon; he might have waited one more hour.

The conference meetings were saddened by the sudden death of Elias William Kelly, which occurred Oct. 12. Dr. Kelly was to have preached the annual sermon of the conference.

Minneapolis University Church
Has Dedication

By JOHN G. BRIGGS

On Sunday, Nov. 29, the University Baptist Church dedicated the recreational and devotional wings of the new building. There remains now the completion of the tower and the interior of the auditorium. The morning service was in charge of Rev. Frank H. Divine, who led the worship in giving throughout the day beyond the $40,000 mark. The dedicatory address was delivered by Pres. Lotus D. Coffman of the University of Minnesota. The evening service crowned a great day by a stirring message from Rev. Frank W. Padelford, secretary of the board of education of the Northern Baptist Convention.

The new building will stand as a beautiful monument to the forward look of the late secretary, E. R. Pope, and others who like him caught a vision of the importance of the work at that strategic position. The ground floor is planned especially to meet student needs, and will lend itself readily to dinner meetings and convocation purposes. Two rooms, a reception room with kitchenette equipment and a rest room, will be opened during the daytime for student use. The main floor has been planned for church study; church parlor with kitchenette equipment; primary, beginners, and junior class and assembly rooms. The top floor will house the World Wide Guild girls and has assembly rooms and class-rooms for adult, senior and intermediate departments of the church school. The new gymnasium is probably the best church gymnasium in the Northwest. It was built in order to combat the evils of pool-rooms, dance halls and other kindred agencies which are bidding for the young life. The demand for the gymnasium has been beyond our ability to fill.

Four hundred and fifty students of our denomination are registered this year at the University. Over 200 are from cities and towns outside of Minneapolis and St. Paul. Furthermore, the University is surrounded by a fast growing industrial neighborhood. Here is the other challenge for the University Church. Plans are in progress to begin Americanization classes in the immediate future. There will also be courses in the field of religious education.

This year the attendance of the students at the young people's devotional service on Sunday nights is 114. The Bible class for students, taught by pastor Norman B. Henderson and faculty members, has an enrolment of sixty. The choir of thirty voices is composed almost entirely of students. The young people have clean social enjoyment but the religious element is dominant. A deputation team of young men carried the gospel message into many pulpits and places last year. Once a month the Christian Endeavor society conducts an evangelistic meeting at the Union Gospel Mission, and regular devotional services are conducted at the University Hospital. The value of the church to the new student away from home can be easily understood.

The University Baptist Church is next to the oldest of the Baptist churches in the North Star State, having been founded in 1850. The new auditorium when finished will be named the Pope Memorial in honor of our beloved Dr. Pope. Co-operating with the church, is the Home Mission Society, the educational department of the Northern Baptist Convention, the Baptist Unions of St. Paul and Minneapolis, the Minnesota State Convention, and hundreds of individual Baptists in Minnesota who believe in a strong Baptist center at the very gates of the university. The university committee has asked the pastor, Dr. Norman B. Henderson, further to present the needs and request additional support from the church throughout the state.

(An Appreciation)

In the sudden death of Rev. Elias W. Kelly, Ph. D., D. D., Oct. 11, at Rangoon, Burma, the Burma Mission and the Foreign Mission Society suffer an irreparable loss. Dr. Kelly was born in New Brunswick, April 17, 1854, and graduated from Acadia College in 1876 and from Newton Theological Institution in 1880. In 1882, slightly more than forty years ago, he entered upon his life career as missionary of the American Baptist Missionary Union in Burma. Dr. Kelly's heart was in the evangelistic work for the Burman people and to this work he gave his continuous endeavors for many years. However, in 1911 his scholarly and administrative abilities led to his appointment as principal of Rangoon Baptist College.

In 1903 he had been made chairman of the board of trustees of the college; in 1906 he became a member of the Burman educational commission; and in 1909 he was given the oversight of the high school at Mandalay. Thus, when he came to his administrative duties as principal of the college, in 1912, after a trip to India for study of questions involved in the affiliation of the college with Calcutta University, Dr. Kelly had acquired a splendid preparation for dealing with the new educational demand.

With some intervals of time given to other tasks, Dr. Kelly put his main strength into the college in the years from 1912 to 1921, when for health reasons he resigned. He was thus the administrative head of this institution in the difficult period in which its plans were adjusted to those of the new government university. The happy outcome was in no small measure due to Dr. Kelly's wise and constructive attitude; and the new Judson College of the University of Burma will be in a true and large sense his achievement. Not only did Dr. Kelly win multiplied evidences of the esteem of his fellow missionaries, but his services came also to the appreciative attention of the government and in 1918 he was awarded the Kaiser-i-Hind Medal.

MINNEAPOLIS UNIVERSITY CHURCH

In noting the completion of Dr. Kelly's life and ministry, the board would record its sense of gratitude to God for a life so effective and so manifestly controlled by the spirit of our Lord. It would, moreover, extend to Mrs. Kelly sincerest Christian sympathy, commending her in her bereavement to our Lord Jesus Christ and to God our Father, the God of all comfort.

New England Baptist Hospital

Without detracting from the willing service of many other friends, it may safely be said that the New England Baptist Hospital is the sightly and imposing monument of two persons: Col. Edward H. Haskell and Miss Emma Anderson. The former has served for twenty-five years as president of the board of directors, the latter for the same period as superintendent.

Col. Haskell has been an untiring and optimistic chief in every advance that has lifted the hospital out of almost nothing up to its present proud position. Miss Anderson, the practical head of the growing house, has proved herself not only an unmistakable character in her position, but a sort of genius. She with self-sacrificing devotion has fixed the ideals that have given the hospital its country-wide eminence. They have attracted to its service the best known surgeons and doctors in the whole region and all together have made the institution illustrious. There is no hyperbole about this: the hospital has richly earned unqualified encomium and gets it.

The Superb Site

It was a great stroke to seize upon that marvellous location on the crest of Parker Hill in Brookline. Standing there you get filled as with mountain breezes. It is ideal for convalescence and health building. But the institution has climbed as high as the hill. It has been an arduous and victorious ascent, but its crowning pre-eminence is clearly in sight. It belongs on that hill-top. The Samuel N. Brown memorial bequest came as the timely and material culmination of a long, patient, and brave effort. When the hospital proved itself deserving of everything, everything came, making the future radiant with promise.

On Nov. 15, in the early morning, there was an informal "ground-breaking," just at the edge of the spacious field back of the old buildings, where the Brown Memorial structures are to stand. Col. Haskell made a charming address compact with the hospital story. The assembled nurses and friends sang together one of Whittier's human hymns, and God's blessing was invoked upon the enterprise. Then the redoubtable Colonel drove the big spade into the sod, and really began the excavation while the camera men snapped the historic scene.

The New Hospital

The plan of the architects discloses something entirely new and uniquely practical in hospital construction. It looks like a new hospital conception. Instead of a large, imposing and wide-spreading edifice it is a beautiful aggregation of bungalow homes fringed all around by one-story patients' quarters, gathering in the air and sunshine, and immediately accessible from every direction. Certainly it appears like a perfect hospital scheme. One admirer of the sketch, looking over the writer's shoulder, exclaimed: "That looks just like Miss Anderson; it has character, efficiency, heart and sense. It must be exactly what she wanted!" It was a good expression of the general confidence.

Miss Anderson determined that the new hospital should not look like a reformatory, nor a barrack; and that no frowning wall of "professionalism" should make both patients and their anxious friends feel almost like malefactors. She wants the whole aspect and atmosphere to be that of a sympathetic home. Because the hospital is already stamped with that character, accounts for its popularity with doctors and the public.

The Cost

The memorial buildings will cost about a half million. Under the able administration of Mr. Walter I. Badger, son of Deacon Badger of the First Church, the Brown bequest has nearly doubled. In addition to this, Col. Haskell has declared his purpose to erect, adjacent to the plant, a nurses' home, which will furnish a charming center for those necessary helpers, and aid in sustaining the high quality of that side of the hospital service. The estimated cost will be about $100,000. By this gift Col. Haskell strengthens his already established reputation as a Baptist philanthropist. Here he is happy in supplementing his hearty and efficient leadership with one of his benefactions. All Baptists appreciate it and are proud of the president and the superintendent, who together have developed an institution that brings honor to its name from every part of the country.

"Brimstone Corner"

Park Street Church continues to be a hot center for all burning questions, local, national and international. There, earnest causes, political and religious, are approached by their apostles from every angle. It is almost like a continuous convention, merely shifting its programs, and changing the complexion of its assemblies. In the old days of that Baptist giant, George C. Lorimer, Tremont Temple was the great forum, and there, all between the extremes of Joseph Cook and Minot J. Savage used to blow their trumpets vigorously. The writer remembers hearing Mary Baker Eddy there in her modest and plausible days, when she was beginning to lay the foundation of her fame and fortune.

Now "Brimstone Corner" is the great platform from which varied voices are heard. It is a spacious old colonial auditorium, with perfect acoustics, noble associations and provocative of a cheerful and optimistic temper, that polishes off much of the gloom from some of the more bilious spellbinders. By the way, just to raise an interesting question, what is the explanation of the growing reaction from the prevalence of Gothic architecture? How we hailed the Gothic when it came to save us from those sacred (?) monstrosities that we were building, that were conglomerate of libraries, skating rinks, or clambake pavilions! Is the world gloomy enough making us want to escape from the somber Gothic into the white and cheerful proprieties of the colonial?

An Old Model

The really up-to-date meeting-house now is that of the First Church, Providence, modelled after St. Martin's-in-the-Field, in London, and erected in 1774. One by one the new church houses are squinting back towards its ancient dignity and beauty. This will bring pain to Ralph Adams Cram, the great Gothic, but Bro. Cram is a highly ornated churchman, and the world is going the other way.

First Church Boston

The old church (1665) is renewing her youth. Strength and resiliency of every sort are coming. It is thoroughly organized, yet not over-organized. "Inner Might" seems to be one explanation. Something of substance and something of spirit. The substance adds to the spirit, and the spirit illumines and informs the substance. It has been a long tussle, and has developed the patience and strength of pastor and people, but the "large place" seems in sight. The organizations strongly appeal to the different life-periods that should be represented in a sturdy and normal gospel church. They respond, and are served by them. A recent roll call happily registered and expressed the new encouragement. Dr. De Blois is a new man. The new hopes and large purposes have gotten into him and into his preaching, and there is a steady and gratifying growth everywhere.

In Lighter Vein

The Ministers' Conference is limbering up. It seeks a sort of social awakening. Believing that one requisite to this is the presence of their wives, they are beginning on a series of periodical and composite feasts. The first comes Nov. 27. There will be social warmth and expansion, making a charming basis for a solid discussion and quiz on religious education, all pleasantly accompanied by what the committee announce as a "dandy lunch."

NEW YORK

THE WASHINGTON HEIGHTS CHURCH, New York City, has a full program for the next two months. The men's club dinner, with Dr. Frank Crane as speaker, the annual roll call, the Y. P. S. C. E. dinner, and the church fair are among the events. Recently Rev. Harold Pattison, pastor, preached at Vassar College and Rev. Albert G. Lawson supplied the pulpit. A visitor for the church and Bible school was needed in addition to our other workers, and on a recent Sunday the church responded generously so that a visitor might be secured. Rev. Charles H. Rust, of Scranton, Pa., pastor of Immanuel Church, has been invited to assist the pastor in special meetings to be held for ten days early in March of next year.

THE LITTLE CHURCH AT MEREDITH has been most highly favored this year in the uplift which has come to it through the cooperation of Drs. Farrier and Jones of the New York State Convention and Dr. Harry Myers of the General Board of Promotion. Drs. Farrier and Myers came on August 21 for the conduct of an institute devoted particularly to the development of four objectives: Bible study, stewardship, denominational efficiency and missionary interest. An every-member canvass followed the adoption of a budget and the duplex envelope plan with most encouraging results. Meantime Pastor and Mrs. Dike were visiting in the homes and the district schools for the promotion of interest in the evangelistic services which were held Oct. 29-Nov. 8. Dr. H. Wyse Jones, director of evangelism for New York state, preached every evening and on Sundays, assisted by Mr. John L. Gillis, the Scotch tenor. More than thirty expressed their desire to follow Christ and every side of church life has been strengthened. Notwithstanding most inclement weather on the last night the free will offering announced for that date gave to Dr. Jones generous expression of the hold he has on the hearts of the people of this farming community.

CONNECTICUT

REV. A. D. CARPENTER, FORMERLY OF THE First Church, Willimantic, has received and accepted a call to Calvary Church, Torrington. Rev. J. E. Norcross has accepted a call to the First Church, Bristol. Connecticut Baptists are rejoicing in the coming of these brethren to the state. ASYLUM AVENUE CHURCH, HARTFORD, has just celebrated the jubilee of its organization. During the fifty years the church has filled an honorable place in the life of the city and been a loyal supporter of all denominational enterprises. Men of outstanding character have filled the pulpit for the half century in the following order: Rev. F. F. Emerson, 1873-1879; Rev. Geo. M. Stone, 1879-1908; Rev. W. G. Fennell, 1908-1917; Rev. P. C. Wright, 1917-1920; Rev. F. B. Haggard, who settled in December, 1920, has greatly endeared himself to the church and is showing himself a strong leader. The members of the church made birthday presents of several articles of church furniture, gave $600 to start a building fund and presented the pastor with an automobile to help him in his work.

DR. CARTER HELM JONES, pastor of the First Church, Philadelphia, delivered two addresses, Nov. 10 in the First Church, New London, and the Central Church, Norwich, on his experiences in Czechoslovakia. The representatives of twenty-six churches were thrilled by Dr. Jones' masterful message.

DR. A. T. FOWLER, DR. HARRY S. MYERS and Mrs. J. M. Baker were the speakers at a conference in the South Norwalk Church, Nov. 14. Contacts were made with eight churches. This was a great team. Facts were presented in such a way as to interest and lead men and women to want to do still greater service.

REV. P. H. J. LERRIGO and Miss Linnie Holbrook were the speakers at a conference in Noank, Nov. 18. Their convincing messages awakened much interest and were listened to attentively. Dr. Lerrigo spoke in Central Church, Norwich, and First Church, New London, Nov. 19, while Miss Holbrook spoke in the First and Third Churches, Norwich, and the Preston City Church on the same date. Miss Holbrook the following week made an itinerary of the churches in the Stonington Union Association, South. Miss Holbrook is an evangelistic and general missionary from Assam.

MRS. J. M. BAKER, ONGOLE, SOUTH India, spent a week among the churches in the New Haven Association, Nov. 21-27, touching in all fifteen churches from seven points, with her inspiring message.

ON NOV. 13 FITTING memorial services were held in the Union Baptist Church, Mystic, for the late Rev. G. H. Miner who at one time was pastor at Mystic and also in New Britain. The following pastors took part in the service, Revs. J. G. Osborne, W. E. Bates, O. G. Buddington, J. R. Danforth (Congregational), W. B. Oakley, B. U. Hatfield, H. N. Thompson, A. G. Atha and C. A. Merrill.

A FAREWELL RECEPTION was held at First Church, Middletown, for Rev. Edgar R. Hyde, who, after having served the church for thirteen years, has accepted a call to the First Church of Racine, Wis. Resolutions expressive of appreciation of the work of Mr. and Mrs. Hyde and wishes for future blessings for them, were taken by the church.

NEW JERSEY

EVANGELIST F. W. SWIFT OF Rochelle, Ill., has concluded a successful series of evangelistic meetings with the First Church of Bloomfield. Mr. Swift has a couple of open dates after Jan. 1.

The New Executive Secretary

At the meeting of the New Jersey Convention held in Trenton the latter part of October the most important event was the election of a new executive secretary, the position having been vacant since the death of Dr. Holloway last April. Pending the election Dr. C. E. Goodall, pastor of the First Church of Roselle and recording secretary of the convention, has been discharging the duties of the office. The feeling crystallized that the temporary incumbent would be the ideal man and the hearty approval with which the report

The Baptist

Goodall was born in England and came to Canada in early boyhood. He attended the Baptist Sunday school at Weston, Ont. Two years later the family moved to Camden, N. J., and he attended the Linden Baptist Sunday school under the pastorate of Rev. William Geistwelt. He was converted and baptized under the pastorate of William G. Russell. He entered South Jersey Institute while Dr. Trask was principal. Graduating from there, he went to Bucknell University from which he was graduated in 1904. This was followed by a theological course at Crozer Seminary and later he took post-graduate work at Oxford University, England. Returning to this country he was ordained and became the pastor of the First Church at Huntingdon, Pa. While there he married Sara Mickel of Bridgeton, N. J. and she has been a helpful wife through these years. Dr. Goodall became pastor of the Roselle Church thirteen years ago, succeeding Dr. J. M. Stiffler, now of Evanston. He has been a leader in all the forward movements of the denomination.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

GREENSBURG: Rev. H. J. Whalen, pastor. The opening months of the seventh year of the present pastorate have been marked by the purchase of a large lot, situated in the center of the city's church area, as a site for the future church home of the First Church. No immediate time has been fixed for the erection of a building, but since the church will celebrate its fiftieth anniversary next April, it is probable that the celebration will be seized by the pastor and his fellow officers as a favorable time to launch the project. Dr. Whalen came to the Greensburg pastorate six years ago, after having been in the First Church, New Castle, for over eight years. The payment of a large church debt, the purchase of a large and beautifully located parsonage, and this recent forward movement have marked the pastorate, achievements made possible only by the growing spiritual life of the church.

Woman's Mission Union, Chicago Association

The Woman's Mission Union held its annual training school meeting Nov. 14, with the North Shore Church. The afternoon program took the form of a conference on "The Standard of Excellence," presided over by the president, Mrs. R. P. Fales, with each point of the standard spoken to by a leader in that special branch of work. Mrs. C. W. Peterson brought "High Lights from the State Convention," and Mrs. Andrew MacLeish aroused fresh interest in the Union Colleges for Women of the Orient, and announced a mass-meeting to be held Sunday afternoon, Nov. 19, in Grace M. E. Church of Chicago. A musical vesper service brought the afternoon to a close. Dinner was served to nearly 600. The students of the Training School and the W. W. G. girls were special guests of the union. Roll call was a feature of the dinner hour, and the men present were also included in the attendance of the different circles in membership. The evening program gave a never-to-be-forgotten address by Dr. George L. Robinson, of McCormick Theological Seminary, on "Christianity and Other Faiths." This was followed by the cantata "Ruth," presented by the girls of the Training School. This meeting was one of the banner meetings in the history of the union, with an evening attendance that crowded the commodious North Shore Church, and left people standing in the back of the church and the foyer, numbering easily over 800 present.

OHIO

REV. GEORGE L. FORD WHO HAS SERVED the Himrod Avenue Church of Youngstown, as pastor for six years has resigned to become executive secretary of the Youngstown Federation of Churches. For one year Mr. Ford gave the federated churches part-time service. Mr. Ford closed his work at Himrod Avenue Dec. 1.

Dayton Association

The ministers of the Dayton Association met in regular session Nov. 13 at First Church, Piqua. There was something of a shadow cast over the gathering by the recent and rather sudden deaths of Rev. Henry Brandt of Troy and Rev. R. B. Smith of Springfield.

From the report of the churches the fall and winter work seems to be getting well under way. Rev. L. M. Copeland, Clifton St., Springfield, reported Sunday school good and work encouraging. O. E. Miller, DeGraff, had reorganized the B. Y. P. U. and was looking forward to a week-end mission on evangelism. J. M. Crosby, Tippecanoe City, reported "Things coming along nicely." O. T. Swigart, Greenville, had baptized one, received two and a renewed interest prevails. C. A. Walsh, of Sidney, had been busy in the redecoration of the church and parsonage. W. D. Keis, Kings Creek, reported work in a very aggressive and thriving farming community with the church coming to the front. Rev. J. Vuker, Sinking Creek, reported "things going as usual." F. F. Fenner had completed one year at Piqua, with eighty additions to the church and the Sunday

WANTED: An Experienced Executive

An organization having contacts with all the Protestant denominations is looking for an Executive in its promotional department to assist in the extension and strengthening of its church program. He must be able to handle office detail with the aid of an efficient staff—must be able to secure and develop through correspondence mainly the service of official committees in these various denominations and their state and local organizations. He must be a forceful speaker before public gatherings and be effective in smaller conferences and committees where the organization's cause must be frequently presented. Will be located in New York, but must travel widely in the United States during a part of the year.

In writing give age and describe fully previous experience and minimum salary requirements. Address school reorganized and graded. Rev. Clive McGuire, by the promotion of evangelism and the aid of brother ministers, had been busy creating the spirit of fellowship among the seven churches in the vicinity of St. Paris. Thirty-five men had been enlisted in this work. They had been divided into seven teams of five men each. Each of the seven churches had conducted a week of services with one of the teams in charge each night of the week. The plan now is a simultaneous evangelistic effort in all the seven churches with a goal of 200 won to the Christ and church.

Among the Dayton churches the pastors are engaged largely in the great "Billy" Sunday campaign. The tabernacle which holds 7000 people has been filled to overflowing each night of the two weeks the meetings have been in progress. One of the most impressive meetings was on Sunday afternoon when 7000 men listened enthusiastically for one hour to the evangelist. Dayton is expecting a great revival. Sinners have been converted and the church members quickened. 1000 have already "hit the saw dust trail."

Robert Bruce Smith, D. D.

Dr. Robert Bruce Smith was born in Mason County, near Point Pleasant, West Virginia, in 1860. He was licensed to preach at the age of nineteen in Mt Zion Church near his boyhood home. He was graduated from Denison University in 1889. He was ordained at LaGrange, Ill. May 29, 1890, where he was student pastor. In April, 1892, he was graduated from Morgan Park Seminary in the last class in that institution before it became the Divinity School of the University of Chicago. May 1, 1892 he became pastor of the Parkersburg Church, West Virginia, where he remained for nearly seven years, resigning to go to New York City, in 1899, where he succeeded James A. Francis as pastor of Riverside Church, now Central Church. Thence he went to El Paso, Tex., in 1902, taking up a struggling work which in nine years grew to occupy a large place of worship and also four flourishing mission chapels which have grown into strong churches, with several others organized since then. In 1910 Dr. Smith returned to Parkersburg, W. Va., again to assume the pastorate he had left twelve years before. After more than three years of delightful fellowship, he accepted the call of Calvary Church, Denver, Colo. where he succeeded in carrying to completion an extensive building project and saving to the denomination one of the most beautiful church houses in Colorado, and also building up a large membership. In the spring of 1918 he accepted a call to the First Church of Springfield, Ohio, a church that had twice before invited him to become its pastor. For thirty years he was continually in the pastorate without the break of a single Sunday.

He was married March 22, 1893 to Miss Carrie E. Smith of Marengo, Ill. To them were born five children, Mrs. Lois E. Johnson of Colorado Springs, Colo., Mrs. Ruth F. Glezen of Denver, Colo., Miss Frances Virginia, at home, Robert B., Jr. and Philip B., students at the Ohio State University in Columbus. Mrs. Smith has recently been elected president of East Central District (women's missionary work).

The last services were held Nov. 7 in the First Church of Springfield, with interment at Ferncliff Cemetery, Springfield, Ohio.

During the last pastorate of Dr. Smith in Springfield, Ohio, $50,000 was subscribed to the New World Movement, a church debt of $3150 paid, 434 members added to the church and five young men licensed to preach. Last February special evangelistic services were held, resulting in 107 additions, sixty-eight of whom were received by baptism.

MICHIGAN

THE FIRST ANNUAL BAPTIST Young People's Conference of Southwestern Michigan was held at Kalamazoo First Church, Nov. 18-19. The conference theme was "Constructive Evangelism."

WISCONSIN

THE EVENING OF Nov. 16, the Evansville church surprised its pastor, Rev. A. W. Stephens with a birthday party at the church, it being his seventieth birthday. A delicious supper was served, cafeteria style. The chief decorations of the tables were chrysanthemums and a pyramidal cake upon which gleamed seventy candles. A wax rose formed the apex. In its petals were concealed seventy dollars in gold—"For your seventy golden years," read the card. Mrs. Stephens was remembered with a bouquet of chrysanthemums. The large number—not all Baptists—who responded so enthusiastically to the invitation is but another indication of the high regard in which the community holds Mr. Stephens.

KANSAS

FIRST CHURCH OF OTTAWA, Dr. W. A. Elliott, pastor, collected and forwarded to New York City fifteen large boxes of clothing to help "Rush a Ship to Russia." The clothing weighed 680 pounds and was packed by the White Cross Committee of the Woman's Missionary Society.

FIRST CHURCH OF WASHINGTON has closed a two weeks' revival meeting which resulted in the greatest spiritual uplift in the history of the church. Preparation for the meeting was laid by Dr. Dring of India with soul-stirring messages the week prior to the meetings. The pastor, Rev. H. P. Cox, had the assistance of Dr. Louis S. Bowerman of Kansas City, who by his powerful messages reached the hearts of both the church members and townspeople. Although the roads were bad and country people were unable to get to many of the services, the attendance was larger than the church has ever witnessed, the building being taxed for seats on several occasions. While additions were small, results cannot be measured in the spiritual awakening and deepening prayer life of the church.

REV. RAY PALMER is in the midst of a successful evangelistic campaign with First Church of Leavenworth. A large number of converts have been reported.

REV. FRANK C. RIDEOUT, CHAPLAIN, United States Army, who is stationed at the general service schools of the War College, Fort Leavenworth, preached on a recent Sunday evening for the Oak Park Church of Kansas City, and gave an ad-

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

DR. ARTHUR S. PHELPS OF BERKELEY, closed his supply with the First Church, San Francisco, Nov. 1, with the coming of Dr. James S. West, of Detroit, to the pastorate. About 200 members have been added during Dr. Phelps' service as stated preacher.

REV. J. CARL TRUEX HAS completed six years with First Church of Selma. The last page of a recent church calendar was devoted to expressions of appreciation by the board of deacons, the church secretary and officers of church organizations.

OREGON

GRANT'S PASS: In addition to the pastoral care of the First Church, the pastor looks after the work in the villages of Merlin and Hugo, nine and fifteen miles to the north. With the second Sunday of October, State Evangelist M. G. Bentley came to assist in a revival campaign and for five weeks meetings were kept up, working each of the three fields in turn. On Thursday, Nov. 2, the pastor baptized three and on Sunday, Nov. 12, thirty-seven more. In addition several have united with the church by letter and experience and others await baptism. Before the meetings there had been twenty-five additions to the church the past year, seventeen of them by baptism, and a parsonage property has been purchased. The pastorate of C. M. Cline is well toward the end of its fourth year.

SEPT. 10-17 IS A WEEK long to be remembered by Bend Baptists, Rev. J. C. Austin, of Portland, assisted the pastor, Rev. F. H. Beard, and church in putting on the building fund campaign for the new building. As a result approximately $20,000 was raised toward a building which will cost $30,000. Sept. 28 excavation was begun and the foundation is now under construction. The church hopes to get into the building by early spring. This means a tremendous undertaking for this little church which needs prayers as well as financial help.

WESTERN WASHINGTON

REV. B. P. RICHARDSON, pastor of the First Church of Hastings, Neb., who for several years has been one of the most useful pastors in Nebraska, has accepted the pastorate of the Queen Anne Hill Church, Seattle, Wash., and began his duties there Dec. 1.

REV. E. O. OTTO, formerly of Oregon but for the past few years serving as district missionary in Idaho, began his duties as the new pastor of the Puyallup Church Nov. 19.

REV. J. HARVEY DEERE, who has had a succession of successful pastorates with the First Church of Phoenix, Ariz., First Church of Fresno, and First Church of Pomona, Cal., has become pastor of the First Church at Everett, where he began his duties Nov. 26.

"In the fourth place this intensity of emotion did not mean a narrowness of interest. Issac McCoy put into operation here at the Carey Mission Station, as William Carey did in India, a widely comprehensive service. The highest spiritual idealism was first, last and always central. Everything was pivoted on prayer, regeneration by the Holy Spirit and the presence of the living God. An intense piety marked every day and every hour of the day. But it was not piety conformed with intellectual or ritual formulas; it was piety in actual deeds. It was religion feeding the whole range of human need." No man was ever more devoted to his own family, having ten children all of whom became missionaries to the Indians. McCoy was also a good neighbor in every way to all who quickly gathered around him. He conducted a very successful school. He believed in the economic uplift to be taught by example as well as precept. His comprehensiveness included service and ministering to the bodily welfare.

"It was liquor and kindred terribly anti-Christian influences of the crowding influx of white men which convinced Issac McCoy that the only hope for the red men was to colonize them somewhere beyond the reach of white men. Real Christianity, never exploiting men, but in proportion to its completeness always ministering to the whole man was incarnated in Issac McCoy.

"His pioneering enterprise, courage, altruism and service culminated in a broad statesmanship." One day in June, 1823, McCoy's growing conviction ripened into a fixed purpose that "Providence permitting, he would thenceforward keep steadily in view and endeavor to promote a plan for colonizing the natives in a country to be made forever theirs, west of the state of Missouri." After a great deal of labor and many journeys to Washington to the end of eleven years the Indian Territory was set aside for the Indians. Here McCoy labored until he died. Whether colonization was the best thing or not, no one knows, but "this is certainly true, they have come to a consciousness of themselves which they could never have reached scattered everywhere."

In conclusion Dr. Barnes said, "In these days there is little chance for us to become hardy heroic pioneers in the planting of new settlements among savages in the forest. But there is a call and it is becoming more and more insistent, that we have an intense pioneering enterprise, as indomitable courage, as utter altruism, as comprehensive service, and as broad statesmanship in making Christianity a reality in the great wilderness of human life.

"Europe and America are only partially civilized and Christendom is only partly Christianized. It is still half pagan. Even evangelical Christianity is but half Christian. The memory of Issac McCoy dares us to go the whole length, dares us to fearlessly lead others into making the Spirit of Christ regnant, not now in woods and cabins and camps, but regnant now in industry and commerce, regnant in all the relationships of our manifold modern life."

Obituary

MRS. SARAH ESTES FOGG

Funeral services for Mrs. Sarah Estes Fogg, widow of the late Moses Fogg, were held at the Fogg homestead in Limerick, Maine, Nov. 14, Rev. H. L. Packard officiating. For over fifty years Mrs. Fogg had been a faithful member of the Baptist Church, adapting herself to the various phases of Christian service. Her beautiful personality and sweet Christian spirit have left their influence on all who knew her. She leaves to mourn her loss two sons and a daughter, two grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. "Because he lives, I shall live also."

MRS. W. A. CAIN

Miss Kate Evans was born in the state of New York, Nov. 11, 1838. She spent her early life in New York City, where she was married, September 11, 1877, to Rev. W. A. Cain, at the home of her aunt on West Fourteenth Street, by Rev. T. D. Anderson of the First Baptist Church. Her husband was pastor at Malvern, Somerset, Indiana and Des Moines, Iowa; at Becket, Mass.; at Columbus, Wis. and in Kansas at Medicine Lodge, Abilene and Caldwell. His death occurred in August, 1916. Together they settled in Wichita about ten years ago. Living alone after her husband's death Mrs. Cain maintained her interest in church affairs and mission work to the last. Her funeral was at the home and was conducted by her pastor, John Bunyan Smith of the First Baptist church. Before Mr. Cain's death they joined in a will leaving all their property to the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, the American Baptist Home Mission Society and the Kansas City Baptist Theological Seminary. Money Talks, by Albert F. McGarrah. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co.

Ten suggestive addresses brought together into this volume. The messages are timely in this day when the people of our churches need to think through the whole subject of the stewardship of money.

"The City of Fire" by Grace Livingstone Hill. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Co. $2.00.

The story is one of intense interest which is sustained throughout every chapter. It combines its swiftly moving action with a deep Christian faith, which is always an element in the solution of the problems presented. A love story, and yet so different! It will make a desirable gift book.

Old Morocco and the Forbidden Atlas, by C. E. Andrews. New York: Doran Co.

Mr. Andrews has the power of making real to the reader experiences of a journey through a little-known or traversed part of Morocco and over a pass of the Atlas Mountains which is frequented chiefly by wild tribes and banditti. The work has all the color and wildness and beauty of the Orient. Adding much to it are the many illustrations from photographs. It is a beautiful volume.

The Road of the Star, by Walter Russell Bowle. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.50 net.

A collection of inspirational addresses which make the Christ and his way nearer and more desirable. Couched in the simplest of phraseology, these will appeal alike to layman or preacher. Suggestive of the chapter titles are: "The Road of the Common Day," "Through the Doors of Life," "Adventure and Return," "The Gallantry of Hope."

The Ministry As A Life Work, by Robert Lee Webb. New York: Macmillan.

A worthy and common-sense presentation of a most important subject. Its 96 pages are well worth a thoughtful reading by any lover of the church. The importance of his subject is voiced by the writer when he says, "The minister's task is really the hardest task given to mortal man, but it is absolutely fundamental to the perpetuity of the state and nation and to the welfare of the race."

The Cathedral, by Hugh Walpole. New York: Doran Co.

Blood tells! It is not surprising to find a Walpole making his mark, now in the church, now in literature, or again in statesmanship. The descendant of the prime minister of the eighteenth century has gotten beyond the stage of the "rising young novelist" and has already won for himself an assured place both as creator and critic. Incidentally, he can speak as well as write interestingly, for proof of which witness the fact that he is now on an extended lecture tour in America. "The Cathedral" is a study of the inevitable downfall of a churchman possessed of inordinate ambition in a good cause. His weakness is none the less deadly because it is not fleshly but spiritual. Mr. Walpole has surrounded the archdeacon with the usual characters of a small cathedral town whose lineaments he depicts with the skill of a Rembrandt. Cherchez la femme? In this case, it is the demure, colorless wife of the archdeacon who finally elopes with the equally colorless rector of a nearby parish. Other love affairs are of minor interest. The story is bound to take front rank among the novels of the season.

"Reigning In Life" by J. East Harrison. Philadelphia: Sunday School Times.

A book containing much that is helpful and inspiring for the believer who aspires to what is called the victorious life. The steps to this happy and useful state are clearly outlined in the twenty-one chapters. The condition of reigning is through sonship; the way of reigning through faith; the hope of reigning is in the assurance of the omnipotence of God. Other important steps are found in the succeeding chapters. The book contains much that would be found helpful to a pastor who desires to preach a course of sermons on the victorious life.

"It Is to Laugh"

A celebrated singer was in a motor-car accident one day. A paper, after recording the accident, added, "We are happy to state that he was able to appear the following evening in four pieces."

A little girl who does not understand encores found fault with the audience at a recent children's concert in which she helped to sing a chorus.

"I know we didn't make one mistake," she exclaimed on the way home, "and yet they made us sing it all over again."

"To-morrow," announced five-year-old Frank proudly to his Sunday school teacher, "is my birthday."

"Why," returned she, "it is mine too." The boy's face clouded with perplexity as he said, "How did you get so much bigger'n me?"—Youth's World.

SOLO VERSUS CHOIR SINGING

Not every good soloist also makes a good choir singer, for the simple reason that they so often fail to realize the fundamental difference between solo singing and choir singing. In solo singing the personal taste of the singer decides all questions of expression. Whether a given passage is to be sung loud or soft, fast or slow, brilliantly or tenderly is entirely left to the discretion of the singer, who must interpret as he or she understands the composer. All that is changed in choir singing. There the baton of the leader rules. It is the director who must do the interpreting and he must mold the complexity of the individual tastes into a unified expression of the anthem as he conceives it. The individual singer may have an entirely different conception of the right way to sing a given number or passage, and the judgment of that singer may be superior to that of the director; but a choir singing no conflict of opinions are to be tolerated, at least not so far as the expression of them in singing is concerned. A singer who is not willing to accept the leadership of the director and to give his very best in responding to it, who is too strongly individualistic for team work, will never make a good choir singer. Every choir director has had more or less experience with such. The trouble is not due to their higher degree of musical culture or greater refinement of musical taste, though they may have a full right to claim both; the trouble is simply due to their lack of good, hard common-sense.

Then, aside from all this, the solo singer is allowed privileges in his singing that are simply impossible in choir singing. There is, for instance, the portamento singing, that is, the sliding or carrying the voice from one tone to another, as we constantly hear it in violin solo playing, when the player slides his finger along the string from one place to another. That may be very effective in the playing of string instruments and in solo singing, but what a hodgepodge we have if a whole choir or any considerable part of it tries that sort of thing. Portamento is fatal to all good choir singing, and unless our soloists remember that they will not be good choir singers. Nor will they be that if they insist on injecting their tremolo into their choir work. The diaphragmatic tremolo which simply varies the wind pressure, is not so bad, but the tremolo which is caused by the variation in pitch, what an impossible thing that is in choir singing! The wobbling of a single voice is a distressing disturbance of the purity of tone, and the more wobble, the more distress. Let us have none of it in our choir work.—The Choir-Leader.

MUSIC REVIEW

From The H. W. Gray Co., New York

The Golden Synod.....Lester
A choral work of larger form than is ordinarily put forth by the American publishers is listed above. Titled as a cantata, it is in extent and mass more in the nature of a genuine oratorio. The excellent text by Frederick H. Martens is built around the inspired vision of John of Patmos, as chronicled in Revelations; the musical setting is a reverent attempt to set forth the spiritual values of such a flaming text. This work is not difficult, if by such a term we mean hard to make effective. The choral writing, while full and individual, is melodic in contour and idiomatic to the voices; the many choruses range over many moods and many different emotions; there are several solos aptly placed for the solo voices—soprano, contralto, tenor and bass. In addition there are two duets—for soprano and tenor, and tenor and bass. A trio for women's voices should find wide use for its simplicity and tunefulness. The purchase of such an extended work as this is often a good investment for a choir; for besides the advantage of having a large work to be given on special occasions as a whole, it can be used as service-material in piece-meal fashion. Almost all of the separate numbers of this cantata can be used independently. If time will not allow the entire work to be given as a unit, it may be given in two or three sections, each complete in itself. It is to be hoped that the initiative of this publisher in putting out such an ambitious contribution to the literature of the choir-loft will be rewarded by an extensive use of the work. The composition and publication of such works depends largely on the commercial demand from the public itself. Such an experiment as the above is of interest in determining just what the American composer can look for at the hands of his colleagues and patrons.

Yuletide Memories.....Wilson
The choir-master in search for easy but appealing cantatas for the Christmas season will do well to examine these two sincere products. Both are written by able craftsmen, adept at saying much with very simple means. No difficulties of performance will be found. Such technical factors as vocal ranges, accompaniment types and the setting of text have been exceedingly well handled. The melodic material is fresh and singable. The first is somewhat the easier, but neither will offer any reason for nervousness either on the part of leader or choir. They will not require any arduous devotion to long rehearsal schedules—a point to be considered by the wise choir-master at holiday time!

From The Hall-Mack Co., Philadelphia.

Songs for Little Singers, No. 3.
A very interesting book of sacred songs, exercises and recitations for children. The limited supply of such material will doubtless make for this well-designed volume a cordial reception. It is worth such, for it is musically valid, of good literary value and well-printed.

From The Rodeheaver Co., Chicago.

Rodeheaver Solos—high voice.
Rodeheaver Solos—low voice.
Rodeheaver Duets.
Sixteen Gospel Male Quartets.
Usable and effective ammunition for the church service. None of the music is elaborate, but all selections, if done simply and sincerely, cannot fail to make their effect. The texts are all evangelistic in character; the music, while simple, is tuneful and appealing. The prices charged are remarkably low when the material gained is considered.

THE BAPTIST

FROM the world of thought and action,
From its heroes in the strife,
Comes a word of inspiration
Comes a message to my life;
And I welcome it with gladness,
And I read it with a zest,
And I ponder well its pages—
'Tis THE BAPTIST of the West

How I long for information
From the world's great battlefield.
Does the truth go on to conquer?
Do the powers of evil yield?
Is the kingdom coming nearer?
Do God's people stand the test?
"Day is dawning," cries the watchman,
From THE BAPTIST of the West.

Well I prize association
With the wise, and great, and good,
With the thinkers and the leaders
Of our common brotherhood.
I could never see or meet them,
Though around the world my quest,
But I hear them and I know them,
Through THE BAPTIST of the West.

What has unified our people,
East and West together brought,
Stood for broad cooperation,
Many reformations wrought?
What has furnished us a forum
For these themes and all the rest?
What has led the van of progress?
'Tis THE BAPTIST of the West.

Would you have your own life deepened,
And intensified, and fed?
Would you be inspired, and quickened,
Into broader knowledge led?
Would you both in thought and action
With our leaders keep abreast?
Would you be equipped for service?
Take THE BAPTIST of the West.

Ransom E. Olds of Lansing, Mich., a trustee of Kalamazoo College, has added $15,000 to the building fund for the new women's dormitory.

The sessions of the annual meeting of the executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ of America will be held in the First Church, Indianapolis, Dec. 13-15.

Barton F. Bronson, chaplain in the United States Army, was assigned to Vancouver Barracks four years ago last July. The barracks occupy the site of the old Hudson Bay stockade established in 1812. It is counted one of the most important posts in the country.

Rev. M. Ashby Jones was university preacher at the University of Chicago, Nov. 26. He addressed the monthly union ministers' meeting of Chicago on Nov. 27. Mr. Jones is pastor of the Ponce de Leon Church, Atlanta, Ga. His father served as a Confederate chaplain in the war of the rebellion.

Dr. W. W. Keen, emeritus professor of surgery at Jefferson Medical College, delivered an address last summer which attracted wide attention—first, because of the reputation of the speaker and, second, because of his subject. His subject was, "I believe in God and in Evolution." It has been published by the J. B. Lippincott Co.

Rev. Earle Reiney returns to the field of the Northern Baptist Convention after an absence of some years by accepting the pastorate of the First Church, Coffeyville, Kan. He has been pastor of the church at Norman, Okla. where the state university is located. After his graduation at the Divinity School of the University of Chicago, Mr. Reiney was pastor for six years of the King Hill Church in St. Joseph, Mo.

Twenty-three thousand dollars for milk for the hungry children of Chicago's poor was the amount spent on this one item of relief alone last year by the United Charities of Chicago, according to the statement of President Charles W. Folds, of the United Charities. An urgent appeal for the support of the babies' milk fund of the United Charities by Sunday school members throughout Chicago and its suburbs accompanied the statement.

The Chicago Church Federation includes sixteen Protestant denominations representing 650 churches. Through its commission on daily vacation Bible schools it gave supervision to 200 such schools during the summer of 1922. Through its commission on evangelism it promoted a city-wide evangelistic movement resulting in 37,320 additions to the churches for the year ending with Easter, 1922. A monthly union ministers' meeting is held under its auspices. Dec. 10 will be observed as Chicago Church Federation Day.

Mrs. Lucy W. Peabody of West Medford, Mass., writes "Everyland is going to venture on a new year. Can you say a good word for her? Do you think she deserves subscribers? An expert on child training says: 'I am confident that if the child question is properly handled we will have an entirely new world in one or two generations, and we have got to have a new world. It took only two generations of implanting "Deutschland uber Alles" through the state schools into the minds of children to create the Germany which sprang at the world in 1914. We must realize that the child question is not an academic question but a live issue, the molding of our tomorrow.' Full particulars may be secured by addressing Everyland, West Medford, Mass.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. A. Slayton of Hillsdale, Mich., have made a gift to Hillsdale College of fourteen acres of land situated about one block from the campus. This is to be used as an outdoor laboratory and experimental ground for the biological department. It is the ground which has been familiarly known as "Mount Zion."

Dr. O. J. Price, executive secretary of the Federation of Churches of Rochester, has taken up the task of writing beatitudes. Here is the result of some of his recent efforts: "Blessed is the man that answereth communications. Blessed is the man that keepeth a date book and requireth not a five-cent telephone call in addition to a letter. Blessed is he that arriveth promptly, at the appointed place, and wasteth not the time of others tarrying for it. Blessed is the chairman that

"LIKE A MIGHTY ARMY"

Extending across the entire continent, the State Conventions with their army of workers constitute a vast enterprise of denominational advance. Reports of recent state meetings clearly demonstrate the volume, the strategy, and the immense inspirational value of this work. State Missions form an important factor in the Baptist program of enlargement.

Last year the New York State Convention employed 132 missionary pastors. The Kansas State Convention joined in the support of 100. Every state had as many such workers as its resource would permit.

These self-denying men labored in the open country, in the village and in the growing cities. They led churches that were weak, or were passing through severe struggle, or were in the heroic effort for better equipment. Their fields furnish some of our most striking examples of conservation, of progress, and of missionary achievement.

To these pastors, should be added the great host of evangelists, employed by the State Conventions in their various lines of activity and plans of operation. They presented the claims of Christ to hundreds of thousands during the year, and won their victories from coast to coast.

Baptists should strengthen their State Conventions by prayer, cooperation and financial support, so that this vast State Mission Enterprise, with other interests, may steadily advance in new and remarkable achievements.

Dr. Clifford Next Week

Next week we will print an interpretation of the elections in England from the pen of that Grand Old Man—Dr. John Clifford.

Postponed Once More

Another telegram just received from Dr. Heath says: "Most strongly urge you to withhold announcement for at least another week." Another disappointment for the readers of this page. What can a man do with a committee instead of a conscience to be his guide?

The "Hart" of the Commonwealth

"Last week in your religious education department you displayed the awful fact that you are not a New Englander—a thing which we can scarcely forgive in the editor of the denominational journal! You spell the name of the Hart of the Commonwealth "Wooster" That is an unpardonable sin! We would permit your forgiveness, however, if you would correct the error and indicate that the school in question is in Worcester, Mass., and that the Central Day School of Religion, while promoted by four churches in the center of the city, is really inspired and led by the First Baptist Church under the direction of Rev. L. Earl Jackson, director of religious education. I, the pastor, am an interested onlooker." William R. McNutt. We have done penance. We have followed the letter of the instructions for securing forgiveness. We hope we are restored to favor once more.

preventeth a committee from wandering all over the earth to the serious detriment of its own appointed business." Amen.

Rev. E. J. Parsons of Petoskey, Mich., has been called to the pastorate of the new Grand River Avenue Church, Detroit. Until recently the church was known as the Monnier Road Church. It is located in one of the fastest growing sections of Detroit and presents an unusual opportunity.

The August issue of the "New East," published at Canton, China, includes an article by Rev. William Young, describing the marvellous evangelistic ingathering on the new field in the northern part of Burma, which now extends across the border into China. He reports that since Jan. 1, more than 2500 converts have been baptized by him and his staff of native preachers, and doors have been opened for larger ingatherings in the near future. Here is a field that may well promise one of the most marvellous evangelistic harvests in missionary history.

Issei Yamamoto, assistant professor in the Kyoto University Observatory, Japan, has recently received appointment as volunteer research assistant in the Yerkes Observatory, according to an announcement of the University of Chicago board of trustees. Professor Yamamoto has been sent to the United States by the Japanese government to spend about a year in several of our active observatories.

"World Facts and the Extension of Christianity" is the suggestive title of a pamphlet written by Dr. C. H. Patton of the American Board, which every pastor and missionary leader should read. It represents in brief, clear form the new facts in the world's life that have resulted from the war which have meaning to all American Christians. A postcard will bring a copy free from The General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Last year the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board appealed to the churches to place in their annual budgets an item covering the part which the minister or his church must provide in cooperation with the board for a retiring pension at age sixty-five. Many churches gladly responded. One little church having only six male members was among the first to respond. Churches who did not make this provision for their pastors last year now have an opportunity to make him a Christmas present this year that will place him in the membership of the Retiring Pension Fund. For a brief time there is again a special reduction in the dues of men receiving salaries of $1,500 or less.

Rev. Irvin T. Geistweit died in Chicago, Nov. 19, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Ethel Benedict. His last pastorate was in Marshall, Mich., where his wife died three years ago. He began his ministry in Ulysses, Pa. He attended Temple College in Philadelphia and was ordained in the Baptist ministry. He also spent several years in Hamilton Seminary, during which time he was pastor at Waterville, N. Y. He was pastor of the Baptist Church in Westfield, N. Y., and the Austin Avenue Church, Chicago. The funeral was held in the chapel at Forest Home Cemetery, Drs. Carl Case and J. B. Thomas officiating. He leaves a family of two daughters; three brothers and a sister also survive him, one of them being Dr. W. H. Geistweit, of St. Louis.

The Foreign Mission Society's warehouse in Brooklyn, N. Y., reported at the close of business Tuesday, Nov. 28, that a total of 6335 packages had been received, containing clothing and other supplies for the relief ship to Russia. Already 800 bales have been packed, and six hundred of these bales, each of them marked "American Baptist Relief," have been delivered to the steamship pier. The warehouse estimates that with the supplies at hand and those that are on the way, several hundred more bales will be added, thus making a total shipment of more than one thousand bales. The steamship "Manitowoc" has been selected to convey these expressions of fellowship to Russia, and it is expected that it will sail about Dec. 15, for Odessa. It will not be possible to receive any additional supplies at the warehouse, owing to the limited time in which those still at hand must be packed. Churches and individuals that have quantities of clothing on hand are therefore urged to correspond with the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society in order that these supplies may be placed at the disposal of that organization for distribution among destitute people in cities and at the Mather School. In remembering the needs abroad, home needs must not be neglected.

What Shall Be Done?

By BENJAMIN OTTO

AT A Recent meeting of the Cooperative Council of City Missions in Chicago—the five leading denominations having work among foreign-speaking peoples being represented; namely, Baptists, Congregational, Disciple, Methodist, and Presbyterian—the Methodists asked approval to begin work for Russians in a church building from which the American population was fast withdrawing.

"That opens up a large question for consideration," said the Baptist superintendent. "It is a well-known fact that in Russia the trend of the Protestant movement is overwhelmingly toward the Baptist denomination. Before the great war we had probably less than 200,000 followers in that empire. Today we have over a million—possibly two millions. Two thousand prisoners in German prison camps were converted and baptized through the preaching and teaching of Baptist people in Germany. When they were liberated scores of these converts returned to their villages, where their witnessing has led to many conversions and the organization of numerous churches. Thirteen of these young men, convinced of a definite call to preach, were, through the cooperation of our foreign and home mission societies brought to our International Seminary at East Orange for a course of study.

"I am wondering how far you other denominations can go, even in this country, in work for Russians without introducing an element of confusion that might prove more harmful than beneficial! As yet we Baptists on account of shortage of funds have no work for Russians in this city. Men well prepared to do missionary work among that people are available, and they all seem to be Baptists."

"That does not introduce a large question," was the general expression.

"The Russian church is immersionist," said the Presbyterian superintendent. "I can see the logic of Baptist priority. But now, will the Baptists assume the responsibility and put on an adequate program for the Russians in this city?"

Of course, the Baptist superintendent, knowing the financial situation, could not immediately reply with an unqualified affirmation. However, the request of the Methodists to begin work was not approved. The whole question was postponed for fuller consideration and a date set.

Will the Baptists assume their manifest responsibility for the Russians in Chicago? The other denominations are inclined to defer to them. If the Baptists do not adjust themselves to this task, what then? If they do, will that not force the same question to the front in every other city and state? "A great door and effectual is opened."

Two days after the above incident, but entirely non-cognizant of it, a Ukrainian minister, trained in the Baptist Slavic Training School, who, without salary, has been holding a group of Baptists together, meeting in the homes, stood at my desk. (There are 40,000,000 Ukrainians, "little Russians," many of whom, like the great Russians, are Baptists.) He asked whether a building our society must sell, to secure money for other necessary work, might not be made available for them.

The Lord must have great confidence in Baptists to give them the first chance in matters so fraught with possibilities for good. But what of the response?

Dollar Day

December 9 is Dollar Day for Women's Union Christian Colleges in the Orient. The building committee of the Union Christian Colleges for the Women of the Orient is glad to report it has in definite pledges and cash received $1,000,000. How shall we secure the second million? We have now a plan which we are ready to present throughout the country.

The literature and collector's cards will be sent to any one applying to state chairman or the National Office, 300 Fort Building, Boston, Mass. The whole plan now hinges on the prompt personal effort on the part of the women who are interested and will press the matter in their own communities. It is on the basis of a Red Cross offering, not denominational. Therefore, we are urging that the money be sent to the Assistant National Treasurer, Miss Hilda L. Olson, 300 Fort Building, Boston, Mass., instead of denominational treasurers as heretofore. In the case of large pledges they may be sent to denominational treasurers but the Dollar Day campaign is purely interdenominational. Jan. 1 terminates the pledge made by the trustees of the Laura Spelman Rockefeller Fund. Shall we lose this great gift to our Women's Foreign Mission Boards, for their own colleges, by our indifference or delay? Do not say we have given our share. Not one board has raised its part of the $2,000,000. Not one city has reached its quota. Therefore we must work with a will, securing as many as possible who will help in this one day campaign for dollars.

One hundred thousand collectors are needed for Dollar Day to insure its success. Of this number 20,000 should come from our Baptist ranks. Because of the late date at which many of our communities have been able to start the work Dollar Day may be extended Dec. 16 in cases of absolute necessity.

OUT of the bewildering maze of the financial dialect a phrase now and then casts a singular illumination upon other realms of life. Such a one is the term frozen credits, a felicitous phrase for an infelicitous condition which arose in the post-war world. It came into use to designate such assets as shipments of grain which were tied up indefinitely en route to their market by a coal famine or car shortage or railway strike. The term was extended to include many other assets which were genuine credits of the owner but which for some widely-prevailing cause were unavailable. It is not precisely the vaguer idea of undeveloped resources or potential wealth, but that of actual though not available resources—credits but frozen credits. The phrase is perhaps the natural antonym of the more familiar expression liquid assets, though the latter has usually a somewhat different use.

The metaphor is startlingly apt. Civilization is sickeningly aware of it. Realms imperial in extent, with enormous wealth, waiting only for that facile interchange of trade which is the economic life-blood of the world-organism, are ice-locked, not so much by the immediate disastrous effects of the war as by the hatreds, suspicion, hostile tariffs, and the ever-impending terror of new wars. This congelation of credits extends in some degree, by reason of the solidarity of economic interests, to every branch of trade and of human welfare in every continent and island of the sea. Germany, despite the fact that its marvellous instinctive industry and mechanical genius are refilling its warehouses, hangs on the perilous brink of bankruptcy; Russia, potential granary of the world, cannot feed its own starving millions now that the guaranties of mutual confidence and the safeguards of life and property are gone; a recent rich discovery of oil in Arctic British America is at present utterly useless, for lack of transportation facilities. All these splendid assets are frozen credits.

But, naturally, it is the frozen credits of the church that interest us most. We are not speaking of mere possibilities but of the proved abilities of the church. There is, for example, its self-propagating ability, its ability to grow by the constant addition of new recruits to the church and its Lord. The first two disciples of Jesus had a record of 100 per cent increase in their first day, when each found his own brother and brought him to Jesus; the single day of Pentecost also saw an increase of more than 100 per cent in the number of disciples; and by the close of the first century, through those two generations of contention and bitter persecution, the church is estimated to have grown to number 100,000 members, an increase of 2,000 per cent from the 5,000 who comprised the church of Jerusalem early in the Pentecostal period. Last year in Chicago the Church Federation only dared to set as the goal for a great simultaneous campaign of the Protestant churches, lasting many months, an increase of 10 per cent; but this was far above the ordinary rate of increase, since some single churches fail to add a convert in a year, and many church members fail to win a single soul in a lifetime. Was the self-propagating function of the church limited to apostolic times? American Baptists in the quarter-century between the beginning of the Revolution and the year 1800 increased from fewer than 10,000 to an estimated 100,000, a gain of 1,000 per cent, two-thirds of it in the last eight years of the century. The first half of the nineteenth century saw a further gain of 800 per cent, and certain sections of our denomination and certain churches in every section have maintained even until now a still higher rate or modulus of propagation. This can only mean that the function is not lost to the church as a whole, but that in large segments of our own and all denominations it is dormant, or to revert to our figure, it must be reckoned among the frozen credits of these churches.

And think of the unavailable abilities of our church men, the very life of fraternal organizations, rotary clubs, the chamber of commerce; princes in business life; executive geniuses; masters of men. It is a tragedy of the church that so many of these limit their service to occasional Sunday morning presence in a pew. Their splendid abilities are frozen credits in the church's account. There are some leaders in all these classes, who do give themselves in utter devotion to their church life without lessening their value in any other proper sphere.

The same principle applies to the financing of the kingdom. Dr. Agar estimates that only 10 per cent of our church members practice stewardship and only 15 per cent are interested in missions. With 85 per cent of our potential giving listed in the frozen credits column, the Hundred Million Campaign appears an epic of optimism and a miracle of success. The willing givers, who had always been the mainstay of missions, quadrupled their giving, and swept along with them many previous non-givers. The sea-level of beneficence was permanently raised for thousands of churches and many tens of thousands of members. Some churches were raised bodily into the class of missionary churches, but it was largely by those previously interested that the fifty millions was subscribed. If the whole denomination had averaged as well as they, the hundred millions would readily have come in the four years; if all the denomination had tithed it would have come in one year, for the income of Northern Baptists is around one billion dollars.

It is usually the pastor who transmutes the frozen credits of his church into quick assets available on demand. By a miracle of prayer, enthusiasm and winning personality he turns an unevangelistic church into a magnetic evangelistic center; secures the cooperation of his fine men, leading them into the strange delight of Christ's service; and stirs the financial conscience into a flame of sacrificial giving, though there are noble churches which achieve all these things under any pastor. But in any event, the church at large needs—oh, so pitifully—a thaw which will transmute its frozen credits into running streams of beneficence, of soul-winning, of service.

Clemenceau in Chicago

IT was ours to view the Tiger of France, as he has been called, from the far balcony. We were fortunate in getting so much of vantage among the ten thousand who crowded to hear this man of action. As for the hearing, Clemenceau's nervous French gesticulations which threw him out of the range of the mechanical amplifiers before him on the table, and his unfamiliar foreign accentuation, both of single words and parts of sentences, made it exceedingly difficult to follow the train of thought. But one caught enough to be stirred deeply, if not by the vigor and vim of the man, by the eager sympathy and swift response of his far reaching auditory. It was indeed a passionate appeal for preparation for the future and for what fortune in the course of the years might bring forth. "I am for peace," he said, with an emphasis of voice and gesture, and the audience applauded, "but," he added, "I warn you against combinations and conditions,"—we render freely—"which will not keep the peace."

Somehow as we sought the quiet of our home our Bible opened to the first chapters of Judges. We read the stern admonitory words of Joshua, the son of Nun, deprecating hostile league and weak surrender. It sounded verily like a faint rehearsal of what we had just been hearing, and the sad sequel in the page of record enforced the lesson.

Undoubtedly we are fallen upon critical and pivotal days in the affairs of the nations. Relationships are distressingly problematical, and the powder and tinder are altogether too close together for comfort. Looking at the weakness of man and the fermenting discords everywhere in these post-bellum times, we may well, as Christians, make our humble and tearful resort to the God who watches over this Israel of ours as when the people of old lifted up their voice and wept. "And they called the name of that place Bochim; and they sacrificed there unto the Lord. And when Joshua had let the people go, the children of Israel went every man unto his inheritance to possess the land." At any rate, let us do all we can, as our friend from abroad has enjoined, to preserve the peace of the nations.

Denominational Headquarters

THE newspapers of the country have carried a story of the removal of Baptist headquarters from New York to Chicago. A subscriber in the East has taken us to task for not announcing such important matters while they are still "news." The fact is that some "news" is so new that it is not true. The above story is a case in point.

The Immanuel Church, Chicago, is erecting a modern office building on its Michigan Avenue site. The church has made some definite proposals upon the acceptance of which the property valued at more than a half million dollars would be turned over to the denomination. The Chicago Executive Council and the finance committee of the Northern Baptist Convention have the whole matter under consideration.

There are many angles to the question and considerable time will elapse before the matter can be referred to the several cooperating organizations for their action. There is something to be said upon both sides of the question. This is not the time to argue the case. Let us await the reports of those charged with consideration of the whole problem. Let us not pass judgment before we hear the case.

The Primacy of the Churches

FRIENDS of the Y. M. C. A. and of the churches were pained by some reports of the recent meeting of 2,000 delegates at the international Y. M. C. A. convention held last month. The impression was given, especially in striking headlines, in certain sections of the press, that the Y. M. C. A. had declared its independence of the churches and its purpose to go its own way.

As a matter of fact nothing could be wider of the truth. Every one of the 2,000 and more delegates were members of evangelical churches and a large portion of them officers in their own local churches. Their effort was to bind the association and the churches closer together. They reaffirmed their position taken in 1913 and which has in substance represented the attitude of the Y. M. C. A. from its beginning. "The most important agency," the resolution reads, "for the promotion of the religious life is the church. No other institution should be permitted to supplant it or ignore its primacy. The association reaffirms its historical policy of absolute loyalty to the church and reasserts its intention to recognize in all its activities the preeminence of the church, the extension of whose influence is the primary purpose of the association." Contrary to reports there was no letting down of the bars. In this issue Dr. H. B. Grose gives our readers a very careful report and interpretation of the great meeting at Atlantic City.

What Are Our Children Reading?

RELIGIOUS papers have been led of late to call attention to the unsavory literature that is getting into the hands of the young people. This problem is not new. It is at least as old as the reader of these lines. There were forbidden magazines and hidden dime novels when we were boys and girls. We are here referring more particularly to the character of the material that is enjoined upon these growing minds by older people, presumably for the intellectual development of the younger generation. Some of this is called social literature, some of it even religious, the object being apparently to inform the mind regarding life's problems and thus forwarn against fortuitous moral issues. Are there not some things about which simplicity and even ignorance are better than headlong sophistication? What our children read and study will not only determine individual but national life, and parental care and caution in these matters is both pious and patriotic.

WHAT a question! Yes, what a question! Do you wonder in the light of some present day tendencies that the question is asked? Sit in the editorial chair for a few weeks and you will never wonder again. We are praised to the skies for editorials and articles which exactly coincide with the views of the reader and we are condemned without mercy for any utterance which seems to branch off from the well beaten path. The Western Christian Advocate justifies the exercise of freedom of both speech and press as the only safeguard against bureaucrats in church and state.

"Freedom of speech and freedom of the press are two ideals of democracy applicable to such a voluntary organization as the Methodist Episcopal Church. With out such freedom, either church or state will soon drift into control of bureaucrats. Democracy may have its handicaps for quick efficiency, but having adopted democracy, we must abide by the conditions necessary for its success.

"The ideals of freedom of speech and of press constantly must be maintained against a silent and unwilling opposition. Before men know it they may attempt to throttle discussion, simply because discussion may mean a possible change in their plans. Various opinions tend to slow down the enthusiasm of a united purpose. There are times when progress becomes dependent on a frank facing of the situation, and there must be a calm readiness on the part of the church to welcome into the arena a man or group of thinkers who may offer what appear to be radical suggestions. The way must be kept open.

"When this right of freedom of speech or press is utilized, the new leader must be willing to face the consequences in a fair field. The fact that a man has spoken at all must not be cause for criticism, but what has he said? Do his positions stand the test? Are they better than the established order? Sometimes the new voice will be silenced because he has spoken without the warrant of facts. Sometimes that voice may win, after a struggle.

"No movement in the church ought to ask to be free from openly-expressed criticism. If the criticism is just, let it stand; if it is unjust and unwise, the movement will be all the stronger for having met the foe and conquered publicly. This is democracy."

Fundamentalist Warns His Friends

IN a signed editorial in the Baptist Banner, Rev. R. B. McDanel raises a warning voice in view of the publicity being given to the "Baptist Bible Union" movement. His views are so nearly in accord with the positions taken by THE BAPTIST that we can do no better than give place to his message, which is in part as follows:

"I am lifting a warning voice to some Baptists among us whose loyalty to truth I do not for a moment question, but who are acting far from wisely in starting a movement which can never bring about anything else but acrimonious division and serious secession. In common with very many other brethren, I received the propaganda of 'The Baptist Bible Union.' I did not find myself widely at variance with any statement in it, but I knew of many others whose Baptist loyalty and fidelity were sound to the last degree, who would like to see some of those statements modified. I cannot see the wisdom of making statements about our Lord's return in such language that other good men who believe as fervently in that return as I do, cannot accept it. If I am a premillennialist, who ever gave me the right or the authority to read out of the denomination my post-millennial brother? It is time this spirit of over-lordship that has arisen among us be eliminated. Instead of welding our denomination into greater solidarity, some of our brethren are making still more and more serious cleavage in it. All who know me know that I am a fundamentalist. I had the great honor of being one of the original signers for the Buffalo Convention, but I have become heartsick over the actions of some brethren who, I can not help but feel, are hindering rather than helping our Baptist peace and happiness. Division must not come. If all things are not right in our brotherhood, let us hold together and make things right. It can be done; but we are never going to get anywhere if we start various independent movements which, either separately or in combination, make attacks on the great work we Baptists have to do."

"What" and "How"

A PROMINENT layman in Chicago is concerned lest "the great challenge in THE BAPTIST of Nov. 18," is to go by without any response from our readers. "I refer," he says, "to the proposition in 'What We Need Just Now' that the first and greatest need is for a prayer passion that shall envelop our denominational life. It strikes me that there will be no dissent from the statement made but there will be no agreement as to the methods for developing that 'prayer passion.' Why not call for brief suggestions from our pastors, many of whom are wise in such matters. Their suggestions would be of real service in helping to meet this present and pressing need. It seems to me that an editorial call for such suggestions should find instant and helpful response. And there is no time to lose if that fine editorial is to bear its fitting fruit."

We have let the layman make the call. Why confine suggestions to the minister? Experience has not always indicated that the most prayerful man in the parish is the parson. Why not get the method from any man or woman, black or white, who knows how to pray the fervent effectual prayer and create thereby a "prayer passion" in the churches.

The Person of Christ: A Series of "Apologetic Studies"

III. The Triumph of the Limitless Lord

By FREDERIC C. SPURR

WE HAVE arrived at the point where we see clearly that there is a plus in Jesus Christ, possessed by no other person who has ever been upon this planet and that this compels us to answer the question, "What manner of man is this?" How shall we account for him as disclosed to us in the Gospels. Has he been invented, or idealized, or is he photographed from life? The theory of invention was curtly dismissed by John Stuart Mill, himself a skeptic, when in his famous lectures on theism he asked "Who amongst the disciples of Christ, or amongst their proselytes was capable of inventing the sayings ascribed to Jesus, or matching the type of character revealed in the Gospels?" If he had been invented or idealized, then the problem becomes more and not less difficult because we have to discover some hidden genius of the first water who was equal to the task of creating such a being as Jesus Christ who is portrayed in the Gospel story.

Drawn from Life

The thing is impossible. There remains but one solution—he has been drawn from the life. But now, having gone so far, we are compelled to go farther. It is not simply with the Christ of the Gospels that we are concerned, but with the Christ of history. For nearly two thousand years he has reigned, overcoming the obstacles of space and of time and fashioning the lives of unnumbered millions of his disciples throughout the world. The Christian society exists—nothing is more certain than that. And it exists because of him. Divided as Christians are upon many points—some of them very serious ones—they hold as bodies one common faith. Roman, Greek, Anglican and Free Churches all profess their faith in the divinity of our Lord. Now the society which professes this belief, composed as it is of Christians who differ from each other upon many points, is a living palpable phenomenon at work under our eyes. It, like every other society, is an effect and demands an adequate cause. Its origin is historic. There would have been no Christians in the world had there been no Christ. No one can reasonably doubt that Jesus created the society which bears his name. The building exists. He is undoubtedly both its architect and builder, the living cause of the most remarkable effect the world has ever seen. From the beginning of the church's history to the present hour the central faith of the church has never varied. Every branch of the church offers prayers which all can follow and sings hymns and canticles in which all can join. And at the core of the prayers and the songs there lies belief in the divinity of Jesus Christ. Are the prayers addressed to the Father? It is "through Jesus Christ our Lord." The classic hymns of the church—the common property of all—express in varied tones this one common faith. The Te Deum in which Christ is adored as the King of Glory, as the Redeemer of men, as the opener of the kingdom of heaven, as the final judge of men, as the object of our hope and the goal of our desires, is the one classic hymn of Christendom which sums up not theologically but practically the great faith. The sacraments, which are public acts, witness the same faith. Baptism is performed in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. The Lord's Supper finds its center in Jesus Christ. In it we remember him and mystically feed upon his flesh and blood, thus expressing our deepest faith that he is our very life. The church reserves one day in every week for the public worship of Almighty God. This day is not the Jewish Sabbath. It is a new day—the first day of the week—established because Christians believe that on that day Christ rose again from the dead and showed himself to be the "Son of God with power." The Christian Sunday, if we will only trouble to remember the fact, is a witness to the belief in the divinity of our Lord. Now it is the fact of the church as the creation of Christ and as his perpetual witness that modern rationalism has never fairly faced. It spends its time at what it imagines to be the "sources" and misses the mighty river which flows past its door. It will not do to say with a modern skeptic "Christianity owes a great deal to the fact that Constantine adopted it as the state religion of the Roman Empire," adding with touching naïveté "the rise of Christianity was made possible by the act of Constantine." Not to stress the nonsense which attributes the rise of a thing to something which followed it three centuries later, it is the simple fact that Constantine's adoption of Christianity as the official religion was the very worst service he could have rendered it. It was a disaster and set back the clock to an extent which even now we can hardly realize. The church then, has to be accounted for, with its vitality and its attachment to a living Lord, despite all the set-backs and errors which have marked its course. It can be accounted for alone by Christ—but by what kind of a Christ? Only by a Christ who answers to the faith of the church, and here at once we are placed in the presence of a miracle: the miracle of the triumph of the limitless Lord. Let us see what this involves.

The Greatest Force

The greatest force in life is personality. All the knowledge that we possess comes to us through persons. Our characters are formed by persons rather than by precepts. The private life of man is influenced throughout by persons, commencing with the family circle and ending with the greater life of society. The public life of the world also is most of all influenced by personalities. However excellent may be the principles enunciated by a man in the political, literary, scientific and social spheres, in the last analysis it is the magic of his personality that wins victories. Now all human personalities are subject to the fatal drawback of limitation—the limitation of space and of time. First, space. There is no such thing in the world as a human personality imposing itself universally either in the sphere of politics or religion. The statesman who is monarch in his own land is a mere name elsewhere. The great founders of religions in the world have all been fatally circumscribed by space. Abraham remains a Semitic, Mohammed an Arab, Gautama an Indian, and the religions they founded bear the same marks of limitation. They can never become universal, partly because of the fatal influence of space.

The second limitation is that of time. Time disintegrates every human work of the brain or of the hand. It plays havoc with persons. The passing of time diminishes their influence, until finally it disappears. Socrates was in his day the idol of Athens. But the magic of his name was entombed with his body. He lives only as a memory. And so it is with every great human personality. The cause may live on in some form or other. The ideas of the great teacher may be preserved in writing. But they are not immutable. The modern Jew does not feel himself bound to Moses as did the Jew of yesterday. The educated Moslem is beginning to "interpret" Mohammed. No man living would calmly and in the plenitude of his reason sacrifice his life for personal love of Moses, Mohammed, Gautama.

Historic Figures Memories

Time surrounds all historic figures with a mist or a halo: it leaves them only as pictures or memories. One Person and one only has escaped this universal law—Jesus Christ. He is the sole One who has conquered space. He alone is the "Son of Man"—neither Jew, Roman or Greek—but the Son of Man. He belongs to the entire human race. He has upon him the universal mark. His disciples are of all peoples. Faith in him is naturalized in both hemispheres and in every clime. The stalwart sons of the North hardened by cold and frost; the dreamy sons of the South, relaxed by the caresses of an unfailing warmth; the imaginative children of the East, and the unromantic sons of the West alike have overturned their idols to worship the One true God and his son Jesus Christ. Fijians, Tierra del Fuegians, the savages of New Guinea, the Esquimaux, Greenlanders, Icelanders—men of all races have become the disciples of Jesus Christ. The statement is easily made, but it is astonishing to the last degree when its import is grasped. For this conquest of space is unknown to any human religious society. Buddhism is fatally encircled within the boundaries of two eastern kingdoms; it has no power to pass the frontiers and to capture the forward nations of the West. Mohammedanism, which set out to conquer the world by the sword, has been forced back and confined to the desert and to decaying peoples. But the faith of Christ is established in the bosom of all nations and where it has taken up its abode men have lifted up their hearts and rejoiced. This is nothing less than a miracle, for space is the most formidable obstacle to human fellowship. What appeals to people in the temperate zones is repellent to those in the torrid zones and vice versa. Increase space and the obstacle grows, until at last men at the extremes have nothing whatever in common with each other. But Jesus Christ has surmounted this obstacle. When he was in the flesh there was the magnetism of his wonderful personal presence. But he died and the world ceased to behold him. Yet it made no difference to the millions who became his disciples. They knew that he lived in

I WALKED today along a city street

So squalid, so unclean, my whole soul shrank,
Revolted, from foul sights and odors rank.

Naught could I see in those I chanced to meet

Save hard or sodden faces, shambling feet,

Eyes bleared with vice and liquor. My soul drank

The lees of loathing. Then it was—I thank

Who willed it!—that a Face, austere and sweet

And strong and pure, had stopped me like a hand

Laid gently on me. O'er that thoroughfare

Of wretchedness and sin, they looked,

Those eyes of One who was too tender to despise

The least or of the lowest to despair.

Rebuked, I passed. The Christ must understand.

them and although they saw him not yet they loved him: "whom having not seen ye love." The early church, which never saw Jesus in the flesh, lived in him and for him and cheerfully died for him.

And so it has been during 2000 years. Jesus has been and is personally loved, as if he were indeed present, which, in fact, he is. And he is loved by people of all temperaments, ardent and cool alike. Christianity is declared to be, by some, a matter of temperament. Nothing could be farther from the truth. Men and women of every order of intellect and of heart have glowed with a personal and passionate love for the Savior, who is to them no mere historic figure, but the Lord of their lives. Jesus undoubtedly has accomplished the miracle—he has triumphed over space.

And equally over time. If space is fatal to personal influence, time is fatal to personal affection. All human love is affected by absence or death. Time softens the blow and heals the wound and opens up the way to a new affection which removes the old to the place of pleasant memory. The good and great man inspires affection while he is alive and while his personal magnetism endures. But after his death the charm is removed; the passing of the years changes the perspective. Others rise up who claim affection and loyalty. Men easily transfer their devotion and their affection. But there is one, and one only, exception to the rule.

Jesus Christ Loved Today

Jesus Christ, who lived here below 1900 years ago is loved today, I repeat, as if he were still here. It is a phenomenon which abides alone. There is nothing else like it in the world. It is not his memory alone that Christians prize: it is his person, real and living; a presence realized here and now. His words as recorded in the Gospels are treasured, but Christian ears also listen for his loving voice to speak to their inward selves. It is not a teacher who was but a Lord who is whom they adore and with whom they commune. This love for Jesus is not equally strong in all Christian hearts, nor is it always at white heat. Often it smoulders, but it never expires. When it is perfect it raises the human spirit to an altitude which others never reach. It has created a Livingstone, a Xavier, a Moffatt, a Paton, a Bernard and a million more who for love of him have renounced every prospect in life, journeying to the farthest points of the compass, life in hand, enduring poverty, hunger, untold dangers, burning and reviling and even death itself. And is he only a man who has inspired all this devotion? It is impossible. If Jesus is but a man and as a man has wrought this wonder then we must award the palm to idolatry since it is the supreme force of life. But he is more than a man. Only God could produce so great marvels and triumph so wonderfully. Nothing less than the confession of the church can adequately account for Jesus—"Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

Forty-First International Convention of the North American Young Men's Christian Associations

The emphasis was strongly upon religious work—to win young men to accept Christ

By HOWARD B. GROSE

I WENT to Atlantic City, to attend the International Convention of the Y. M. C. A. held there Nov. 14-19, for several reasons, but the chief one was because of my profound interest just now in American Protestantism, its promise, progress and propagation. I wanted to study that great body of lay delegates, gathered from all parts of the United States and Canada, and estimate what they signified of solidarity and solidity and strength for the contest between the forces of the kingdom of God and the opposing forces, which are by no means all non-ecclesiastical. And I saw and was greatly cheered in my soul.

I saw, for one thing, a genuinely religious body of delegates. They included men of influence in their communities in business and professional life. They had convictions, and made them known, but they never forgot in their discussions that they belonged to a great brotherhood, and lived up to their name.

How they sang! I shall not soon forget how that inspiring precentor, at the opening of the first evening session, got the men to sing that favorite gospel hymn, "I love to tell the story," until the whole great auditorium on the million-dollar pier rang with the chorus, "I love to tell the story, 'twill be my theme in glory, to tell the old, old story of Jesus and his love." The deep undertone of sentiment revealed how hearts had been touched by memories of other days. And with power and thrill they sang the great hymns of the church, for none of the weak and insipid modern counterfeits were allowed on that platform. Then at each session, just at the right moment, the Fisk Jubilee Singers came on and touched the heartstrings and preached a sermon not equaled in words. No wonder they have sung a race into recognition and a school into prosperity.

A Religious Convention

A religious convention, I say. Every morning session began with a deeply spiritual message from a man selected because he had such a message to give. At 11:30, no matter what was on, a slowing down of business for a twenty-minute period of intercessory prayer led by men of prayer, who made prayer real communion and intercession. It was the week of prayer for the student world, and remembrance of that helped deepen the impression, as it was felt that tides of power resulting from prayer were flowing in upon that body from all the world. No wonder Dr. Mott believes that the unity of action, the blending of the conservative and liberal elements so that nearly every vote was unanimous or overwhelming in majority, and the miraculous work accomplished, could not have come about save through the power of prayer. The program-makers knew how to carry religion all through the sessions.

This convention replaced the emphasis strongly upon religious work, upon the original ideals and objectives, to win young men to accept "Christ as their God and Savior," to quote the phrase in the Paris basis, adopted in 1855 as a world basis and still in force. It did not discuss buildings and material successes, nor do much with budgets except to endorse them as prepared by a budget committee, but it pressed the duty of the associations to produce larger spiritual results, more conversions, more members for the churches. It endorsed heartily the proposal of the religious work department and General Secretaries' Association to make a visitation of local associations for inspirational ends and the setting up of larger programs of service. Religion was at the front, and it was the religion of action, of performance, energized by the Holy Spirit. It was good to be there.

I saw a constructive convention. The commission reports were models. That of transcendent interest to the churches was the report of the commission on "Approach to the Churches." It was the result of three years of conference between denominational and association groups, of diligent and intelligent investigation, and in the opinion of competent judges no more important report, in its findings, bearings and potential possibilities of good, was ever brought before the association movement. It was listened

The Deepest Worth

THESE are the things I prize
And hold of deepest worth:
Light of the sapphire skies,
Peace of the silent hills, Shelter of forest, comfort of the grass,
Shadow of clouds that swiftly pass,
And after showers
The smell of flowers,
And of the good brown earth,—
And best of all, along the way, to with intense interest, and its recommendations were unanimously adopted. Pastors and denominational leaders should give it careful study, for if the associations are met half way there will dawn a new day of mutual profit to churches and associations, and a new solidarity of the Christian forces. No doubt was left in any mind as to the attitude of the association. Reports went out that the association had rejected ecclesiastical control, something which never existed. The truth is that no convention ever declared itself so strongly on the relation of the association to the churches, and the desire for the closest cooperation. That cannot too plainly be stated.

Note the basic principles of cooperation as stated in the report: (1) The supremacy of Christ; (2) The primacy of the church; (3) The autonomy of the association, as from the beginning; (4) Adequacy of relationship. The duty of the churches is to sustain and counsel this specialized agency for work among men and boys. The duty of the association, in turn, is to promote its work among men and boys so as to lead them to become disciples of Christ, members of the church, and stable in Christian character. The association's work is to supplement that of the church, not supplant it. While recognizing its debt to the church as for ideal, motive and support, the commission believes the association's mission can most effectively be accomplished by maintaining its independence of ecclesiastical control. Provision was made for establishing advisory groups in the denominations and a general counseling commission for conference at least annually on national problems pertaining to all the churches. The unanimous action places the association on record for cordial and close cooperation, placing all its resources at the service of the churches. It ought to mean much for future American Protestantism.

I saw wise action on another matter of great interest—the basis of membership. There were misleading reports about this also. What was done did not change the basis adopted at Portland in 1899 regarding evangelical membership as a requirement for active association membership, but it permitted associations so desiring to accept as "evangelical" those churches designated as eligible for membership in the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. It also authorized "any association to elect not to exceed 10 per cent of its managing board from members of the association not identified with evangelical churches, upon their nomination by a regular nominating committee of said board, and upon the acceptance by such nominees of the Paris basis as their personal declaration of purpose." Now this Paris basis, adopted at the first Inter-Continental World's Conference of the Associations of North America and Europe in 1855, declares that "The Young Men's Christian Association seeks to unite those young men who, regarding Jesus Christ as their God and Savior according to the Holy Scriptures, desire to be his disciples in their doctrine and in their life, and to associate their efforts for the extension of his kingdom among young men."

Statement of Purpose for Membership

The student associations were dealt with separately in regard to the basis of membership. The convention adopted the statement of purpose and qualification for membership on which the student associations of the country are practically united, and for which the student representatives made earnest pleas, affirming their loyalty to Christ and the church and their conviction that the change would enable them to do a far larger work in winning students for Christ. This statement leaves it optional with the student associations to admit as members those who declare themselves to be in sympathy with the following statement of purpose and willing to make it their personal program of allegiance and service: 1. To lead students to faith in God through Jesus Christ; 2. To lead them into membership and service in the Christian church; 3. To promote their growth in Christian faith, especially through the study of the Bible and prayer. 4. To influence them to devote themselves in united effort with all Christians in making the will of Christ effective in human society, and to extending the kingdom of God throughout the world. It is required that only students who are evangelical church members can serve as officers, or represent the association at conventions.

The whole matter of the basis of membership was referred to the Constitutional Convention. Both in the report and the debate, the sentiment of the convention in regard to the unshaken loyalty of the association movement to the evangelical churches and to its original ideals and definite spiritual purpose was clear and unmistakable. The predominant spirit was that of spiritual advance. It is important that these facts should be made clear. The convention was evangelical beyond question. I should consider it progressively conservative, with a penchant for action rather than mere discussion. The young college men, by the way, made a decided impression by their straightforwardness and ability, and their plea for larger responsibility was roundly applauded. One of them incidentally made the strongest appeal for the way of the cross as the only way out for this distressed and sin-weary world.

I saw the utmost cordiality toward the Negro delegates, and in the report of the international committee, which fills a volume of 174 pages with the doings of the last three years, one of the recommendations pressed upon the conscience of the brotherhood the claims of the vast uncultivated field for work among colored young men and boys. The interracial commission was also praised for its truly Christian approach to a grave problem. The progress of the foreign work is a revelation. In all departments, especially in the high-school work for boys and the educational and industrial work, there has been notable growth. It was an inspiring record of a great institution. Prohibition received a tremendous vote of approval, and the resolution calls upon "the entire membership of the Y. M. C. A. to stand solidly for a complete enforcement of the prohibition law." This body stands for the rights and protection of minorities in the Near East, and for a warless world. And it has power to help toward both.

The close was befitting such sessions. Dr. Mott, who spoke for the first time, gave in the closing words a warning and a challenge. The warning was that the churches and associations have not won the generation of youth and young men with whom we have to deal, and the challenge was the imperative necessity of winning the rising generation, for its own sake, and for the sake of the church and the world. Above all, this generation must be confronted with the living Christ. So, from Dr. Speer's opening message to Dr. Mott's final appeal, the spiritual note was predominant.

It was a heartening sight to look upon such a body of laymen, sit with them through days of consideration of spiritual interests, sense the reservoirs of power they represent in their communities and realize what a bulwark they form for the protection of all the interests and institutions which we hold dear in our country. Here is a mighty force which belongs to the Christian church, and which will be related to the local churches everywhere and cooperated with in a new and conquering way if the ideals set forth in the report on church and association relationships are transmuted into cooperative activities.

ries, commercial depression, social despair, abject poverty, and future forebodings, mark the experience of the people across the sea; and unwise leadership and false policies have, largely, created this calamitous condition of affairs. The aftermath of the great war has placed America in a most delicate as well as a most important and responsible position before the world.

Despite the fact that she sacrificed the lives of hundreds of thousands of her sons and gave billions of her money to stay the ravages of a war for which she was not responsible and from which she could and would not accept any helpful returns, unjust criticism has been and is visited upon her; but she stands ready now to befriend all people and lead in every movement for the material and moral betterment of mankind, without compromising the principles upon which she was founded and which have guided her during all these momentous years.

World Problems

The proper policies for the solution of the problems of the world are being pursued by the present administration of our government, bravely, generously and impartially; and nothing is more apparent to one who studies conditions on the ground than the consummate wisdom and forethought shown by those who have the shaping of our foreign policies. There is the policy of helpful association without entangling alliances; sympathetic co-operation without responsible ownership; magnanimous treatment without reciprocal return; and the exhibition of a generous example without a dominating spirit. It would be a grave error for America to entangle and embroil herself with questions which are strictly European in their character and which would involve us in unending confusion and discord, as the secretary of state has clearly set forth. The policies of the government have been both conciliatory and constructive as shown in the negotiation of a peace treaty with Germany, the Yap agreement protecting American interests in the Mandate Islands of the Pacific, the reorganizing of Cuba's finance, the Tacna African arbitration agreement by Chile and Peru, the calling of a conference here of Central American Republic and the stabilization of Hayti and Santa Domingo.

The spirit of cooperation is manifested in the official declaration that a suitable arrangement may be made for the participation by our government in the election of judges in the International Court, which has been set up for the determination, according to judicial standards of the thought of people; and the spirit of philanthropic service has been nobly shown in the prompt aid given to suffering humanity in the Near East and Far East. We must avoid the mistake of meddling in other people's business, and in other families' quarrels. This will complicate us, and will weaken our influence, and will annul the end desired. It would be most unfortunate for us, officially, to sit in a conference which may decide the destiny of a nation or nations, with which we have had no disagreement; but as a friendly observer or as a protector of our own national rights a helpful association may be formed.

I can testify that in the four continents through which I have lately passed, the splendid representatives of our government, by reflecting the spirit and honoring the policy of the administration at

America's Proper Policy in the World's Problems

By HENRY ALLEN TUPPER

NORTH America holds a unique position in the history of our times and great opportunities and responsibilities are created by this position.

Geographically—separated by great oceans from the strifes and struggles of neighbor-nations; possessing great stretches of territory; endowed with the richest blessings of nature; and having no occasion to envy or attack any other people, her relation has been one of peace and good will toward men.

Historically—founded on the principles of freedom among men and loyalty to God, she has written a chapter in human history, which illustrates the highest ideals and inspires mankind to the noblest endeavor.

Governmentally—our fathers were purged and purified in the fires of an experience which proved to be a preparatory school for wise convictions in practical economics and government, and the establishment of this government of, by and for the people. A flash of inspiration produced our matchless constitution, which has been at once an anchor in terrific storms and guide in onward progress.

Religiously—the founders of this nation recognized as its cardinal principle that the state and church have distinct provinces and missions, and that the attempted union of these produced the greatest national horrors and paralyzed all mental, moral and spiritual growth. Consequently, freedom of conscience and separation of church and state were the corner-stones of the republics; and these truths have been tested, tried and tempted, but the anchor has not dragged and the ship of state has not changed its course.

Today, as never before, the whole world has its eyes upon the United States of America and the need for this nation to be true to itself, to the world and to God was never so great as in this hour of the world's history. If we make a false step now it may mean a universal calamity. During my late visit to Europe and the Near East I received deep impressions and returned with deep convictions. Confusion, worse confounded, reigns nearly everywhere. National hatred, political controversies, bitter rival-

The New World Movement and Baptist Laymen

By H. M. FILLEBROWN,

IT may come as a surprise to some laymen to know that the New World Movement is directly traceable to the organization of Northern Baptist laymen. In addition to the responsibility of promoting the original Million Dollar Campaign, several other objectives were laid before the laymen for investigation and recommendation. Out of this came the report covering the plan of welding the financial objectives, of the various national societies, into one workable unit of appeal. Another result was the survey committee placing before the Denver Convention a vision of world need that sent a divine thrill into the consciousness of the delegates; led them in faith to accept the responsibility for a larger share in kingdom business, and to pledge the denomination to a program worthy of its standing as a Protestant body.

It was a transfiguration experience. The desire was there to achieve, and the consciousness of our ability to make our denominational work worthy of all that God had prepared for in the years of faithful effort that had gone before.

God Is Big Enough

Many have questioned, "Are we big enough?" We are answering that question in our attitude toward the New World Movement. Are we big enough to rally to the support of the denominational objectives; to realize that the denomination is bigger than any local church, pastor or member, or group of pastors or members? The matter is not one of numbers or wealth, but of spirit. One thing is certain, "God is big enough." If we are but willing to surrender our five precious loaves and the few small fishes legitimately provided for our own use to his blessing, he will multiply them to meet the needs of the thousands as he did by Galilee.

If we, at Denver, passed through a transfiguration experience we must remember that all such experiences are followed by a period of reaction. The world is suffering today from reaction, from individualism, selfishness, and an utter disregard of all that through cooperation made for strength. The results are disaster in the political, financial and industrial world, suffering, want and a spirit of repudiation of honest obligations. As Baptists are we showing the results of this reaction? Has it worked into our system?

It is pertinent to inquire, "Who constitutes the Baptist denomination?" The local churches are composed of laity and leader. The pastor is only one, sometimes to many hundreds or even thousands. Important as is the leader he is not the church. Only insofar as his opinion may reflect the majority opinion of the membership as a whole is he entitled to express his opinion as that of his church. Laymen should realize their proportionate place and influence, and stand for unity, with firm insistence upon the necessity for the sympathetic cooperation of all the members within the churches of our various associations and states.

As the pastor is only one to the laity so his work should be only that of leader. He is no "George" to do it! Laymen should get busy! Every church should have its director of laymen's activity. Associated with him should be other laymen organized for active service. Committees of laymen should be formed whose work should be the building up of prayer meeting attendance, encouraging personal prayer and testimony at same. The prayer meeting is the pulse beat of the church. Is it weak? Examine the heart.

Bible and mission study classes for laymen, Sundays and week days, will renew heart activity. Laymen's lack of interest in denominational activity springs from lack of information resulting in impaired vision. Laymen will recognize a good thing if they see it. When they see things in proper perspective they will get behind the movement. A strong pulse indicates strong heart and a strong heart demands exercise. Group the laymen for prayer and training for personal work with a "win one" club for objective. This with training to use the sword of the Spirit for personal work will make laymen confident in service.

These activities once started, stewardship is the logical result. Not of money alone. At best that is least. Stewardship of time and ability. Recognizing that God owns a part of each day and work which should be his, set apart and consecrated to his service. We have the time. We do not properly apportion it. We each have some special God-given ability. It should be devoted to him. Your church should feel the impact of laymen personality, the influence of the "you" that is in you. That particular talent that has made you a success should be made to count for success in the kingdom.

Each layman can do something better than any one else. I have in mind a humble man of genial countenance. Years ago he stationed himself at the main entrance of his church at each service and welcomed with a smile, a cordial handshake and a hearty word, every one who entered. Of the many influential pastors and members of that vigorous church, I doubt if another could be named who has influenced as many lives. In his declining years he has become a benediction to that congregation. The pastor serves but a few years, the layman stays on. The work is his and the layman should stand by.

The solution of the financial problem of the local church and all denominational work lies in the attitude of the laymen to the stewardship of money. Laymen must assist in developing this stewardship movement. Tithing is reasonable, biblical and businesslike. It brings a confident faith and joy that is indescribable. Business partnership with God. In business for God. God sharing the responsibility, and the success. I am still looking for the faithful tither who is a permanent business failure. Have you ever met one? Laymen who have become distinguished through their giving are invariably tithers who have recognized that what they have is God's and themselves are stewards of his treasure. Get it proved into your consciousness that God owns a portion of your time, ability and means and render unto God the things that are God's.

The Laymen's Job

As the New World Movement is the result of laymen's activity the laymen should study its needs and rally to its support. It's a laymen's job. Go to it! Has it developed any weakness that cannot be remedied by loyal, hearty, sympathetic cooperation? Does it need a change of nurses or more nourishment? In the family emergency we don't change the nurse if the baby is undernourished. We change the food or increase the quantity. Laymen should urge this remedy.

The prayer-meeting layman who studies his Bible and missions, does personal work and is a steward, gravitates naturally into denominational activity. Kingdom business is his business. The association of which his church is a member feels his influence. His state organization recognizes him as a man on whom to depend. The national convention welcomes him to its manifold committee work so sadly in need of laymen. His stewardship of money has made him familiar with the New World Movement and its objectives. He is at home and finds there the finest fellowship short of heaven.

Laymen, the New World Movement is yours. Its scope, organization, and leadership is worthy of your hearty cooperation and needs your support. Your church needs the New World Movement, its inspiration, its successful methods. You local constituency needs to feel the fellowship in world movements and the realization that the Baptists are taking no mean part in world affairs.

How Did You Die?

DID you tackle that trouble that came your way

*With a resolute heart and cheerful?
Or hide your face from the light of day
With a craven soul and fearful?
Oh, a trouble is a ton, or a trouble is an ounce,
Or a trouble is what you make it;
And it isn't the fact that you're hurt that counts,
But only—how did you take it?*

You are beaten to earth? Well, well, what's that?

*Come up with a smiling face.
It's nothing against you to fall down flat,
But to lie there—that's disgrace.
The harder you're thrown, the higher you bounce;
Be proud of your blackened eye!
It isn't the fact that you're licked that counts;
It's how did you fight—and why?*

And though you've been done to the death, what then?

*If you battled the best you could,
If you played your part in the world of men,
Why, the Critic will call it good.
Death comes with a crawl or comes with a pounce;
And, whether he's slow or spry,
It isn't the fact that you're dead that counts,
But only—how did you die?*

The Joy of Service

A True Story

By GERTRUDE CODY WHEATON

ALL parents have theories about how to raise their children so that they will become the best kind of grown-ups and accomplish the highest of which they are capable. Our idea is that from the first, our three little people can be given ideals of service, of world vision, of international events and of the growth of the kingdom. Why not? We let them grow into all sorts of absurd ideas, why not emphasize the big ideals and expect those ideals to become part of their attitude toward life. It is the parents who guide that attitude which will always in the future determine their highest attainments.

Here is an example of the way in which the mother of one family introduced the ideal of service, of usefulness to others. Of course, all of our children understand that they are to help in the home and have regular duties as members of the family group. They also have had the training in friendliness, kindness, neighborliness and so on, but here was an opportunity to put into practice some of these ideals. A big girl who helps a blind man in our town, called on the phone one Sunday morning to say that she could not take him to church and as it was communion Sunday, he would be quite disappointed unless some one could be found to take her place. The mother of this family said:

"We must not let him be disappointed. I can fix that up for you!"

She stepped out to her car, already filled with her own and the neighbors' children and called her son eight years old, to her side.

"Old Mr. James will have no one to take him to church today, son, unless we figure out how to manage it. We can get him to the church and then I would like you to help him up the steps, lead him into church, and sit with him through service. I will get some one who goes his way to lead him home".

"What's he to me?"

"Aw, mother, what you 'spect! Why should I take care of that man? I don't want to! I help at home but why should I take care of him? What's he to me?"

"All right, son, then you do not want to line yourself up with people who serve others? Great people are those who serve others; who begin even when they are young to do what they can for all or any who need to be guided and helped," said his mother.

He shook his head and turned up his nose! Then his mother said one more word:

"So you do not want to line yourself up with Lincoln and Roosevelt and that class of men? Think it over and let me know what you decide!"

By the time they had arrived at the church, the boy spoke to his mother and said, "Mother, I've decided to do that. Where will I get him?"

"Oh, son, I am so glad!" replied his mother and then she explained in detail what he must do.

On the first seat in church that day sat an old blind man and a rosy-cheeked boy. The little boy guided him through the service taking his arm to get up and sit down with the audience, putting his hand to the plate in order that he might add his collection, helping him in the communion and leading him out at the close of service. In the balcony behind a pillar sat a mother, her loving eyes on the two in the front seat, watching her boy learn his first lesson in service to his fellow-man.

When the mother arrived home she was met at the door by a bouncing boy who flew at her and threw his arms around her neck. This her boy, not ordinarily demonstrative, exclaimed: "Mother, this boy Lin (tapping his chest) is so happy! Orful happy! Why! doing something for blind man made this fellow Lin turribly happy." With a dramatic wave of his hand he added: "Do something for some one—be happy."

He was so surprised at his own overjoyous heart. His mother, who knew the joy of service, hugged him again and said, "Son, I knew it would be that way."

The Corner Club—What Is It?

BY MRS. J. M. BROUGH

THE remarkably unique and successful work being done for business girls in so many of our American cities, particularly in the West and Middle West should be more widely known. The plan is workable anywhere. Results prove that the Gospel is able to capture and hold the alert mind of the keen business girl notwithstanding the lure of the gay city in these turbulent days.

These organizations for business girls are known as the "Girls' Corner Clubs," named because of an incident in the early life of the work. Their motto is "Winning the other girl." Girls who are eligible for membership are the working, business girls, girls who may be away from home and need a sympathetic, motherly friend, and just such an ideal friend they find in the radiantly sweet-faced, white-haired "mother of girls"—Mrs. Frances Neth the organizer of this work. Mrs. Neth is giving her life to minister to the business girls of our cities, and through her ministrations thousands of girls whose lives were dwarfed socially and spiritually have had wholesome expansion; girls whose only diversion after a busy day has been a picture show or other kindred amusement have found the home life of the club satisfying.

Mrs. Neth started these clubs five years ago in Vancouver, Can. They now stretch like a golden chain from Prince Rupert, Can. through Vancouver, Victoria, Berkeley, Oakland, across to Houston, Tex. The one most recently established is in connection with the First Baptist Church of Los Angeles, the church of which Mrs. Neth is a member. Beginning one year ago with a few members this Corner Club now has a membership of more than 1000 girls. It has been recognized by the governor of the state, and has been assisted by Gene Stratton Porter and other persons of prominence. The club's home is in a cottage adjoining the church, purchased by the church and made homelike and attractive. There are reception and dining-rooms, kitchen, library, rest-rooms and sewing rooms where on Monday evenings lessons are taught in dressmaking and millinery. A large chorus choir and an orchestra of forty pieces are under the leadership of Mrs. Guy Bush. The home is open every day with Mrs. Neth present to consult with the girls. Every Tuesday evening at six o'clock the girls gather for a home-cooked dinner for which they are expected to pay fifteen cents. This is made possible by the earnest cooperation of men and women who are filled with the love of Christ and humanity. The dinners are served in turn by groups of the First Church women. Following the dinner there is an hour of music, Bible study, and a heart to heart talk by Mrs. Neth, with an address by the pastor Dr. James A. Francis, to whose hearty cooperation much of the success of the work is due. Seventeen of these young women have united with the First Church during the year, four others are awaiting baptism, two are anxious to prepare for the foreign mission field, and the Corner Club girls are eager to assume all expense for training, travel, and salaries on the field. Necessary plans are taking shape.

While the social life of the girl is cared for, Mrs. Neth's real object is to give the Word to every girl in the club. No moving picture could have commanded closer attention than the girls gave on Tuesday evening to the Bible lesson from the text, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation." The Gospel is able to satisfy the present day girl!

Early in the spring First Church was instrumental in the purchase of a cottage in a nearby mountain canyon, to be used expressly by the club girls. A housemother has kept the cottage open all summer and the working girls of Los Angeles have there had rest and relaxation at week ends and holidays. There is only one Dr. Francis, and one Mrs. Neth, nevertheless a similar work may be done in any of our cities. Try it!

The Sentinel's Hymn

(On the Russian Front, December, 1917)

By EARL HUDELSON

*MASTER, it is bitter cold;
The night has closed her eyes.
Oh, warm me in the glowing hope
Of promised paradise!*

*Remind me, if in my despair
I feel that hope has died,
The world was drearier than this
When you were crucified.*

*Teach me, when I feel destitute,
To reconcile my loss,
Rememb'ring I am not despised
Or nailed upon a cross.*

*Help me to keep that faith in You
Which You retained in me
When everything but Faith was dead
On cruel Calvary.*

Stewardship and War

"First be reconciled to thy brother and then come and offer thy gift."

By IVAN HOWLAND BENEDICT

CHRISTIAN nations, dangerously stirred by the strong passions of fear, hatred and revenge, are preparing soon again to celebrate the natal day of the Prince of Peace. At a time when even the noble sentiment of love is being turned to thoughts of war for the protection of dear ones the professed disciples of the Prince of Peace would render him peculiar worship. Can it be these nationals worship the same Messiah, or have we forgotten how he said: "If therefore thou art offering thy gift at the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee, leave there thy gift before the altar and go thy way, first be reconciled to thy brother and then come and offer thy gift."

Though the ministry of reconciliation is a chief function of the church it was unable or unwilling to strive sacrificially for the prevention of the great war. Thoughtful men still claim that the church holds in its hands the fate of world peace. Have we any warrant for expecting the church to fulfil its duty in this supreme hour of social responsibility more worthily than it has in the past? And the answer is an emphatic, yes. The stewardship movement of the Protestant church brings the bright promise of a better age. Hitherto Christians have been largely content to maintain the church's ameliorative social functions, possibly forgetful of its revolutionary youth, but the economic maladjustment of this decade is far too great for the good offices of organized charity; for it is no less a question than that of the proper production and distribution of the necessities of a progressive and peace-loving social life.

This problem the stewardship movement will face squarely. Some of the supporters of the stewardship fear that it may perish on the rocks of narrow legalistic practice. Certainly no such fate can overtake the cause if those who believe in the practicability of the kingdom life among men will vitalize the movement in all its logical relationships. Wars are not waged over pure moral issues: governments have chiefly to do with the economic concerns of society. Today the world is seething with the hatred and passions generated by the economic maladjustment due to the selfish greed of gain. Solve this problem and the world may expect a lasting peace, we are told. Stewardship has within it the promise of a great army of economically fearless and foot-loose believers who can and will work out such a solution as will make possible a true peace of good-will. Why should the minister and missionary be the chief disciples to practice voluntary poverty for the cause of Christ? Why not a great host of those who, believing in the ownership of God, shall adopt the practice of voluntary poverty that they may be free to fight the great curse of society—involuntary poverty.

No matter how well disposed one may be, trained as we are in the economics of the privilege-profit practice of society it is difficult to approach with open mind the consideration of the relationship of economics to industrial and international warfare. One may not see at once why the argosies of peace make necessary the submarines: why the private exploitation of natural resources for profit must eventuate in industrial war; why the individual appropriation of the unearned increment militates against social health. It is not stabilized business conditions so much as adequate economic opportunity that makes for real peace and prosperity. Coercive measures may for a season stabilize commerce: good-will comes only with freedom of opportunity. Stewardship will produce a point of view that will enable Christians to rid themselves of the mental bias which is a part of the social practice which believes in the exploitation of natural resources for private gain. Christian stewards hold that God as creator is the owner of the natural resources: we are administrators. And if we may believe Jesus it would appear that God intends that society shall have an adequate opportunity to use these natural blessings for the uplift of the whole race. "He maketh his sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sendeth rain on the just and the unjust." When the church has developed a generation of men who are not controlled by the fear of involuntary poverty no lured by the greed of possessions: when the privilege-profit practice shall have been replaced more generally by that of opportunity-service, society will have a group of men powerful enough to make largely effective the labors of those who even now are striving to abate the conditions which make inevitable industrial and international warfare. Thus interpreted and faithfully incarnated stewardship must become one of the few great movements sponsored by the church for the redemption of society.

A long suffering, disillusioned society is looking to the disciples of the Friend of man for help in the task of bringing order out of imminent chaos. Stewardship is the answer of the church to this just appeal. The church is now facing in a large way the whole problem of the kingdom life among men. From the distinctly personal matter of the soul's relationship to God the Father clear through to the economic question of the right administration of God's great material blessings, the natural resources, stewardship is striving to interpret, the whole gospel of the brotherhood of men in Christ Jesus. Jesus is not only thy Savior of the sinner, he is the Redeemer of society, the Lord of the vineyard.

The Potter's Wheel

By LAIRD ARCHER

"AND behold he wrought a work on the wheels, a vessel of clay . . ." as seemed good to the potter to make it."

Twenty-six hundred years ago, Jeremiah wrote the above, which serves today as an accurate description of a phase of modern American relief work.

The description fits certain war orphans in American care in the ancient city of Erivan, Transcaucasia, near Ararat, the sacred mountain on which Noah's ark is believed to have rested after the flood.

The Near East Relief is using older orphans and the potter's wheel of antiquity to turn out bowls for serving American cornmeal mush to 25,000 homeless children in its orphanage centers of Transcaucasia.

The same type of double-wheel that Jeremiah knew is used. What are said to be the same clay banks which provided pitchers for Noah's descendants are supplying the pots that hold the relief rations.

Set in a mud-and-wood frame, the wheels whirl horizontally on upright

This story was sent to us by Mr. Archer, a member of the Baptist Church in Topeka, Kansas, who is now in the Caucasus region where he has acquainted himself with the Near East Relief orphanage work.

spindles, the upper wheel spinning the clay in the potter's hands and the lower wheel turning the upper in answer to the treading of the potter's foot. This primitive machinery at Erivan is of a veteran age which no longer provides perfect vessels, however. In other words, the wheels wobble. But the Americans plan to add ball-bearings and devices not included in the mechanics of Jeremiah's day.

Primarily, America is turning out more than clay products in the industry. Along with the pots, America is making sixteen-year old orphan potters, ready to set up small shops to replace the broken pitchers of Armenia, Georgia and Azerbaijan.

There always is a demand for war jars in this land where the household supply is carried from springs that have been running since the days of Rebekah. Moreover, practically all of the clay vessels of the country were abandoned or ruined villages during repeated invasions which made this a famine area in the last five years. In 300 villages, there could not be found "a shred to take fire from the hearth or to take water out of the pit."

Clay modeling with wheel and hands is a heritage among the orphans, according to the relief workers. They have observed a skill at the earliest instruction which is said to be uncanny. There is promise of sculpture. Fashioning of flowers and things under artistic guidance has been given a place in the prosaic routine.

In fact, what interested Jeremiah, Isaiah and others in the work with clay is the paramount interest of the Americans after all,—the application to man making.

Time Budget for a Working Church

By D. H. OTIS

W. B. McFALL, Pennsylvania, writes: "The writer would like to get some more specific information as to the 'time budget' of which Mr. Otis speaks in his 'If I were Pastor' page 1146 of THE BAPTIST. The writer has a conviction that the sort of evangelism that is as greatly needed as any is one which will get the brethren already in the church folds warmed up and busy."

When the apportionment for the New World Movement was presented to the First Baptist Church of Madison, Wis., the amount staggered us. We had no rich members and not a few said that it would be impossible to raise such a sum. The pastor's cabinet, which had charge of raising this money went about its task prayerfully and thoughtfully and endeavored to work out some plan by which the privilege of subscribing to this apportionment could be equitably distributed to all members of the church. By getting a close estimate of the income of the members of the church we figured that it would take 5 per cent of our annual income for a period of five years in order to raise the apportionment. When this situation was fully explained to the church and each member realized what he or she must do in order for the church to reach the goal, the members responded in a most substantial manner, many doubling the amount that they had expected to give. We easily went over the top. In a similar manner, eight months later, we raised a $10,000 budget for current expenses on the basis of 4 per cent of our annual incomes. This was far in excess of any previous budget and for the first time in the history of the church every dollar was subscribed before our annual meeting.

The above illustrations are cited as a background for the discussion of the time budget. After these financial drives our board of deacons were convinced that the members of the church were ready to shoulder their share of the burdens and responsibilities of the church if only they were properly informed in regard to the needs and given an idea as to what they should do in order to perform their part of the work.

The deacons conceived the idea of asking the head of each department of the church how many workers were needed and the number of hours required per week per worker in order to run the department at 100 per cent efficiency. The departments interviewed included the Sunday school, Young People's Society, Women's Union, Young Women's Missionary Society, World Wide Guild and Crusaders, Americanization committee, deacons, trustees, ushers, boy scouts, pastor's cabinet, and the church council. The results of this canvass showed that in our church of 600 members there were needed 556 persons devoting approximately 50 hours per week to various types of church work.

The results of this canvass were fully explained to the church and emphasis laid upon the fact that there was work for every member. The deacons prepared a time budget blank listing seventy-one church jobs and each member was asked to indicate on these blanks the type of work he or she felt most competent to perform and also to indicate a second and third choice. Provision was made for writing and other types of work not listed that members thought ought to be handled by the church.

The results of this canvass were tabulated and lists made of people who were available and ready to serve the church as Sunday school teachers or superintendents, as ushers, as officers or members of committees of the women's union or missionary societies, young people's work, crusaders, Americanization work, flower committee assistants and helpers at church banquets, and so on. We also discovered a number of members who were talented as musicians. Under miscellaneous work we found those who were in position to furnish the church with auto, bicycle, stenographic and clerical service.

In conclusion we can say that our work on the time budget was a revelation in showing us the large amount of work that the church should be doing. It was also a revelation to us to find so many who were willing and ready to serve.

Past and Present

BY R. R. COON

"WHILE I was musing the fire burned," and visions of childhood, experiences of fifty and sixty years ago, came vividly to mind.

When a child it was quite the custom, at least where I lived, for children to obey their parents, not always an easy task. Now children are at liberty; in fact Dr. Henson's quaint remark is not far from the truth: "As much family government as ever, the reins have just changed hands." In those early days, Sunday school helps were few or none. We just studied the Bible, learning the lesson "by heart," frequently the entire chapter. Now "nothing but leaves" we often find while the children read answers to questions on the printed page with no mental effort. We remember well church attendance, four of us taking our places in the "family pew," two on each side of mother (father in the pulpit). How long the service seemed! But today boys and girls scattered with other children ramble in and out with joyous freedom, or freer still hike off to lake or woods. The child is free today.

When I was a boy the "protracted meeting," lasting till its work was done, often started in cottage prayer meetings and quietly, effectually made lasting impressions on a few souls. In one such ten were converted; at least seven of them stood firm. Evangelists—we knew only the New Testament four. "The gospel of today" illustrates Drummond's suggestion: "Man is everything for quantity." Five to ten churches unite, that is they hold meetings together, a noted evangelist comes with a group of workers and singers and many are "swept into the churches"; so easy is it to join the church in this advanced day. The new converts' meeting, years ago was a gathering of those recently converted. They had no topics, no officers, no name even; simply a prayer and testimony meeting in which all joined. But "the little one has become a thousand"; and great organizations and numberless societies and their officers and committees and reports and programs—what wonder that with these varied activities demanding attention in this wide-awake age the old-fashioned ideas of prayer and testimony should be minimized or quite forgotten.

Away back yonder there was another meeting; it was held in the afternoon "Saturday before the first Sunday" (Do you remember that announcement?); they called it covenant meeting. Some old souls thought it the best meeting of the month; it was very generally attended by the members when saintly people "that feared the Lord spake often one with another." But first its time was abolished—this fast, busy age needed Saturday afternoon; it became "business meeting" in mid-week and in the march of events has been almost lost by the wayside. We seem to be too "busy here and there" to renew our covenant or even to read it as was the custom formerly. The prophet may have had such a time in mind when he wrote: "Many shall run to and fro and knowledge shall be increased."

This is undoubtedly an up-to-date age. We hear the call now and then for an up-to-date gospel, whatever that may mean. We attend our great conventions, we listen to our important commissions and boards. We witness our elaborate pageants and programs—that word surely has "come to the kingdom for such a time as this." We have committees ad infinitum and societies that threaten to exhaust the alphabet with their initials; organizations to the limit, machinery geared to perfection; all these we have, and with them and through them much is accomplished. Let us not forget that without "the abundance of the things" that we possess those laboring in former years wrought effectually for the elevating and saving of men and the glory of God.

A Prayer

NOT for the blazoned sorrows, Lord,
That flaunt their purple in the market place,
But for the deep grief's fearful secret sword
That hides its piercing from the daylight face,
Pity, I say.

Not to those ills the world may know, Nor plaints, whose moanings all the world may hear,
But to the lonely midnight's woe,
That lurks 'neath laughter in the noon-tide clear,
Give ease to-day.

Not for those weeping ones who share
Their tears with others, in a mingled rain,
But for the silent brave, who bear
With smiles their burden of an unguessed pain.
For these, I pray.

International Sunday School Lesson For December 24

A LESSON IN TRUST AND PREPAREDNESS

Golden Text: Luke 12:23

Introductory

The words of today's lesson were spoken "when the many thousands of the multitude were gathered together, inasmuch that they trod one upon another," (Luke 12: 1). Jesus began to speak first of all to his disciples, telling them to beware of hypocrisy, to fear that which will kill the soul rather than the body, he pictured God's care for his own by describing his thought for the fallen sparrow. Out of the multitude one said unto him, "Master, bid my brother divide the inheritance with me." Jesus answered, "Man, who made me a judge or a divider over you?" and then follows the parable which starts with the first verse of the printed lesson.

The Lesson

The lesson may be divided into two parts—the first six verses dealing with the covetous rich, the remainder with the anxious poor. For each Jesus has his admonition. For the benefit of the former he relates the parable of the rich man whose fields having brought forth so plentifully that he had no place to store their fruits, decided that he would pull down his barns and build greater, then take his ease and live a life of pure physical pleasure. But God said unto him, "Thou foolish one, this night is thy soul required of thee; and the things thou hast prepared, whose shall they be?" "So is he that layeth up treasures for himself and is not rich toward God," said Jesus, making application of the parable. From the multitude he turned again to his disciples with: "Therefore, I say unto you, be not anxious for your life, what ye shall eat; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on." He tells of God feeding the raven, an ill-omened bird, friendless among its kind and then "of how much more value are ye than the birds!" What does fretting and anxiety accomplish? The glory of the lilies and the richness of the short-lived grass is described. "How much more shall he clothe you? . . . Your Father knoweth that ye have need of these things. Yet seek ye first the kingdom, and these things shall be added unto you." Things first and things secondary, from Jesus' point of view.

Leading Thoughts

1. Riches lose their lure when the clear light of Jesus' thought is turned upon them. 2. "Your last robe has no pockets," is an Italian proverb. 3. "At first men of wealth own the money they have made and saved. Later in life the money owns them."—Andrew Carnegie. 4. The poor as well as the rich need chiding—"Be not anxious."

Larger Kingdom Work

A local church program for securing and training the young people and new converts for successful work in their own church is probably, next to home influences, the most dependable way to secure recruits for the ministerial, missionary, and educational work of the kingdom. It would be interesting to know just what would result in strengthening our working force, and how many more of the best young people of our churches would go to our colleges, seminaries, and training-schools with the purpose fixed to prepare for definite kingdom work, should every Baptist church put on at once a well-directed plan to secure and train young people for teaching and leadership in the home church.

Some idea of what the churches could do in their year-long contracts is indicated by the fact that when appeals have been made for those who will devote themselves to some lifetime Christian task, one out of three of the young people doing regular work in a number of our Baptist summer assemblies joyfully responded. For a week or ten days they had been thinking through with their leaders the problems of Christian work, and how these world needs could be met and the work done. In addition to those who decided to do full-time Christian work, practically all those in regular attendance on these special training courses go back to their own churches to help.

The small church especially needs to train its workers. There is no disgrace in beginning small; there is in remaining small when there is opportunity for growth. And there is a very definite relationship, as those who are careful students of church work know, between inefficient local leadership and chronic feebleness and littleness. Train the workers and cure the ills. Even if the situation be such that the church must of necessity remain few in numbers, it can, by carefully training its workers, be very great in total achievements as many a fine small church bears witness. —SELDON L. ROBERTS in Sunday School Worker.

IT is a great deal easier to do that which God gives us to do, no matter how hard it is, than to face the responsibility of not doing it.—Dr. J. R. Miller.

The New Baptist Tonic

"Hello, Mr. Superintendent, is your school alive?" asked a gentle voice over the Northern Baptist Convention special wire.

"Alive? Of course we are. We are holding our own nicely."

"Oh! You are just breathing then, but not strong enough to move. Can you take some nourishment? We Baptists are now using a tonic called 'B. & B. B. S. S. A.' prepared by a Dr. Chalmers of Philadelphia. This is guaranteed to cure jaundice, weak knees and heart, melan cholia and hook-worm inertia. The full name is 'Bigger and Better Baptist Sunday School Advance'."

"Well," said the superintendent of the Bethel school, "I might take it as a spring tonic. Our new pastor urges us to try something stimulating."

"No, this isn't for sale after January the first. Goodbye."

"Hold on, how much does it cost?"

"Only a dollar and with it is a book of full instructions, several leaflets and a monthly letter from Philadelphia, with new exercises to strengthen your muscles. You can get the tonic, 'Bigger and Better Baptist Sunday School Advance' by registering at your own Baptist state headquarters. Take a good big first dose at a boosters' banquet as a starter, and afterward a dose each month. Baptist schools all over the country which were wearily sitting down, holding their own like you, when they took the first dose are racing now. Our most progressive superintendents and pastors write that 'has brought new life to every department of the church.' If you are really Baptist, why not try it? Look at your state record. You are holding it back!"

The Standing of States in the "Advance"

States are divided into classes according to the total number of Baptist Sunday schools. Class one includes states with 400 or more schools. Class two at states with 150 to 400 schools. Class three have 150 schools or less. The percentage of registered schools ranks the states as follows:

Class one: 1. Illinois, 2. Indiana, Maine, 4. New York, 5. Pennsylvania, 6. Ohio, 7. West Virginia, 8. Kansas.

Class two: 1. New Jersey, 2. Iowa, 3. Nebraska, 4. Minnesota, 5. Wisconsin, 6. Washington, 7. Michigan, 8. Massachusetts, 9. Connecticut.

Class three: 1. Southern California, Montana, 3. Oregon, 4. Idaho, 5. Rhode Island, 6. Arizona, 7. South Dakota, Vermont, 9. Northern California, 10. Wyoming, 11. New Hampshire, 12. Colorado, 13. North Dakota.

ARE WE EDUCATING PASTORS FOR THE UNITARIAN CHURCH?

In Washington County, Maine, a ministerial conference is held monthly in which pastors of all denominations meet for the purpose of discussing matters common to us all. The discussions are stimulating and often refreshing and highly profitable, even when we do not see eye to eye. Not uncommonly matters of doctrine are discussed on which we widely differ; but we expect differences to arise and we respect one another's opinions.

Some months ago the writer of this paper was asked to prepare a paper on "Fundamentalism among Baptists." The paper elicited an animated discussion showing great divergence of views from the position taken by the Baptist fundamentalists. This was, of course, just as we expected it would be. One brother, who is a Congregational pastor, gave some of his experience which interested all of us. He said he got his collegiate training at an orthodox college, Acadia University, Wolfville, Nova Scotia, which happened to be my own alma mater. After he got through there he came on to the United States to a Baptist theological seminary for a theological training. Here he received, according to his judgment, larger visions and new truth which made it impossible honestly for him to remain in the Baptist denomination. In consequence of these new views he joined a church of the Unitarian order and became a Unitarian pastor. He attributed his change of views solely to the teaching of Baptist professors in a Baptist seminary, men whom he considered larger than their denomination. His reasoning seemed to be that any scholarly Baptist who thinks deeply must think along the line of rationalistic philosophy. According to his judgment, the teaching in that and other Baptist theological seminaries is in the direction of Unitarianism and he consistently went there. Afterward when he came to reflect on his new views and gave them mature thought he partly retraced his steps and joined a Congregational church, where he is now pastor.

He is a genial, whole-souled and efficient pastor but lost to the Baptist denomination because of the teaching and influence of a Baptist seminary. I have purposely withheld names as they would add nothing to the facts. He praised the seminary that had led him into a larger region of thought and truth, and indirectly commiserated those who are still living on the lower levels of truth.

If a rationalistic philosophy correctly reveals God let us not refuse to receive it, but if, as some of us are thoroughly convinced, it misrepresents him and is subversive of truth, let us set our faces against it. A man with a rationalistic philosophy in a professor's chair is out of place in a Baptist theological seminary. To create or allow such a condition is a denominational sin which is surely finding us out.

THE JUDGE JUDGED

I wonder if any of the readers of THE BAPTIST were more surprised than I was as I read Judge Bowker's address given before the White Mountain Association, Franconia, N. H., and which was published in the issue of Oct. 28.

Does he not think that the goal of a church is taking in members for their "moral education, for sociability, friendships, position, charity, social work, the study of public morals and business ethics, citizenship, Americanization?" He says that these "should be held out as an inducement to secure and retain his membership!" He says, "Morally there is no reason why 95 per cent of the men should not be accepted as members!" And he a judge! In a position of all others to know of the lack of spirituality of the majority of men!

Then the judge adds, "A belief in God and a willingness to take Christ as a leader should be sufficient to entitle any one to membership!"

He asks, "Is there any reason why you should not baptize every child when he becomes, let us say, ten years of age?" Surely, the judge has not the slightest conception of what the Baptist Church "stands for."

Lastly he says, "There is a time in the life of a boy when he is willing to join anything and everything. . . . Baptize him and receive him into membership!"

Does the judge know what our Savior meant when he said, "Ye must be born again?" And that this is the requirement of membership in a Baptist church?

Will some one of the White Mountain Association explain how they came to ask for an address from one who seems to know so little of the Word of God? Did they expect enlightenment on the subject of requirements for church membership? Why did they have the address printed in THE BAPTIST?

I. M. DENNISON.

WITHOUT EXCUSE

Your articles on "Whose Money Is It?" were of interest to me. They were, however, incomplete. They should have read, "Where the treasurer with full knowledge of the trustees and pastor, has been borrowing." I can see where laymen, even officers in a church, not having had missionary training as they should, (especially where missions is seldom mentioned in the pulpit) might do such a thing. But I cannot see where a minister of the gospel, claiming to be called of God to carry on Christ's work below, could knowingly use money, given and blessed by the giver for missionary purposes, for luxuries; knowing that by so doing he was taking the necessities of life from loved ones far from home. As laymen we should take our share of the blame, but a pastor should be called upon to bear his also.

A LAYWOMAN.

Rev. C. L. Trawin, pastor of the church at McMinnville, Ore., has published three of the addresses delivered on the occasion of his fifth anniversary with the church. It will be recalled that in the midst of this happy occasion the nineteen-year-old son, Charles Frederick Trawin, was instantly killed by coming in contact with a live wire in the line of his duty. The whole community has been sobered by this calamity and the spirit of revival is evidenced in the work of the church. Copies of these addresses will be mailed to those who address Mr. Trawin.

Thy Will

By M. CARRIE MOORE

MY Lord said "Yes!" He heard my prayer,
And I went singing all the day,
And joy was springing everywhere,
For all my fears were swept away;
The world transformed, with praises rang,
New anthems filled the earth and sky,
Angels and men together sang,
My Lord and King to glorify.
My raptured soul cannot express
The gratitude I fain would pour,
I can but own thy power to bless,
And love, and wonder and adore.

My Lord said "No!" and silence bound
The universe, grim, black and weird,
And who is there hath ever found
To measure woe despair hath seared?
Frost seized the budding flowers of hope,
And all the heavenly visions fled;
My soul in blindness left to grope,
Wondered if life itself were dead;
My tears fell fast, how could I tell,
Or comprehend the mystery
Of hidden things? Oh is it well?
And must this dreadful darkness be?

My Lord said "Wait!" With shame I said,
"Forgive me, thou who art all good.
That I so long by self am led,
And selfishly misunderstood;
Teach me to trust submissively,
Till thou shall cleanse this house of clay,
And wait with patience, letting thee
In joy or pain have things thine own way.
Lord, take me up, I am so tired,
I nothing ask but to lie still,
And rest me, till my soul inspired,
Shall know and do thy holy will."

Young People's Work

Topic For December 24

CHRISTMAS ALL THE YEAR

Luke 2:8-20

By HERBERT HINES

Meaning of the subject. Does the subject, "Christmas All the Year" mean that we shall hang up our stockings every evening and peer into them anxiously every morning to see what a benign Santa has left us? Does it mean that we shall sing carols and decorate the house with holly 365 days in succession? No, not that! But rather that the spirit of the observance of the day shall be so sincere and full of meaning that its aroma will remain with us for a year. The fragrance of the Christmas cheer should stay with us throughout the year. The big, moving ideas are not to be packed away in boxes like ornaments, tinsel, bells and candle-holders, to be used again next Christmas.

A little bit of Christmas day Shall ever cheer us on our way.

The perfume of Christmas is in three precious packages labelled "Immanuel," "Peace-on-Earth" and "Others."

Immanuel. This is a Hebrew word meaning "God-with-us," and is one of the names applied to Jesus to express his divine character and his human contact. Christmas humanizes the divine son of God because it brings him close to our experiences. He came as an infant in a manger to begin his earthly existence in the flesh. As a poet said: "The Lord of Love came down from above to live with the men who work." After a brief sojourn here below he returned whence he came, but in a very real sense he is ever with us. We have his presence, his promise and his potency to lift us upward to heaven. The Immanuel or "God-with-us" feeling of Christmas day should be our hope and joy every day of our lives.

Peace-on-Earth. The angel's song is echoed the earth around at Christmas-tide. How every heart is moved by the thought that universal peace is a Christian hope, presented to us regularly on the Lord's natal day! But in the strife of the world, in the clash of national and class interests and in the petty daily jealousies of men, how soon is the "peace-on-earth" idea forgotten! When the Christian forces of the world unite to sound this note of world peace every day in the year and work and suffer for it, then we shall know more of Christmas all the year.

Others. Yule-tide glorifies the word, "Others." We look about us to see some good we may do to make others happy. We give gifts to our friends and loved ones, we think of charities, and we even look up people in need that we may minister to them in the spirit, and under the spell of the Master's birthday. Old Scrooge learned of others under the Christmas spell, and the "Other Wise Man" appeals to us because his quest of the Christ was delayed by his willing service to others along the journey to find the Master of men.

Let the perfume of these three packages permeate our daily lives and we shall indeed have "Christmas all the year."

In And Around Boston

1. Rail Transportation Facilities

The combined mileage of electric and steam railroads in the fifty-mile area about Boston is one-third greater than that in the fifty-mile circle about New York City, and nearly two-thirds greater than that in a fifty-mile circle about Philadelphia, Chicago, or St. Louis.

The Boston Elevated Railway System, the Eastern Massachusetts Street Railway Company, the Boston and Worcester, the Middlesex and Boston Street Railways, connect every part of Metropolitan Boston. Boston's underground system, the first municipal subway in the United States, comprises about nine miles of subway.

2. Water Transportation

Boston has forty miles of berthing space, eight miles on a depth of thirty feet or more at low water; one pier with berthing space for five ocean steamers at one time; another with space for ten; practically all piers supplied with spur tracks; thirty regular steamship lines from Boston; shipping facilities to all parts of the world.

3. Educational Facilities

Metropolitan Boston supports public schools which are a model to the world; contains over 200 universities, colleges, normal schools, music and art institutions and private schools; the seat of Harvard University, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Boston University, Radcliffe College, Wellesley College, Simmons College, Tufts College, Boston College and Conservatory of Music; contains 125 public libraries and more than 100 special libraries.

Special On Recreation

The program committee for the Boston Convention has taken into consideration the desire of the young people for more time to "see things." The greater part of the Fourth of July will be given over to sight-seeing. Saturday afternoon and evening will be left free also. More than likely, the local committee in Boston will charter boats and the entire convention will go on a clam bake on one of the near-by beaches.

The Boston Convention presents an unusual opportunity to visit some of America's historic places. Young people's organizations of whatever name are not only invited, but urged to send delegates. The clans from all over the country will gather for their annual pow wow. You cannot afford to miss the big Baptist event of 1923.

The Church and Its Young People

(An Illinois Study by JAMES ASA WHITE)

In response to a request to appear on the program of the Illinois Baptist Convention, the writer felt that something more than the so-called inspirational address should be attempted. A questionnaire, therefore, was sent to 335 ministers of the state, ninety-one of whom responded. The information contained in these responses has been carefully studied. This study reveals:

1. A meager knowledge of many pastors as to just what is going on in their respective churches.

2. A spirit of pessimism or hopelessness to meet the situation.

3. The inadequacy of training on the part of many of our ministers to meet the needs of the young people.

4. A seeming don't care attitude as to present day problems of young life.

5. An almost utter lack of effort along the lines of training classes of various kinds. Evidently this is due to some of the things mentioned above and the inability to see the need for a trained leadership if the church is to be efficient.

6. That in the ninety-one churches studied, we have a total resident membership of 23,330 with a non-resident membership of 4,121.

7. That in the ninety-one churches studied, we have ninety Sunday schools with an enrolment of 19,980.

8. That we have eighty B. Y. P. U.'s and one Young People's Club with a total enrolment of 3,085.

9. That we have 413 organized classes with an enrolment of 5,768.

10. That only twenty churches have adequate educational plants; thirty have additional rooms; forty-one have only the church auditorium.

11. That only seven churches have gymnasiums while eighty-four have nothing with the exception of a basement in a few instances.

12. That in the ninety-one churches there are 3,700 young people between the ages 16 and 25.

13. That out of this 3,700, 3,166 are in the Bible school; 435 are serving as teachers; 2,424 are in the B. Y. P. U.; 1,504 are in high school; 318 are in college; sixty-three are in Baptist schools; 318 college young people are at work in ninety-one churches.

14. That twenty-nine pastors made no report as to lack of interest of college young people in church activities; that thirty-eight had no trouble along this line; that twenty-four had trouble for the following reasons:

(1) Young people go off to the city on the completion of school.

(2) Lack of church support for an adequate program and "unsettling" during college course.

(3) Too many attractions and too many other calls; frivolous attitude.

(4) Either too busy or not active; seldom at services.

(5) Dance in high schools and non-Christian teachers.

(6) Drift away on going away from home to high school.

(7) Lack of educated young people in the church to give cultural atmosphere.

(8) Secular attractions.

(9) Neglect of Christian training at home.

(10) Too much interested in school work.

(11) Selfishness and lack of culture on the part of the church makes adjustment not easy.

(12) Fraternities, sororities, jazz and Darwin.

(13) Modern educational methods wean from church life.

(14) An unsympathetic attitude toward the scientific spirit on the part of the older people.

(15) Too many engagements; group spirit in opposition to the church; lack of sympathy; lack of equipment; poor foundation in religious knowledge.

(16) College folk shun the church.

(17) Worldliness.

(18) In some instances to the skeptical teaching of professors.

15. That it was more difficult to hold uneducated young people than the educated. This would seem to establish the moral value of an education. In this connection I quote Owen R. Lovejoy as to the moral advantages of an education: "In 1921 in New York City, 36,790 persons were brought before the courts. Five of these had received a college education; 65 a high school education; 36,610 an elementary education or less."

16. The study revealed that eighteen out of the ninety-one churches were doing nothing in the way of meeting the social and recreational needs of the young people; sixty reported the ordinary activities and occasional socials; eight, some athletics; six, Scouts, Y. W. C. A., Camp Fire Girls; five, hikes, picnics, etc.; three, church night; one, motion pictures.

17. Thirty-nine churches reported absolutely nothing in the way of week-day religious educational activities; seven reported teacher training classes; six, church vacation schools; eight, some week-day classes either in the church or in cooperation with the community program; two, mission study and reading contests; seven, boys' and girls' organizations; two, week nights for young people only.

THE WAY OUT

I. From the Field

A number of suggestions have been made some of which are as follows:

1. More rallies of the young people with a good inspirational program, with the state convention and associational meetings at a time when the young people can attend. In place of having old and gray-headed ones leading, give the young people a chance to lead the young people.

2. Form a Northern Illinois Young People's Assembly or a combination with Southern Wisconsin at some such place as Camp Epworth or Lake Geneva.

3. That the parents become more interested in knowing where their children are on Sunday evenings.

4. Closer cooperation between societies and district conferences accessible to the people.

5. Occasional visits from denominational or state workers for first-hand advice and council.

6. That something be done to keep the dance out of high school and also help in securing Christian teachers as the influence of non-Christian teachers is very hurtful.

7. A circulating library for young people.

8. More attention to juniors.

9. More active cooperation between churches and the young people and directed activities in the organization of new Sunday schools and B. Y. P. U.'s in neglected fields; the enlistment of young people for campaigns in soul-winning and church advertising.

10. Make the Christian life big and present rather than effeminate and futuristic.

11. "I am sure that we are not doing more than we ought to do for missions, but if our churches are not taught to do something for our young people that will show them that we are not too stingy to take care of their interests, then when this generation that now supports the church shall have passed on, the churches will be dead as sure as we live."

"I feel very strongly about this matter, for this reason. I have as fine a class of people in this church as it has ever been my pleasure to work with. I have been trying for a year to get them to see the vision which I think I can see. They profess to be able to see it, but say, 'We are just not able to do anything about it.' They say that when they have paid their own general expenses and have paid up the pledges which they have made to the New World Movement, they haven't a cent which can be spent for 'expansion' on our own field. But the fact remains that we will have to do something to take care of our young people that is 'worth while' or in a few years at best the church here will be a thing of the past."

"I believe that our people are going to have to be educated, by some of those intensive methods which were used in the Hundred Million Dollar Drive, to take care of their own fields, or soon there will be no field to draw mission money from."

II. In General

1. A close study of the field by the department of religious education out of which there should grow a program commensurate with the needs.

2. The study reveals a very meager conscience on the subject of education and especially Christian education. The study reveals a tendency to be ready with criticisms regarding our own Baptist schools and general education but not the slightest suggestion for betterment.

In our Baptist educational institutions, the work along the lines of religious education is either too technical or academic to be of practical value. In others there is not enough training given to raise such work to the dignity of a department. A study of this situation should be made and corrective measures suggested. In brief, let me say we should have departments where materials of practical religious education should be studied at first hand and where a genuine and wholesome sympathy will be produced in the student for the problems of our churches. Putting it another way, we want our young people sent back to us an asset and not a liability. Our educational institutions are perhaps not to blame for the present condition of things. Our meager financial support has forced them to adopt a sort of hand to mouth policy. Such a policy can never achieve the ends demanded by a modern educational program.

3. Again, there must be developed within the convention adequate machinery to deal with our problems. I am aware that I am on dangerous ground for within our various denominational gatherings one of the big issues is that of "states' rights." We must face the fact that the work must be done by the local constituency. We shall always need a New York or Chicago or Philadelphia, but our problems will never be solved at long range. The sooner we are conscious of this fact, the better for us.

4. Lastly, an Illinois conscience, by which I mean an esprit de corps among Baptists of the state. Many of our differences are non-essential but we have been spending too much time on them. Illinois Baptists have a great stewardship. A brief study of the educational conditions existing in our churches overwhelms us. With this great asset of young life, there is no reason why we should not move to the very head of the line. There are limitless possibilities. There is only one way out for us and that is: FORWARD WITH CHRIST TOGETHER.

Last year 335 patients were admitted to the Home Mission Society Hospital in Pueblo, Mexico. Of this number, 243 were cured, seventy-nine improved, fourteen were discharged as incurable and twenty-five died. Every Sunday at this hospital missionaries of the home mission societies conduct religious services for the older patients and Sunday school for the children.

The Chimney Corner

The Heart of a Jubilee Singer

(This wonderful true story of a beautiful Negro woman is from a splendid new book by Coe Hayne called "Race Grit" which every Baptist ought to be buying this year and reading with pride. It is published by the American Baptist Publication Society—this taste ought to add it to many a Christmas list!)

CHRISTMAS Eve in Edinburgh! The city aglow with Yuletide joy. Shops ablaze with light. Shops crowded with last-minute couriers of St. Nicholas. Homeward bound students laughing. A year's toll nearly ended, with the holiday rest and rush to intervene before the affairs of another year seriously must be reckoned with.

Countless were the sensations which clamored to make their impress upon the mind of a girl who halted for a moment on a street corner as a stranger in town is inclined to do when others are hurrying on. Helen Adams, leading soprano in the company of the Fisk Jubilee Singers who were giving a concert twice a day in Synod Hall on Princess Street, was in the habit of walking swiftly to her room after the afternoon program, but on this occasion her attention had been arrested by a scene which fastened itself indelibly upon her memory. Not that she had never seen a drunken woman dragged along the street between two muscular policemen—yet certainly this was quite enough to make one more experienced than she feel the pain of sudden disgust—but following the woman and crying piteously the name "Mamma!" was a boy not more than four years old.

In her disgust the thought came sharply, "You are horrified but what have you done to help such as these?"

The little boy stumbled along unnoticed, uncared for. And it was Christmas Eve!

"I cannot conscientiously say that I have done anything."

The question became a burning one that sought a positive answer. A few days later in talking with some friends who were engaged in evangelistic work the suggestion was made, "Why not go to the Bible Training Institute for Christian and Social Workers in Glasgow?"

Two months afterward Helen Adams decided to take the training. At 10:30 p. m. one night she left the concert platform in Glasgow and woke up next morning in the room assigned her in the institute. She was awakened by subdued girlish voices in the hall.

"Did you hear that Miss Adams came last night?"

"I wonder what she's like."

"I wonder if she's in earnest about coming, being just off the concert platform."

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

"O, she can't be! They never are, you know."

"Yes, I know how it is with professional entertainers. They are not always spiritually minded."

The delightful months spent with the girls on her floor effaced the memory of the heartache of that first morning. All of those dear associates have gone out in His service, giving their best in responsible positions as missionaries in China, South America, Egypt, Australia, Scotland, England and America.

A Fisk Jubilee Singer did not receive the salary of a Metropolitan Opera star. Although this girl in two years had worked up from the youngest singer to the leading soprano, only a small saving in cash had been possible. After the purchase of the required school costume there was not much left. But she was happy in her blue Norfolk waist, blue skirt and coat with white color and cuffs and the inevitable bonnet. Her nurse's attire, she was told, would assure her safety in going the missionary rounds of the slums.

It was to be a test of faith. And how the expenses did mount up! It seemed to her sometimes that she could not meet her obligations and must go back upon the concert platform. The holiday season was the most trying period of the year. She could not return to her home in far-away America. Yet it always was necessary for her to leave her room, as the house cleaning must be done and the rules forbade her staying. The question, "Where are you going for Christmas?" could not be answered as readily by her as by some of the students. Yet happy surprises came to her at times. "Come to us. Enclosed you will find the railroad fare," was the substance of more than one letter received just before Christmas or Easter vacation.

As a junior, in a two year course, it was her privilege to engage in missionary work on Sundays under the direction of the seniors. Her first assignment took her to the Cowcaddens Police Station in charge of an upper classman. In a large cell for women she was introduced by the senior to four or five women who had been booked Saturday for drunkenness, and there she was left to make what headway she could. It was not an especially cheerful group among whom to make the initial attempt as a personal worker.

The women seemed to be as frightened of the young cadet as she was of them. They watched her warily as five caged wild animals might a new trainer. One woman in particular appeared at a loss to know what should be done under the circumstances. Her eyes, wild and bleary, were fearful to behold. She wore a short skirt, her hair was cut short and fell in tangled, soiled ringlets about her neck, and as the result of a Saturday night debauch she looked more terrible than she really was at heart. Nervously she clung to an iron grating in front of an open fire. For the student there was no way of escape. She was locked in.

As the prisoners were not inclined to make any overtures, Helen Adams summoned sufficient courage to ask if her "friends" would like to have her sing for them. It had occurred to the girl who had come to make a speech that inasmuch as music has charms to soothe the savage breast it might be at least a means of putting her on good terms with these poor creatures with whom she must work. The answer was an eager "Yes."

The painful tenseness at the throat of the jubilee singer disappeared. She found herself in song. Set free, her heart went out to these women who, like the wretched mother whom she had seen in Edinburgh, needed some one's love. It was in behalf of such as these that the summons "Go ye into all the world" had first come to her. Her soul began singing the song which God had given her for those who sit in darkness. The words poured softly, tenderly from smiling lips. It was the old favorite:

*"Jesus, my Savior, from Bethlehem came,
Born in a manger to sorrow and shame;
Oh, it was wonderful,
Blest be his name!
Seeking for me, for me."*

At the close of the first stanza, tears were streaming down sin-hardened faces, and for the first time in her life Helen Adams, recreated, told the gospel story which she has been telling to this day.

Going out from the missionary training school in Glasgow, she was destined to receive a training in England and Scotland under such fearless leaders as John McNeil, William Muir, J. Q. A. Henry, Ezekiel Smith (brother of Gypsy), Torrey and Alexander, and W. D. Dunn all of whom she assisted in their great meetings. For eleven years she was thus engaged as an evangelistic singer and Bible worker in the British Isles and then came to America at the invitation of Miss Nannie H. Burroughs, head of the National Training School in Washington D. C., to open a Christian center for Negroes in the Capital. This center was located near what was to be known later as the "riot district." Forty students from Howard University assisted her a volunteer workers. Many notorious places were cleaned up during the two years she remained at the head of the work in Washington. Her married life began in Columbus, Ohio, where her record as a war worker was of such a character that the Y. W. C. A. recruited her as one of its camp directors. In this capacity she fought single-handed one of the greatest battles of her life and won. The scene of her war activities as a Y. W. C. A. worker was laid in a munitions camp in the South where she found colored girls herded like sheep in pens. This story is only one of the many that can be told of the brave women of the Y. W. C. A.

who were not daunted in the face of cruel indifference or official red-tape.

As a part of the reconstruction program of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, Dr. E. W. Moore of Columbus, Ohio, was appointed director of the Baptist Negro work in the North and Mrs. Moore (née Helen Adams) was chosen by the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society to take charge of the first Christian center for Negroes in Pittsburgh as well as the first to be undertaken in the North under Baptist auspices. Our home mission agencies are now cooperating in the maintenance of three such enterprises.

A Skeleton From the Bottom Of the Sea

By "PEGGY"

UNCLETIM has been in Florida and just before he came home he wrote a postcard to Bill and to me that upset our entire household: "I am bringing you each a skeleton found on the bottom of the sea." I was scared nearly stiff!

Dear old Agony wrung her hands and said: "I 'low I'se jess gwine leave dis ere house for good an' all if Mr. Hathaway he brings them skeletons into this here kitchen!"

Timothy cried. He is so little. He don't want a skeleton! But Bill . . . h, you should have seen Bill strutting round and boasting that he wasn't afraid of them! He would keep them in his room, he would show them to the boys, he would tell his teacher in school that now he knew all about anatomy. Bill was a hero in all our eyes for five days, until Uncletim came home with his treasure chest containing the skeletons, and when we all had a good laugh. For would you believe it? They were sponges; but when we heard their story even Bill acknowledged it was a better surprise than that he had been expecting to see.

For did you know that sponges are animals which grow rooted to the floor of the sea? Not a leg nor an arm nor fin do they have, so they do not walk or swim, they simply sit. And suck! For he funny big holes are mouths which lead into smaller mouths, through which the ocean water is sucked—all the nourishment they need is in this "aqua marine," and what they do not want they put out of the bigger holes.

Uncletim went sailing in a queer old wooden boat with brilliant sails, the crew were Greeks, and one of them had an earring in his ear! They were out fishing for sponges, but instead of a pole and a net and a hook, there was an air-pump attached to an immensely long tube like a garden hose which was fitted into one side of the diver's headpiece. This had a glass window in the front of it so that he could see when he had been let down by a rope into the bottom of the sea. The air was pumped into the tube so that the diver could stay down quite a long time, walking around, prying loose the sponges with an immense "fork."

Uncletim could hardly wait for the diver to be pulled up on dock again, but when he finally arrived he regretted his eagerness, for the sponges had a horrible odor and looked really hideous, like slabs of red liver. This redness was the live part of the sponges, but the sailors spread them all over the deck, trampled on them until the soft jelly had been removed, then floated the skeletons in the pure soft water to clean them thoroughly, so the "skeletons" would be safe for people to use.

Don't you think it is interesting to know the stories back of the every-day things we use and take for granted? But the best part of Uncletim's story was really about the Greek sailor with the earring. He had a fierce mustache, a slouch hat, a red bandanna knotted around his neck and looked for all the world like one of the "Treasure Island" pirates. You might expect him any moment to pull out a cutlass and jab it into you so that you would some day be a really-true skeleton on the bottom of the sea. So imagine Uncletim's surprise when his pirate lustily worked the air-pump, humming: "Jesus loves me, this I know!"

Uncletim said he could have cried, it was so sudden and so sweet—a pirate and a primary song.

"Where did you learn it?" Uncletim asked.

The "pirate" wagged his ear-ring and tried his best to talk English: "De leetle bee-bee, he seeng! Leetle bee-bee my gran'son."

Uncletim says he supposes the "bee-bee" goes to Sunday school somewhere in that little fishing village in Florida; so now whenever we see a sponge, Bill and I think of the pirate, the ear-ring and our favorite little hymn. Timothy loves the story so much that he insists on taking his "skeleton" to bed with him! I mean his skeleton from the bottom of the sea, of course.

Our Own Folks

St. Louis Letter

By W. E. DARROW

Dr. F. A. Agar was in our city for a series of Lordship conferences, November 19-24, under the auspices of the Baptist Ministers' Conference of the St. Louis Association. On Sunday morning, Nov. 19, he spoke in the Lafayette Park Church; in the evening, in the West Park Church. The next morning he addressed the ministers' conference. That evening Dr. Agar conducted a training council for deacons, trustees, finance committees, treasurers, presidents of women's organizations, young people's societies and Sunday-school officers at Third Church. On Tuesday afternoon he spoke at a women's meeting, this for women of all the churches, in the Delmar Church and in the evening conducted a conference for Sunday-school workers, teachers, class presidents and officers in Euclid Church. On Wednesday evening, prayer meeting night, he spoke in Compton Heights Church. Thursday noon there was a luncheon for ministers and their wives in Grand Avenue Church. At the close of the luncheon Dr. Agar conducted a conference. At 3 p. m., he spoke at a women's meeting in Delmar Church, the same groups as those meeting on Tuesday afternoon. That evening he conducted a training council, same groups as those meeting on Monday evening, in Third Church. On Friday evening, the closing meeting was held in Third Church, all the groups. On Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday noons he met selected lay-members of the churches at the American Hotel for luncheon and conference. These conferences will be of great help to our churches, for many of their leaders have come to a new vision of efficiency and service. Dr. Agar put faith, regeneration and the lordship of Jesus Christ as fundamental in all true Christian service. Not so much new organization as a new consciousness of the Lordship of Christ is needed by our Baptist people. Dr. W. H. Geistweit, chairman of the committee on arrangements for the conferences, was called away for a few days because of the death of his brother, Rev. I. T. Geistweit.

The B. Y. P. U. Training School in Lafayette Park Church, Nov. 13-17, was a success in every way. It was preceded by a city union rally on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 12, in the same church. Dr. R. B. Whiteside spoke on "Young People for the Hour." The rally was well attended. Each evening of the training school there were two class periods of about forty-five minutes length, separated by an assembly in the church auditorium. The assembly consisted of announcements, devotional, a "flashlight" and a "pepper box." The flashlights were demonstrations of B. Y. P. U. activity by some of the local unions. On Monday evening, "A Peppy Missionary Meeting" by the Grand Ave. Church Union; Tuesday evening "The Intermediates" by the West Park Intermediate Union; Wednesday evening "An Unbusiness-like Business meeting," by the Tower Grove Senior Union; Thursday evening "The Juniors," by the Carondelet Juniors; Friday evening, "A Model Executive Committee Meeting," by the Lafayette Park Senior Union. The pepper box consisted of short talks by leaders of young people's work on "The Spirit and Purpose of the B. Y. P. U." Brethren Shank, Reader, Plainfield, Kelly and Combs conducted the devotional services. The faculty consisted of Rev. H. L. Reader, Webster Groves; Miss Alice Bailey, Third Church; Mrs. C. L. Hennon, Euclid Church; Rev. R. K. Kelly, Lafayette Park Church, with the writer as director. Members of the executive committee of the city B. Y. P. U. were the committee on the training school. Of this committee the writer was chairman. It has been suggested that the training school hereafter be held one evening each week for a period of five weeks, thus increasing the attendance of our young people at the school. Many of our young people attend night school and cannot give an entire week to any training school that may be put on, no matter how important it may be. They should be encouraged in their effort to fit themselves by training for their life service.

At the Thursday meeting of the Baptist Ministers' Conference Brethren H. C. Combs, Lewis M. Hale and W. L. Nash, previously selected to prepare resolutions on the going of the writer from the city, reported and the report presented was unanimously adopted. These resolutions called attention to the work done by the writer as pastor of the Grand Avenue Church and in more general associational affairs. They are appreciative of the esteem in which he is held by his brother ministers. Certainly, the writer is appreciative of the kindly interest of his brethren.

On Tuesday evening, Nov. 28, the St. Louis B. Y. P. U. executive committee and the Baptist Herald committee surprised the writer at the home of Mr. Harry A. Stewart, a member of the committee, and after a social evening presented him with a loose-leaved memorandum book in grateful acknowledgment of his faithful services as a fellow-worker. His name is stamped on the cover, which is of leather. The gift is greatly appreciated by the recipient. The writer was editor of the Baptist Herald from 1919 to 1922. This publication is the official monthly of the St. Louis B. Y. P. U.

On Saturday afternoon, Nov. 25, the Primary-Junior Brigade of Grand Avenue Church Sunday school gave a reception to Rev. and Mrs. W. E. Darrow. They presented the pastor and his wife with two appropriate gifts as expression of their love and appreciation.

This is probably the last St. Louis letter from the writer. Some other scribe will inform the readers of THE BAPTIST about St. Louis denominational affairs. Our task has been a happy one. Our removal to Nebraska brings us even more directly in touch with the work of the Northern Convention and with the family of THE BAPTIST. So our present letter may not be a finale, except as to locality.

An Assamese Church Helps Reduce Deficit

To the Secretaries and Members of the Board of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society: Cordial greetings and filial salutations:

We, the few and in worldly goods poor members of the First Baptist Church of Sadiya, Assam, have learned with deep sorrow of the heavy debt now resting upon all of us who are loyal members of the great Baptist brotherhood in Christ. We beg to assure you of our most fervent and prayer-filled hope that this burden may soon be removed from the heart of our Redeemer, and from the hearts of all who are pledged to be his helpers in winning a lost world to him.

We have not forgotten that it was a Sadiya where Rev. Nathan Brown and Mr. Cutter arrived from Burma in March 1836 to open the first mission station of our society in the province of Assam. We respectfully beg to acknowledge with lasting gratitude your great love and good-will that has brought unto us the immortal love of him who is now on portion and inheritance.

As a small token of our deep appreciation of what our noble friends in America and our loving missionaries at this and other stations have done for bringing the knowledge of the Light of the Word to us and to our countrymen, we beg to enclose our cheque for 150 rupees with the hope that it may in a slight way help to lighten the burden of debt resting upon your hearts at headquarters in New York and at other places where the zeal of spirit and the power of prayer together with good work and generous offering are striving to keep the mission torches burning undimmed, nay with increase, brilliancy, in all lands.

With deep respect and strong Christian love we beg to subscribe ourselves on behalf of our fellow members of the First Baptist Church of Sadiya, Assam.

Dated the 20th of August, 1922.

(Signed) Benjamin Symon, Changma J. Sangma, Rosik.

Letter from A. J. Weeks

If you don't "Killam" off, the Baptist of your section would like to hear of the Karens of Toungoo.

Last night we had a concert. Our chapel seats 200. 700 came and we had to find places for them. A happy crowd for it was their children who were golt to "show off." They can speak English too. Just think of that; and we can even read Karen! Then they swell with pride of possession, till the seats, but for two, will scarce hold all four of their. Those in the rear are so thick they can only swell taller. Good! They can no see better. When that little rooster from The Ya Yu (the village where they have one street, and that, and under the house is the barnyard)—when he let out of his tiny form his crow, "G-G-G-Gehko," it is most pushed the tower over, for the crowd all wanted to see at once.

Listen! Some day a great-hearted American will give $5,000 toward a new chapel for these people. After they get over the famine they will match it, or more, so as to have a place more spacious than at present, and will keep it for worship and special meetings.

Famine? Yes, the rats came in droves of thousands, and eat a man's whole crop before he is fairly awake. This is the third year. There is a tradition that they will come three years in succession. If their hopes are well founded, this will be the last year of famine. Those whom you may feel led to help will probably be able to care for themselves after this year. Last year we received Rs 2894, from friends here, mainly Karens. This year we must help Tavoy and Moulmein as well, for they are suffering, too.

You will want to hear how one village has helped. Thra Kra Su, who is a missionary from this field working in Loikaw, tells this story.

The village of Meh Teh Der was in dire straits. No food and no money. All the women of the place met daily for prayer, expecting a fruit called Tha Nay Tha to ripen, and fruited abundantly in the neighborhood of the village. The Burman people like this fruit very much, and will give three dollars a basket for it. They gathered and sold the fruit, and were helped through their time of stress. The A. B. M. treasurer will, I am sure, forward any help you may be moved to bestow on the famine-stricken people here. Should reach us before April, at all. Thank you.

Foungoo, Burma.

Dedication of Lorimer Memorial Church

Lorimer Memorial Church, Seventy-third St. and St. Lawrence Ave., Chicago, is devoting the week of Dec. 3-10 to the dedication of its new $75,000 building. The style of architecture is of the Wright school. The building is attractive in appearance and is modern in every respect. The first floor has a large assembly hall, dining-room facilities, lecture room, kitchen and ladies' rest room; on the second floor are the auditorium and balcony, church parlors, and the beginners' department rooms; and on the third floor are the library department and the choir rooms. The beautiful new Pilcher organ has just been installed and has some of the finest stops that an organ can have. Included among them are the angel choir and the times.

The dedicatory program is as follows: Dec. 3: 10:45, sermon, Rev. E. L. Killam—the first to be preached in the new structure; 2:30, dedication sermon, Rev. Johnston Myers. Revs. M. P. Boynton, C. M. Kessler, R. N. Van Doren and C. T. Holman will also participate; 7:45, sermon, Rev. Carl D. Case, of Oak Park. Dec. 4: 7:45, Bible school and B. Y. P. U. evening. Speakers: Rev. Benjamin Otto, Rev. E. Wiese and Mrs. Judson S. Tyley. Dec. 5: 7:45. Denominational Night. Speakers: Rev. A. E. Peterson, Rev. J. J. Ross, Mr. Edwin Phelps and Mr. W. G. Brimson. Dec. 6: Community Night with sister churches invited. Dec. 7: 7:45, Educational and Women's Union Night. Speakers: Dean Shailer Mathews, of the University of Chicago; President George Wheaton Taft, of the Northern Theological Seminary; Mrs. Clara D. Pinkham and Mrs. R. P. Fales. Sunday, Dec. 10 at 10:45, the pastor, Rev. Charles B. Althoff, will preach. 7:45 Coronation Service with sermon by Rev. James M. Stifter, of First Church, Evanston. On Sunday afternoon, Dec. 17, the new organ will be dedicated by Prof. Wilhelm Middelschulte.

THE OLD FIRST CHURCH, SALEM, in the matter of modern equipment is brand new. They had a "nest-egg" of $17,000 salted away and have just spent it. It came from the sale of the Central Church property when the two churches were made one. They have furnished up everything, putting a sheen of attractiveness upon church and parish house. This is the church of Dr. R. Q. Mills, Dr. Galusha Anderson, Dr. Geo. E. Merrill, Dr. E. P. Farnham and Dr. Alexander Blackburn. Pastor R. A. Sherwood is vigorously keeping up a noble succession, and prosperity is everywhere.

REV. SAMUEL MACAULEY LINDSAY has been leading the noble Brooklyn Church long enough to get the big job well in hand. With a sort of magnificent ease and without any straining or screaming publicity, and a deal of the pastoral heart which finds the people both in church and home, every service is filling up and growing strong. Confidence, happiness, and edification is the combination for a church of that type, and it is winning a marked response.

THE DUDLEY STREET CHURCH, BOSTON, is a great center of gospel activity and Christian melody. It is called the "Singing Church," and the chief singer in that Israel is Pastor A. T. Brooks. He has a way of charming music out of the unsuspecting. Many come to sing but remain to hear and to pray. They hear live and burning messages, and everybody feels the pull of the pastor's strong and magnetic leadership. That old church of Henry M. King, A. K. Potter, A. S. Gumbart, C. A. Fulton and G. R. Stair is one of the most animated religious centers in the Roxbury district.

THE DORCHESTER TEMPLE WHERE Pastor O. W. Foye is leading, is having some of its best days. That church was originally a shoot from the stem of Tremont Temple, and never wholly recovered from the pristine push. Always it has been a great force in the Dorchester district, which is a church quarry that is being better worked than ever. They have strong men in the pews, and "elect ladies" in plenty.

THE BETHANY CHURCH, ROXBURY, secures Rev. D. W. Lyman, long time pastor at Ilion, N. Y. They are hearty and hopeful, have a fine plant and workshop, and will loyally back the new pastor in what must be a steady struggle to win the success they deserve.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

THE MERRIMACK STREET CHURCH of Manchester has extended a hearty call to Rev. J. W. Rafter of Newport. Mr. Rafter went to Newport early in 1920 and his work there has been most commendable. Besides serving the Newport Church with its 126 resident members Mr. Rafter has served the church in the town of Goshen, four miles distant. Other missionary work in the suburbs of Newport also has had Mr. Rafter's attention. If Mr. Rafter decides to go to the Manchester Church he will find a church well organized and progressive.

REV. J. B. KNOWLES UNTIL recently pastor at Brentwood has accepted a call to the Chester Church and will begin his pastorate at once.

REV. J. S. BUFFUM OF HAVERHILL, Mass., accepts the call to the church at Northwood Ridge.

A UNION ROLL CALL AT DEERFIELD, where the Congregational Church worships with the Baptist, was recently held. A dinner was served at noon after which the people assembled in the auditorium of the church for the roll call and listened to a timely address by Rev. E. R. Stearns, executive secretary of the New Hampshire Congregational Conference. The attendance was good. Rev. Christina Mac-

REV. W. P. ROBINSON of MADISON read his resignation recently to the regret of his people. Effort is being put forth to persuade him to reconsider the same.

IT IS WITH SORROW THAT WE record the death of Brother H. F. Nelson for some years clerk of the Goshen church. Mr. Nelson was well along in years and had rendered most valuable service to this church.

THE NEW HAMPSHIRE BAPTIST Year Book for 1922 is just off the press and is being distributed to the churches.

NEW YORK

AT THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE New York State Baptists held recently in the city of Albany, resolutions were passed heartily commending the Board of Promotion in its effort to extend the work of the kingdom and secure 100 per cent payment of pledges to the New World Movement, and calling upon the pastors and churches to stand squarely behind its policy of advance. The Baptist people were also urged to respond generously with clothing and supplies for Russia and the Near East Relief. The proposed amendment to the constitution of the United States to prohibit sectarian appropriations was endorsed. Resolutions expressing appreciation of the Lord's Day Alliance and approval of the actions of the government in applying the provisions of prohibition laws to the shipping of the nation and that of other nations whose ships touch our shores, were passed. The board of managers of the convention was instructed to take steps to secure official representation of the churches of the state at Stockholm next July.

State Leaders at Auburn

A workers' conference of unusual value and significance was held in First Church, Auburn, Tuesday, Nov. 21. General Director H. Clarke Colebrook, director of religious education; Rev. C. W. Briggs, director of town and country church work; Rev. F. W. Tomlinson, director of children's work; Mrs. F. W. Tomlinson and Stewardship Secretary Starr met with pastors and church departmental leaders of the churches of the Cayuga Association and in three sessions, filled with practical considerations of all phases of church activities, enjoyed a fellowship that will mean much in the way of better understanding of the Baptist activities of the entire state, and in greater co-operation in the work of the churches of the association. A pleasing feature of the day was a fellowship supper, presided over by Mr. David D. Donaldson, Associational Young People's president, at which three gripping talks were given on young people's work, under the general caption of "Playing the Game." Rev. C. W. Briggs responded to the toast "Prepare!" Rev. H. N. Geistweit to that of "Play Fair," and Rev. Frank Anderson, superintendent of the Tri-County S. S. Association, to the slogan, "Get There!" Many of the local church workers met these state leaders for the first time, and all returned to their homes with a more definite conception of the program of state activities as well. The conference was arranged for by the missionary and stewardship committee, of which Rev. Chas. D. Reed is chairman. Mr. Reed is also recording secretary of the state convention.

NEW JERSEY

FIRST CHURCH, CAMDEN, has had a long and notable history; not only has it sent out the material to found and foster other churches, but it has also sent out into the work of the kingdom men and women who have taken a conspicuous place. It has also been noted for long pastorates, the late Dr. Lyell serving for thirty-two years. Owing to changing conditions in the city it was thought by many that the days of the First Church in the present location were numbered, but there were those who had faith in the work and in the future of the church. Sept. 1 of the present year, Rev. Elwood A. Harrar, for twelve years pastor of the Homewood Church, Pittsburgh, took up the work in Camden; in the weeks that have passed, the faith of the few has been greatly strengthened. New scholars have been added to the Bible School every Sunday for the past two months. The mid-week service has averaged over 100 for the past six weeks. The Sunday evening congregations have quadrupled. A spirit of optimism and consecration is every where manifest.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

Pittsburgh Association

The cornerstone of the Rankin Christian Center was laid Sunday, Nov. 26. This Christian center is a great denominational enterprise in which Pittsburgh Baptists are greatly interested. More will probably be heard about this work later.

Rev. G. W. Scarberry, of Riverview, has been called to the church at Midway.

The church at Vandergrift, J. R. Campbell, pastor, has voted to build a new brick parsonage on the church lot connecting it with the church building.

Rev. A. MacAllister of First Church, Apollo, has resigned in order to accept the call of the North Church of Jersey City, where he began service Dec. 1.

Rev. L. B. Ford of the Woodlawn Church observed his fourth anniversary Nov. 26. During the morning service the membership was divided. The older members of the church being seated on one side and those who had become members during the past four years on the other. It was found that the older members present numbered but one more than the new members.

Mississippi Valley

OHIO

FOR A LONG TIME DR. BUSTARD, pastor of the Euclid Avenue Church, Cleveland, has felt that the time was ripe for building in Cleveland one of the greatest Sunday schools in the country. He arranged with Rev. Louis Entzminger, Sunday school organizer, to spend a month in reorganizing the Sunday school. Mr. Entzminger has finished this campaign, and the Sunday school, which had an attendance of 685 the Sunday before its reorganization, was increased in one week to 1025, and the following Sunday the attendance reached about 1100 which was 100 per cent increase over the average attendance of the year before. What is perhaps one of the largest teaching and official force of any Sunday school in the land was dedicated to this new task when 175 young men and women were set aside for this special work. During this campaign the Sunday school was completely reorganized; old classes divided; many new classes started, and the whole church set to work to build up an attendance of at least 3,000 in the not far distant future. The men's class, which did not exist two weeks ago, has already reached an attendance of nearly 100. It has been necessary to secure the Spencerian Business College building across the street, where fourteen rooms are being used for the accommodation of many of these new classes. The prayer-meeting attendance has increased from 300 to 400; the Sunday-school offerings have risen from $1 to $130 a Sunday, and the attendance at the morning preaching service, which has always filled the church, is now so large that 150 people are compelled to stand. The first half of the campaign was given to organization; and the last to evangelization, in which Mr. Entzminger was assisted by Mr. Charles Butler, gospel singer and his pianist, Mr. Julian H. Loway. There have already been many additions to the membership as the result of this campaign. Mr. W. J. Bloomer, Atlanta, Ga., has been secured as director of religious work, and will lead the church in the building up of the great Sunday school along the line of the Entzminger system.

MICHIGAN

THE PROMOTION COMMITTEE OF the Michigan Convention at their meeting Nov. 20 heartily accepted the united invitation of College Church, First Church and Hillsdale College, to hold the eighty-eighth annual meeting of the convention in Hillsdale next May.

JANUARY IS THE MONTH set aside for the Director Grant M. Hudson for the holding of six great rallies and missionary conferences in central cities where large groups of surrounding churches can avail themselves of the opportunity of attending. The speakers will be Dr. P. H. Lerrigo, Miss Mae Huston and Dr. W. L. Bowler, of the New York headquarters; Dr. J. J. Ross, pastor of Second Church, Chicago; Directors Hudson, Lawrence and Williams of the Michigan Convention; Mrs. Edward Wilson, president of the Women's Mission Society of Michigan. It is planned to touch each association in Lower Michigan in this way, with messages setting forth every phase of denominational work. Pray that God shall give a great spiritual passion to these days.

DR. J. M. BAKER, of ONGOLE MISSION, has just closed an itinerary covering twelve churches, in Lansing, Saginaw, Bay City, Jackson, Ann Arbor, Ypsilanti and Mason. Dr. Baker was greeted with large audiences, and brought to the churches new spirit and vision of a great mission work in India, with all its possibilities and opportunities.

THE PASTOR OF KINGSLEY CHURCH, IN Albert E. Cook, was ordained to the Baptist ministry, Oct. 18. Rev. Geo. Lawrence, of Lansing, was moderator of the council, and Rev. Geo. Woolcock, of Traverse City, clerk. By unanimous vote the council decided to proceed with the public ordination service.

FIRST CHURCH, ADRIAN, Thomas J. Perkins, minister, Sunday, Nov. 19, was opening day. The occasion was the completion of the repairing and redecoration of the church. Just before that a new roof had been put on the building and st of $1500. The cost of the painting and redecorating was $2,835 and more will be done immediately in way of repairs, which will make a total of $3,000. In addition to this, a new indirect lighting system has been purchased and installed at a cost of $1,500. Subscriptions for this work were taken a year ago last October, when in one day there was subscribed a total of $8,366 and with what was already on hand for the work, made a grand total $9,090. The subscriptions covered a period of three years, six installments, the first installment being required due on the day pledges were received. Half the time of the period expired this past October and more than half the money has come in without disturbing the large regular budget for home expenses and missions under which the church is operating. The church now possesses one of the most beautiful buildings in Michigan. On opening day the pastor preached at 10 o'clock on "The meaning of God's New House." At night he spoke on "The Value of the Church to the Community." The trustees had placed the platform and the large choir rendered special music. The church now plans a religious education program which will cover a period of ten or twelve weeks. Each evening's work will start with supper at 6:30 and the various classes will follow, then a general assembly with the pastor presiding.

PASTOR RALPH A. BROWN with Evangelist J. J. Pease of the state department has completed a series of meetings at Manton. Pastor Brown says, "We appreciate the effort that has been put forth by the state convention to help us, and indeed we are thankful to God for the way in which the work has been provided for. Our meetings were well attended and twelve accepted Christ."

REV. F. L. CURREY of the state evangelistic department assisted Rev. W. E. Eaton in meetings in Ewart. There were twenty conversions, seventeen having been baptized. Great crowds attended the meetings and the spirit was splendid throughout.

ABOUT THE MIDDLE OF NOVEMBER First Church, Bay City, celebrated the beginning of the eighth year of the pastorate of Rev. Frederick Allen. First Church is one of the oldest and strongest of Michigan's churches. Bay City has a population of 55,000. Church work has always been recognized as most difficult for all denominations, the city being often referred to as the graveyard of Protestant churches. Mr. Allen has remained with the church seven years, two years longer than any previous pastorate of the church. He came to Bay City from Babylon, N. Y., having formerly served the Wisdom Church, Philadelphia, to which he was called upon his graduation from Oberlin Seminary. Accessions to the membership have been large and all the needs of the church have been well met. The pastor has been active in all undertakings, being actively connected with every national and community organization and also taking a deep interest in the local board of commerce and exchange club. He served in the general denominational work on the board of managers of the state convention, as a president of the convention and in other positions. Evangelistic services under the direction of Littrell and Moody are being conducted. The spirit of the relationship between pastor and church is indicated in a note in the church calendar the Sunday which marked the beginning of the eighth year: "Today marks the eighth year of the pastor's ministry among us. How quickly the time has passed. It hardly seems possible that we have been working together so long. The reason is that we have been 'working together.'" No pastor in any church has enjoyed more full and hearty cooperation from his church over so long a period. A glance over these years causes the church to say with the psalmist, 'Thou crownest our years with goodness, our paths drop fatness.' With joy it faces another year's work together everybody lifting, none leaning."

Kalamazoo College

At a special meeting of the board of trustees of Kalamazoo College held on a recent date, they voted to enter into an endowment campaign for $600,000. $200,000 of this amount is already pledged by the general board of education contingent upon the raising of $400,000 by the college authorities. The supervision of the campaign will be directly managed by Dr. Frank B. Bachelor, manager of the extension department.

Other action taken by the trustees included the resolution to carry on the proposed building project as planned in the original campaign on the present campus of the college without any additional land being acquired for new buildings.

Dr. Frank B. Bachelor who is the present manager of the extension department was named by the trustees as business manager of the college. This position, which is a new office for the college, carries new responsibilities for Dr. Bachelor who will now have direct supervision of financial matters pertaining to the operating budget of the institution as well as the business side of the extension work which he has managed for the last two years.

Dr. Clark Benedict Williams, dean of the college and Olney professor of mathematics, was granted leave of absence for the college year of 1923-1924. It will be the first vacation in twenty years for Dean Williams, who has had but one long leave of absence in the nearly twenty-nine years he has served on the faculty.

Since 1894 Dean Williams has watched the college develop from a struggling little institution to the first rank of the colleges of the state. Only once in these long years has he been relieved from the duties of his position, when about 1903 he spent two years traveling in Europe. Since 1912, when President Emeritus Herbert L. Stetson assumed the president's chair, Dr. Williams has been dean of the college, a position held faithfully through the years during which he has gained the unflinching esteem and devotion of the hundreds of students who have passed out through the doors of Kalamazoo College. The trustees elected Hermon H. Severn, professor of Biblical literature, to serve as acting dean during Dean Williams' absence from the college.

WISCONSIN

FIRST CHURCH, EAU CLAIRE, is beginning its sixth year with Rev. E. R. MacKinney as pastor. The harmonizing work was an important factor in the first of these years. Now the church is moving forward in an all-round, aggressive work, intensive and extensive. The Sunday school had the largest average attendance of any school, except the Lutheran, in this city of 20,000 people. The cradle roll numbers 100. Prayer meeting and young people's meetings are vibrant with newness of life. "Not a dull moment from start to finish" is the expression used descriptive of these gatherings. One hundred and sixty-three have been added to the membership during this pastorate, making it now 438. This church has well-nigh forgotten the meaning of the word "deficit." The church is cooperating in the New World Movement with about a 400 per cent increase in offerings. Among former pastors are Rev. W. A. McKillop, whose pastorate was the longest in the history of the church; Edward Babcock, of Lowell, Mass.; and George R. Stair, of Chicago. The recent father and sons banquet was the largest yet held. At the close the men presented $100 to the pastor, as a token of appreciation on this anniversary occasion. W. C. Osborn, pastor of Bangor, gave his Baloitean lecture on "The Birds of Wisconsin," showing eighty pictures to an audience of men, women and children. Plans are already made for a mothers' and daughters' banquet to be held soon. About seven young people are looking missionward for a big life, and others are in the business of personal evangelism.

MINNESOTA

TWIFORD E. HUGHES, a pioneer Baptist of Minnesota, was the guest of honor at a dinner tendered him by personal friends on Monday evening, Nov. 20, at the Central Y. M. C. A., Minneapolis, the occasion being his eightieth birthday. About forty men were present, chiefly yokefellows and former associates of Deacon Hughes, in his more than fifty years of service in connection with the postoffice and the church. Rev. John H. McLean, pastor of Calvary Church, was toastmaster and speeches were made by Rev. Donald D. MacLauren, formerly a pastor of Immanuel Church, Minneapolis; Dr. John Earl of St. Paul, and Dr. L. M. S. Haynes, the latter presenting a set of preambles and resolutions expressive of the kindly sentiments and high regard in which the guest was held by those present; also their congratulations

THE FREE MISSION CHURCH OF ISANTI has been reorganized as a regular Baptist church with the name Elim Baptist Church of Isanti. Rev. F. L. Russell is pastor. The church will put on a campaign for THE BAPTIST and Missions.

A COUNCIL OF THIRTY-TWO messengers representing seven churches in the Twin Cities met on Wednesday evening, Nov. 15, in Immanuel Chapel to consider the matter of the organization of the Minnehaha Baptist Church. Rev. J. A. Swanson was elected moderator and Prof. E. A. Finstrom clerk of the council. The address to the church was delivered by Rev. J. H. McLean of Calvary Church, Minneapolis. Rev. E. E. Hall, pastor of the mother church, gave the charge to the pastor of the new church, Rev. Russell Palmquist. The charter members of the church are such as were engaged in the work of the Immanuel Mission which is continued in the new organization. The new church is located in a desirable and rapidly growing residence district not far from Minnehaha Falls.

ILLINOIS

IN THE NOTICE OF THE NOV. 14 meeting of the Woman's Baptist Mission Union of Chicago, held at the North Shore Church, which was the annual training school meeting, an omission occurred. The inspirational address of the day was given by Mrs. Clara D. Pinkham, president of the Baptist Missionary Training School. This message emphasized anew the splendid influence under which our young girls study in that institution.

ETHEL BARNHART COLBY, wife of Rev. Charles Colby, pastor of Taylorville Church, died unexpectedly Nov. 15. She was born in Waupaca, Wis., 1880, the daughter of Dealon and Effie Barnhart. Here she graduated from high school, joined the Baptist church, and in 1901 was married to Charles Colby, a student in Colgate University, where she went with him until his graduation. She afterwards shared with him the responsibilities of several pastorates in Wisconsin, Iowa and Illinois. She was a woman of fine culture and sterling Christian character. She leaves three children: Merle, a junior in Harvard University; Harold, a senior in Taylorville high school and Lois, twelve years old.

INDIANA

FIRST CHURCH LaPORTE, W. F. Bostick, pastor, has taken a leading part in attacking a house of ill repute near the city. On repeated evenings records were kept of the number of autos that visited the place, sometimes as many as twenty-five cars in an hour. License numbers of cars were taken. The facts were finally brought to the attention of the authorities and a threat was made to have the matter exposed in the local press. Order was finally given to have the place closed and it has been closed. In controversy with the prosecuting attorney Mr. Bostick was told that ten to twenty of his leading men in his church were opposed to the pastor's stand on civic reform. On a recent Sunday morning the matter was put to a secret vote in the church. One hundred and three voted that it was right for the church to take action in local civic reform, four said it was wrong. At the same time 110 voted to request the local administration to remove the blinds from the front of the soft drink parlors in the city and to vote against it.

KANSAS

REV. SAMUEL ZANE BATTEN, has been a recent visitor in eastern Kansas. He has filled a number of speaking engagements, chiefly in connection with Baptist brotherhood movement in and about Kansas City.

IOWA

Des Moines University

Des Moines University opened September 19, with a faculty of forty-five, a student enrolment of 775, not counting summer school of nearly 500, and a fine spirit of cooperation prevailing on campus and in class rooms. All who are interested in Christian education will be gratified to know that a very vital prominence has been given to the Bible. There are 19 students enrolled in six classes who are receiving university credit for work done in accordance with the scholastic requirements of the faculty. The courses this quarter include origin of the Bible, life of Jesus, life of Paul, psychology of religious experiences, Sunday-school teacher training and Christianity in world reconstruction. The spirit of study is reverent, uncontroversial, constructive, under the historical method. The aim is to conserve faith yet make it intelligent and spiritual.

In fifty-nine days of school we have had eighty distinctly Christian, devotional and spiritual meetings—all of them presenting the Christ ideals of life, summoning to definite service in his name and issuing definite appeals for ethical character building. The University Baptist Church holds Sunday school morning worship and evening B. Y. P. U. each Sunday. The university offers Tuesday chapel and Sunday vespers every week. There is an all university prayer meeting each Thursday. Our Y. M. and Y. W. student volunteer and life service leagues societies each has its own weekly service.

The university is now in correspondence with men of national and international vision and reputation, men of horizontal Christian statesmanship and majestic faith. They see world needs, believe in Jesus, his church and Christianity as the only resources adequate for radical redemption, and issue a challenge of God to men for their personal allegiance to the cause of Christ. So soon as this can be arranged, the university will have such a man spend a week of inspiration upon our campus.

NEBRASKA

THE OBERT CHURCH is thoroughly organized for community service. It has a membership of sixty-five, thirty of whom have united with the church since May. It publishes its own church calendar called the "Booster." It has a full editorial staff and its work is done on mimeograph. A traveling library has been secured through the Nebraska Library Commission. Large crowds of people each Saturday night are entertained at the church at a motion picture entertainment. The films are chosen with a view to religious education and wholesome entertainment. Each week an educational reel of special interest to the farming community is shown. This church, however, makes use of tent meetings on evangelism. It makes use of tent open air meetings during the summer. Twenty persons have been baptized since last May. This relatively small church sets an example which might put to shame many stronger churches.

Grand Island College

The week of prayer Nov. 12-19 was served under the direction of the college, M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. The ministers of the city spoke at the chapel exercises and led most of the evening meetings. On Wednesday night one of the churches united with the college and a ereopticon address on "The Missionary work among the Hopi Indians" was given by President Wells.

Miss Elizabeth McClenahan, one of the ntional secretaries of the Y. W. C. A. went Nov. 6-9 at the college. She spoke the girls at their association meeting ov. 7, and at the student prayer meet- g, Nov. 8. She also held conferences ith the cabinet girls and the various mmittees.

Among the recent visitors at the col- lege were Dr. Sutherland of Los Angeles, id Dr. F. W. Padelford of Boston. Dr. utherland described the research work- ing done for the benefit of the public hool children throughout the country, id Dr. Padelford spoke on "Who Should o to College?"

President J. M. Wells gave the closing dness at the Christian Unity Conven- on which was held for the Protestant nisters of Nebraska at the First Con- gregational Church in Lincoln, Nov. 20- . The subject of his address was, "The urch, an Agent of God in the Realiza- on of the Hopes of Humanity."

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

DR. AND MRS. A. T. ROBINSON, tithing ngelists, have spent the past year ong the churches of Northern California, giving them the benefit of their mes- sage which the churches have greatly en- joyed. From Northern California they went to Los Angeles, thence to Texas where they began work on Nov. 19 with the First Church of Bryan.

Women of San Francisco Bay Association Meet

The Baptist women pantingly climbed the Potrero hilly streets, San Francisco, to their regular quarterly missionary meeting, held Nov. 16 at the Russian Com- munity Center. Miss Anna Dietz, the Baptist worker there, opened the door. This is a joint work among the Rus- sians and other foreigners, by the Pres- byterians and Baptists, the Presbyterian Syndical Society having put up the build- ing.

The president of the Quarterly, Mrs. Clark of Berkeley First Church, presided. Among the speakers of the day were Mrs. C. E. Fingley, manager of the continua- tion campaign of North California; Mrs. G. J. Oehrli, director for San Francisco Bay Association women; Mrs. M. L. Thomas, state director, North California; Mr. Tanghe, superintendent of the Rus- sian Community House; Mrs. Carrie Rob- inson, who described the work of the "Door of Hope" at Shanghai, visited by her; and Dr. Charles Shepherd, who brought some little Chinese boys as the nucleus of the new Chinese Boys' Home soon to be started by the Baptist Home Mission Society and the Baptist Union of San Francisco Bay. The building is on East 24th St. and 19th Avenue, East Oakland, California, and will be the only Chinese Boys' Home in the United States.

There is great need of such a Home for orphan and half orphan Chinese boys. The sale of Chinese boys still exists.

The boys' home will be self supporting from the first. The running expenses are underwritten, and the state helps orphans. The home will probably open the first of 1923. There will be various gifts that churches can give—pictures, books, cur- tains, footballs, bats, and so on.

The banner for largest percentage of attendance was awarded to the Burlingame Church, which had 50 per cent of circle present. There were sixty-nine representatives of churches reported by enrolment committee, and there were ten visitors. Among those present was Rev. A. H. Nikolaus, pastor of the Russian Baptist Church, not far from this joint Community House, the needs of which will be cared for by a joint committee of Baptist and Presbyterian ladies.

The Quarterly adjourned to meet next February with the Twenty-third Avenue Church, East Oakland, Dr. John Newton Garst, pastor.

San Francisco

For the first time in six years or more every San Francisco Baptist pulpit is filled. The latest arrival is Rev. James S. West who fills the long-vacant First Church pastorate. Rev. Ralph T. Wegener came to the First German Church Sept. 1. On the same date Rev. Albert E. Patch came to the Burlingame suburb and Rev. Louis J. Sawyer to Hamilton Square. Rev.

Sandford Fleming of Australia is the new pastor of Twenty-first Avenue Church. New courage came when the San Fran- cisco Baptist clergy met in fellowship as luncheon guests of Pastor Sawyer and discussed the outlook.

They are grateful to America for its aid in their distress. 110,000 orphans are being cared for and trained for future citizenship in the homes of the Near East Relief.

We must help save them until they can be rehabilitated by economic reconstruction.

The Baptist Near East Relief Advisory Committee requests that all Baptist Churches and Sunday Schools set apart Sunday, Jan. 21, 1923, (which is the Armenian Christmas) as Near East Relief Day, present this worthy cause, and raise funds for it. This date is for churches that are not cooperating with other denominations in a Community Campaign.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

THE ANNUAL MEETING of First Church, Redlands, Rev. S. Fraser Langford, pastor, occurred Thursday evening, Nov. 9.
288 members of the church sat down to the delightful supper prepared by the ladies and served by the W. W. G. girls.
The roll call was a delightful feature of the service, when 286 people responded to their names. The deacons reported 185 accessions to the church membership during the year, 112 by letter, forty-nine by baptism, twelve by experience, eleven by affiliation and one by restoration. The trustees reported a total of $26,211.89 raised during the year, of which $16,719.05 went to missions and benevolen-ces; $9,492.84 went to local expenses. Almost twice as much for world wide work as was spent on the local field. New cabinets have been installed in the kitchen with water tank and gas heater; gas furnace installed in the basement and property put in good repair. Present valuation of property $72,000. The organization is thirty-five years old. The Sunday school reported a total enrolment of 805, the largest attendance being 662, and the smallest 206. The church voted to raise the pastor's salary. The present school of missions is the largest in the six years' history of this phase of work. The average attendance of the school now in session being 350 against 335 last year.
On a recent Sunday the church subscribed $1200 to the Near East Relief. The women collected garments and supplies

It may be intolerable, but it certainly is not unexplainable. Our good friend Palmer has sent us a copy of the resolution of belief which we are only too glad to print.—Editor]

Resolutions on Belief

Whereas, it seems to us timely and desirable and productive of unity and co-operation, to declare the following statement of our conviction concerning basic and revealed truth.

Therefore, be it resolved, that the Colorado Baptist State Convention reaffirm its deepest conviction that in the Holy Scriptures, and especially the New Testament, we have our sufficient and only rule of faith and practice.

And that we believe the Scriptures the inspired Word of God, plainly teach:

(a) The essential deity of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, his miraculous birth, sinless life, vicarious suffering unto death for man's redemption, his bodily resurrection and ascension, his unceasing intercession in behalf of the redeemed at God's right hand, and his return to the world according to promise.

(b) That salvation is of God's free grace, through faith in Jesus Christ as our personal Savior.

(c) That a church is a divine institution composed of regenerated people, immersed on profession of their faith in Jesus Christ, and that to the churches are committed the ordinance of baptism and the Lord's supper, both of which are declarative and symbolic in their message and not procurative of salvation.

And that to the churches is also committed and entrusted, the proclamation of the Gospel and the extension of the kingdom as set forth in the great commission, which stands in the authority and wisdom of God for all people and for all time, and everywhere, and which constitutes our marching orders in the kingdom and our authority, motive and dynamic for evangelism, missions, education, benevolence and social service.

Your committee to whom this matter was referred at the morning session, recommends the adoption of the foregoing resolution.

Signed, Fred W. Freeman, chairman;

Jesus the Friend of Sinners

By FRANK C. RIDEOUT, Chaplain, United States Army

OVER the altar of the Catholic chapel of the Leavenworth Federal Penitentiary is a remarkable picture. It would almost seem as though one of the great Italian masters had some time paid a visit to the institution and left his work of art behind.

The picture is a portrayal of the Master Man as the central figure of three men seated at a table which has been prepared for the evening meal. The faces of the other two figures reveal the fact that they are prisoners. The sunlight is streaming in through a window of the prison cell. The Saviour is breaking bread, while a look of wonder, contrition and bewilderment seems to steal over the sad faces of the two convicts. Will he who is sinless and holy sup with outcasts? Will the Saviour condescend to share his meal with those who have transgressed against the moral law? They scarcely dare to glance upward—for they are overwhelmed with a sense of their own unworthiness, and the consciousness of their guilt and shame. But the face of Jesus is radiant with compassion. A single glance into his gracious countenance is enough to convince even the greatest sinner and skeptic that there is mercy, forgiveness and compassion in his great loving heart. On the border of the picture are inscribed the words, "This man receiveth sinners and eateth with them."

The painter of this hidden work of art was himself a convict, and it is he whose face is depicted at the left of the picture—the more dejected of the two. The other figure, to the right of our Lord, was a fellow prisoner of the artist. As an example of misdirected efforts and prostituted ability this artist stands out as one of the most tragic figures that one can scarcely conceive. He might have become a great artist to bless and cheer mankind, had his abilities been directed into productive channels; but, he became a counterfeiter, using his skill in an effort to cheat and rob the government, and ending his days behind grey stone walls—the victim of disease, avarice and his own misdeeds. Nevertheless, the message conveyed to us from the picture is one that is true, even beyond our human power to grasp. Jesus is indeed the friend of outcasts, "He receiveth sinners and eateth with them."

Honest Debtors, by Orrin Philip Gifford.
D. D. Philadelphia: Judson Press.

This volume is largely given to the discussion of phases of Christian stewardship. A thoughtful reading of these messages will repay any one because in them will be found truth combined with the dynamic of a preacher's soul.

Preaching The Social Gospel, by Ozora S.
Davis. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co.

Here is a book that will help you to think through a most important question concerning the gospel message and ministry. The spirit of the writer seems to be revealed in this one sentence taken from the pages of this volume: "It is a marvelous thing, this good news of a life in union with God which is achieved through a relationship of love and service with Jesus Christ."

Spellbinders, by Margaret Cullin Banning.
New York: Doran Co. $2.

A novel of American life in which woman enters political life, which sphere becomes a rival to the home. The interest aroused as to the outcome of this situation in the lives of Helen and Gage Flandon is only tepid. The love affair of Freda and Gregory is ideal and their attitude toward life exceedingly youthful. There is nothing gripping about the story; the characters are types rather than individuals. As to conclusions on the subject in hand, the author arrives at none.

The Problem of China, by Bertrand Russell. some time professor of philosophy in the Government University of Peking. New York: Century Co. Pp. 276. $2.

This is a story book and fairly up to date. You cannot lay it down without finishing it. The author of it has had opportunity to study his theme from close contact, and he speaks his independent judgment with boldness and clearness.
That judgment is strongly in the interest of the Chinese whom he has learned more and more to respect. It is witnessed in such sentences as this: "I think they are the only people in the world who quite genuinely believe that wisdom is better than rubies. That is why the West regards them as uncivilized." (Pp. 238) He writes all the way through, however, as an Englishman and is quite critical of our American ways of doing and our share in commercial exploitation and education. Let them work out their own problem, he says. They are quite able to do it, he thinks. They can, in fact, teach us a thing or two and in many quiet ways they are doing it.

"When I went to China I went to teach; but every day that I stayed I thought less of what I had to teach them and more of what I had to learn from them." P. 209. He thinks they may learn some degree of practical efficiency from us, but we shall find ourselves indebted to them in lessons of patience and calm gentleness and contemplative wisdom, which are homely virtues but much worth while. Dr. Russell gives us some marvelous facts regarding the natural resources of the country and its prospects for the future, but more significant still are the evidences of intellectual grasp and of shrewd insight that will enable them presently to readily make headway for themselves and establish a unique civilization well worthy of the name. But the Chinese are still the puzzle of students of nations, and he is doubtless wise in saying in his closing sentence that "the future is still problematical."

Some Timely Books

Smyrna and the Near East fill our thoughts these days, and the paper every day tell of important events in the section. Christian people should think of these events in relation to the kingdom of God. To do this, information is needed, especially the missionary background.
Two books will be especially helpful
"The Near East—Crossroads of the World" and "Shepard of Aintab." The General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York, has a limited number of copies of these, slightly shopworn which can be had while they last at a greatly reduced prices—"The Near East," paper, 25 cents; "Shepard of Aintab," paper, 25 cents, cloth 40 cents.

Classes studying India should not fail to include Burma in their reading
"Among the Burmans" is still the best general book written by our missionary, H. P. Cochrane. A special edition of the book is available in cloth at 50 cent from the literature bureaus of the General Board of Promotion.

"The Gospel and the Plow" by Higginbotham telling of agricultural mission:
so significant to India, is another book all India classes should have. A special edition in paper can be had while the last, for 60 cents from the literature bureaus of the General Board of Promotion.

Other valuable books on India are "Star in the East," the story of Baptist missions in the Karens of Burma by our missionary E. N. Harris, cloth $1.75, an "India, Beloved of Heaven," a collection of India stories by Thoburn, cloth $1.50.

The visit of President Taylor and D.
Jones to Czecho-Slovakia last summer has turned attention to the Czechs. Some do not realize that there are plenty of the nation right here in our own country.
"The Czechs in America" will tell a about them. A few copies as good as new can be had from the General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York at $1.75 (regular price $3.50).

"It Is to Laugh"

From the Williamson Item (N. D.)
comes this: We wish to apologize to Mr.
Orlando Overlook. In our paper last week we had as a heading, "Mrs. Overlook's B.
Feet." The word we had ought to have used is a French word pronounced the same way but spelled fete. It means celebration and is considered a very old word.

A member of the Chicago bar tells the following story of the coolest man he ever knew. This man was awakened one night by burglars. He got up and went down stairs, and as he entered the dining-room where the thieves were engaged in wrapping up the silver plate they covered him with their revolvers.
This, however, did not disconcert the householder at all. "Pardon me for disturb you, gentlemen," he said, "but I should like you to do me a favor. It is not too much to ask, will you be good as to post this letter for me? I must go tonight. It's the premium for my burglar insurance."—Harper's.

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY WILLIAM LESTER

CONCEPTION THE BASIS OF INTERPRETATION

By GEORGE HENRY HOWARD

When I sit at the organ improvising a prelude or postlude for the Sunday service, I am occasionally approached by some one who wishes to ask a question or perhaps a number of them, or by one who has some information to offer or instructions to give concerning the service. He or she wonders what it means if I cannot respond, and sometimes the question or the information is repeated as if it were a discourtesy on my part not to reply. Not one person in twenty seems to realize that my whole mind and heart and soul are engaged. Still less do they realize that to interrupt an organist in the midst of such an exercise is worse than to interrupt an orator during his discourse. He has only one current of thought to carry on at a time, while the skillful organist in improvising may have, and probably will have, six or seven, or eight or nine.

The orator might more reasonably attempt to answer questions in the breathing-places between his sentences. Imagine him before a large audience hanging breathless on his word, perhaps surrounded on the stage by numerous guests of honor, male and female, and among them and at his elbow, his wife. He is expatiating on the grandeur of patriotism. He says, "There are supreme moments in the history of a nation, when whole masses of people actuated by one grand impulse"—"Did you forget to order that butter?"—"No, no, I ordered it"—"rise to the dignity of one common and overpowering moral conviction and"—"Did you tell Bridget to be sure and"—"sweep away every opposing force and to achieve grand victories for truth and right."

Such an incident as that is no more absurd than some of the experiences through which I have passed on Sunday mornings. Such an occurrence might be possible either to the orator or the organist without absolutely fatal result. But in the case of the organist we may be very sure that the interruption of the necessary intellectual effort would destroy his conceptions and reduce his improvisation to the level of a mere finger-wandering over the manuals, and the weakest platitudes in his expression.

The grand truth that musical life, is, ideally, complete living—that is, life of intellect, sensibility, will, heart, soul and spirit—is too often forgotten, not only by individuals but as well by institutions. Scholastic institutions such as academies, high schools and colleges exalt intellect and reason at the expense of sensibility and will, while musical institutions often exalt sensibility and will above intellect and reason. Who can reasonably and safely affirm which is the greater error?

The development of reason, reflection, observation and understanding must form a far larger portion of the work of music students than at present before the foundations of a fine art-life in music can be well laid. You will observe that these are all intellectual elements, of a musical life, and these are factors which are so often omitted. Progress is shown in some recently devised systems. It also is shown in the rapid strides of musical journalism in this country and especially in a more reasonable tone.

The study of conception or the process of generating and conceiving music-ideas in the mind ought to have a far larger place in our music study. The study of interpretation will not take the place of the study of conception. Interpretation as usually studied is conducted with reference to some effect upon an audience, and, in consequence, the questions which concern one's study or practice draw one's thought away from the essence of the music itself to outward circumstances and surroundings. It also tends to develop unduly the self-consciousness of the student.

The study of conception, on the other hand, concerns itself with the inner realities of musical art, it strives to make musical ideas real, living, full of character, full of impelling, energizing power.

It is true that some few students are habitually introspective and more especially and in a larger measure than others need the studies and various kinds of practice which turn the thoughts outward toward a listener or a body of listeners like a public audience; and while it is true also that most or perhaps all students need training in both directions, yet the great majority need a far larger proportion than they usually have of those kinds of study which so enlarge, deepen and strengthen the musical conception that the performer gives expression to musical ideas as the over-mastering convictions of a deep experience, a lofty spirit and a full heart.

I may show the difference between the studies of interpretation and conception still more plainly perhaps by a few words of explanation. I do not intend to draw lines of distinction too sharply as though the two could always be kept apart.

In the study of interpretation the student asks, What did the composer intend at this point in this composition? How can I grasp the meaning fully? How can I present it?

But in the study of conception he asks himself much more searching questions. "How is it possible that I do not make this passage plainer, more vivid, more real to myself? What have I neglected? Here I have worked for months on this composition and yet fail to grasp its innermost sense. What lack I yet?" Do you see the significance of these questions? They are not the questions of one engaged in a study so much as the strivings of a soul after its necessary food, the hidden prizes of eternal truth which though within reach of all, are attained only by those who struggle for them.—The Musician.

“THE BAPTIST”—“MISSIONS”

And DECEMBER

CHRISTMAS comes but once a year—These journals will come each week and each month during 1923.

CHRISTMAS recalls Bethlehem and the Child Jesus—These journals will in an even more direct way remind you of the living Christ whose work in the world you represent.

December Designated for a Joint Campaign for “THE BAPTIST” and “MISSIONS” Objectives

- I. A subscriber to every ten members. Every church which reaches this standard does its part toward a final goal of 100,000.
- II. Every pastor, deacon, church and Sunday-school officer and teacher a subscriber to both journals. Pastor, if you find a stone wall of indifference to your plans try the “light cure.”
- III. A contribution from every church and many individuals in order to place both journals in the public libraries, reading rooms, Y. M. and Y. W. C. A.’s and to send copies to shut-ins everywhere. Good business enterprise will avail itself of the service of these journals in showing the community that the local church is in big business.

Can you use sample copies of “THE BAPTIST”?

If so, write us.

Combination rate for this campaign $3.00 per year.

Send both subscriptions to one office.

EMANCIPATION

"We know that if the earthly house of our tabernacle be dissolved, we have a building from God, a house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens." II Cor. 5:1.

WHY be afraid of death as though your life were breath?
Death but anoints your eyes with clay. O glad surprise!

Why should you be forlorn? Death only husks the corn.
Why should you fear to meet the thresher of the wheat?

Is sleep a thing to dread? Yet sleeping you are dead
Till you awake and rise, here, or beyond the skies.

Why should it be a wrench to leave your wooden bench?
Why not, with happy shout, run home when school is out?

The dear ones left behind! O, foolish one and blind;
A day—and you will meet: a night—and you will greet!

This is the death of Death, to breathe away a breath
And know the end of strife and taste the deathless life,

And joy without a fear, and smile without a tear,
And work, nor care to rest, and find the last the best.

Fresh from the Field

Dr. George W. Hill, of Oakland, Cal., has accepted the call of the church at Covelo, the same state.

Rev. A. C. Hodson, who was pastor for almost five years at the Marquette Road Church, Chicago, is now settled as the pastor of the church at Riverton, Wyo.

Charles H. Day, pastor of the church at Boothbay, Me., was ordained Nov. 15. Rev. S. A. Evans, of the Maine Convention, was moderator and F. W. Hovey was clerk.

Rev. M. F. Bagby, pastor of the Colorado Church, Dayton, Ohio, has resigned. The church passed resolutions expressing its appreciation of his faithful service as pastor.

Dr. G. W. Cassidy has resigned as director of promotion in Iowa in order to accept the call of the church at Hutchinson, Kan. He has served for a little more than a year and a half and has made for himself a warm place in the hearts of Iowa Baptists.

Rev. J. N. Field, founder and first president of the University of Redlands, has partially recovered from the results of the terrible accident last May when the automobile in which he was riding was struck by a train. Deacon Golthwaite was killed and Mr. Field was unconscious for days. He is now walking on crutches and with Mrs. Field, expects to go to California for the winter.

A full set of instruments for a band of 100 pieces has been given the University of Chicago by Carl D. Greenleaf, a graduate of the University in the class of 1899. Mr. Greenleaf is the head of C. G. Conn, Ltd., manufacturers of musical instruments at Elkhart, Ind. The equipment was delivered to the University in time for use at the Princeton game, Oct. 28. It includes a gigantic bass drum, seven feet and six inches in diameter, which is said to be the largest drum in the world. No little difficulty was experienced in getting a hide large enough to make the drum heads. The instruments are valued at $10,000.

The building of the National Baptist Memorial to Religious Liberty has so far progressed that it is now ready for the roof. Plans are now under way by which it is hoped that the tower may be finished by the time the Northern Baptist Convention comes to Washington next May. The National Building Committee is considering special memorial windows to great Baptist pioneers in the old world and the new. Those most prominently suggested are: John Bunyan, William Carey, John Clark, and Adoniram Judson. Also it has been suggested that the several states have tablets or other memorials indicative of Baptist history or principles. A number of suggestions along these lines have already been received.

Shanghai Baptist College, during the course of each year has prominent visitors. Last year's list includes: Professor Paul Monroe of Columbia University, recently educational advisor to the Chinese government; Professor Hubbard of Oberlin College; Dr. Edwin M. Poteat, ex-president of Furman University who has been rendering splendid service as chapel preacher and visiting professor of Bible and ethics in the college; John D. Rockefeller, Jr., Dr. W. H. Welch of Johns Hopkins and Dr. Heiser; Dr. Blakeslee, Sunday-school writer and editor and Dr. T. B. Ray, secretary of the foreign mission board of the Southern Baptist Convention.

Rev. Frank Day is acting pastor of the church at Hannibal, N. Y. Because of ill health and partial deafness Mr. Day resigned his pastorate and planned to retire from the active ministry. The church at Hannibal at once laid hold upon him and he has been serving them ever since taking up his residence in that city.

Dr. S. F. Rees of Trinity Church, Minneapolis, writes: "Sufficient time has elapsed since our good friend Professor Hoben of Carleton College left us to become president of Kalamazoo College, Michigan, to emphasize our loss in his departure. Of all his friends in Minnesota, we of Trinity Church miss him the most. For six months following Dr. Crandall's call to Chicago, Dr. Hoben served as our pastor, coming up weekly from Northfield for our Sunday morning service. He soon endeared himself to all. He was in constant demand in the Twin Cities and throughout the state for conferences and lectures on child study and

THE BIBLE IN NEW TONGUES

The American Baptist Publication Society is continually making it possible for the Bible to speak in new tongues, having already published the Scriptures in thirteen foreign languages.

As a great missionary publication society, it publishes Bibles, Testaments and Gospels at prices which the poorest can afford to pay, thereby multiplying many times the power of the missionary.

Thousands of isolated homes which seldom see a minister are visited by an individual known as "the man with the Book," who reads and prays and distributes "the Word of God."

In cooperation with the American Baptist Home Mission Society, colporter missionaries are supported, who carry the Scriptures from door to door. Many of these are men of foreign birth proclaiming the Gospel in the language of those among whom they minister.

The Publication Society is the chief organization among Baptists for distributing the Bible throughout the world. Because of the increased cost of printing Bibles, the income is not sufficient to meet the expenditure. Liberal gifts from friends of the Society are needed.

Bibles

More than a dozen of our readers have notified us that they possess Bibles suitable for the pulpit of some church or mission which can make good use of them. Send us your request and we will forward it to those who generously offer to supply your need.

Next Week

A feature of the paper next week will be an article by Dr. G. A. Hagstrom of St. Paul. Some time ago the Christian Work and Evangelist charged Baptists with being "Interlopers" in Europe. Dr. Hagstrom shows that Baptists are not interlopers but "disciplers" in Europe.

Killiam's Kollum

"Roaring" and Smiling

"Arnold Bennett, according to Allan Nevins in the New York Post, aptly compared the editor to a man shouting unseen down a huge megaphone to an audience which is also so invisible that he would disbelieve in its existence if it were not for the recurrent roars of protest or correction which reach him whenever he says something unpopular or mistaken." Arnold Bennett knew what he was talking about. We know that the readers of THE BAPTIST are living persons not phantoms. Never for a single day are we unmindful of their existence. Fortunately for the editor a word of cheer answers as a reminder just as well as a "roar." We marvel at the good-nature and patience of our readers as shown in hundreds of messages each month. "Roar," brother, when it is absolutely necessary to your peace of mind. In other cases smile. We understand both languages.

Who Will Win?

In the subscription campaign now on for THE BAPTIST and Missions it does not take a prophet to foretell who will be the winners. Many of you have life insurance policies. How did you come to have them? Did some agent make an announcement "I am writing life insurance. Everybody needs insurance. I hope that you will give me your name and I will provide for the medical examination." What foolishness! No more foolish, however, than the church which announces: "This church is writing subscriptions for THE BAPTIST and Missions. Every Baptist family to be most worth-while to themselves and the church should have these journals. We hope that you will hand in your name to the pastor or the committee." Does any one expect that this announcement will bring the desired results? Of course not. The life insurance agent probably made no announcement but on the other hand he "gum-shoed" his way into your home or office and put up a straight business proposition. He probably dwelt upon your duty to your family and the fact that in insurance you could make certain provision for the future needs of both yourself and your loved ones.

The church which wins in this subscription campaign will be the church which from the platform and church calendar makes careful presentation of place and service of denominational journals in the local church life and then sends its brightest, most enthusiastic workers into the homes of its members to talk through the proposition face to face, and to close the deal. The every-family canvass is a winner. The church which wants to win can win by practicing good salesmanship.

child management. He is greatly missed, and it is only because we realize that he is now occupied with a larger task that we are resigned to lose him permanently to Michigan."

Rev. Guy C. Crippen, formerly pastor of the First Church of Flint, Mich., has accepted the hearty call of the Irving Park Church, Chicago, and will begin his work there Dec. 17. The Irving Park church offers an unusual field for service.

Rev. Charles A. Decker has resigned as pastor of the Bellevue Church, Pittsburgh, Pa., in order to accept the call of the First Church, Bridgeport, Conn. He will begin his work about the first of the year.

Geoffrey H. Shakespeare, son of Dr. J. H. Shakespeare and one of Lloyd George's private secretaries, won a victory in the recent election over the former Labor member W. R. Smith.

Gypsy Smith is meeting with unusual success in his evangelistic work, according to the British Weekly. "The man in the street who has despised the church is being sought after and found." Night after night great processions pass through the streets with torches and the overflow meetings are crowded.

Dr. F. C. Spurr, of Birmingham, England, author of the series of articles now appearing in THE BAPTIST, is conducting a weekly training class in public speaking for young men who desire to engage in social and religious work. The class is open to the men of the Hamstead Road Church and the Y. M. C. A. of Birmingham, and is very well attended.

The First Church, Cohoes, N. Y., Rev. L. E. Sirrell, pastor, is now being reconstructed. The improvements will cost about $25,000. Work began December 1. The Reformed Church has invited the Baptist congregation to utilize its building. The church was organized in 1839.

The daily press carried the news of the fire Dec. 4 which destroyed one section of the original Colby College building erected in 1820. Four students were burned to death. Alton L. Andrews and Charles M. Treworgy, seniors; Norman W. Wardwell a sophomore and Warren L. Frye a freshman. To the readers of THE BAPTIST this news will bring real sorrow.

The calendar of the First Church, Lincoln, Neb., for Dec. 3 carries the names and addresses of eighty-three university students. Fifty of these are members of the First Church and thirty-three are affiliated with the First Church in a student membership group. This information makes it possible for the members of the church to keep in helpful contact with these Baptist students.

Sergius Michailov Truvanov called "Ilidor the Mad Monk," former colleague of Rasputin, arrived in New York recently. According to the New York Times the Russian priest said he hoped to become an American citizen and a Baptist minister to work among Russians in this country. He brought with him his wife and their three children. He left Russia in 1916 and came to the United States because Rasputin turned the czar against him. He returned to Russia in 1918. In explaining his interest in the Baptist faith, he said that, finding himself out of harmony with the Russian Orthodox Church, he had come gradually to his new views.

Miss Mary O. Lake, a missionary of the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society in Porto Rico, writes that they are rejoicing to have two of their fine young men at the Polytechnic Institute in San German, preparatory to studying for the ministry. The young people of her church are at present working for funds with which to build a chapel in a needy suburb of Ponce where they can personally help with the work. Already they have secured over $100 through the sale of hand work.

On to Stockholm

In compliance with the action of the executive committee of the Northern Baptist Convention, Secretary J. A. White, attendance at the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance in Stockholm in July, 1923, was convened by Secretary J. H. Franklin in his office at 276 Fifth Ave., New York, Nov. 28.

The committee was composed of Secretary J. H. Franklin, representing the Foreign Mission Society, Rev. M. A. Levy and Rev. C. W. Briggs, representing the executive committee of the Northern Baptist Convention, Mrs. Cornelius Woelfkin, representing the Woman's Foreign Mission Society, Mrs. G. C. Moor, representing the Woman's Home Mission Society, Secretary G. R. Baker, representing the board of education, and Secretary P. C. Wright, representing the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board.

According to instructions from the executive committee of the Northern Baptist Convention, Secretary J. A. White, Secretary W. B. Lippard, Secretary C. A. Brooks, Mr. C. S. Shanks and Mrs. M. G. Edmonds were appointed as members of the committee. The secretaries of all state convention boards and Rev. C. H. Sears, representing city mission societies, were appointed corresponding members.

After the election of Secretary Franklin as chairman of the committee, matters of vital importance relating to the attendance of American Baptists upon the meetings of the alliance were considered.

The shipping department of the foreign mission board having already made some investigations relating to transportation, it was voted that the committee request that department to act as the authorized transportation agent. Within a week or ten days the committee will be able to publish important information concerning routes overseas.

Among other items carefully considered were those of the exhibits which Northern Baptists should make of their work at the alliance; the conduct of parties which may desire to visit other points of interest in Europe; and representation of various interests represented in our denominational life. Those who may be considering the wisdom of conducting a party would do well to correspond with Secy. W. B. Lippard.

The committee will give information, from time to time, which will be helpful to those expecting to attend the meetings.

The alliance promises to be one of the most important gatherings of Baptists ever held. Present world conditions and possibilities of service make such a meeting of the highest importance and promise. —P. C. WRIGHT, Secy.

Out of 194 students enrolled in Judson College for the current year, 135 are Christians, thirty are Buddhists and twenty are Hindus. The remaining nine include four Mohammedans. The Karen have the largest representation as a race with seventy-five students.

The Christmas cards which "Everyland" purchased in London were held at the customs house for nearly two months. These cards, a half dozen in number setting forth child life in other lands, retail for 35 cents post paid. They may be ordered from Everyland, West Medford Mass.

Prof. L. Kaiser of the German department of Rochester Theological Seminary has been chosen by the German-Speaking Baptist Conference of America, to serve as its official delegate to the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance at Stockholm in 1923. It is encouraging to know how organizations all over the country are already selecting delegates to the meeting at Stockholm.

Lord Balfour is delivering his second course of lectures at Glasgow University on natural theology. He announced at the beginning that his lecture was concerned mainly with theism. "The most rational view of the world," he said, "involved theism." His first course of Gifford lectures was delivered in 1914.

Rev. L. C. Kelly, pastor of the church at Pineville, Ky., has written us concerning conditions in the mountains as he has seen them during the past three years. He has explained what the church is attempting to do to meet the conditions. The profits on the Baptist Emblem which is advertised in these pages have been used to build a Baptist hospital in the community.

Rev. Walter I. Fowle, pastor of the church at Greeley, Colo., led the church in a most stimulating month of stewardship. Sermons were preached on the subject, the Sunday school presented a pageant on stewardship, the young people studied stewardship topics in their meetings and also presented "Thanksgiving Ann," a playlet. The missionary society closed the month's work with a pageant entitled "Others."

At the opening of the new unit of the Christian Center at Weirton, a mining town of West Virginia, on Nov. 5, Mrs. George W. Coleman and Mrs. Katherine S. Westfall, represented the Woman's Home Mission Society, which has two workers on this field—Miss Alma Kury in charge of the activities for women and girls and Miss Amy Johnson, the kindergarten.

The Swedish Baptist General Conference of America has appointed Dr. Frank Peterson as its spokesman at the celebration to be held at Stockholm next summer by the Baptists of Sweden in observance of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the establishment of the first Baptist church in that country. This is a very happy selection, and the arrangement to meet the expense involved would appear to be one of several gifts made to Dr. Peterson in connection with the celebration of his seventy-fifth anniversary. Of course, Dr. Peterson will attend the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance in connection with his trip to Sweden. This good man is greatly beloved, and the honor conferred on him is most worthily bestowed.

The Baptist

The Ministerial Turnover

NO, this is not to be about gymnastics or baked goods or the downfall of cabinets; it is about ecclesiastics, not gymnastics; pastors, not pastry; preachers, not politicians. The title-phrase has been in our note book for future discussion for months, but one of our daily papers has, in the delicate and expressive dialect of the street, "beaten us to it." It has used the phrase in the course of one of the brief editorials on religious subjects which it has been trying out on the public of late. By the way, they are better than the usual editorial allusion to things religious. Would it be unjust to say that, as a rule, with gratifying exceptions, when the editors do not ignore the vast religious activities of our day (probably on the principle that "bein' good ain't news"), their comments—sometimes benignant, sometimes malignant—nearly all evince a virginal innocence of any intimate acquaintance with the subject they so airily discuss?

The turnover of a merchant's stock is primarily the process whereby it is bought, disposed of at a profit, and replaced by a new stock which is to undergo the same process. The term is more commonly used to designate the celerity with which this process can be put through, or the number of times the process and the profit can be duplicated within a given period. Obviously, if the profit be the same or even somewhat less, a merchant is far more fortunate if he turn over his stock three times a year than if he does so but twice. Indeed it is the stale goods that are likely to go at a sacrifice, so that in more ways than one a quick turnover is the life of trade. Of the stock, yes; but of the employes—that is a different matter. Too frequent a turnover in the working force has proved the debacle of many an employer. A firm which cannot hold its employes will go to the wall. If its working-force is shot to pieces by too frequent changes its profits will go glimmering and the goblin of bankruptcy will get it.

What is the situation with our churches and their working-force of pastors? Is the pastoral turnover working out within a margin of safety? The most casual thought will convince us that it is not so working out, but few will realize how serious the situation really is,—how far above the Plimsoll's mark of safety the ecclesiastical craft has been loaded by our blundering work at the problem of pastoral efficiency. Next to the securing of a regenerate, unified, active membership it is the most vital problem that faces the church, and in all save a logical sense it is not next after but next before this; for an efficient pastorate is the crucial prerequisite to securing such a membership and to the maintenance of our every missionary and other enterprise.

The statistics for our Northern Baptist churches for last year indicate that of the ordained Baptist ministers listed in our Year Book one third are not in the pastorate. Making all reasonable allowance for those engaged in other denominational work or unable to serve longer as pastors, it seems likely that at least 25 per cent of the ordained ministers not in the pastorate have no such excuse for being out of the ranks. Extended investigation covering a score of years indicates that this condition is practically a permanent one, and that while one-fourth of the available ministers are out of the pastorate at any given time, one-fourth of the churches will at the same time be found pastorless. While the identity of the churches and pastors may change from year to year the proportion continues about the same, but there is also a strong tendency for churches or ministers once caught in the current of that fatal one-fourth to swirl about indefinitely in a sargasso sea of uselessness.

There is a natural tendency for ministers out of the pastorate to settle in or near some metropolis or strong Baptist center, or in a friendly climate. Southern California has 54 per cent of its ministerial residents out of the pastorate, Oregon 50 per cent, Massachusetts 43 per cent, Kansas 40 per cent. Cities like New York, Boston, Chicago, and Philadelphia have large numbers of ministers not in the pastorate. Very many of these would gladly be in the service to which they gave themselves for life; many would be fit for years of faithful, useful service still; many others would be also if they had not lost heart and hope and self-confidence after many rebuffs and useless endeavor to find a field. Some, it is true, never demonstrated real fitness for the ministry, but these are relatively few.

What is the relation of these tragic facts to the problem of the ministerial turnover? The closest possible relation. It is found in the instability of the pastoral relation, the fact that most pastorates "peter out" by about the second summer or earlier, that intervals longer or shorter separate pastorates and break up all continuity and educative efficiency, that a church plant, like any manufacturing plant, deteriorates rapidly under idleness, while the sensitive soul of an unwanted pastor soon loses all its optimism and power to help other souls.

It is not as though the churches alone were to blame. Too easy ordination; too little education; the delusion that a glib tongue and a white tie may serve as a substitute for a trained mind, a passion for service, and the capacity for patient toil; inability to get past the dead center which occurs in every pastorate after its first novelty is gone; lack of that supreme ministerial gift which Josiah Allen's wife called "tack";—these are some of the causes not chargeable to the church. But in other churches it is the pestilent little minority which unsettles every pastor, or the horned deacon, or old moneybags, or the sister with able mind and facile tongue, but most of all it is the good brethren and sisters who like the pastor and love the church but not enough to attend prayer meeting or evening service or to take a front seat or the denominational paper.

But why try to allocate the blame; it falls on us all. How shall we look our Master in the face with such a record of our stewardship of the church—"the church of the Lord, which he purchased with his own blood."

There is one turnover of which we shall never need be ashamed:

Let's turn over a new leaf!

Absentee Editors

NO OTHER problem which an editor of a religious paper faces is more persistent, perturbing and pestiferous than that of absentee editorship. We do not refer to any attempt to edit the paper upon the part of a committee. Not one of the many committees on THE BAPTIST has ever made any sustained effort to act as editor. Some few misguided efforts along this line resulted so tragically that no succeeding committee has shown the least enthusiasm for such a task. We refer to another galaxy of editors.

For Baptists, conventions have peculiar charm. We all like to talk. We cannot legislate in these gatherings for anybody else so we pass resolutions. It is one of our favorite indoor sports. Ministers' conferences, of which there are many, state conventions, associations, ordination councils and numberless local churches have formed the habit of "resolving" this or that. The habit would not be so perplexing to an editor if they resolved just once a year—New Year's Day for example. The final sentence in the majority of these worthy expressions reads, "And that they be ordered printed in THE BAPTIST." Within a period of six weeks we received resolutions, addresses and sermons which were "to be printed in THE BAPTIST" from twelve general denominational bodies. We speak the truth when we say that the material thus furnished would have monopolized practically every inch of available space in the paper outside the regular departments until the close of the calendar year. Editors sometimes have their papers planned for weeks in advance.

One man with a perfect passion for publicity in a single week provided material which "should appear in the next issue" to more than fill eight pages. "Don't you have a waste basket?" Yes; and we use it as well as our blue pencil and that is where the perturbing comes in. Some one has to keep some semblance of balance in the distribution of space. Here are a few simple principles which underlie the policy of practically all denominational papers covering a wide area. All resolutions if printed in full are to be paid for at the obituary rate. Resolutions are not news. Resolutions are easily passed in any Baptist body. They do have some value, but no one imagines that they fill a very large place in practical denominational service. If resolutions did things, THE BAPTIST would today have a quarter of a million circulation. We said it was easy to get resolutions passed in any Baptist body. Only one other action is easier to secure, and that is a request to have an address or a sermon printed, especially if someone else is to pay the bill. "But why charge for obituaries and resolutions?" Answer: Because few people are interested enough to subscribe, pay for and read a journal, a considerable portion of which is devoted to such material.

Therefore, in the face of numberless "requests" that this sermon and that resolution be printed in THE BAPTIST, the management, in the interest of the whole constituency, must continue to wield the blue pencil and interpret the actions of good Baptists everywhere as an expression of a desire and not as a command with a penalty. In any other case we transfer the editorship to those who, because of their nearness to local situations, may easily overestimate the significance of their own creations. State papers and bulletins furnish the suitable medium.

The Public Reading of the Bible

IN a show of hands in a church congregation the other day—"How many Bibles have we here?" there was a very satisfactory display of Scriptures, but when the people came to follow this with the responsive reading of the Word, there was a manifest hesitation and tangle. You know the reason why. It was the variety of versions. Some had the revised edition—it has been pressed upon the Sunday schools much of late—some had Moffet, some had Weymouth, but the majority that brought their books from home had the familiar King James version of the Bible. Somehow the ordinary churchly mind finds rest and comfort in the latter. Its stately dictum, its smooth religious flow, its familiar words grown sweet to us through long time repetition fall on the soul like a heavenly benediction. The newer versions are also fine, oftener truer to the Hebrew and the Greek, but they seem fitted for the study room rather than the house of worship and do not call in our vagrant thoughts to calm devotion, linked with holy memories of fathers and mothers and saintly congregations, as do the well-known sentences of the old authorized translation of the sacred Word read through the centuries.

A New Life of Christ

THE Pictorial Review began in its November number the publication of a story of Jesus' life, written by an Italian, Giovanni Papini. The circumstances that led to the writing of this story are most interesting. Papini is perhaps the most brilliant living Italian writer, poet and philosopher. From his youth he had a feeling of revulsion toward the churches. He grew up absolutely void of faith.

The war was to Papini, as to many others, a spiritual crisis. He was crushed with the tragedy of it. He stopped writing and began to study the history of humanity. But his study led him only into further darkness. Then it occurred to him that perhaps he might find light in the New Testament, which he had so despised. After intense reading of the book, he found security and peace. He is now preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ with his pen. He has written a life of Christ from the depths of his heart, and the book is selling throughout Italy.

Will It Work in Harlem?

THE church is a human institution or at least it is made up of human beings. The work for which the church is established is work which calls for an investment of time, personality and money. "Will It Work in Harlem?" is the title of a message on the calendar of the Mount Morris Church, New York City, in which the pastor, H. G. W. Smith says "It" will not work.

"Will it work in Harlem? No, it will not. 'It' will not work anywhere. But perhaps people will work in Harlem, and if people will work 'it' is done. No one can brush away with a mere gesture or a mere play upon a word, conditions which actually exist and which are very stern; but, at the same time, human nature is rather too inclined to fail to regard any human betterment work as an enterprise subject to much the same laws that govern any other business enterprise. We say 'any other business enterprise,' because we wish to convey the thought that the enterprise of any church in Harlem really is a business enterprise. Being such it requires the same investment of time and energy and detail work on the part of all who are a part of the firm as is required, for example, by the work of a department store, a wholesale business or a professional practice. These enterprises often show examples of failure, but they show such examples only in case of misjudgment or inattention or some other human conduct through which we can usually see. When a business is properly conducted, usually there is no failure. Religious work in Harlem is a straight proposition that has to be answered in a straight way. The pertinent questions are these: How many members of this firm are there who take the work of their firm seriously upon themselves? Are we all willing to expect the same results to come from our investments and labors in the work of this firm as we would expect to come in the case of similar investments and labors in any other firm? Kingdom work is more nearly a 'straight proposition' than we usually think. We may as well face it squarely."

Geisha Girls Slandered

MISSIONARIES have been charged with many crimes. The latest is that the bad name of the geisha girls is due to propaganda brought back to this country by missionaries. Julian Street, a magazine writer, is reported to have said so before the College Club in Chicago. We do not know Mr. Street. We assume that he is a trained man who would not in any way wilfully misrepresent the case. We do know a number of missionaries who are giving their lives to help the Japanese find themselves and find Christ. In general principles we would give first place to the testimony of the men and women who are engaged in educational, social and religious work in that country. A traveler flitting from place to place is apt to see things that do not exist. As to the real facts about the work and working conditions of these geisha girls we shall hope to hear from some of our workers in Japan.

Should Be Evangelical Plus

IN ITS evangelistic number the Baptist Times and Freeman has a searching editorial on the evangelistic passion. "It ought not to be possible for any Christian to be evangelical without being evangelistic; but the unfortunate thing is that if the first name has become the label of a party, the second has become the badge of temperament."

To be evangelical, the writer indicates, is to believe that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation. "The evangel of God's grace is that Christ died for the ungodly, that he receiveth sinful men, that he offers the world rest, and peace, and forgiveness, without money and without price of any kind."

To be evangelistic is to be "so inspired with the glory, the power and the universality of the evangel, that we have a passionate concern for the men and women whom Jesus died to save." The unfortunate thing is that a man may be evangelical in his theory and attitude toward religion without being evangelistic. Thousands of our church people upon whom no shadow of heterodoxy has ever fallen seem to feel no responsibility for the salvation of others. Is there any worse heresy than that?

"The one great fact in evangelicalism is the priesthood of all believers." Baptists do not recognize a sacerdotal order and yet many church members assume that it is the pastor who is responsible for the salvation of the lost. That is his business. In these days of opportunity it is well for us to be called back to the first century order when the disciples went everywhere preaching the word. This first century evangelization will not be possible without a first century passion for Christ and compassion for the lost.

A British Protest

WE HAVE already had something to say about the conditions at Ellis Island. We find that the British government has been making investigations on its own account. It is reported that the treatment accorded emigrants was well fitted to those of low standards of cleanliness and conduct. For persons of refinement the treatment was a real hardship. As Baptists we are glad that we have trained workers at the port of entry whose sole purpose is to help every one, especially with a Christian greeting.

The Person of Christ: A Series of "Apologetic" Studies

IV. The Faith of the Church

By FREDERIC C. SPURR

WE NOW reach the very heart of our theme. There can be no doubt that the church of God throughout its long history has held firmly to the belief in the divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ. Whether that belief is true or untrue is not the question for the moment; the point is that the church has unwaveringly held it. As evidence of this there may be cited the ancient creeds of the church and the great confessions of the Reformed churches. The truth or otherwise of the substance of these creeds and confessions is not before us for analysis at this juncture, but we are entitled to use them as evidence of what the church has always believed. The Apostles' creed names "Jesus Christ as his only Son, our Lord." The Nicene Creed, recited at the Holy Communion, names the "one Lord Jesus Christ, the only begotten Son of God—God of God—of one substance with the Father—who is worshipped and glorified." The Athanasian symbol declares our Lord Jesus Christ to be "God and man"—perfect God, perfect man "yet one Christ." The numerous "confessions" of the Reformed churches are quite explicit upon the subject of our Lord's divinity. Waldensian, Moravian, Lutheran, Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist—hundreds of them—differing as they do upon vital points,*are one in this—that they accord to Jesus Christ the chief place and name him as "Lord and

Battles Over Person of Christ

God." In the church of the first four centuries fierce battles were fought over the person of Christ and later again in the eighteenth century, but each battle has ended in a fresh declaration of the "Catholic" faith concerning our Lord's divinity. Sections have split from the main body with the avowed purpose of denying his divinity, but these have always been small. Some who have confessed the divinity of Christ have done so in terms which appear thin and anaemic beside the rich confession of the "Catholic" faith. But speaking of the church as a whole, its faith in the "proper Godhead" of our Lord Jesus Christ has been unvarying.

Modern rationalism declares that this faith does not repose upon stable foundations, that it is not historically related to anything that Christ himself taught; that in fine it is a perversion of the simple faith which characterized the primitive Christians. We are told categorically that Jesus himself never claimed to be what the church alleges him to be and that he professed no relation to God which is not also the relation of every man to him. That if he was the son of God it was only in the sense that applies to every person.

A Challenge

Here then is a distinct challenge and we accept it cheerfully. The question we have now to ask is did Jesus affirm his divinity in terms explicit or implicit? Do the primitive documents of Christianity—that is the New Testament—contain the materials, fluid or fixed, for the developed belief of the later church? It is vital to know what Jesus taught about himself. It is also vital to know what his earliest disciples thought of him. There have been bitter critical controversies concerning the authorship and the dates of the books of the New Testament. But it is now generally agreed that one of the earliest documents, if not the earliest, in the New Testament, is St. Paul's first letter to the Thessalonians, while Harnack has put it finally beyond doubt that the third Gospel is really the work of St. Luke, the companion of St. Paul. The implications of these admissions are enormous, as we shall see. How then does the earliest document in the New Testament speak of Jesus Christ? Written probably in the spring of the year 52 A. D. or possibly earlier, within twenty years of the crucifixion—Jesus is referred to thus:

"The church in God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ" (1:1);

"our Lord Jesus Christ" (1:3); "this Son from heaven whom he raised from the dead" (1:10); "may our God and Father himself, and our Lord Jesus, direct our way unto you" (3:11); "the coming of the Lord Jesus with all his saints" (3:13); "we believe that Jesus died and rose again" (4:14); "salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ" (5:9); "the will of God in Christ Jesus" (5:18).

Observe that in the most natural manner and without any "apologetic" purpose whatever, God and Jesus are bracketed together as one. The two are never separated for a moment. No attempt is made to demonstrate the divinity of Christ. The Thessalonians became transformed men through the preaching of the gospel. They knew the saving "power" of Christ in experience (1:5). Christ did for them what only God could do and from the beginning they gave to him the first place and spake of him in the same breath with God the Father. And so it is in every one of St. Paul's epistles. In two places the great apostle propounds a doctrine of our Lord's divinity—Philippians 2 and Colossians 1—in which Christ is set forth as "the image of the invisible God" who was "in the form of God" and in whose name "every knee shall bow." These great passages demand the closest study. We have not now the space in which to expound them.

"Shot Through and Through With Belief"

But the great point to be observed is that this "developed" doctrine of the Godhead of Christ, as it is called, is justified by the general attitude of all the epistles towards him. It is not, as some claim, an exceptional statement due to the thinking of one apostle. It represents the faith of the entire primitive church. Let the reader be at the trouble to collect every reference to our Lord in the epistles and the book of the Apocalypse and see if this be not so. It is no question of "proof texts" or special pleading, it is a question of a literature shot through and through with belief in the deity of Christ and if this belief were, by a literary maneuver to be withdrawn from the New Testament epistles there would be nothing left to hold them together. They would fall apart. This much every unprejudiced person must surely admit, as a matter of simple fact. What is there left, for example, in the Epistle to the Hebrews if the great opening sentences are excluded: "His son—who being the effulgence of his glory and the very image of his substance"? This is the key note to which the rest is set. Or take the book of the Apocalypse. The whole book turns upon the person of him who is its chief figure and it too would fall to pieces if he were withdrawn from it. But how is he spoken of in its pages? As "him who loosed us from our sins in his blood," as "Alpha and Omega," as the holder of "the keys of death and of Hades," as the "Lamb upon the throne," as the "Word of God" evermore to be worshipped and adored.

Men may disbelieve in his divinity, but they cannot deny that the primitive church adored him as the supreme Lord. I would affirm further that the Nicene Creed contains no confession of faith in Christ which may not be legitimately derived from the epistles of the New Testament.

An Appeal to Christ Himself

But from the primitive church we must now appeal to Christ himself. Many who admit as a matter of history the belief of the early church in our Lord's divinity, declare that such a belief does not rest upon any claim made by Jesus himself. Paul, they tell us, is the true founder of Christianity, as it has been historically developed, and Paul, they say, misunderstood Jesus. Did he? Further, it is said that the fourth Gospel, which undoubtedly sets forth the Godhead of Christ, differs radically from the first three Gospels, and that therefore it must be regarded not as history, so much as interpretation": the "interpretation," of course, being open to the usual criticism. They would have us confine ourselves entirely to the first three Gospels. Accepting for a moment the limitation, do the synoptic Gospels set forth any claim of our Lord which can fairly be regarded as a claim of divine nature and relation such as the church predicates of him? It is a question of fact that is before us. It is admitted that our Lord, who appeared at the apex of Jewish history and who, humanly, was in the line of David, claimed to be the Jewish Messiah. His theme was the kingdom of God and he claimed to be the King. The first claim was not openly made to the world. When the moment was ripe, our Lord elicited from the disciples, whom he had trained, their belief in his claim. It

The Old and the New

THE history of the Christian church, in her greatest days, was a revolt against the established order. Revivals have often meant the overturning of some cherished custom; while it could hold the old wine, it could not contain the new wine with its expansive strength. Pentecost was the demand for new vessels, so the Christian church was organized. The Reformation called for new containers, to hold the new wine of justification by faith. William Carey and his memorable sermon was but the expanding power of a living faith, so the modern missionary enterprise was born. Antiquity may have its place, but there is a divine imperialism and progressiveness in Christianity, which breaks through formulated creed and tradition. Many a worthy service has been lost to the kingdom of God because we failed to see that new wine could not be contained in old wine skins. In our apprehension of truth, there is a strong tendency to cling to familiar forms and to condemn those who do not express their faith in our terms. New conceptions of Christ, of life, and of duty, are constantly coming to the soul that fully trusts him. We should not accept the new just because it is new, neither should we waste the new just because we have a taste for the old. The new will in time ripen and mellow. The radical of yesterday is often the conservative of today. The heretic of today may be the saint of tomorrow. The Christian life is a great principle of action. It is a life of progress. Never deal with its old aspects, or its new interpretations, so that there will be waste or loss. Think of it—Christ never grows old! He is the adaptable one! Drink deeply of His Spirit. Let us have larger faith in the progress of truth, in one another, and in the love of Christ!

—Arthur T. Fowler

was "revealed" to them gradually. When they at length knew, they were bidden to guard silence concerning it. (Mark 8:30)

At the end he made a public claim of Messiahship. The entry into Jerusalem on Palm Sunday was deliberate. It was his challenge to the nation to receive him. As Harnack avows, "it could mean only one thing." Why then did they not receive him? There was a moment when they wished "by force to make him king." And if he had been a king, a messiah, such as they expected—a political personage who would deliver them from Roman tyranny they would have received him with acclamation. But it was his divine claim that stood in the way. He was a messiah of another order and they did not want him.

Condemned for a Divine Claim

It is not possible fairly to isolate the event of Good Friday from his previous teaching and claims. The High Priest understood what it meant. Our Lord was condemned for "blasphemy"—for a divine claim. Here again it is not a question of "proof texts" so much as something that is shot into the warp and woof of his teaching and attitude.

Christ's Claims

Confining ourselves to the synoptic Gospels for the moment, our Lord claimed the complete allegiance of men, declaring that denial of him involved denial of God (Matt. 10:32-33). He spoke of himself as the "fulfiller" of the law (Matt. 5:7). In his own name he forgave sins. His words, he said, were final and should never pass away (Matt. 24:25). Those who built upon them would become stable; others would perish (Matt. 7:24-27). He claimed to be the supreme judge of men (Matt. 13:41; 16:4; 25:31). He is the standard for man's life: he alone can appraise the actions of a man's life. He promised his perpetual presence to groups of men who meet in his name (Matt. 18:19-20), and to the church at large (Matt. 48:16-20). He claimed to know God as none other and to be the sole authentic revealer of the Father (Matt. 11:25-27). This great passage, admitted by Renan, to be genuine and sublime, is stressed by Harnack who says it is clear "that he named himself alone as Son of God." He came to make men real sons of God and he claimed to know the Father uniquely, yet he always distinguished between his own sonship and that of others. It was "my Father" and "your Father." Never did he say, including himself, "our Father." This is an astonishing thing. In the parable of the wicked husbandman, he clearly distinguishes between the "servants" and the Son (himself). He places himself in a category quite different from any other of God's messengers to mankind. Months before Gethsemane loomed in view, he spoke privately to his disciples about his death as a "ransom for many" and of his resurrection on the third day. His chosen name for himself was "the Son of Man": more than the official title of the Messiah, it indicated his especial relationship to the whole of humanity. The universal note of his teaching—"unto all the world" indicated the relation of his person to the entire race. This Christ who made so prodigious a claim gathered to himself disciples some of whom saw him in the intimacy of private life. And they who knew him best declared that he was "without sin," without guile: they believed him to be the Son of God and they died for their faith.

Moreover, Jesus believed that he had a future. The world saw in him a carpenter turned prophet but he said "you shall be brought before governors and kings for my sake." Does the world remember any other peasant teacher who dared to say that his disciples would attract the attention of kings and governors for his sake? Yet Jesus did this and his words have been fulfilled. He said he would build his church and the gates of hell should not prevail against it. The date of the first Gospel is entirely immaterial to the question of the truth of this prediction. It has been royally fulfilled and humanly speaking there was nothing less likely than that it should be.

The things we have thus rapidly reviewed belong to the first three Gospels of which rationalism admits in part the value. But what of the fourth, that of St. John? Here from the prologue to the epilogue every line breathes the divinity of Jesus Christ. Suppose it be true that in this Gospel there is both history and "interpretation"; the real question remains to be answered, that is, is the interpretation true? And it must be answered in the light of the whole Christian history. If the language of the fourth Gospel differs from that of the synoptic Gospels, does the thought? Is there anything in the fourth Gospel that reaches a greater altitude than that of St. Matthew 11:25-30? And what shall we say of the great prayer of chapter 17? Can any one have invented that? Dare any one have invented it? That prayer alone separates Jesus from other men forever.

To say that Jesus is God involves many metaphysical questions which we cannot here and now touch. We need not be afraid of these. We may never be able to solve them. But to say that because they are difficult we must fall back upon a pure humanity of Jesus is not courageous. The facts demand more: even the full faith of the church. And we must say with Dr. Dale, "He whom I obey as the supreme authority over my life, he whom I trust for the pardon of my sins, he to whose final judgment I look—he—by whatever name I may call him—is my God."

The Kingdom of God

"THE Kingdom of God is not eating and drinking," says Paul, "but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit." Were nobler words ever inspired by a more seemingly commonplace, if not ignoble, situation? The little Christian community in Rome was perturbed over a question of diet. Was it right to eat meat or forego it? To observe certain days rather than others? Then, as now, there was a kind of conspiracy to overload the soul with "emphatic trifles." Paul hangs the subject out on the golden line of Christian privilege and lets the airs of Heaven blow through it. Yes, he says, it is one's privilege to eat meat if he wants to. But, he argues, the kingdom of God introduces the soul to higher rights than mere personal privileges. A man has the right not to do anything that will injure a human being. Men are not greatly Christian by everlastingly clamoring for their rights. Men have the right not to take their rights. Possessed by the Spirit of Christ, these have made the great venture from outward advantage to inward renunciation, wherein life, properly speaking, according to the seer, can only be said to begin. Thus, while the Realm of God is rendered visible by every church building, every school house, and every institution fostering the liberties of mankind, it is at the same time gloriously invisible—as intangible as thought, as universal as air, as still and deep as the everliving purpose of God.

Here, then, are a few implications of that lofty petition, "Thy kingdom come." Originating with the Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, the kingdom has invaded the highways and byways of history. It has come—it is coming—it will come! Let this be our watchword as we face the tasks of the new time. Let us cultivate a large perspective rather than a limited outlook. Let us keep the Christian focus, laboring to set every stone of truth in the rising temple of universal righteousness. As it took a golden reed to measure the Holy City, so it takes a golden mind to evaluate the Kingdom of God. More beautiful than all precious stones, its walls are higher than all heavens and deeper than all seas; its gates are not twelve pearls, but ten thousand times ten thousand vitalities, pulsing eastward and northward and southward and westward; it has the symmetry of a living cube, for "the length and the breadth and the height thereof are equal."—From a sermon by Dr. Frederick C. Shannon.

The General Election

It is a false industrial order which puts the millionaire at one end and the badly housed cottager at the other. That is not according to Christ's gospel.

By JOHN CLIFFORD

THE great poll has taken place. Twenty millions of people have had the chance of passing judgment on the government of the last four years; and 67 per cent have registered their wishes for the future.

The election was not carried out with the keen interest, bright hopes and overflowing enthusiasms of December, 1918; there was much confusion and some bewilderment. The new government carried into the election much of the odium of the coalition; but it had the advantage of being a coalition no longer. It was a definite Tory party, with no more ordered policy for a jaded public than that of "sitting still." Liberalism was split in two, and thus ill-equipped for the encounter. Labor was strong and buoyant, ready and alert. More than 1400 candidates asked to be returned for 615 constituencies.

The results are only surprising in one direction, that of Labor. The ex-premier, Mr. Lloyd George, has fared badly. The Tory party he had led since the last four years, sent him, according to his own phrase, "into the wilderness," and although he carried out a marvelous campaign for his party throughout the country, yet the voters showed no desire to restore him to his former sovereignty, and his bodyguard lost some eighty seats; his group has not half the strength it wielded in the last House of Commons. Several members of his cabinet fell—Sir Hamar Greenwood, the secretary for Ireland, Mr. Kellaway, the postmaster-general, and others failing to secure a return. We are all, irrespective of party, grateful for the transcendent services Mr. Lloyd George rendered to the country and the world through the war. We admire him for his courage, his measureless resource, his swiftness and sureness of action in meeting an emergency, and his unfailing hopefulness; but his action four years ago in regard to the election blocked the way to the return of his allies, the Liberals, and gave him an overwhelmingly Tory House of Commons. Hence the disasters of the last four years, and hence again he diminished force sent to give him and the Tory party its "general support." That is the most pathetic feature of the election.

Toryism Rules against Will of the People

The most clear decision of the people is seen in the victory of the Tory government. Mr. Bonar Law, the new premier, still have a working majority of over eighty. But the unforgettable and menacing fact is that the government has not behind it the majority of the people. The votes show that it is the government of a minority. Mr. Bonar Law is "satisfied," although he knows that through our bad voting system his majority of eighty takes the place of a minority of about that figure, if the democracy had been in possession of a just way of registering its conviction in and through candidates. Toryism rules against and not through the will of the people. This is the fact the government will not be allowed to forget, and doubtless it will act as a check upon the measures that will be proposed.

I suppose some day the Progressives will be sane enough to cease from bolting and barring the door of the House of Commons on their own entrance, and will arrange amongst themselves to cease from internecine war and unite to further the great causes of human well-being which they profess to support, and which cannot be carried to victory without their union.

The most surprising result of the appeal to the people is the great increase of the members wearing the badge of Labor.

No doubt this is partly due to the enormous pressure of our taxation, the vast amount of unemployment and the wide-spread misery amongst the toiling masses of our land.

Another fact must be taken into account. Within the last four years the program of the "Labor party" has been so widened as to embrace definitely not only those who "labor" with their hands, "the butchers, and bakers and candle-stick makers"; but also those who labor with

These were called Radicals, and marked the line of advance for the Liberal leaders. But in the present case, the "Laborites" outnumber the Liberals, whilst their policy is in the main a Liberal policy, and the difference is really one of method rather than of spirit and aim. That is a most encouraging indication of the trend of political conviction.

For we may expect that they will together form a Progressive force that will resist the reactionary and sectional tactics of the Tories, and prepare the way for the triumph of righteousness and justice, equality of opportunity, the reconciliation and cooperation of capital and labor, the establishment of international peace, the completion of the league of nations, and the reign of universal brotherhood.

In addition to this reincarnation of Liberalism in the Labor party, there has been a revival of free and independent Liberalism. It has not returned to the strength it had in the last Parliament but one; but it has advanced, and among those who take their places in the house are some of the most capable legislators, debaters and administrators the country possesses.

What then does this election mean?

Well, first that the people of England are glad to get back to straightforward politics. They are weary of coalitions in a time of peace. However necessary they may be when the enemy is at your gates, they are fraught with evil when the sword is put into its scabbard and the rule of reason and judgment takes its place. The verdict of the polls is: Give us definite, explicit and avowed Toryism, and not a system of government that passes for one thing and is really another. Away with disguises. Let us get to reality. Get rid of make-believe. Let us "know where we are."

Party of Progress Loses and Gains

It is an ethical advance that is registered at the polls of 1922. The party of Progress has lost for the hour and the day; but it stands to gain the reassertion of moral ideals and the return of loyalty to principle. This is my consolation. The party I have worked for all my life has lost; but the main principles for which that party has labored have been re-enthroned, and through that the advocates of righteousness will ultimately triumph. Nor can one fail to see that this election is a call to our legislators to apply the principles of the Christian gospel to the solution of the problems of poverty and of industry, of just taxation and of improved conditions for the whole of the toiling masses of our countrymen. The "underdog," of whom the ex-premier spoke, continues to challenge the consideration and succor of the community. The vote for Labor repeats that challenge with resounding energy. The Christian ideals of money getting and money spending have yet to be realized. It is a false industrial order which puts the millionaire at one end and the badly housed cottager at the other. That is not according to Christ's gospel. This election means all that, and the brain—the journalists, the professors, the preachers and, in short, every form of human activity. The accessions to the Labor party of the "intellectuals" have been not only numerous but important, and many outstanding persons, such as Sidney Webb, an illustrious Fabian, Noel Buxton, Roden Buxton, university men, scholars, and others will enrich the debates of the new House of Commons with their contributions.

Now the true interpretation of this phenomenon is supplied by the history of Liberalism. British Liberalism has always had its pioneer groups who have been on the fringe of the Liberal party for a time, and subsequently taken within it, by the adoption of a part, rarely the whole of the program of the group. It was so with the Free Trade group led by Cobden and Bright, with the Chartist group, and the group that led in the fight for free and unsectarian education.

it will be well for the old country if we heed the teaching.

Of one thing we may be sure—the electors have not sent Mr. Bonar Law to the headship of the cabinet to “sit still and do nothing.” That is not the meaning of this election; they want something done for the mass of the people, that is the meaning of the majority vote, and we must not allow the confusions created by our electoral methods to hide that issue. The women and men of England are eager to restrict the drink trade, to get rid of sectarian monopolies, to adjust the conflicting relations of workers, to reduce the burden of taxation, to maintain peace, and to herald and advance an era of prosperity and happiness for all.

That trend also shows that the inherited prejudice against the admission of women to a full share in public affairs is slowly giving way. The demand of justice on the one hand and the manifest service of women on the other are making themselves felt. True, only two women are in the legislature, but the women candidates were largely increased, and their poll greatly surpassed that of 1918. We are conservative in many things, and not least in our unfair treatment of women. This is seen in our churches and in our local government, and therefore it is hardly surprising that it should be most obstinate in our attitude to the government of the nation; but we are opening our minds to the truth.

The trend of British life is towards a slow but sure increase of the power of women in the legislative councils of the nation, the fusion of the progressive forces under a new name, that of Socialist or Labor or Liberal, embracing the Laborites, the Free Liberal and the National Liberals, and of this party Mr. Lloyd George may yet become the leader. His instincts and temperament, his sympathies and genius must predispose him for that function in the part he has yet to play in the service of the nation and of the world.

Be this as it may, it is clear that the price we have to pay for progress is not that of “sitting still” but of “eternal vigilance,” the same as is demanded for that “liberty” which is the conquering soul of progress.

The Port of the Derelict

By FRANK A. SECOND

A STREAK of black smoke rolled constantly over a lumbering freight train as it creaked on its monotonous way. Among a lot of twisted and broken junk, the remnants of a wreck piled high upon a coal car, huddled a man to whom, now and then, a breath from the soil filtered through the gas and soot. Occasionally he shifted his head so that the fragrance from the fields might not so soon pass; but each time it seemed that nature denied him more than a stingy whiff of the invigorating atmosphere, and a splash of dust and cinders drove him to cover.

“Junk!” muttered this human derelict, a bit of the flotsam and jetsam cast up by the years. “Battered and torn, twisted and bent—scrap-heap stuff. I could not have picked a more fitting place to ride!” And then, brushing a dirty hand over a ragged coat-sleeve in order to remove some gathered bits of cinders—as if they made any difference!—he cried, as if speaking to the whole wide world:

“I’m going the wrong way! I’ve been going the wrong way for twenty odd years! But,” bitterly, “while I’ve been junk for a decade the scrap-heap never quite got me yet.”

Another breath from the soiled crept through the grime, and the man filled his lungs with it; then for a long time only heat and smoke and gas came to him. The derelict coughed. “Poison!” he growled, “But God knows I ought to be used to poisoned atmosphere. I’ve lived in it long enough to be immune.”

The train passed with a hollow sound over a long bridge spanning a peaceful stream lined on both sides with trees of heavy foliage. A breath of the great free outdoors came to the wearied bit of human junk piled in with other cargo. Birds flitted between the cloud-dotted sky and the tips of the trees. The man stood erect in the jolting coal car to shout:

“I’m going the wrong way—I’m nearing the scrap-heap!” then the derelict sat down once more and, for the hundredth time perhaps, hesitatingly rammed a hand into a pocket, drawing it forth slowly and empty.

With a groan, a jerk and the hissing of air-brakes the train finally drew up at the railroad yards, the engine moved on down the track alone and to the man came the exasperating heat of a cinder way blistering in the sun. As he swung himself from the junk-laden car, the only human occupant waved a hand towards it and muttered:

At the water tank farther on a leak gave him a drink and served to furnish enough water with which to remove some of the dirt from his hands later wiped upon a threadbare coat. Some tramp had been there before the derelict and a tiny fire had evidently been used to make coffee, for a smouldering heap of ashes and a tin can still containing some grounds lay before him.

“If I had some coffee to boil in that can,” he sarcastically thought, “and some doughnuts, I’d have coffee and sinkers for the breakfast I won’t get.”

The town was considerably changed since the railroad came. As the wayfarer passed a building pretty well tumbledown he recognized in it the old-time town hall where, years before, he came of Saturday nights to lodge meeting—the I. O. G. T.—where he always found the girls good looking and the boys happy—the girls and boys of the town and neighboring farms. Many a slip from the pledge taken in the old hall had been his throughout the subsequent years. In front of the place, instead of the long row of carriages and wagons, and horses with folded sacks upon their backs to do for saddles, now stood a row of automobiles.

All this put the derelict in mind of a scene he once looked upon out west, where an old Indian something less than a hundred years of age, stood at the side of a new automobile and gazed upon the setting sun gleaming against snow-capped peaks of everlasting hills.

Old Lige Jenkins’ store, where many a time in bygone days the prodigal sat astride an old box to munch crackers, cheese and sardines—aye, those were the days!—when in town with a load of grain or hogs, was replaced with a moving-picture house; and no movie film ever flitted scenes across a screen any faster or more vividly than the scenes of those other days passed in review before the mental eye of the man standing there.

Across the town, to the very outer edge of the world he had known so long, went the derelict—to the prim and straight line of a bordering alfalfa patch. There, to his longing nostrils came the fresh, sweet fragrance of the purple-blossomed plants; and then, as if in rebellion against the breath from the soil occasionally there crept a hot, oily, sickening odor from the town’s streets and the railroad yards, with the veering breeze. Sprinklers were busy “laying the dust.” Ah, no rain falling upon the old farm ever carried with it a like tainted odor to his youthful senses!

Bees drowned in the alfalfa where they divided their working hours between it and the clover that fringed the meadow road; from the tree-screened stream that wound along in the distance there came a rumbling of the wheels of the same old mill of other days. Somehow the old mill had escaped the touch of modern times.

Coming Back

As a hungry beast springs towards its prey the derelict leaped into the alfalfa and, for the first time he could remember in years, his tired and blistered feet encountered a cushioned, cooling touch and this brought a timid feeling to mind. “I scarcely deserve this reception!” cried the man, with a wave of a hand at a passing bird. “I need the crunch, crunch of the stubble field to make me realize that I’m coming back! Hurrah! You bet, I’m coming back!”

He envied the men at work stacking in a field and when one of them,—who had just set down a jug of water brought from a well, sweating great drops of pearls from its side as the blazing sun shone upon it,—inquired of the stranger as to whether he was seeking a job, the only answer given was indicated by a quickened step forward.

His Job

Towards a hill in the distance, faster and faster pushed the man. A mass of white clouds through which a flock of crows lazily winged their way was his objective, for the clouds hung directly over a farmhouse.

“Job! Job!”

Somehow from the dust-laden cobwebs of his mind rioting back to other days the wayfarer dug out the meaning of the word as he trudged on. “Job! My job is to get back to the soil before the soil claims me!” he shouted.

* * *

That night the swishing of tree branches as they bent before the sighing winds seemed to sound just a little like the rumbling of the train. The derelict was anchored in a bed in the old-fashioned home and he went to sleep with the sound of trembling words of a kindly old lady ringing in his ears:

“Land sakes, Jim! Where have you been all these years, that you want to carry a candle upstairs with you, when there’s an electric light over the dresser, and another over your bed? Sleep well, now, son; and if you want anything in the night, call me!”

A New Appraisalment of the Church

By THOMAS J. HOPKINS

Nine Reasons for Going to Church

IF THE newspapers are correct, the town of Walcott, Iowa, has neither a jail nor a church. Just what the connection is between the two facts is not stated. Sixty-eight years ago it had a church, but for more than fifty years it has ceased to exist. The jail still stands and there is no record that it is untenanted. The mayor is reported to have said that, "While any denomination has the privilege of establishing a church in the little city, the people would not patronize one; it would have empty pews and empty collection baskets every Sunday." He adds, "We are free thinkers and free Americans seven days in the week."

A New Appraisalment Due

Leaving this for the present, it has long seemed to the writer that the church ought to have a new appraisalment. With church activities opening up afresh it would seem profitable to take a square look at the attitude of many toward this institution. A great man in the first century of the Christian era affirmed that he was the least of the apostles, not worthy to be called an apostle, because he persecuted the church. He said that he obtained forgiveness finally on a plea of ignorance. He afterwards became a veritable bond-slave of the institution, but the fact that he had opposed the church stuck like a barb in his conscience till the day of his death. It is barely possible that some people in our days are taking a wrong attitude toward the church because of ignorance, if one of the keenest intellects of all time blundered on that account. If a second thought enabled him to correct his error, a re-opening of the whole question of the church's importance might change some of its modern enemies into friends; though such change might not spare them the torture of conscience like that experienced by Paul in the long ago. One evidence of a growing, healthy mind is that it can change.

"He that is not with me"

The church is here and is one of the great institutions of the earth. Something must be done with it; either it should be aided or hindered. Some people have deluded themselves into thinking that they have done nothing with it: they pay no attention to it; they go their way as if it did not exist; but that is what they have done with it. How are such people to be classified? Jesus helps us to classify them in the following utterance: "He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathers not with me scatters," if a man is not for the church, he is against it: his influence is on the other side, and he counts on that side.

But many are going farther than indifference, professing allegiance to Christ to some extent, taking off their hats at the mention of his name, but stubbornly refusing to endorse the church. Some go so far as to affirm that Christianity would be better off without the church. They tell us that organized religion cramps, abins and confines the spirit of Jesus. While at the same time the church is, according to them, responsible for many of the faults and failures of mankind: if morals are bad, the church has not been doing its duty; if crime is on the increase, it is because the church has not trained

I. In this actual world, a churchless community, a community where men have abandoned and scoffed at or ignored their religious needs, is a community on the rapid down grade.

II. Church work and church attendance mean the cultivation of the habit of feeling some responsibility for others.

III. There are enough holidays for most of us. Sundays differ from other holidays in the fact that there are fifty-two of them every year—therefore, on Sundays, go to church.

IV. Yes, I know all the excuses. I know that one can worship the Creator in a grove of trees or by a running brook, or in a man's own house just as well as in a church. But I also know as a matter of cold fact the average man does not thus worship.

V. He may not hear a good sermon at church. He will hear a sermon by a good man who, with his good wife, is engaged all the week in making hard lives a little easier.

VI. He will listen to and take part in reading some beautiful passages from the Bible. And if he is not familiar with the Bible, he has suffered a loss.

VII. He will take part in singing some good hymns.

VIII. He will meet and nod or speak to good, quiet neighbors. He will come away feeling a little more charitably toward all the world, even toward those excessively foolish young men who regard church-going as a soft performance.

IX. I advocate a man's joining in church work for the sake of showing his faith by his work.

people to be and do better; if children are growing up without the knowledge of God, it is due to the fact that the church is not instructing them; while on Sunday they, with father and mother, are joy-riding in automobiles, picnicking in the woods, or spending the day at the golf grounds. If a world war drenches the earth in blood, the church is responsible, for it could have prevented it, if it had been at its task. But such logic makes Christ responsible for their failures, ignores the fact that sin is deep seated and that Ephraim may be joined to his idols.

One writer says, "It is considered good form and very good fun in certain quarters these days to maul the church. It is a chilly day when some light-hearted reporter does not make merry in a column or two over what he regards as the 'faults and failures of the Protestant church.' He is careful not to attack the Roman Catholic church, for reasons which we all understand. Sometimes," says this writer, "it is an ill-bred preacher, who fouls his own nest by criticising and even caricaturing the church which gave him his opportunity to be heard." He concludes by adding, "It is poor business; it gives aid and comfort to the enemy, wounds many and helps none."

It is sometimes affirmed that a host of young people, and especially young men, are literally panting to give their lives to the spread of Christianity, but that they withhold their noble consecration because the church is not worthy of it; or has a program too small for their lofty ambitions. Of course those who have already given themselves, not alone to Christ but also to the church, were not so particular as to their alignments, nor was their consecration so utter and complete. Such affirmations cast reflections upon all the young people now members of the churches, upon all young men in theological seminaries preparing to preach the gospel, as well as upon all the missionaries who have gone out as the church's representatives to help bring in the kingdom of God.

Most of the criticism of the church today is of a kind with this last one. Even the Iowa town referred to does not stop to trace whatever good it may boast to the presence and work of a church in other and better days. And the church is still making contributions to that city's moral welfare, though the citizens fail to see it. Every good editorial in the newspapers which come into the homes, the best magazines read by its citizens, are inspired directly or otherwise by the teachings of the church. Such a town is living therefore on the borrowed moral capital of other years and of the larger life of the country. A town in Christian America today does not live in a watertight compartment and it may owe the best of its very life to the outside. Individuals live in communities where there are churches, but live on the borrowed moral capital which the churches create; if individuals can do that with respect to smaller localities, towns may draw their best, not from themselves, but from the larger life of their state or nation. A town may boast about having no church, or no Bible and of never bowing to pray, but there are people who would not care to move into it save as missionaries and saviors.

Bernard Shaw Speaks

Bernard Shaw, who cannot be accused of being a religionist, has recently affirmed that, if the churches should shut down, an irresistible demand for their re-establishment would be provoked; that people would suddenly discover that they had been deprived of a necessity of life, and presently there would be more churches than ever and fuller ones. He has also declared that there are more people who feel that in Christ is the only hope for the world than ever before in the lifetime of men now living. If he is right in that impression, the church is doing more for this world than some are willing to admit; for it is chiefly the church which makes Christ known to the world. Let the church cease to exist, unless it should be re-established, and the knowledge of Christ would die out among men.

The church is needed to keep whatever good there is in the world from falling to pieces. It is notoriously true that crime has been on the increase in the United States in the last few years; and it is not flattering to American pride for us to be told by no less an authority than Mr. Raymond Fosdick that much of it is chargeable to the old American stock. This deterioration of manhood has come alongside of a widespread neglect of the churches. No stock of whatever kind can survive the perilous course of irreligion. Mrs. Mary Roberts Rinehart, the American novelist, who cannot be charged with being also an evangelist, says that we are getting in a bad way religiously in this country, and declares that the chief cause for the condition is the neglect of the churches; she then turns exhorter and urges those who have forsaken them to make haste and return. Mr. Lloyd George, man of colossal influence in the world, coincides with our novelist when he affirms that what this chaotic world needs is a return to old-fashioned religion. It is impossible to see how such return will ever come without the aid of strong well-supported churches.

"Jesus loved the church and gave himself for it"; Paul called it "the temple of the Holy Spirit"; and "the body of Christ." He warned the foes on the inside not to destroy the temple of God, declaring that all such would be destroyed of him. Christ said the gates of hades would not prevail against his church; evidently he never thought of getting along without it. It would seem that men should take cognizance of these things, lest they be found fighting against God. The psalmist said of the temple, "A day in thy courts is better than a thousand."—(I suppose he means a thousand anywhere else); "I'd rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God than to dwell in the tents of wickedness." If he could legitimately feel thus about the elder house of worship, surely a modern man might find equal interest in the familiar places of worship today.

And it ought to mean something to "belong to the church." That should be a meaningful phrase. Suppose a man says he belongs to the army but is not subject to army orders; one can't imagine such a thing save in connection with the thought of the guardhouse or dishonorable discharge. People who belong to the church should share its life and be subject to its commands. And surely no member of the church should apologize for such connection, but rather evince a worthy pride because of his relationship. There are many well-meaning people too who stand aloof from the church, who should reconsider their attitude toward this fundamental institution. The passing of Lord Northcliffe has led a great journal to say in an editorial on his life and work, that it was a pity that a man of such power had not been transfigured by the spirit of Jesus and his tremendous energies been more directly given to the organization of the kingdom of God; and concluded by affirming that "more and more men like him must give themselves to the service of creative good-will and the common weal."

But if some ever become the outspoken friends of the church, much prejudice will have to be overcome. A great modern business man confesses that he began attending church services because he happened to marry a woman who was a church member. But he admits that he went for five years before he could believe that there were so many good people inside the churches. He finally became a member of his wife's church. He now declares that he acted wisely; that in the church he learned the secret of brotherhood, which is the spirit of the motor company of which he is head. He says that such a thing as a labor trouble has been unknown in all the history of his plants; and further states that his company has the largest percentage of church-going people in it of any corporation in the country.

A new appraisal is due the church of Jesus Christ; a new world awaits a more favorable verdict. "Righteousness exalteth a nation, and sin is a reproach to any people." And a more penetrating, widespread, cleansing righteousness will come when the church has its rightful right-of-way in the world. This is affirmed with a due recognition of its imperfections, which it will always carry so long as it is under necessity of receiving human beings into its membership. If all of its critics were converted and should join the church tomorrow, it would still have the reputation of imperfection—more or less, no one can tell. It was an imperfect church which Christ is said to have loved and for which he gave his life; such a church won also the unstinted service of Paul and thousands of others of his kind in all generations. Without a suggestion of pharisaism it may be affirmed that the major goodness of the earth is to be found in the institution, which is doing its great work today without the aid of many seemingly well-disposed people. More than that, there is in this institution the supreme hope of the race.

Lordship Conferences

By WILLIAM HENRY GEISTWEIT

WE'VE had Dr. F. A. Agar down our way. Now that may mean much or little according to your knowledge of him. Yes, he is the department of church efficiency in the Northern Convention; appears to be the whole department; but he is much more; he is an institution in his own right—and specialty.

Also, he is the author of seven or eight books—the best books on stewardship and Christian efficiency in the whole realm of literature on these subjects. But he is more than an author.

Well, we arranged a series of Lordship conferences, in which all the Baptist churches of St. Louis joined. They began on Sunday, Nov. 19, and continued—two or three meetings a day—until the twenty-fourth. What a time he gave us! An eye-opener; a heart-searcher; a conscience-disturber; rich, ripe, rare, full-blooded, large-hearted, big-brained, great-visioned—Agar!

He knows his business. The church has a headache; perhaps heart-trouble; may be rheumatic—does he give a bit of medicine for the head, heart, or aching joints? Not he. He isn't a quack; doesn't deal in "dope." He searches the inner, hidden spot, where the trouble is—and he is thinking of the whole body, not a part of it; he is a wise doctor—is Agar.

And he has the remedy. It isn't always what one wants; it may be surgery;

but never temporary palliatives. And his spirit, as he deals with the great problems, is so tender, yet faithful, brimming full of frankness and hopefulness—all mixed with a fine Hibernian flavor, that—well, you go with him, that's all; you know he is right. You may not take his medicine; you may prefer to limp along, groan, sweat, and die; but you know all the while that Dr. Agar is right.

What is it? He is the herald of a new evangelism, he is the path-breaker of a new order in the church of Christ: spiritual efficiency, a church-member-functioning-evangelism. Oh, it is awakening. He declares that only 40 per cent of the church members are functioning; only 15 per cent are active; the losses are terrific—folks going out as fast as they come in; no adequate spiritual care; no ministry to the church in spiritual things. His facts are hair-raising, his appeal overwhelming. He insists on a threefold standard for the regular church member: Worship, service, giving. His unfolding of these principles is the most vigorous thing I have heard for years. Doubtless many people have an idea that he is simply a pleader for stewardship as related to money; not he. He has a bigger job. Finances are incidental, just as a headache may be to a sick man. His treatment is fundamentally spiritual. He is not visionary. He wants to see a new order of deacons and deaconesses in every Baptist church, whose business shall be wholly spiritual care; two for every thirty-five members. He would make these deacons and deaconesses under-shepherds, reporting monthly on the whole membership. He teaches discipline, a lost art in our churches. If we follow his methods there will be fewer of us for a while; but there will be more of us for a longer while to come.

For a week he met us in groups, conferences, and public meetings. It seems to me he has inaugurated a movement which ought to result in a new type of church member and official. He is practically alone in this great field, which promises more for our churches than any other movement I know. He is a great asset in our Baptist forces. He has a message for the hour, and knows how to deliver it to the hearts of the people. One wishes he could be multiplied, and the work organized in every center, such as was done here in St. Louis. It is the most helpful piece of work I have seen for many a day; indeed it is the most needed evangelism of the hour.

It is not likely that all his suggestions will be adopted at once in our churches; but Dr. Agar has begun a work which will not stop. We ought to profit largely by his teachings. God grant it may be so.

The Children of America and the New World Movement

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

By MRS. KATHERINE S. WESTFALL

SINCE the children of today are the hope of tomorrow, the final success of our New World Movement depends upon the children of America. The future influence of these children, and their attitude toward Christianity and toward life depend upon the training and inspiration which is given to them while they are yet young.

What wonderful potentialities are wrapped up in the hearts and lives of these little ones! When one looks into the face of a babe, or sees the uncertain steps of the child beginning to walk, or observes the boys and girls working as hard at their play as the carpenter works at his bench or the farmer behind his plow, one sees in embryo the hope of the future.

Children are much the same all around the world. They have the same physical needs, the same educational and spiritual possibilities. America is going to be strong and virile, is going to have alert and trained minds to cope with its future problems, is going to have high ideals and a spiritual message for the world, only in so far as her children have the opportunity for the right development along all phases of life. The success of the New World Movement in the years to come will be measured to a large extent by the way it cares for the boys and girls of America through the denominational societies and agencies.

The Negro boys and girls in the Southland must have the opportunity of a good education. If they live in rural communities they should have a chance in one of the secondary schools. Many must be trained along industrial lines; some must have the further opportunity for college and professional training. In the northern cities the social activities and the play hours of the Negro boys and girls should be directed into right channels. Under right influences the character of entire neighborhoods has been changed and instead of "gangs" there are boys' clubs and organized teams for various sports.

What of the descendants of the American Indians, those Americans who were in America before the discovery of the new world? Many of their children are without school privileges and many are scattered across the plains and deserts waiting for they know not what—waiting for the message of truth and righteousness which we are withholding. Bacone College and the Indian Orphanage have received unusual gifts recently and many Indian boys and girls have the benefit of the enlarged opportunities.

A Land of Misunderstanding

The largest group of children in America to be reached through the New World Movement is made up of many races from many nations. They have come, or their parents have come, across the seas from far distant shores, looking to America as the land of promise and opportunity. It is a land of promise and opportunity, but alas, so many times it has failed to be a land of understanding. Have you read that most interesting true story, "The Soul of an Immigrant," which tells of the experience of a young boy coming to America? Finding again and again injustice, rebuffs and few ready to lend a helping hand, in spite of all, he fought his way through to victory. It is typical of the experience of a large number of boys and girls coming directly from old world life and customs and facing the conditions of the New World.

When one is drawn close to the children of the foreign-born and knows that in so many places they are unwelcome, that their success in a large measure is due to their own efforts in face of many handicaps, one rejoices that the New World Movement makes possible a large measure of opportunity to the children of America. Through the clinics in the Christian centers and mission fields, there is a ministry of healing through which the children are strengthened and cured. In the day nurseries the little ones have the tender care of the nurse and protection while the mother is at work. In the kindergarten the children have directed play and handwork and are taught to see the beauties in nature. The boys and girls in the clubs and classes are taught the value of good workmanship, of fair play and honor in games and sports, and in the gymnasium their bodies are developed and strengthened. All these activities are included in the work of our Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society. The success and future progress of this great missionary agency depends upon the adequate support of our denominational program.

The Children and the Christ

Above all these various forms of service and in all is the spirit of Christ and he is ever held before the children as the perfect pattern, whose life and teachings are the motive back of every helpful ministry. What greater good could the New World Movement accomplish than to give the children of America such opportunities, such teachings and such a true picture of Christ the Savior that when the children of today shall be the citizens of tomorrow, America will not call in vain in time of need, America will then lead the world in all that is highest and noblest in life and action.

The New World Movement has in it the possibility of moulding the life of the children of America. Any failure to attain the highest measure of success withholds from the children that which is more than meat and more than raiment. The supplying of buildings and equipment, the sending forth of new missionaries and teachers, the filling of vacant places, means the fulfilment of the words of Christ, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

There has been a net gain in home mission fields in Mexico over last year of three in the number of churches; of eleven in number of baptisms; of 399 in church membership; of $1858 in amount contributed for pastors' salary; of $1650 in amount contributed for all objects. In other words there has been a gain during the year of 40 per cent in number of out-stations; 26 per cent in membership; 39 per cent in contributions for pastors' salary; 13 per cent in total contributions and 34 per cent in Sunday-school enrolment.

More interest than ever before in the gospel message and in the buying of Christian literature, is reported by Miss Margarita Moran from Nellore, South India. On one "tour" a man held up his New Testament saying, "Several years ago you gave me this book. It is worn out with study and use. I am ready now to buy a whole Bible and a hymn book and pay for them myself." Miss Moran's driver sells many books to those who come to look at the car. During last year Miss Moran and her Bible women sold 1535 books.

That Which Cannot Be Taken Away

THREE years ago the president of—University, one of the largest Baptist institutions of learning in the United States, wrote the following letter to a high-school boy:

April 4, 1919.

My dear Robert:

Recently I met your father and was much pleased to learn that you are now in the high school and on your way to college. Thinking that some time you may want to enter—University, I am sending you under another cover a little sketch of our student activities. I could easily send you a catalog, but perhaps you may not care for that until you are further along. We shall keep a reserved seat for you here and hope that some day you may come and fill it.

My own son is soon to graduate from—. I cannot do much for him financially, but having given him a college education, I feel that I have given him something better than an earthly fortune—something that can never be taken from him.

I hope some day you may graduate from some American college, and if you and I are both at—, that I may have the pleasure of putting a college diploma into your hands.

With all good wishes, etc.

The other day this president wrote a letter to Robert's father. It follows:

Sept. 29, 1922.

My dear Mr. —:

On my return from Europe I found your letter awaiting me and I beg to assure you it gave me very great pleasure. I am glad to know that your son, Robert, is in our freshman class. I am writing him today and asking him to come in and see me. I will do all in my power to make his course of study happy and successful. Mrs. — will want to know him also, as we have very deep interest in sons of Baptist ministers.

Your letter brought sadness as well as pleasure, since my son died a few months after his graduation from—University. I feel, even more deeply than when I wrote, that I am glad that I gave him that which cannot be taken away.

The Question of Questions

If a man die shall he live again? Job 14:14

By REV. J. W. CONLEY

IT IS my purpose at this time to state those evidences which appeal most strongly and helpfully to me in favor of the belief that we shall live beyond the grave.

It is not my thought to go into the more abstract and extended arguments, but simply to state those practical, every-day reasons that help to steady and inspire our faith. We may all believe in the future life and not need arguments to convince us of the fact, and yet our faith may be encouraged and the great truth gain somewhat in power over us by looking at some of the foundations.

Let me mention first our desire to live beyond this present life.

I can conceive of a person becoming so wearied of life, especially of a life of sin, that he would gladly welcome annihilation. It is not infrequently the case that the suicide commits the terrible deed with the belief, at least the hope, that death is the end. But the normal experience of mankind is a desire to live. There is an unspeakable shrinking from the thought of extinction of being. There is an innate cry of the heart for a future life. When death comes into the home and the loved one is taken, the thought that there is nothing beyond is simply unendurable.

Demand and Supply

There is a law of nature that for a natural demand there is provided a supply. Over against hunger there is the food supply. The eye constructed for the light finds the world flooded with it. The bird that was in the nest in the tree near your house spent the summer in contented happiness and sang in the neighboring grove until by an inner demand of its nature it took its flight to the Southland, not to be disappointed but to find beautiful fields and forests there clad in perennial green. So we believe that there are, to correspond to the universal cry of the human heart.

"Sweet fields arrayed in living green And rivers of delight"

Another argument that has come to me with renewed force is that of man's place in nature.

Scientists of every school of thought from the atheistic evolutionist like Haeckel to the devout Christian like the lamented Professor Drummond, are agreed that man not only stands at the head of creation, but that there is no likelihood of any higher being appearing on this earth. He is the consummation of all the processes and progress of the past. Evidently all the mighty changes of bygone ages were simply steps in the bringing of man upon the scene. And now that man is here nature's work is not to produce something higher but to perfect man.

All progress now centers in him. But the highest part of man is spiritual, and this cannot be perfected in this little earth life. It is inconceivable that all the burden of the ages has been to produce a being whose life period is but three score years and ten. There is no consistency here. Such a being cannot be perfected. If there is no life but the few years of struggle here then the whole outcome of the ages of development is an abortive failure. The mountain bringing forth a mouse is no comparison. The voice that comes from unnumbered ages of progress is that man, the one being who is the fitting culmination of all and who alone of all created beings partakes of the spiritual, the divine—is immortal. Science is greatly reinforcing faith in this glorious truth of immortality.

Dr. Conley on Nov. 20 reached three score years and ten. The following message is presented to his friends as coming from one who is about to make "The Great Adventure," and who feels that "the time of his departure is at hand."

A third argument comes from the consideration of justice or of ethics.

There is deep wrought in man's nature the sense of justice. Right ought to prevail. Justice ought always to be done. But it is manifest to the most casual observer that injustice very frequently prevails. Wrong goes unrighted and unpunished. Many an innocent person goes to the grave under the shadow of some suspicion while the guilty person passes through life unsuspected. Robert Ingersoll once said that his creed was everlasting inexorable justice. But how could it be with no future life in which to right the inequalities and injustices of this?

Christ was continually pointing forward to the day of reckoning. The sublimest scene in all literature is that of Rev. 20. "And I saw a great white throne and Him that sat upon it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them. And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened; and another book, which is the book of life, and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works."

The Redemption of the Desert

By CHARLES L. WHITE

A STREAM of water directed by the skill of man has in recent years made many deserts into gardens and covered them with trees and harvests where only the sage brush grew. A second stream of Christian beneficence, directed from the churches of our land, by those who stand high enough on the uplands of faith to have a vision of the spiritual destitution of the regions beyond, has brought heavenly refreshment to many souls. This stream of Christian giving has made new churches and new missionaries possible in our western country. A third stream is the river of beneficence that from the very beginning has flowed from the heart of these churches. The stream will constantly increase, and will continue to run, while Christians live, into the neglected parts of our own land and far away into the heathen world. The second river of our missionary gifts to the churches continues only a little while, but the first and third rivers flow on forever.

The central fact here is the opening of the books. All this is in perfect accord with the demands of our moral nature for justice coupled with the wrongs and evils of this present world. There must be another life in which to right existing wrongs and vindicate the moral government of God. Without such a future adjustment everything is a hopeless confusion, and moral distinctions are simply a mockery.

Jesus Christ is the supreme argument for a future life.

It is said that he brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. It is true that with Christ the doctrine of personal immortality took on a new significance and power.

The steps in the argument from Christ are simple and may be briefly stated.

(1) There is no way to account for Jesus Christ except by acknowledging his claims. Mr. M. D. Louden (Eli Perkins) says that when he was writing his "Kings of the Platform and Pulpit" Ingersoll sent him his lecture on "Liberty of Man, Woman and Child" with many other of his writings. He also wrote a letter in which occurs this high tribute to Christ (Remember these are Ingersoll's words.): "In using my speeches do not use any assaults I may have made on Christ, which I foolishly made in my early life. With Renan I believe Christ was the one perfect man. 'Do unto others' is the perfection of religion and morality. It is the summum bonum. It was loftier than the teachings of Socrates, Plato, Mohammed, Moses or Confucius. It superseded Greek patriotism, Roman fortitude or Anglo-Saxon bravery for with 'Do unto others' bravery and patriotism would not be needed."

Christ's Claims

But Christ could not have been a perfect man and all that Ingersoll here claims for him without being all that he claimed for himself.

One of the leading speakers in a great Unitarian conference held in Washington some time ago said, "Through Jesus all our divinest thoughts have historically come to us and he must be more to us than any other man. The voice nearest, tenderest and truest to us is that of the Nazarene."

But one cannot logically make such concessions without going farther and bow before Christ as the God-man.

Jesus holds the supreme place. He cannot be other than he claimed. He came forth from the Father. He knew whereof he spoke and he said, "In my Father's house are many mansions." We can trust him. He has revealed the truth. Death is not the end. He has indeed brought life and immortality to light and man can sing his gladdest songs of hope.

(2) Another fact in connection with Christ is conquest over the grave.

He rose triumphant from the tomb. This fact which fits exactly into his wonderful life and character is established beyond reasonable doubt by historical criticism. He died and rose again and is able to deliver from the power of death. Wonderful Savior! Here in his presence faith may gather strength and look with

Religious Education

A Demonstration of Week Day Religious Education

By ROBERT H. PRATT

There is in progress in the city of Mount Carroll, Ill., a most interesting demonstration in week-day religious education. About two years ago the question of a greater work in the training of children in the universal elements in the Christian faith was seriously considered. The churches of the town, six in number, were all genuinely concerned to meet the need. The community club, composed of progressive and Christian women was also interested. The school board looked with favor on any plan that might be shown to be practical.

At first a rather elaborate program was planned which called for the full-time service of a man who should combine the work of teaching, junior athletics and Boy Scouts. But such a man was not readily obtained. The churches then decided to begin in a less pretentious fashion. A local woman who had formerly been a schoolteacher was engaged to give one hour of instruction each week, in each of the first five grades; a total of five hours per week. A room, located in the school building, was rented from the school board. Then enrolment slips were sent to the parents. The result was gratifying and astonishing. A total enrolment of 100 per cent of the children amazed us. The Gary lessons were chosen and the work continued until the close of the school year in June, 1922, a period of about twelve weeks.

The delight with which the pupils accepted the work and the interest of the parents led the church directorate to decide to undertake the instruction on the same basis in all eight grades for the ensuing school year. An enrolment was made at the opening of school and again we were amazed and delighted to find that one child only in all eight grades failed to be enrolled by the parents. The same teacher is employed, giving one hour per week in each grade. The work has been highly successful this year. The time for his study is released to the instructor in religious education by the school authorities with the consent of the board.

Mount Carroll is a town of about 1800 population. It has no factories or industries and is entirely a farming community. The cost of this week-day religious education will be about $600 a year. This money was raised by a general solicitation of the town. It is the purpose of the church directorate to establish a card file of the contributing constituency and by means of a careful and thorough yearly canvass protect this enterprise from financial difficulties. Those who have carefully studied our work regard it as a highly interesting laboratory demonstration. We feel that other communities of like character can have a like success. It is gratifying to the Baptists of Mount Carroll to know that much of the work of inspiration and direction in inaugurating this plan was done by Miss Beth Hostetter, the Baptist Sunday-school superintendent, and by Mrs. W. P. McKee, one of the influential Baptist women of the city.

International Sunday School Lesson for December 31

REVIEW: OUTSTANDING CHARACTERISTICS OF THE MINISTRY OF JESUS
Golden Text: Luke 4:18.

A Résumé

Never have there been three months of Sunday-school time spent on richer material than in the quarter just being completed, in which the life and teaching of Jesus as recorded by Luke have been discussed. Jesus is the background of the entire Bible, the motif around which the vast tapestry of God's dealings with humanity are woven and interwoven. The quarter's study begins with the birth of the forerunner of Jesus, John the Baptist. Then follows the one recorded event in the childhood of Jesus, the testimony of John the Baptist concerning the Christ, and the temptation of Jesus. World's Temperance Sunday causes a break in the series in order that a lesson may be devoted to world-wide prohibition. The primary trend of the quarter's lessons is then resumed by in turn studying Jesus as the Great Physician, the Great Teacher, the Friend of Sinners and the Great Missionary. The next lessons deal with Jesus sending out missionaries, the parable of the Good Samaritan, Jesus with friends and with foes, and Jesus dealing with the covetous rich and the anxious poor. The series of studies on "The Person of Christ," by Frederic C. Spurr, of Hamstead Road Church, England, now running in THE BAPTIST should be of especial interest to Sunday-school pupils who have been devoting their attention during these past weeks to the study of the life of Christ.

Leading Questions

1. Who wrote the third Gospel? 2. What great Christian hymns have their origin in Luke's Gospel? 3. Why is the birth of Jesus recorded as about 5 B. C.? 4. Where did John prepare for his mission? 5. Where did Jesus go after his baptism and what took place there? 6. Why did Jesus perform miracles and what was their nature? 7. What did each of his temptations mean to Jesus in relation to his mission? 8. Why did Jesus ask the demoniac his name? 9. What activities show Jesus as a missionary? 10. What was the difference between the instruction given The Seventy and The Twelve? 11. Who were the Samaritans of the New Testament time? 12. What is likely to be the essential sin of the rich? Of the poor?

Educating Children by Hymns

Music is an important part of the worship service. For little children it cannot be too carefully chosen. The quiet music used in the opening of the service and at other times should be of the best. It is a mistake to think that little children cannot appreciate good music. They can and do, if it be not too difficult; especially if they are given a few lessons in music appreciation.

It is in the selection of the hymns that especial care is needed, however. Most little children delight to sing and good hymns are their due. Certain things should be kept in mind in selecting children's hymns. The music should be good and well within the range of childish voice. The words should be simple, and the thought expressed in the hymn within the understanding of the child.

Sang a group of beginner and primary children:

"I come to the garden alone,
While the dew is still on the roses,
And the voice I hear, falling on my ear,
The Son of God discloses."

Words and thought and the symbolism of the hymn are entirely beyond the experience of the children. It has no message for them. How much this hymn would have meant to the little children in that group:

When I run about all day,
When I kneel at night to pray,
God sees, God sees.
Need I ever know a fear,
Day and night my Father's near,
God sees, God sees.

Sometimes in an effort to get songs within the child's understanding, children are taught songs that have no worthy content, such as

Hark the patter of the feet
Coming down the village street.
On their way to Bible school,
Where they learn the Golden Rule.

Contrast that as an opening song in a worship service for children, with this:

This is God's house,
And he is here today;
He hears each song we sing,
And listens while we pray.

In the junior years, the great church hymns should be taught. The juniors, reading as they do reasonably well, often

The Chimney Corner

Wanted: A Two-Cent Santa Claus!

"There's a Song in the Air."

IT IS within the power of all our readers, young and old, to give the dearest, jolliest, easiest, merriest, happiest, kindest Christmas gift to some one whom Baptists all love and for a work of which Baptists are all very proud! It's this way:

Did you read in last week's Chimney Corner "The Soul of a Jubilee Singer"? Read it again to refresh your memory with the beautiful call to her life work which has finally led Mrs. Helen Adams Moore to take charge of the large Negro Christian Center in Pittsburgh. You will love Mrs. Moore at once, even in print; but, met in person, she makes an even rarer appeal as the writer can testify after sitting beside her during two dinners this week. In the course of the conversations about the wonderful Morgan Community House it came to light that in her work among these music-loving people Mrs. Moore needs a victrola and a piano. Of course she does! So the most delightful idea popped into the writer's mind:

"If my Chimney Corner readers could only surprise Mrs. Moore with that victrola for Christmas!" And on its heels this simple plan—a Two-cent Santa Claus!

For haven't we each an incurable Christmas-card-habit? So can't we adopt one new name this year? And instead of a card can't we just slip a new red government two-cent stamp inside an envelope and mail it to Mrs. Moore? For if ten thousand Chimney Corner readers do this, won't Mrs. Moore receive two hundred dollars? And won't that be plenty to buy the finest victrola and dozens of records? Oh, there will be a song in the air!

Dear Mr., Mrs. and Miss Santa Claus, you will never miss that two-cent stamp, so do tuck it inside an envelope right away, lest you forget! But please, oh please, do not stick it fast to anything—for suppose Mrs. Moore has to pry loose ten thousand stamps from ten thousand slips of paper! After such a herculean labor she would be far too worn out to run the victrola properly. You may trust her to open each envelope gingerly and with due respect for the precious "red notes" which will be your Christmas carol for the Negro work about which we have all been studying this fall. Do it now! Address your envelope to: Mrs. Helen Adams Moore, Superintendent, Morgan Community House, Negro Christian Center, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. (And if you should, by mistake or by design, send more than one stamp, you will be forgiven!)

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

At the Top of the Christmas List

PERHAPS you know the way she felt: She had "done her Christmas shopping early," she had mailed everything "early in the week and early in the day," she had all her little red-tied parcels neatly labelled on the guest-room bed—so in a glow of peaceful contentment she sat down before the fire to coach herself perfect on a Christmas story she was to tell the next morning in Sunday school. But the more letter-perfect she became in the tale itself, the more convinced she became that the top of her Christmas list was all wrong—oh decidedly! The story was called "Let Nothing You Dismay," and midway of it Ole Uncle Gustus in his log cabin was saying:

"Reckon mebbe I better tell you 'bout Mistah Smif of Smifville. Now this Mistah Smif was once right poor, so he reckons he'd best live on a farm, honey. From the time the sun riz up in the morning to the time she set in the evening, this here Mistah Smif he done noffin but plow his farm and sow his farm and weed his farm and harvest his farm, till the fust thing anybody knowed by and by if Mistah Smif ain't a right rich man! But he ain't putting on no airs, Mistah Smif ain't; he ain't acting like he thought his neighbors were no account neighbors jess 'cause he had more money. No sah! Mistah Smif started right in making 'provements in that village: there ain't nebbber ben no pavements for folks to walk on, so Mistah Smif he paid for the smoothest pavements you ever seen this side of Hebben, and folks liked those pavements a right smart bit betterer than the drefful ole mud holes and ruts. So then Mistah Smif he started water works, he laid pipes and digged reservoirs, and folks liked to have those water pipes in-doors 'stead of toting hebbly buckets from the ole village pump. So bimby Mistah Smif he built a church, and he built a library, and he built a schoolhouse, and fust thing folks knowed if he hadn't 'lectric lights in the dark streets at night, so nobody eber had to use kersene lamps and candles no more. Well sir, Mistah Smif done so turrible much that folks named that village Smifville, for Mistah Smif himself! 'Deed they did! And on Mistah Smif's Birliday they tuck a special holiday and fetched presents to him jess to show him how powerful nice—an'—easy he made living in Smifville. They serenaded him from the time the sun riz up 'twill she set. Yes sah, and this kep' up and kep' up and kep' up, year after year, 'twill folks reckoned time by Smif's Day, and ebery blessed little honey chile in town wished Smif's Day was right now—all on account of the presents and the candy and the 'citement.

"Oh yes, indeed, honey, that birliday cel'bration kep' up and kep' up and kep' up, but would you believe it? Half the time folks sort of forgot all 'bout ole Mistah Smif! 'Deed they did! The new folks ain't nebbber seed him, 'cause why he don't walk the streets like he used to, so those new folks don't fetch him no presents, and the older cit'zens don't feel like he's so nec'sary now they got eberything; see? So he live in his own house, real quiet and all by hisself, 'twill it growed easy to forgit him. But reckon likely he says to hisself, says he: 'Ain't I give them 'provements? Ain't I made life easy and happy and safe? Yet now they ain't 'membering me on my birliday no more! They tote my presents to each other now!' And he was right lonesome. 'Deed he was! Right lonesome on Smif Day!"

"Poor Mistah Smif!" breathed Bessie and Jessie in a shocked duet.

Ole Uncle Gustus poked the fire until the sparks danced up the chimney: "Well now, that am only a story, for there ain't no such Mistah Smif I eber heard tell of; but Jessie and Bessie, how about God Almighty? Ain't he give us houses to live in? 'But houses ain't enough,' says God Almighty, 'I jess better give them food.' So he give us that food. 'But food ain't enough,' says he, 'I better give them raiment.' So he give us that raiment. 'But raiment ain't enough,' says he, 'I better give them 'provements.' So he give us all the 'provements you eber heard tell of. 'Deed he did!"

"But houses and food and raiment and provements still don't seem enough to God Almighty, so he jess give us his own dear chile—his onliest dear son! While am the biggest hardest present of them all! So the birliday of Jesus Christ am called Christmas Day, and at first the wise folks fetched presents to the Lord all the same as in that story 'bout Mistah Smif. But li'l by li'l, folks done forget the real reason why of Christmas, all the same as folks forgot 'bout Mistah Smif. Presents for mammy, presents for pappy, presents for Bessie and Jessie, presents for ole Uncle Gustus, but not one leasest li'l present for the dear Lord Jesus. No sah, not one single sol'tary li'l present. So I reckon mebbe Christ he feel right lonesome up in hebben on Christmas Day: 'I give them all I had,' says he, real gentle and low and sad, 'and now they's so busy 'joying themselves that they forgit all 'bout me. But Father, jess you forgive them, for they know not what they do.' Oh yes, honey, they's a lot o' forgiving and forgetting going on in hebb round about Christmas time; and I reckon the dear Saviour am right lonesome. 'Deed he am! Reckon mebbe he keeps 'xpecting us to 'member him this year. But he ain't nowheres on our list—not nowheres. Yet ain't he deserving the very best we-all has got? Oh yes, honey, reckon it am a drefful lonesome day in hebben—Christmas. Jess on 'count o' you and me, honey!"

A story is a story. A mind is a mind. And a new story does curious things to minds—

The contented lady by the fire felt a guilty twinge of conscience: "My best present?" she mused, as she went over her list—readjusting it, weighing its first bests, second bests and other bests; determined to make up for this most tragic oversight of which a Christian could be capable. At the top of the list? Ah, that was it—she should have begun with him!

Neither the sleighbells outside, nor the flickering firelight inside, disturbed her silent wrestling with old set habits as one by one she offered them at the top of her list: "I will love the Lord my God with all my heart (I pledge thee my first affections throughout this year), with all my soul (it is too earth-bound, Lord!), with all my strength (of time and talents and money, for at last, dear Master, at last I pledge one-tenth to thee; forgive these years of self-appropriation!), with all my mind (convert my thoughts, my judgments and my reading into something truly Christian!), and my neighbor as myself. (Here, Father, are my race prejudices—henceforth there shall be neither black nor white nor red nor yellow when I meet thy children; and here is my petty scale of social values—henceforth there shall be neither rich nor poor nor middle class in my estimation of thy world family.)"

The Young Reserves

Will You Be a Two-Cent Santa Claus?

By "PEGGY"

OVER on the grown-up's page you can read how to become a Two-Cent Santa Claus! Bill and I think it's the jolliest plan, and we are hoping every Young Reserve will work his head off trying to beat the grown-up Baptist Santa Clauses! Bill is clever at thinking of things, as I guess you have discovered by this time, so he has a suggestion to make, he says: "Peggy, everybody on Our Street has a two-cent stamp! I'm going to ask every single person to give me one for that victrola."

"Oh Bill," I said, "surely you won't go from house to house asking them, will you?"

"Of course I will! It will be a perfect circus."

"Then I'm going to ask every girl in my grade at school to send a stamp!"

Up spoke Timothy: "I'm going to ask the boys in my gwade!" (Timothy still slips on the letter "r"!)

Uncle Tim said: "I'm going to ask the den at the bank for a stamp apiece."

Father said: "I will, too!"

Mother said: "I'll ask the women in the Ladies' Missionary Society, and the members of my Sunday-school class."

But dear old Agony was the darlinest: Now look a-here, honey, ain't I colored by own self? Reckon I'se gwine to have share in that victrola, too. Jess you wait till I gets busy with my 'quaintances, 'eggy chlie!"

So you see we are all aiming to "get usy." It will be lots of fun, for every body has a two-cent stamp, but my stamp—your stamp + stamps from Baptist girls + stamps from Baptist boys + stamps from Baptist fathers + stamps from Baptist mothers + stamps from Baptist uncles + stamps from Baptist aunts + stamps from Baptist cousins + stamps from Baptist neighbors = Mrs. Moore's victrola!

Miss Applegarth says that we girls and boys must keep right at it every minute, for Santa Claus has to depend on people under seventeen in these rush days when people over seventeen are getting Christmas ready for the rest of us!"

So do let's stamp, stamp, stamp! It will be red, as a Christmas present ought to be, light in weight, as a present sent through the mail should be, and cheap as all presents may be if chosen with love and insight. Can't you picture Mrs. Moore's hundreds of children clapping their excited hands when "It" appears?

Will you be a Two-Cent Santa Claus?

*If I could make the laws
For dear old Santa Claus,
I wouldn't let him pass
A single lad or lass!*

A Christmas Prize Contest

"The Christmas Present That Is Always Being Handed Down!"

Dear Young Reserves,

Not very long ago I copied this quotation from a book, so that we could all have a Christmas prize contest guessing who these various missionary heroes are who have carried Christmas from country to country. After each nationality you will see a number, so in sending me your answers write them as follows:

1. It was who brought the gospel to Rome.

2. It was who took it to France.

These are all actual heroes whom you can discover by reading and by questioning; you can have until Jan. 1 to find the appropriate names. The prize for the best list will be one year's subscription to Everyland which is a monthly magazine loved dearly by every boy and girl who receives it. Here is the quotation:

"It was the Jew (1) who brought the gospel to Rome, a Roman (2) who took it to France, a Frenchman (3) who took it to Scandinavia, a Roman (4) who brought it to England, a Scotchman (5) who evangelized Ireland and an Irishman (6) who, in turn, made the missionary conquest of Scotland. A Scotchman (7) brought Christianity to Central Africa, a Spaniard (8) brought it to northern Africa, a German (9) carried it to India, Englishmen (10) brought it to America, an American Baptist (11) who first carried it to the red Indians. No people have received Christianity except at the hands of an alien."

Mail your answers to me by Jan. 1, in care of THE BAPTIST, 417 South Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., and be sure to state your own address and your age. Hoping I shall have to spend sleepless nights deciding on the best list(!), your expectant friend,

MARGARET T. APPELGARTH.

Was It You?

There once was a brisk Young Reserve Who said: "I can't help but observe are permitted to sing the trashiest songs. The cheapest hymn books are put into their hands and many of them in the greatest memory period of life, seldom sing, and are not asked to memorize any of the truly great hymns of the church. Whatever hymn is taught to the children should be made meaningful to them by means of explanation, stories and pictures. "Faith of Our Fathers" is a great hymn, but a junior child may sing it thoughtlessly, never getting its real meaning. If, however, he has heard stories of the men and women, whose lives have been gladly sacrificed to carry on the faith given to them, the hymn will have new meaning. If an intelligent discussion of the hymn and its meaning has helped him to see that he, too, can join the noble company of men and women who have kept the faith, he can sing the hymn with feeling and be drawn in that feeling very close to Christ.—Florence E. Morton in Presbyterian Magazine.

Rev. William Axling, Tokyo, Japan, is just completing his new textbook on Japan which has been written at the request of the missionary education movement of the United States and Canada. The book bears the title, "Japan on the Upward Trail." It will be used for the textbook in the missionary study classes for young people during the year 1923-24.

THE VOICE OF THE NEGRO

Acts 17:26-28.

(CONQUEST MEETING)

Literature

"Race Grit" by Coe Hayne, $1.25; "The Trend of the Races," paper 50 cents; "In the Vanguard of a Race," paper 50 cents. Books may be secured from The General Board of Promotion of the American Baptist Publication Society.

THE PRICE OF PROGRESS

Sixty years ago about five million slaves were freed by presidential proclamation. They were of necessity illiterate and lacking in the experience of self-dependent and self-controlled living. Today there are ten million Negroes, of whom only 30 per cent are illiterate; 60,000 are in professional service; 30,000 are teachers; 24,000 are in government service; nearly two millions are in public schools. They own half a million homes, a quarter of a million farms, and 300 newspapers and other periodicals.

In view of these facts, is it any wonder that the late Viscount Bryce, one of the foremost and reliable historians of the times, declared: "The American Negro in the first thirty years of his liberation made a greater advance than was ever made by the Anglo-Saxon race in a similar period of years?"

One of the outstanding Negro women is Miss Nannie H. Burroughs, principal of the National Training School for Women and Girls, Washington, D. C. At the unveiling of the Booker Washington Memorial, in April, 1922, Miss Burroughs forcefully voiced the Negro's task in self-development. She said:

"I hate slavery, but slavery was a success. It is a good thing to study successful people and successful institutions to discover why they succeed. The white people of the South made slavery a success for three reasons: They woke their Negroes up; they made their Negroes work; they brought their Negroes in. The people who owned slaves were ready to die for them. The best people of the South were ready to give their own blood and their best treasure, their sons, for their slaves. For the slaves were valuable. They were black people, but they were valuable.

"Every Negro in this house owns what the South was ready to die for, owns a Negro. Are you willing to do for your Negro what the South was ready to do for its Negro sixty years ago? Are you ready to wake him up? Are you ready to make him work? Are you ready to restrain him, to bring him in? If you will, you will be as rich as all the South was sixty years ago.

"I will wake my Negro up.

These pages are for all Baptist young people's organizations. Send news items on activities, organizations, plans and methods of work for publication in THE BAPTIST to James Asa White, General Secretary, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

"I'll make her work, not only physically, but morally and spiritually.

"I'll bring my Negro in, restrain her, control her."

When Nannie Burroughs sat down the colored boys and girls, almost apathetic from the long series of speeches of three days, simply stormed in applause.

Though not so picturesquely expressed, this all-round development is the real aim of all who would help the Negro to his fullest and best development. It is the spirit that pervades all the schools that are supported, either wholly or in part by Northern Baptists. What these schools have done in raising the standard of the race can never be computed. They have not only given a common-school education to thousands of boys and girls, but they have also furnished hundreds of trained leaders, doctors, teachers, lawyers and ministers, who are molding the life and thought of the race.—Adapted from Service.

Are You In On These Doings?

MINNESOTA YOUNG PEOPLE are out to enroll a large number in the Daily Devotion and Tithers Leagues. Dick Holland is the enthusiastic president. The bulletin published by the state organization carries many items of interest for the young people of the state. The 1923 Minnesota Assembly will be held July 19-27, the annual convention of the young people, July 28-29.

ST. LOUIS, MO., "the show me" folks, conducted a B. Y. P. U. training school at LaFayette Park Council, Nov. 13-17. Classes were offered in "Senior B. Y. P. U. Manual," "Intermediate B. Y. P. U. Manual," "Junior Manual," and "Training, in the Baptist Spirit."

DETROIT, MICH. BOOSTERS put on a membership drive during October and November. The membership of the City Union at the beginning of the drive was 1600. The membership goal was 3000 by Nov. 30. December will be given over to "Social Service"; January to "Stewardship"; February to "Missions"; March to Easter, "Evangelism"; May and June, "Education." Duncan Comrie is president of the City Union Cabine and Rev. Ben. T. Leonard is director of religious education for Detroit.

BOSTON BEAN STOCK seems to be rising as plans go forward for the big convention, July 4-8, 1923. Dr. Herbert Hines suggests the following song, to the tune of "Tammany":

*Boston beans, Boston beans,
That's the kind that we'll be eating
When we're at the Boston meeting—
Boston beans, Boston beans,
Eat 'em, eat 'em, eat 'em, eat 'em,
Boston beans!*

DR. W. S. ABERNETHY, pastor of Calvary Church, Washington, D. C., has accepted an invitation to deliver an address before the Boston Convention.

DR. JAMES A. FRANCIS, pastor of First Church, Los Angeles, wires his acceptance of invitation for the Boston convention. Some program!

THE TEACHER TRAINING DEPARTMENT of the Baptist Sunday-school board announces the following awards for 1921-1922: In training schools and institutes, 8,569; in denominational schools and colleges, 13,804; in local classes, 24,841; by individual examination, 7,237; post-graduate manuscripts, 2,636, a grand total of 57,087.

OREGON YOUNG PEOPLE have been holding a series of rallies at Portland, Roseburg, Eugene, McMinnville, Ashland, and Baker. Director Geo. H. Young was assisted by C. H. Burrill, director of religious education for Montana.

ONTARIO AND QUEBEC unions are doing good work under the leadership of Rev. W. E. Hodgson, president, and Mr. W. Fred Reynolds, secretary and treasurer. The next inter-provincial convention will be held in Brantford, Ont., May 23-24, 1923.

THE HOOSIERS are getting behind a big subscription campaign for their state paper, the Baptist Observer. The awards for highest percentages include a return ticket to the B. Y. P. U. of America Convention, Boston, July 4-8, 1923.

TORONTO, ONT. City Junior Union held its fall rally on Nov. 6, at Dovercourt Road Church. Gladys N. Langley, junior superintendent.

THE FALL RALLY of the Miami (Ohio) Association of young people was held at Norwood Church, Oct. 6. The treasurer's report showed a balance of $174.90. The Assembly, published by the association, goes into fourteen states and four foreign countries.

Out Among the Young Folks

GENERAL SECRETARY WHITE has recently completed an itinerary which took him through the western provinces of Canada—Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. He filled engagements at Brandon and Winnipeg, Manitoba; Regina and Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan; Calgary and Edmonton, Alberta. On the return trip, he addressed an enthusiastic rally of the Spokane B. Y. P. U. Federation at First Church, Spokane, Wash., also the young people of the First Church, Boise, Idaho. The invitation was extended and a number of young people from the nearby churches attended the rally.

USTICK, IDAHO, YOUNG PEOPLE have a yell which goes something like this:

*I stick, you stick, he sticks
We stick, you stick, they stick
We all stick to Ustick.*

VIRGINIA YOUNG PEOPLE held one of their most successful conventions this past summer. Over 400 from all sections of the state were in attendance. The reports indicated unusual activity on the part of the 700 unions. Two hundred and fifty institutes and study classes were held during their past year, with over 4,000 awards for the completion of one or more books. A number of the unions report 100 per cent tithers. 106 unions made the standard for the second quarter of 1922. Something like twenty-five city and rural B. Y. P. U. associations have been formed.

GEORGIA YOUNG FOLKS are getting behind their state paper, the Christian Index. The slogan "The Index in every home" is a worthy one. To all societies outside of Georgia: "Go thou and do likewise."

DURANT, MICH. B. Y. P. U. started during last March. It now has over forty members who are willing to support the work in every way. The union sent delegates to the state B. Y. P. U. convention. The devotional leader, Paul Beckwith, attended the Kalamazoo Assembly and brought back many good things for the society. The church has a young people's choir and the activities of the B. Y. P. U. have put new life into the church. A number of young folks have been won for Christ.

THE HOOSIER TRIBE had a great time at the recent meeting of the Indiana state convention meeting at Evansville. Ford Porter, the president, arranged for a boat ride which added much interest to the young people's part of the program.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE of Wooster (Ohio) association held a rally at Masillon, Sept. 9, for the purpose of organizing for effective work among the churches of the association.

"OUR STEWARDSHIP FOR CHRIST" was the theme of the convention of Southeastern Ohio Young People meeting at Cambridge, Oct. 20-22. General Secretary White delivered two addresses, one on "The four-fold Aim of the B. Y. P. U." and one on "The Attractive Christ." Rev. H. J. Hazen, Dr. A. R. Stark, Rev. G. W. Bates, Rev. W. R. Sloman, Rev. J. H. Tridder, Rev. W. M. Hart, Mrs. J. F. Alt, Rev. C. J. Bowen, Mr. Charles Roadmel, Prof. G. P. Knox, Mrs. D. A. Teridell, Mr. Wilson A. Holmes, Miss Nellie unham, Rev. C. M. Eddy, Rev. Eric Ill, Mrs. O. S. Ray, Mr. Jose Agullar, R. T. F. Chambers, and Mr. Kenneth Asteller, also served on the program. The convention was presided over by Miss Edith L. Place, president of Ohio B. Y. P. U.

THE FALL RALLY of the Minneapolis young people was held at Calvary Church. Officers were elected for the new year. The program called for a good time by all.

GRACE CHURCH B. Y. P. U., Milwaukee, Wis., puts out a "Quarterly," the second issue of which was devoted to a report of the St. Paul Convention. It is to be congratulated on such a fine report.

THE "B. Y. WOODLAWNITE" is as good as it sounds, it being the news sheet put out by the young people of Woodlawn Church, Chicago.

From Every Quarter

THE NORTHEASTERN Regional Convention of Georgia young people was held at Commerce, Ga., Oct. 19-20. Dr. W. J. McGlothlin, president of Furman University, Greenville, S. C., delivered an address on Christian Education. The Annual City B. Y. P. U. Training School of Augusta, was held Oct. 22-27.

TEXAS BAPTISTS had thirty-two special Sunday-school and B. Y. P. U. workers engaged in the rural churches of forty associations, during the past summer.

MR. M. M. MCGORRILL, director of religious education, Baptist Temple, Brooklyn, N. Y., has accepted an invitation to conduct two conferences on intermediate work, during the Boston Convention, July 4-8, 1923.

THE BOARD OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION of the First Church, Joliet, Ill., announces its first annual school of religious education, 1922-1923. The sessions will be held in the Eastern Avenue Home on Friday evenings 6 to 9. Prof. W. R. Jewell is director. Courses are offered in Old Testament introduction, junior methods, general psychology, New Testament introduction, psychology of teaching, and worship in the church school.

B. Y. P. U.'S on the Bound

(Tune: Will There Be Any Stars in My Crown)

We are thinking today of that wonderful crowd

*That has labored in city and town;
How our hearts do rejoice when we hear people say,*

That the B. Y. P. U.'s on the bound.

CHORUS

Oh, the B. Y. P. U.'s on the bound, on the bound,

*Watch it spread from city and town;
Every church in the state is wide awake,
For the B. Y. P. U.'s on the bound.*

Oh, the B. Y. P. U., it is dear to our hearts,

*As we labor for heaven's bright crown;
We will holier live and more service will give*

If you will help us to keep on the bound.

Surely victory is ours, and the future will show

*That the B. Y. P. U.'s of renown,
We will strengthen its stays and so lengthen its days*

And it will never, no never go down.

BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S Denominational Day will be observed Jan. 28, 1923. The special subject for discussion will be "Religious Liberty." A pamphlet on this subject may be secured from state and city directors of religious education or from the B. Y. P. U. of America, 125 No. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

THE GOAL for the B. Y. P. U. department of Texas is, "to establish a junior, intermediate and senior B. Y. P. U. in every church in the state."

DR. P. H. J. LERRIGO of the Foreign Mission Society was the speaker for the young people's session of the Iowa Baptist State Convention, meeting at Marshalltown.

THE MIAMIS (the Hoosier tribe of young people) are out to secure a goal of 12,000 members. The call reads: "Let's have a B. Y. P. U. in every Baptist church in Indiana, and every junior, intermediate and senior, being trained for Christian service." Ford Porter is the live-wire president.

Daily Devotions League

By vote of the St. Paul Convention, the Quiet Half-Hour League was changed to the Daily Devotions League. New certificates have been printed in accordance with this action of the convention. Parties holding the Quiet Half-Hour Certificate will be furnished with the new certificate, if same is desired. Write direct to James Asa White, General Secretary, B. Y. P. U. of America, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Suggestions for Figuring the Tithe

By BENJAMIN STARR

So many questions are asked as to how to figure the tithe, the following brief answers to some of them may be helpful:

How should a farmer figure his tithe?
The simplest way we have found is to keep an account of all he sells off the farm. To this add a fair amount for the value of the produce used in the family. From this total, deduct what it has cost to produce it. This would include such items as hired help, taxes, feed for stock, seed grain and fertilizers, depreciation on tools. If he sells $2,200 worth and uses $300 worth in the family the farm produces $2,500. If it costs $1,500 to produce it, he has made $1,000 and the tithe or $100 is the Lord's.

How should the business man figure the tithe? He should keep an account of his total sales. From this amount he should deduct the cost of the goods and the expense of selling them. This would include such items as store rent, clerk hire, heat and light for store, insurance on stock. If he sells $25,000 a year and his goods and store expenses cost $22,000, he has made $3,000 and the tithe is $300.

In the case of the farmer or business man, he cannot know just what he is making until he takes his inventory at the end of the season. He should pay as nearly as he can until such time and then settle his account with the Lord, as he would with any other creditor.

Our Own Folks

Phoenix Mexican Church Organized

Sunday morning, Nov. 26, was a memorable occasion in the annals of Baptist Home Mission work in the state of Arizona. In the Mexican mission in Phoenix there was perfected the organization of the First Mexican Baptist Church of that city. In 1919, after a survey of the Mexican situation in Phoenix by the general missionary it was decided, in consultation with the Rev. T. McCourtney, then executive secretary of the Arizona State Convention, to start a Baptist mission among the Mexicans in the capital. For this purpose in Sept., 1919, Mrs. Martha Knowles was sent by the Women's Society and in the midst of great difficulties, without equipment, and through persecution from the Catholics, she began to evangelize the Mexican people. In March, 1920, the Home Mission Society and the state convention under the enthusiastic leadership of the present secretary, Rev. H. Q. Morton, united in the support of a missionary pastor, Rev. R. Marion Garrett, who began work March 1, 1919. The work began to grow and prosper at once in spite of the inadequate quarters in which it was conducted.

Home Mission Society's Part

In May, 1920, the Home Mission Society invested $6,000 in the purchase of a large lot on the corner of East Washington and Tenth streets, upon which there were three small wooden huts. A partition was taken out of one of the houses to form a mission room, but it was too small within a short time and other partitions were taken out. Finally two houses were put together to make a room big enough for the large congregation and Sunday school.

Too high appreciation can not be expressed for the attitude of the First Baptist Church of Phoenix which, with the true missionary spirit of Christ himself, loaned its baptismal facilities to the Mexican mission and received the baptized converts into its membership, and has ever stood ready to assist in the work in every way possible.

Work Has Grown

The work of the mission has grown and reached out into many fields of helpful service to the Mexican people. In Sept., 1921, Miss Helen Wainwright became the missionary among the women and children in place of Mrs. Knowles who had been transferred to Tucson. Various members of the mission have scattered afar, some back to Mexico, others to California, and others in different sections of Arizona, but from most of them comes news of continued faithfulness in the new Christian life which they found in the Mexican Baptist mission in Phoenix.

So on Sunday morning the members organized themselves formally into an independent Baptist Mexican church. Letters of dismissal from the First Church of Phoenix had been granted for that purpose to Pastor Garrett, Mrs. Garrett, Miss Wainwright, and 151 Mexican members. During the two years and nine months 143 have been received by baptism, fourteen by letter, and two by experience.

Charter Members

After an opening service of song and scripture reading in Spanish, Brother Garrett made a formal announcement of the purpose of the gathering. It was immediately proposed that the members proceed to the formation of an organized church. Mr. Angel Garcia was elected secretary, and the church covenant was read by Sra. Clarissa Torres. The letters of dismissal from the First American Baptist Church were then read, and all those present were asked to signify by standing, their desire to become charter members of the church and their willingness to abide by the ideals embodied in the covenant. It was an inspiring moment when as one body they rose to their feet with joy shining upon their faces.

Missionary Garrett then spoke on "The Relation of the Church to its Lord"; Rev. Edwin R. Brown, on "The Relation of the Members to Each Other and to the Church," and Secretary Morton followed with an address on "The Relation of the Church to the Denomination," which thrilled his hearers and brought forth a hearty round of applause from them. The secretary pro tem was then elected as church clerk, and Mr. Natalio Lopez, treasurer.

With One Voice

When Mr. Morton put the question as to whom the church would call for its pastor, there was a most effecting demonstration of the love and loyalty of the members for their beloved missionary, Mr. Garrett, as they rose spontaneously to their feet and in one voice unitedly moved that he be their pastor as long as he lives. Prayer was then offered for the new church by the general missionary, and Pastor Garrett declared the church formally organized.

The meeting closed with song and prayer, and upon the faces of all could be seen the joy of their new independence mingled with the high resolve to live up to the new privileges and responsibilities. Surely one would have to go far and search long to find a place where the investment of home mission funds has paid better or brought quicker returns than in the work among the Mexicans in the city of Phoenix, Ariz.

To meet the imperative need for an adequate equipment for this work, the Home Mission Society has voted $10,000 for the first unit of a new Christian center building which it is hoped can be begun in the coming year, and the state convention board has voted a like sum to be raised in Arizona for the second unit or chapel, while later the Women's Society will provide the third unit, giving Phoenix a splendidly equipped Christian center for this remarkably fruitful work among the steadily increasing Mexican population of the city.

Leroy Stephens, D. D.

An Appreciation

On Nov. 26, this noble Christian, the "Grand Old Baptist" of Pennsylvania answered the call to higher service and departed to be with the Master he had served so faithfully.

Born in Whitely, Greene County, Jan. 20, 1841, he shared the hardships of pioneer life. Determined to secure an education, he went to Bucknell Academy immediately at the close of his enlistment in the Union army, graduating from the college with honor in 1868. Later he received the degrees of A.M. and D.D. from his alma mater. In 1871 he graduated from Crozer Seminary, being ordained that same year, and beginning his ministry at Morgantown, West Virginia. From 1872 to 1879 he was pastor at Mt. Pleasant, Pa. In the latter year he became president of the Western Pennsylvania Classical and Scientific Institute, to which he gave fifteen years of unwearied service, bringing the school to a recognized position in scholarship and Christian aggressiveness, and raising an endowment of $50,000. His eminent fitness led to his selection as general agent of the Pennsylvania Baptist Education Society in 1894, and as corresponding secretary, to succeed Rev. G. M. Spratt, in 1899. Through all the years following he was untiring in his efforts in behalf of the work of the education board. At the meeting of the state convention in 1921 Dr. Stephens presented his resignation and was elected secretary emeritus for life. The release from active service did not lessen his interest in the work of the board, which had the advantage of his presence and counsel at most of its meetings. His death was due to advanced age. His wife and several children survive him.

The funeral service was held in the First Baptist Church, Lewisburg, on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 29, with the pastor, Rev. Raymond M. West, in charge. The Scripture selections were read by Rev. Rittenhouse Neisser, general secretary of the education board, and prayer offered by President Milton G. Evans, of Crozer Theological Seminary. President Emory W. Hunt, of Bucknell University, of which Dr. Stephens was a trustee, spoke of his service in the cause of education, and Rev. John T. Judd, of his Christian character and relation to the church. The interment was in the Lewisburg Cemetery.

The committee appointed by the state convention, at the time of his resignation as general secretary, to prepare suitable recognition of his long and untiring service well said in its report:

"In all his relations he has been a worker without complaint, a counsellor without guile, a Christian without reproach, a brother beloved by all. He has set us an example of unwearied industry, of evangelistic zeal, of absolute self-forgetfulness, of love for brothers in Christ, of unceasing prayer for those for whom Christ died. Those who knew him longest and most intimately cannot but ask, 'Shall we again see the like unto him?'"

Ford Hall Forum

The vitality of the Forum is amazing. For fifteen years it has had an unbroken record of triumph. The secret is not difficult to find. It is George W. Coleman. After the recent insistence of two universities, we must call him "Doctor" Coleman. But his many lovers call him plain "George"—brother George. Brotherhood is the secret both of George, and of the Forum.

Long Since

Your scribe has not attended a meeting since the old days when the Forum was new. He expected to find it overtaken by temperamental normalcy, and with less sparkle and heat. But he was mistaken. The crowd filled everything—the platform chock-full looking like a mass of vice-presidents and secretaries, and the four walls fringed with the liveliest "standees." And such a crowd! Hair-trigger enthusiasm was everywhere—the air electric with it. Whether it is music, oratory, questioning, the eager and glowing "folks" are something to see and hear. One of their responsive speakers declared that, if necessary, he would gladly walk all the way from Philadelphia to speak to such folks.

Gladstone's dogma about oratory is here reversed: the speakers furnish the vapor, but the "folks" give back the shower. The music was by an orchestra of boys, keen, handsome, fascinating fellows who were playing for love.

The Speaker

He was a sort of genius. James Harvey Robinson, a great teacher, prolific author—an odd, "dry," juicy pedagogue, who sees through everything and tells what he sees. You are quite likely to agree with him, but that is not his main concern.

"What is the matter with education?" was the question he raised. His estimate of modern education reminded you of the Jew's opinion of a mob of the curious that had flushed his little shop—"Lots of customers, but no beezness!" Professor Robinson saw a multitude of teachers teaching, but few pupils learning very much. He had a mighty poor opinion of "examinations." Indeed, prevailing educational methods are telling examples of "how not to do it." They oppose spontaneity, provoke no "follow up," leave no mark that infallibly betrays an educated man. Ex-President Eliot's "Five-foot book shelf" is not within gunshot of anything agitating the world today. How much tolerance does education teach? The speaker admitted that he was intentionally destructive but wanted us first to see what was wrong about our methods.

The Quiz

The full hour given to the "folks" to talk back in questions, bristles with excitement. Here both the speaker and Dr. Coleman are on their mettle. At once Coleman becomes a sort of "lightning calculator." How the questions come pelting in! They are keen, pertinent, burning, and sometimes involved. But flashing through Coleman's mind, they instantly appear clarified, shortened, sharpened. The lecturer was up to it: his dry good nature, pat wisdom, and unmistakable reality, kept us all on the qui vive. It was a great meeting.

On Dec. 17, Prof. H. C. Vedder, of Crozer, comes with the question: "Can we live by the Golden Rule?" There will be plenty of music in the air that night.

A Befitting Celebration

The Ford Hall Forum is a child of the Social Union. Thus the December meeting was made a recognition of the Fifteenth Anniversary of its lively offspring. There was quite a delegation present from the veteran element of the Forum. Their special voice was Miss Freda Rogolsky who spoke of "What the Ford Hall Forum Means to Us." Miss Rogolsky drew from her personal experience of twelve years, and with sympathetic animation expressed the realization of much that the Forum has sought to accomplish.

Of course, in a way, it was Dr. Coleman's night. During his long and solid achievement he has had the backing of the Union, with a condiment of protest from some quarters. Strict orthodoxy is sometimes a great blessing—especially when it does not sour into something of cursing. Coleman has always tasted of both flavors, but being a thoroughly normal and brotherly being, he has never allowed his explosive and thoroughly developed laugh to degenerate. No frowns can ever subdue a man who laughs like that. His last is quite certain to be his best. And when he told us how this Forum, like an old banyan tree, had sent out its roots into hundreds of cities, we all smiled our grateful appreciation, and were convinced that he had well earned his honors and doctorates.

The Chief Address

The speaker of the evening was Arthur E. Bestor, LL. D., president of the Chautauqua Institution, and teacher of the famous Rockefeller Bible class in New York. Rarely has a speaker gripped that company as he did. He had a gripping subject, and it had first gripped him: "Constantinople and the Turkish Nationalists." He was so well informed and so thoroughly convinced, that he grew more and more convincing. His graphic description of the nation that was hailed by a world in distress as the "good Samaritan," but now disclosing itself as both "priest" and "Levite," was impressively humiliating. There is something immensely wholesome in the discomfort brought to us by such an overwhelming rebuke and spiritual appeal. National and political selfishness never seemed less comfortable, and Christian internationalism never seemed more glorious.

The meeting was unusually large, and perhaps too long. But hardly a man got away from "that train" while Dr. Bestor's moral earnestness had him in hand.

Charles W. Eliot

It was a treat to hear Ex-President Eliot of Harvard speak to the Congregational ministers. He is a sort of marvel. In his eighty-ninth year, yet straighter than an Indian, with mind clear, strong, never out of leash for a moment, and wonderfully sound and up-to-date on basic questions. His theme was "Education and Religion." On some matters he was not optimistic, but in everything sought to be constructive. He could see little hope of our deliverance from ingrained sectarian differences for which we are sacrificing those common agreements which are necessary if the base of our education is sound. But as a nation we are conglomerate and must get on in spite of that fact. Our schools teach neither morality nor religion. Constantly their failure to produce good voters and good citizens stares us in the face. Also the fact that our homes fail as completely in teaching respect for parents, loyal affection for brothers and sisters, and love to God and neighbor.

In the quiz that followed, Dr. Eliot exceeded in his confidence in God and religion, and strongly clinched his educational principles. But one fact was manifest—the glorious voice was missed that used to thrill us as he conferred the Harvard degrees at commencement. Age has drained out its superb presidential quality. Yet so perfect is his articulation that you may catch by lip-reading what you fail to hear. How widely honored he is—politicians and zealots objecting! But—most of us are destined to lose more than our voices before eighty-nine overtakes us.

Boodle

What is on the first page, and in everybody's mind in Boston at present is boodle—the old familiar political boodle. Yet it has a way of appearing like an innovation, and filling us with surprise, after we have long assumed its municipal omnipresence. It is only when it becomes too definite, gets attached to some of our young and pushful "city fathers," and we see portraits, scan figures, and hear about bribed votes, that boodle suddenly becomes news, and we indulge in shocks. Long have we known that Tammany has been the model for municipal statesmen in Boston. Yet we go on forgetting until it is time for another shock. There is no patience that compares with our patience with boodle, except perhaps our patience with poor preaching.

An Appreciation

In the recent death of John Fletcher at Plainwell, Mich., the Baptist denomination has lost a man who was a tower of strength.

There is probably not another pastorate in a church of any denomination in the state of Michigan, the equal of that of Mr. Fletcher in the respect that for fifty years he served that church in continuous leadership, and it was an inspiring, wise and judicious leadership.

God endowed him with a wealth of generous nature, a little vein of humor, a keen, analytical mind, and a large stock of good common sense. As he went in and out among the people he touched in a vital way all the currents of life throughout a wide section. Men sought him for advice upon nearly all questions and problems of human life. No gathering was complete in those homes without Mr. Fletcher. When he stood before the people to proclaim the Word of life, to his listeners his voice was the voice of a prophet.

He was a preacher of the Word. He did not consider it his mission as an evangel of the truth to attack error, isms and counterfeit in the religious realm, nor to make of his pulpit a forum for the discussion of current topics. He conceived of his call to the ministry as a call to preach the unsearchable riches of divine truth, and having done so was content to leave the results with the Lord of the vineyard. God honored his word and honored his servant's faith and fidelity, for as pastor John Fletcher gathered about him a band of staunch, stalwart men and women of God, who together made the Baptist church of Plainwell the outstanding religious organization in that section. The bounty and beneficence of members of this church is bearing fruit today in lands far and wide.

Mr. Fletcher had great influence over the young and he had about him all the while a band of virile, progressive young people. It was from this church that the first colporter wagon of the Publication Society went into service. The writer of this appreciation had the honor of being for five years Mr. Fletcher's successor, and thus writes knowing full well these things. Mr. Fletcher's pastorate began in 1805 and closed in 1915. Upon the occasion of his ninetieth birthday last July, he preached in his old pulpit the sermon he had preached in that place July 4, 1876. He was one of the editors of "The History of Michigan Baptists" published in 1909.

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

NEW HAMPSHIRE

REV. J. W. RAFTER HAS resigned the pastorate of the church at Newport and has accepted the call to the Merrimack Street Church, Manchester. Mr. Rafter will begin his work at Manchester Dec. 24. The Merrimack Street Church has voted to buy a well located property for its parsonage.

REV. W. P. ROBINSON HAS closed his pastorate at Madison.

REV. J. K. MILLER, CONVENTION pastor at large, will occupy the pulpit at Littleton during December. While making his headquarters at Littleton, Mr. Miller will visit churches in the north section of the state in interest of the New World Movement.

REV. CHARLES P. MACGREGOR, pastor First Church, Manchester, preached the union Thanksgiving sermon before the Protestant bodies meeting at the First Congregational Church. His topic was, "America's Messianic Mission."

VERMONT

VERMONT CHURCHES NEARLY all have settled pastors at the present time. Rev. H. A. Childs of Rangeley, Maine, having accepted the unanimous call to the First Church, Montpelier; Rev. S. D. Cahoon of West Harwich, Mass., having accepted a call to the churches at South Newfane and West Dummerston; the Rev. Christian Peterson, moving from North Danville to Windsor and Rev. H. P. Glaister moving from Starksboro to North Danville. The only churches now pastorless in Vermont are Starksboro, which is a good country field where a man has the whole community to himself and a salary of $1200 and house; West Pawlet on the Delaware and Hudson Railroad right on the line between Vermont and New York, giving a man a splendid opportunity for hard work with a salary of $1000 and good house with all modern conveniences; Pownal Baptist Church and North Pownal Congregational Church, three miles apart on the Boston and Maine Railroad and paying $1200 and house; St. Albans, one of the best fields for aggressive work in the state and paying $1800 and house, now being supplied by a former pastor, Rev. Joseph S. Brown, until the right man can be secured to take up work on that field.

REV. R. G. GREENGRASS, pastor of the churches at Randolph and Braintree is seeing the desire of his heart being accomplished in new members coming into the church. On Sunday, Nov. 19, Pastor Greengrass baptized seven at Randolph and three at Braintree and also received seven more by letter and experience into the Randolph Church, and this by personal and pastoral work without any special meetings. Pastor Greengrass is looking forward to another baptismal service in the near future. The church and kind friends, appreciating the efforts of Pastor and Mrs. Greengrass, have put the new parsonage in first-class condition by installing modern conveniences and painting and otherwise improving the property.

REV. G. H. GREY, pastor of the churches at Huntington and Huntington Center, has recently been assisted in special meetings by State Worker Sturtevant and as a result thirteen have been received by baptism with others to come in by letter and experience and still others by baptism.

REV. W. W. HACKETT, pastor at West Wardsboro has tendered his resignation to close his work Dec. 24 and will move to his former home in Rhode Island. Dr. Hackett has done good work at West Wardsboro and probably a majority of the members now residing on the field have been taken into the church by him.

THE MID-WINTER MEETING of the board of trustees of Vermont Academy will be held in the convention board room in Burlington, Jan. 2 at 10 a. m. and the convention board meeting will be held at 2 p. m.

NEW JERSEY

ROSELLE: The fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the church was celebrated Oct. 29-Nov. 4. Many former members including all the living former pastors were present. Rev. Geo. Peck of Rutland, Vt., preached the first Sunday and Rev. J. M. Stifer, of Evanston the second Sunday. Dr. Peck was once a Sunday school boy here and Dr. Stifer was pastor before going to Evanston. At the fellowship supper during the week the mortgage on the property was burned. The church is now preparing to expend several hundred dollars on additional Sunday-school equipment, the money being in hand. Nov. 11, Dr. C. E. Goodall, the pastor, resigned to take effect Nov. 30. At the last state convention he was elected executive secretary. He has been acting as such secretary for eight months and assumed full duties Dec. 1. On Sunday, Nov. 26, crowded houses greeted him at his last Sunday service and a fine morocco booklet with his initials on the cover and suitable testimonials within was presented to him. Rev. W. H. Bawden, of Elizabeth, will act as stated supply.

NEW YORK

LAFAYETTE AVENUE CHURCH, Buffalo, has nearly completed its new Bible school building and community house which will be formally opened in January. Work on the new auditorium is under way and it is hoped that the combined structure will be dedicated in September, 1923. When completed, it will be one of the most modern and best equipped church buildings in the state. The total cost without furnishings, including the additional land purchased, will be about $170,000. For two successive years the church has exceeded its quota to the New World Movement. A total of $47,500 has been contributed during the year. The Bible school has been completely departmentalized and a strong organization is being effected under the leadership of Prof. W. G. Welker, a public school principal. The school has achieved a 13 per cent increase in enrolment during the last six weeks; 389 church members have been received during the present pastorate. The pastor began his sixth year of service on Dec. 1.

DR. A. W. BEAVEN is concluding his series of fireside sermons at the Lake Avenue Church, Rochester. The general subject deals with religion and the home. He has given a series on this general subject each year for the last nine years. The series this year has been fully as popular as usual; the topics have been as follows: Seventeen—and in love; The greatest promise in the world; The unseen guest at the wedding; Have you made good as a husband?; What grade would you give yourself as a wife?; Will your child break your pocketbook—your heart—or your record? Nov. 5 the church sent one of its own members, Miss Ruth Makeham, into the home mission field as assistant to Miss Corwin who is working for the Home Mission Society among the Indians, at Stewart, Nev. The three-period-session Bible school, worked out by the Lake Avenue Church, whereby pupils of the Bible school receive on Sunday two and one-half hours more religious instruction than under the old plan of an hour, is working increasingly well. Dr. and Mrs. Beaven have set aside an evening a week during the winter and they are entertaining the 2300 members of the church as their guests in a series of evening socials at their own homes. On Thanksgiving Day the young people of the church held a party for the young people out of town who could not go to their own homes, particularly for students in the various institutions of learning in the city. Over 150 of the young folks attended and from 4:30 to 10 had as good and wholesome time as it was possible to give them. Mr. George E. Fisher who has been organist of the church for thirty-five years is to have a year's leave of absence from the first of January for special study in Europe and in musical centers in this country, along the line of organ and choir directing. Dr. Beaven is chairman of a committee of twenty-five citizens of Rochester who are carrying on a campaign to secure adequate law enforcement in the city along the lines of the eighteenth amendment. At a mass meeting held under the auspices of this committee on the evening of Nov. 5, where a report of the committee was presented by Dr. Beaven, the largest auditorium of the city was crowded in twenty minutes after it was opened and two other large churches were filled with overflow gatherings. Dr. Beaven is university preacher this year for one Sunday at Yale, and Cornell.

Reunion of Newton Alumni of New York And Vicinity

Newton Alumni of New York and vicinity celebrated a reunion at luncheon on Monday, Dec. 4. President George E.

Horr was the guest of honor. Forty-one plates were set at the tables in Hotel Rutledge. The luncheon was featured by music rendered by the Interborough Male Quartet and Mrs. Claude E. Morris. Mrs. Morris sang as one of her numbers, "A Little Cottage," the words of which were written by Roscoe Gillmore Stott, son of Professor W. T. Stott, for many years president of Franklin College.

A word of greeting and reminiscence was contributed by each Newton man present. The concluding speech was expressive of the sentiment of the assembly and was hailed with unanimous approval. It was a motion by the secretary that "we advise the board of trustees of Newton of the unanimous sentiment of the alumni of New York and vicinity that the board be respectfully petitioned to delegate our president, George E. Horr, D. D., to represent Newton Theological Institution at the sessions of the World Baptist Alliance in Stockholm in July 1923."

President Horr spoke briefly on the affairs on Newton Hill. The attendance is the largest in the history of the institution. Forty-two men were admitted this year, and many had to be refused admission. A department of religious education has been added to the courses offered by the seminary; to this women are admitted. In order to make this possible a house at the foot of Newton Hill has been purchased by the seminary which is used as a dormitory by the seven young women who have entered the department. Miss Fowle, a doctor of philosophy from Harvard, has been appointed dean of women in Newton.

The John M. English Fund recently subscribed by the alumni has been made available. The fund will be applied in the invitation to outstanding pastors and preachers to come to Newton and live for period of several weeks with the students. A splendid opportunity for conference and direct contact with men of practical success will thus be afforded the students.

President Horr called the attention of Newton men to the centennial of the school in 1925. Preparations have begun for this momentous event.

For the ensuing year the following officers will serve the Newton Alumni Association of New York and vicinity: President, Rev. M. Joseph Twomey, of Newark, N. J.; secretary, Rev. Earle B. Cross, of Fountain Lakes, N. J.; committee of arrangements: Rev. Rolla E. Hunt, of Richmond Hill, N. Y., Rev. Claude E. Morris, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Rev. Albert C. Thomas, of New York City.

PAUL D. WELLER, superintendent of the Sunday school of the First Church, Newcastle, challenged the Broad Street and Wilkinsburg Sunday school to enter a membership contest beginning Dec. 3 and running the first quarter of the new year. The first Sunday resulted in the following score: Newcastle 86 per cent, Wilkinsburg 15 per cent and Broad Street 80 per cent. F. B. Yourison is superintendent at Wilkinsburg and Thomas Boswell at Broad Street. We shall watch this contest with interest for the schools engaged in it are the strongest organizations in the associations represented.

HOMESTEAD CHURCH had been without pastor since February until the coming of Pastor Griffin from Huntington, W. Va., Sept. 10. There has been a steady growth and renewed interest. The financial system has been recast and a new canvass put on the last Sunday in October, with the result that the budget was nicely cared for and the missionary budget went over the top. Most of all a new alignment of life was secured that has been gratifying to the pastor and officers. On Nov. 5 a home-coming service was held and the communion service had the largest attendance in the memory of the oldest member. A well-attended school on evangelism, taught by the pastor, was held the first part of November. The evangelistic note has been constantly sounded in the preaching and not without effect, for on Sunday night, Nov. 26, seven converts were baptized, making fourteen additions to the church since the present pastorate began. This is an industrial center and the shifts in the mills divide the congregation so that we can never have our whole congregation at one time, but even with this handicap the interest is good, growing, and the outlook as bright as the promises of God, when the gospel is preached in love without fear or favor.

HELLO, CENTRAL, I WANT FATHER TIME!

Hello, is this Father Time's office? I'm calling to ask you, Father Time, what will bring me greatest happiness in the future. Not motor cars, or servants, you say? Or fine clothes and a big house either? What then? Will you repeat that please?—I'm not quite sure I understood. Sacrificial service and an understanding heart! And one may attain these through interest in a worthy cause and its support? Can you tell me a little about some such cause? Yes, please, I'm listening.

In Alaska a little girl arrived at our Orphanage, ragged, cold and sick. Even her name was unknown, so she was called Seldovia for the port from which she sailed. Today she is sturdy and happy. It costs 27½ cents a day or $100 a year to care for such a child in the Kodiak Baptist Orphanage.

"The King's business requireth haste" as much as any other business. One missionary with an auto is equal to three without. And autos are cheaper than missionaries. It costs about $300 a year or $30 a month to keep an automobile running out on the government reservations among the American Indians.

A new Christian Training School for native girls in Rio Piedras, Porto Rico, is only half full because many bright girls who are otherwise fitted to come have not the necessary money. A scholarship can be provided for $150 a year. Native workers, not American missionaries, must save Latin America.

A young widowed mother with two small children was planning to commit suicide when she discovered one of our Christian Centers where her babies could be left while she went out to work. These Centers claim your support. The salary of a headworker is $1,000 a year. Can you honestly say you can't afford to pay it?

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

THE FIRST CHURCH, NORRISTOWN, is celebrating its ninetieth anniversary. The Church Messenger for the week of Dec. 3 is an attractive folder fully illustrated and with an appeal to the community as a whole. Rev. W. H. Houghton is pastor.

THE CHURCH AT NESQUEHONING is rejoicing over the result of its annual self-denial drive and harvest home. The pastor, Rev. H. C. Wray, knowing that the financial condition of many of the people was not of the best because of the recent suspension of work, asked them to raise but $400 to meet bills incurred during the year for repairs. The harvest home service was held Sunday evening, Nov. 26. A musical program was rendered under the direction of the pastor's wife. When the self-denial offering was taken it was found to have reached the sum of $1062. Donations for the orphanage, estimated to be worth about $400, were received. During the six o'clock service

Thanksgiving morning two large baskets were placed upon the porch of the parsonage. The church and pastor say with the psalmist, "Oh come let us sing a new song unto the Lord for he hath done marvelous things."

REV. EDWIN SIMPSON, pastor of First Church, Williamsport, has presented his resignation to take effect Jan. 31. The church voted not to accept the resignation and referred the matter to the church officers. Prior to coming to Williamsport Mr. Simpson was engaged in anti-saloon league work in Ohio, Detroit, and Rhode Island. During the five years of his pastorate in Williamsport he has vigorously pushed the work of the church and has been prominent in religious and civic affairs of the community. Mrs. Simpson has been his earnest coworker. Feeling the need of a few months' rest they are planning a tour around the world, beginning early in the new year.

THE PROTESTANT CHURCHES of Newberry, Williamsport, cooperated in a union Thanksgiving service which was held in St. Matthew's Lutheran Church. Rev. A. A. Cober, pastor of Memorial Baptist Church, preached the sermon.

Bucknell University

With a record attendance and a splendid spirit, Bucknell University is well started on the college year. With the school of music added, the registration runs close to the thousand mark, the largest in the history of the institution.

There were few faculty changes for the year. Miss Agnes MacCann, formerly of Ursinus College, has accepted the position of physical director of women, made vacant by the resignation of Miss Virginia

Walton. Miss Marian Riess, a Bucknell alumna with graduate work at the University of Texas, is instructing in Spanish. Dr. H. S. Everett, who was at Chicago on leave of absence last year, has returned to take up his work as assistant professor of mathematics, and Assistant Professor John W. Rice, of the department of biology, who was completing his doctoral work at Columbia, is back in charge of the bacteriological laboratory. Prof. B. W. Griffith, head of the department of romance languages, is enjoying his sabbatical year at Paris, and Prof. Norman H. Stewart, of the department of biology, is at Cornell on leave. Miss Carolyn Hunt is assisting for the year in the romance languages and Mrs. N. F. Davis in biology. Mr. Sturges Beers, a Bucknell graduate of last year, has been added to the staff of the English department as instructor.

The opening of the new engineering building for the work in civil and mechanical engineering, has greatly relieved the congestion in those departments.

A new infirmary, the memorial gift of Mrs. Elizabeth Jones, widow of Captain T. R. Jones, '62, has been established at the Women's College. It is supplied with complete modern equipment. The campaign of the alumnae and the undergraduate women for funds for a new women's building is progressing.

The campaign initiated among the alumni by the Athletic Council for funds for the proposed stadium is getting under way also. The original contributions have been expended in grading the new field, and it is thought that enough will be secured during the winter, by outright contributions and by the sale of bonds, to permit of erecting a sufficient part of the stadium structure to accommodate the big football games in the fall of 1923.

A new and pressing need of the institution has been revealed by the chapel situation. Bucknell Hall, which was erected in 1890 to serve as a chapel, has for a number of years been inadequate. With the inauguration of compulsory chapel service three years ago, the student-body was divided into two sections who attended "upper-class chapel," and "freshman chapel," respectively, each convening two days a week. When this fall it was found that the enrolment was too large to allow even this arrangement, the faculty, upon recommendation of the committee on chapel, excused the seniors. Thus the college is without a general student assembly.

The growing loyalty of the Baptists of Pennsylvania to their own institution is exemplified by the increasing proportion of Baptist students at the college. Twenty-six per cent of the entering class are members of Baptist churches, as against 21 per cent of the student-body last year.

The relations between the college and the local church are also growing closer. Pastor Raymond M. West by his preaching and his readiness to give individual counsel and aid to the men and women of the college is reinforcing President Hunt's personal interest in the students in a way that is bearing rich fruits. The church people also are awakened to a new sense of their responsibility in this respect. The dinner tendered Baptist men of the college by the church some time ago and the tea given the women students by ladies of the church were a success. On Nov. 26, sixty-two students were taken into student fellowship and an increasing number of them are finding in the Lewisburg Church a real church home.

ILLINOIS

REV. A. A. GORDANIER, of Paris, assisted Rev. G. W. Stoddard, pastor of the Arcola church in special meetings. The series was considered the best all around meeting held in the church for years.

AFTER A STRENUOUS QUARTER of a century of pastoral work, uninterrupted save by a trip through Bible lands and the art galleries of Europe, and before beginning the second quarter century he hopes to spend in the pastorate, Rev. H. F. Waring, of Berwyn, is taking a year or two to make a long-cherished dream of his come true. With all the work of his busy pastorates in which his churches grew in numbers, giving and influence in the community, he found time to write two books that have been well received. But all the time he dreamed of some time having a year or two for literary work to an extent that would not be compatible with the full work of regular pastorate. Largely through the generosity of the Berwyn Church, which already had repeatedly increased his salary, opportunity for at least a year of care-free writing has come. His man friends will wish him the utmost success in this "adventure," as he calls it, into the land of his dreams. In order to extend this adventure to the two years he covets Mr. Waring will be glad, beginning the first of 1923, to serve churches needing stated supply or interim pastor. Acceptably and repeatedly he has supplied Tremont Temple, Boston; Hyde Park Church, Chicago; First Church, Montclair; First Church, Providence; and White Temple, Portland, Ore. In Berwyn his greater work has been done as teacher of the Waring Community Class from which a large number of heads of families were brought into the church. The family, for some time at least, will remain in the parsonage at Berwyn.

the Akron Association, each conducted one meeting. A baptismal service for Trinity Church was held Dec. 3 at First Church, Akron. On several occasions this church has given Trinity Church the use of its baptistry.

A THREE WEEKS' MEETING closed at First Church, Struthers, Nov. 26, with twenty-three additions to the church, fifteen by baptism. Rev. A. M. Stansel, pastor, preached every sermon except three which were preached by Rev. E. J. Baldwin, of Macdonald, the last week of the revival. The church was greatly revived and the attendance of the church and Sunday school increased.

MICHIGAN

JAY EVERETT DIED at his home in Chelsea, Nov. 13, at the age of ninety-five. He remembered when the Baptist church in this vicinity was organized in 1833 at Jerusalem. So long as health permitted he was an earnest worker in the church.

THROUGH THE INVITATION of the pastor, Rev. S. B. Crandell, the First Church of Battle Creek had as its guests the members of the Emmett Township Farmers' Club, Sunday, Nov. 26. The members of the club and their families occupied most of the middle section of the auditorium during the sermon, which was appropriate to the Thanksgiving season. After the Bible school session, to which all remained, tables were spread, and a substantial dinner, furnished partly by the farmers and partly by the church, was served by women of the church. At the close of the dinner Rev. George W. Lawrence, director of town and country work among the churches of the Michigan Convention, gave an address, and at 3 o'clock Prof. W. S. Columbus gave an organ recital. This attempt to enlarge the circle of service of the church was highly appreciated by the farmers, all of whom live within a few miles of the city, yet several confessed it was the first church service they had attended in years.

O. D. CONRAY WAS ORDAINED at the Bevan Church, Grand Rapids, recently. Rev. O. W. Van Osdel was moderator and L. M. Wright of Middleville, clerk of the council.

MINNESOTA

THE WORLD WIDE GUILD Committee of Minnesota is sponsor for the Minnesota fifty-year House Party to be held at the Bethel Academy, Dec. 27-29. All Baptist young ladies are invited to attend. There will be Bible study, a great deal of recreation, outdoor sports and many parties. Several distinguished guests will be present: Miss Levina Meed, Japan; Miss Vera Ice, Denison University; Mrs. J. J. Runan. Send registrations to Miss May Earl, 1645 Summit Avenue, St. Paul.

MISSOURI

PATEE PARK CHURCH, A. J. Rendleman, pastor, is preparing for a revival meeting which Rev. O. P. Bishop of Kansas City is to help. Several prayer meetings are being held each Sunday evening prior to the preaching hour.

IOWA

DR. AND MRS. HENRY RILEY BEST have been holding a twelve days' series of meetings at First Church, Creston, Rev. J. Hamilton Woodsum, pastor. Dr. Best, pastor of Forest Avenue Church, Des Moines, which released him for these meetings. The Bests have done a fine piece of constructive work in Creston. Dr. Best's leading of the choir will show permanent results. The choir has been reorganized and is planning larger achievements in the future. Dr. Best has preached earnestly and effectively. Seven decisions for Christ were made and the church membership is deeply stirred and ready to go forward with the evangelistic appeal.

REV. WM. A. WALDO WHO recently closed an evangelistic campaign with twelve churches cooperating, in Muscatine, is now with the Riverside Church, Jacksonville, Fla. Two invitations for evangelistic campaigns in London, Eng., during the summer complete his program until Oct. 1, 1923.

KANSAS

PRATT CHURCH, Rev. L. B. Parker, pastor, has closed a revival meeting in which fifty united with the church, forty by baptism.

REV. L. E. MARVIN, of Kingman, is in a three-weeks' meeting with Goshen Church, near Sawyer. Several have been converted.

REV. L. P. PARKER HAS closed a meeting in Greensburg. The house was too small for the number who attended. Several united with the church.

Pacific Coast

WEST WASHINGTON

Oct. 29 was a good day for First Church of Hoquiam. It realized what it had been waiting years to see—a new modern church building completed, with Sunday school and B. Y. P. U. well provided for. The social needs of the church have not been overlooked. A good heating plant has been installed, art glass windows have been placed in the building and a carpet which covers the whole auditorium, has been given by the Ladies' Aid. Dr. Alonzo M. Petty, of California, was at the opening services. The morning sermon was on "The Strategic Importance of a Baptist Meeting House," the evening on "The Stewardship of Life." The church felt well repaid for having Dr. Petty come. With what had been pledged before, and with what Dr. Petty raised at the two services about $8,000 was realized. A balance is still needed, but it is believed that by earnest effort and prayer this will be raised. The Baptists of Hoquiam are looking forward to a new day. Evangelist L. C. Root has been on the field about a year. In that time improvements valued at $15,000 have been made to the church property. The Baptists have now a plant which is second to none in the city.

OREGON

THE BETHEL CHURCH of Gresham called Rev. D. Q. Barry, formerly of Michigan, to the pastorate last January. Upon his arrival there was no house to rent for the pastor. During the year a new parsonage has been erected on the church lot at a cost of $4,000. It is nearly all paid for and a much needed church building is now being planned for.

THE NEW ALOHA BAPTIST church building was used for the first time on Nov. 23, when the church gathered for its mid-week prayer service. The following Sunday the attendance was close to 150. Aloha is a suburb of Portland, fourteen miles distant, connected by frequent direct train service, and hard surfaced highway.

Several months ago a request from the community came that the Baptists organize a church. Rev. J. E. Maguire was invited to take charge of the work and became the first pastor. The church was organized with twelve members. The membership now is nearly fifty. For several months the Sunday school and church services were held in a rented hall, when the necessity of a church edifice became apparent. Upon the Townsite Company donating lots, a canvass of the community was made, resulting in the securing of funds for the erection of a building that will cost in the neighborhood of $5,000. The state missionary, Rev. G. L. Hall, was sent to the field to assist in the raising of funds, and found a ready response on the part of the members and the community generally. The property has been deeded to the Oregon State Convention in trust for the Aloha Church, the convention adding a gift to aid in the construction of the building.

FOLLOWING A CANVASS of one of the unchurched districts in Portland by Missionary Carrie Millsbaugh, the Grace Church, Rev. G. F. Huckleberry, pastor, organized a Sunday school. With the financial assistance of the convention, equipment has been secured and a meeting place provided. On Nov. 19 the school, with fifty-seven scholars in attendance, was opened. The following Sunday ninety-seven were present. It is the purpose not only to conduct this Sunday school in the community, but later to provide a preaching service and hold evangelistic services.

FOR MORE THAN TWO YEARS a mission has been maintained by the East Side Church, Portland, in a building formerly occupied by the Tabernacle Church, the few remaining members of the Tabernacle Church having united with the East Side. The state convention spent approximately $900 in refurnishing and beautifying the building with the understanding on the part of the East Side Church that it would develop a work in that growing field. This has resulted in a Sunday school with an attendance of more than 100, which is followed by a preaching service by one of the laymen of the East Side Church, Mr. Hansen. Following the example of Paul, Mr. Hansen earns his own living but finds time to devote two afternoons each week to visitation upon the field, assist in the conduct of the Sunday school, conduct the week-night prayer meeting, and preach every Sunday morning.

A MARKED INCREASE of interest in the Chinese Mission of Portland has become manifest. A year ago several members of the Baptist Chinese Mission, who are also members of the First Church of Portland, returned to China. Loss of these workers was sorely felt by the mission in Portland. Last July two or three of the families returned to Portland. The mission was reorganized, and the renewed interest has been gratifying. The attendance upon the services at Sunday school and at the preaching services is the largest in years. On a recent evening many of the Portland Chinese, with hundreds of their friends of America, assembled in the White Temple to witness a wedding when Pastor Thomas J. Villers joined in marriage Mr. Taka Soo, and Miss Mable Leo. Both are devoted workers in the mission. Mr. Soo is a graduate of the Oregon Agricultural College of Corvallis, and is one of the highest graded students graduated from that institution. It is more than probable that he will return to China as a teacher in one of the Christian colleges. His father was a Methodist minister, and he and his wife are products of devoted Christian homes.

INTEREST AT THE TWO Italian missions in Portland is on the increase. Rev. Eugene Fanetti and his wife are meeting with encouragement at the Forty-fourth Street Mission, where a year ago the convention built a chapel with living quarters for the missionary and family. Miss Helen Gibson, a recent appointee of the women's society and convention, is proving herself capable in developing the industrial work at the Tibbett's Street Mission. Volunteer workers from the East Side Church assist Miss Gibson, while workers from the Glencoe Church assist in the work at the Forty-fourth Street Mission. The Italians of Portland have been slow to accept Protestantism, but a good work has been carried on amongst the children for a number of years.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

ON LINCOLN'S BIRTHDAY last, Thousand Oaks Church, Berkeley, was organized with sixty-seven constituent members, forty-three of whom were members of the First Church, Berkeley, before this new church was begun. Nine members have been baptized since and eleven have been received by letter. In the midst of a recent Sunday service one man came forward spontaneously and declared his purpose to confess Christ in baptism. This church already has two missions—one in Albany, the other in Cragmont. The New World Movement is receiving generous support. The church is bravely getting under a building fund, $10,000 having been subscribed as a beginning. The tent in which services have been held was badly damaged by fire Thursday, Nov. 23 so that of necessity the church assemblies in restricted quarters in the public school. Two hundred pounds of clothing have been "rushed to Russia" and a liberal Christmas box and $40 have been sent to Miss Mollie McMinn, missionary representative in China. Rev. Albert Ehrhott, pastor, has served churches in Conneaut, in Springfield, and Cleveland, Ohio; Portland, Ore. and Rangoon, Burma.

Semi-Annual of Women of San Jose Association

Watsonville was the place; Friday, Nov. 24, the time. Apple harvest, and drier going, yet two women and a man gave up their day's pay to attend the missionary semi-annual of the women of the San Jose Association. A man and his wife lost $7 pay to attend a missionary meeting!

Forenoon devotional period was led by Rev. Mr. Fenner of Santa Cruz, acting pastor of Watsonville church.

Mrs. Rogers of Salinas presided during the meeting. Mrs. Ruth Watson of Sunnyvale, for years associational director of women's work, was present with many ideas. San Jose Association contains mostly small churches, but there were good reports, including mention of such things as the Japanese mission at Salina (the Japanese pastor's wife being from Sendai, Japan). Rev. H. C. Mathew spoke on the cycle of prayer, and the Japanese Sunday school (held on Saturday) by himself and others a mile from Santa Clara. Mrs. Rogers reported fifty-seven Japanese children in the Sunday schools near Salinas. Salinas is going down-town into Chinatown to hold Christmas entertainment.

The afternoon was taken with a round table. At Sunnyvale, the men's class has bought a missionary book! At Santa Clara, Rev. H. C. Mathews was starting his Baracas studying Panunzio's "Soul of an Immigrant." Mrs. M. E. Wilson of Grace Church, San Jose, reported dried fruit sent to Miss Mary Jones of Huchov (Prunes are San Jose's fruit, as apple are Watsonville's.) Rev. Homer Naberry, who ministers to the little church at Lake, took part in the questions and answers. The S. O. S. call of Swatow was presented vividly, and the collection which was taken for Swatow that afternoon amounted to over $22. Miss En Johnson, who went from San Francisco Chinese work to Swatow, and who suffered the loss of so much in the disaster was spoken of kindly. Mrs. John Snape, wife of the pastor of the First Church, Oakland, made the closing address of the afternoon. A box of apples at the church door, for us all to help ourselves ere we caught our trains! The generous little scattered California churches, kept alive by faithful few where women read missionary books where hearts thrill to this world's need how much such churches mean to Northern California!—MARY E. BAMFORD.

And the Indians Stayed Through

No one can help but be impressed by the willingness of the Christian Hopi to talk of Christ even in the face of persecution. Recently the interpreter on the Hopi field at Toreva, Ariz., was ill and Miss Dorothy Humes, the missionary, could find no one else who could take his place. She explained the situation to one of the men, and he said, in a very matter-of-fact tone, "I'll talk to them in Hopi." The sermon was an hour long!

Recent street meetings have been a great source of blessing, and a means of winning many new souls to the Jesus road. One of the leaders scheduled for such a service a short time ago was unable to go at the last minute and the missionary was forced to call on another man to give a short talk with no preparation. The short talk turned out to be fifty minutes of straight-from-the-Scripture facts!

Unfortunately this work is being seriously hampered by lack of a good portable organ. The one at present in use is very old and "wheezy," and does more to hinder than to help. If there is any one who is interested particularly in this fine work among the Hopis and would like to help in the most valuable possible way, see that such an organ is sent to Miss Corinne Potts at Polacca, Ariz. A slightly used organ in good condition would be appreciated if a brand new one cannot be provided.

The Standing of States In the "Advance"

States are divided into classes according to the total number of Baptist Sunday schools. Class One includes states with 90 or more schools. Class Two is states with 150 to 400 schools. Class Three has 50 schools or less. The percentage of registered schools ranks the states as follows:

Class one: 1. Illinois, 2. Maine, 3. Indiana, 4. Pennsylvania, 5. New York, 6. Ohio, 7. West Virginia, 8. Kansas.

Class two: 1. New Jersey, 2. Nebraska, 3. Iowa, 4. Wisconsin, 5. Minnesota, 6. Michigan, 7. Washington, 8. Massachusetts, 9. Connecticut.

Class three: 1. S. California, 2. Idaho, 3. Montana, 4. Oregon, 5. Rhode Island, 6. Arizona, 7. S. Dakota, 8. Vermont, 9. N. California, 10. Wyoming, 11. New Hampshire, 12. Colorado, 13. N. Dakota, 14. Delaware.

The total registrations to date are 1459 schools. It is not yet too late for your state to win.

Pennsylvania leads in number of registration—141.

S. California and Idaho lead Class three with 51 per cent. New Jersey and Nebraska lead Class Two with 33 per cent.

Can we reach that 2000?

What about the man on a salary? He should tithe his full salary less any necessary expense in earning it. Car-fare to his work, depreciation on tools he might have purchased, and similar items would be business expense.

How about the pastor who lives in church parsonage? He should add the rental value of the parsonage to his cash salary and tithe the total amount, less any items that would be "business expense." If he has to keep an automobile to do his work, the upkeep of that (so far as he uses it for his work and not for personal pleasure) would be a business expense. In some cases the parsonage is much more expensive than he could afford to rent. In such case he should add a fair rental for such house as he would rent if he hired it himself.

How about the man who owns the house he lives in? He should add to his income the rental value of the house, less the cost of its upkeep.

When in doubt give the Lord the benefit of the doubt. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all liberally and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him."

clear vision into the realities and glories of the eternal world.

(3) There is still one more argument found in the beneficent influence of the doctrine of a future life.

"By their fruits ye shall know them." There is great value in the practical test of a doctrine. If it does not bear a good fruitage, this is good evidence that it is not truth. But if it does then it is proof that it is true.

The belief in a future life has always had a very helpful restraining power. It dignifies and magnifies life. It becomes a great inspiration to right living. It has great possibilities of comfort.

A doctrine that bears such a fruitage of blessing must be true. So all these arguments converge in emphasizing the fact of the reality of the future life.

But we should ever bear in mind that the future life is most intimately connected with this life. We project into that future the character we have here. This life is the preparatory department of eternity. Out from that unseen world Christ came to help us that we might make this life all it should be, that thus we may be prepared to enter into all the blessings and possibilities of the life eternal.

We need fear death's power no longer, Christ is mighty now to save, Death by him was fully conquered, When he came forth from the grave. He is able to deliver All who put their trust in him, Since he rose o'er death victorious, Naught can e'er his glory dim.

Life abundant he is ready
Unto all to freely give,
And because he lives triumphant,
We in him shall also live,
Since he lives our risen Savior,
We may know each passing hour,
The uplift and inspiration,
Of his resurrection power.

Our Book Shelf

Self Healing Simplified, by George Landor Perin. New York: Doran Co. $1.50 net.

"The only real ambition I have had in writing this book," says Mr. Perin, "has been to make a simple, easily understood statement of how every man may live at his best and keep himself healthy and efficient." Mr. Perin has proved his right to speak with some authority on this subject. He is the author also of "How I Was Healed of Paralysis."

Red-Robin, by Jane Abbott. New York: J. B. Lippincott Co. $1.75.

The story of Robin Forsythe who falls heir to a fortune—a lonely rich girl until she makes friends with Beryl, a chore-girl, and Beryl's brother, a mill worker. She becomes interested in the mill workers. In a crisis she distinguishes herself. There is a moment of high suspense toward the end of the story followed by a delightful surprise.

Polly the Pagan, by Isabel Anderson. Boston: Page Co. $1.90.

A vivacious story of Polly in "high society" in Europe, the medium used being the letters Polly writes and receives. A Russian prince figures in these letters and also a good clean American boy. The chief interest is as to which of these Polly will marry.

Tarbell's Teacher's Guide to the International Sunday School Lessons for 1923, prepared by Martha Tarbell, Ph. D. New York: Fleming H. Revell. $2.

The "Guide" is a comprehensive book of 432 pages which covers the lessons of the year, illuminating and explaining the text. Maps and illustrations assist in this. The lessons are treated as a tonic for young people and adults and as a topic for intermediates and seniors. It is a book which will make any Sunday-school teacher a better teacher.

The Home God Meant, by George N. Luccock, Pastor College Church, Wooster, Ohio. Philadelphia: The Westminster Press. $1.25.

The volume is a literary gem as well as a most wholesome discussion of the nature, development, sanctity and blessedness of the home. The reputation of Dr. Luccock would lead us to expect a classic on such a subject, and we are not disappointed. In these days of laxness and desecration of home life this volume will be a wonderful help to the preacher and writer in furnishing suggestions and kindling inspiration of what and how to utter proper and wise things on the subject.

Is The Bible The Word of God? by W. Graham Scroggie. Philadelphia: Sunday School Times Company, $1.00.

In a small volume of 121 pages the author has packed the most important evidence, historical, internal and experimental, for the plenary inspiration of the whole Bible. The brief of his argument which falls under the three heads—It seems to be; it claims to be; it proves to be—is both clear and complete. The argument is purely constructive; the critics and opponents of the author's view are not even favored with a word of attention. The book will prove reassuring and salutary to disturbed faith.

On Tiptoe, by Stewart Edward White. New York: Doran Co.

A redwood forest of California—the stage; a magnate, his secretary, his daughter, an English valet, a mysterious stranger, a Pomeranian and an Irish setter—the players; a broken gas tank, a deluge, a Ford run by some power more uncanny than its reputation—the deus machina. The plot revolves around the magnate's contract with the stranger to secure the patent rights of this new motive power, all of which is thwarted by the love match—running on high speed between the damsel and the young author who is not after all a garage mechanic and by the fatal loss of the battery which would have revolutionized modern industry. The author inserts in not too frequent intervals trenchant observation slanting in the direction of social uplift. Altogether, the story is clean and replete with thrills, although its principal contribution is mental relaxation—legitimate and valuable in these days of high pressure.

The Preacher And His Sermon, by Rev. J. Paterson Smyth. New York: Doran. $1.50

In this small volume is a series of lectures on preaching, delivered to the divinity students and junior college in the University of Trinity College, Dublin.

The first chapter, or lecture, deals with the personality of the preacher. If the young clergyman feels that he must preach on such subjects as "higher criticism," "doubt and skepticism," he is urged in the second chapter to exercise modesty, sincerity, and, above all, honesty in offering criticism or quotation. The third lecture is an unsparing condemnation of ministerial laziness in sermon preparation, an urgent plea for definite, hard work in the study. Probably the greatest chapter is the fourth, on "The Quality of Grip." The preacher who is inclined to "juggle with phrases" while he "floats on a sea of words" is instructed to grip, clean and sharply, the deep, fascinating and often exciting realities that lie back of the words and phrases of the Bible. The last two lectures are on "Preparing the Sermon" and "Preaching the Sermon."

"It Is to Laugh"

The defendant, held in an Ohio court on the charge of keeping a dog without a license, repeatedly tried to interrupt the evidence, but was hushed each time by the court. Finally the clerk turned to him and said: "Do you wish the court to understand that you refuse to renew your dog license?"

"Yes, but—"

"We want no 'buts.' You must renew your license or be fined. You know expired on Jan. 1."

"Yes," said the defendant, "and so did the dog."

It was a concert in connection with the Sunday school anniversary, and when Freddy was called upon to give his recitation his nerve failed completely. Staring trembling before the sympathetic audience, he seemed as if he could not make a start.

Persuasion was tried, but in vain. He broke into sobs and finally was sent back to his seat.

The officiating minister seized the opportunity to pour out consolation and also give encouragement for the good boy.

"Well, friends," he remarked, "it is a very nice thing to stand here and look at all your faces."

REVIEWS

From The Lorenz Publishing Co., Dayton, Ohio.

The Choir Leader for December.

This number of the choir magazine is devoted to music for the Christmas season and the usual variety of valuable articles bearing on the situation in music as connected with the church service. As always, it is useful and inspiring.

From The Clayton F. Summy Co., Chicago.

The Birth of Love.....Lester

A practical cantata for Christmas or general use. Any chorus of average attainments could pre-ent this work with ease; the many varied ensembles and solos afford plenty of variety and opportunity, and there is an organ part of more than usual interest. The effective text is composed of graceful lyrics by Mary Louise Dawson and selections from the Scriptures. Most of the separate numbers contained in the work can be used to advantage as separate anthems during the church year—an economical feature worthy of attention. The cantata has already met with a cordial welcome from the critics for its melodic beauty and its practical value.

From The White-Smith Pub. Co., Boston.

Since you have gone.....Hadley
A Roundup Lullaby.....Ross
A Christmas Lullaby.....Lester

Two secular songs of interest, and an unusual sacred number for the Christmas season. The first two are concert songs from the pens of successful composers, attractive and individual. The "Christmas Lullaby" is a grateful setting of an eloquent poem by Frederick Gratiot, set to pleasing music by the editor of this page. It is quite different from the conventional Christmas song, and for that reason will probably gain more than usual attention. The accompaniment is equally effective for piano or for organ; the song is issued in two keys.

From The Rodeheaver Co., Chicago.

Rodeheaver's Gospel Songs.
Of new hymn-books and their making there is no end! And they are of all paces, from highest "high-brow" to a la baret! But when such a noted leader as Homer Rodeheaver, wise with the wisdom gained by years of active work in the field as chorister for Billy Sunday, puts forth a volume—that is something different. Many with a keen knowledge of the possibilities of the human race when it comes to express itself in song, adept in appreciating the peculiarities of the vocal complex, inspired with a desire to give good a grade of music as can be sung, yet careful not to strike an alien note of merely the pedantic and exotic, when Mr. Rodeheaver, loyally backed up by his music-editor, Mr. Gabriel, presents the result of his labors in the shape of a complete hymnal it is up to us to treat it with respect. One sure thing, the hymn-allying public will pay little attention as to how we treat it as a critical subject. There is no doubt but that they will buy in large quantities, for it is chockful of inspiring and devotional music. It is the idiom of Bach, Brahms, or Elgar—it is not the manner of expression used by Sullivan, Noble or Candlyn. It is largely that typically American type—the "gospel-hymn," so cursed and berated by the critics, yet so full of vitality that it seems to thrive on kicks and dissent. But it is not all new material—many of the older, much-loved hymns are there; and all of the tunes will be of great practical use in the Sunday school, in the revival service, in the chapel—wherever simple music marked by sincerity and devotion is desired. An added attraction is the fine orchestration published for the book—Sunday school and church bands will enjoy supplying enthusiastic foundation for lusty choral excerpts from this new hymnal.

THE CALL OF MUSIC

A young man like many another writes me from Cleveland, Ohio, that a great artist had recently advised two of her pupils against accepting music as a profession. He says that his father and mother agreed with this, so he appeals to me because he wants to know whether he should go on with his musical studies or go into business but carry music as an added interest. His desire is to become a concert pianist, so he asks for a candid opinion.

His case is like that of thousands of others who feel the call of music, have a certain amount of talent, have studied for a few years perhaps under very competent teachers, but find the members of their family opposed to their entering upon a professional career and even find, as in this case, an eminent teacher advising against taking up a professional musical career.

My reply to this young man is, as it has been to others, that the field in this country is already overcrowded with mediocrities, the "all but" as I call them. Those that are "all but" well equipped for success.

Then, too, it must not be forgotten, that through the great progress we have made in musical knowledge and culture, through the standards that are being constantly raised by the great artists who come to us and also by our own talents, it is far more difficult today to make a success than it used to be.

Not long ago a talented young girl who had a good voice could swim through with a repertoire of four or five Italian operas. She could do so in Europe. But since then times have changed. Operatic artists today who would be successful must have a great repertoire, be able to sing in several languages and must have some dramatic ability as well. Otherwise their chances of success, and certainly chances of coming into the front rank are very limited.

There is another point, however, which should be seriously considered by young people who are ambitious of success as professionals in the musical world. Do they love their art sufficiently to go through the years of drudgery, self-denial, lack of success, till the prize is won, or are they simply looking to the reward and taking up music as men would take up any mercantile pursuit "for all there is in it"?

If they are in the latter class, they had better stay out, for they will never be able to make the appeal that will win success.—Musical America.

Country Life Conference for Negroes

THE first Country Life Conference for Negroes was held at Johnstown, W. Va., Nov. 24-26, by the state of West Virginia, cooperating with the agricultural work of Storer College. The moving spirit in this venture was Prof. H. H. Winters, teacher of agriculture at the college.

It is significant that such a conference had never before been tried. The people came from miles around and though the weather was unpropitious, the attendance and interest grew till the last lecture was delivered.

There were thirty families represented in the immediate vicinity of the conference, most of whom are freeholders or those who rent and successfully manage prosperous farms. In the community live a number of graduates of Storer College. One farmer reported a wheat crop of something over 1,700 bushels and a corn crop of about 500 barrels which in West Virginia means 2,500 bushels of corn on the cob. Several of the farmers have holdings which in value number several thousand dollars.

This conference was under the immediate direction of Mr. Nat. T. Frame, director of agriculture extension, University of West Virginia. Associated with him was Prof. A. R. Rapking, Wesleyan College, specialist in rural organization, and Mr. J. E. Banks, state supervisor of "Four H Clubs" in West Virginia.

Prof. Rapking said: "This is as good a conference as any of the 62 of which I have had a part. In intelligent interest, close attention and general neatness of appearance of the groups, this gathering was the equal of any I have had the pleasure of conducting."

It is a matter of special note that the score on business was the highest of all scores assessed as to the community and in this the average was as high as any community in the state and higher than many communities in which conferences have been held.

The score card for community work includes the following: Community spirit, citizenship, recreation, health, homes, schools, churches, business, farms—as to soils, farms—as to products. On a possible perfect score of 1,000 points, Johnstown scored the gratifying number of 664. And this, according to those in charge, was quite well above the average for the first time a community was scored.

Many went away saying that next year things would be still better, for then the people would know what to work towards in order to make this country community one that would be well-nigh perfect.

HENRY T. McDONALD.

Has Any Other Church Done This?

MONDAY'S reputation for gloom was being well sustained on this particular day. There seemed many reasons for feeling blue at headquarters of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society. Then something happened that would make a gala day out of the bluest of gloomy days. In walked a gentleman from New Jersey, with the news that his church had finished paying its entire New World Movement pledge, for the five years, with about five hundred dollars over. That being done, they were ready to take on some special work. They wished to assume responsibility for the return passage and salary of two of the missionaries who were being retained in this country because of lack of funds. The gentleman who brought so much sunshine and encouragement with him, was the Rev. Lee James Beynon of the Calvary Baptist Church, Clifton, N. J. That was not all. A few days later he returned to say that the money would be forthcoming for the expenses of a third missionary—all of these special blessings to be "over and above" gifts.

The three missionaries whom the church is "adopting" are Dr. Clara C. Leach who is to return to South China, and Miss Lillian V. Wagner and Miss Edith P. Ballard, who go to South India.

The New World Movement calendars for 1923 are now being sent out at an average rate of 2,000 per day. This is no surprising as the new calendar is even more attractive than the one issued for 1922.

Thirty million people have passed through the OUTER GATE to America. It has been an IRON GATE. There is a SECOND GATE—an INNER GATE, opening upon the America of our ideals. The secret of this inner, better America is a living faith in God; a belief in the supreme worth of human personality above all material wealth; love, sympathy and understanding, and the assurance that the fulness of life which is the purpose of a loving father is to come from the living Spirit of Christ in the regeneration of every life and all of life.

The Task of the Christian Church Is to Keep Wide Open the SECOND GATE and to Resolve that None Shall Miss the Way.

Fresh from the Field

The First and South Baptist churches of Hartford, Conn., have the matter of consolidation under consideration. If the plan works out the property of First Church, which has long been considered one of the most valuable sites in Hartford, will be sold. The new plan may involve provision for denominational headquarters in the proposed new building.

The Volunteers of America have been refused permission to solicit money for Christmas on the streets of New York. From the press reports this action seems to be the result of failure of the Volunteers to carry out the letter of the instructions of Bird S. Coler, commissioner of public welfare. We understand the matter has been carried to the courts.

The Wadsworth Avenue Church, New York, is to lose its pastor, Rev. E. S. Holloway. Speaking of the relations which have existed between pastor and people, Mr. Holloway says, "It is a real trial to take this step. In nearly thirty-nine years of my ministry I think at no time have I been happier in my work." The church has a building project under way and Mr. Holloway believes it would be unwise for him to assume the added burden involved.

By the clumsy mistake of a supposedly ubiquitous reporter of a Boston journal, the name of our honored brother, Rev. Geo. A. Lawson, pastor of the Union Square church, Somerville, Mass., was confused with that of a minister of the same name in another state who had disgraced himself. Swiftly such false reports spread far and wide. In justice to one who is being hurt by this blunder we make this explanation. Pastor Lawson is entirely above reproach. Such men should be protected and not besmirched by decent but too enterprising newspapers.

Rev. Edwin Simpson, pastor of the First church, Williamsport, Pa., has insisted that the church accept his resignation. For years he has planned an extensive trip and will leave with Mrs. Simpson, Jan. 22, for Cuba, Panama, San Francisco, Honolulu, Japan, China, Burma, India and Egypt. He expects to spend at least three months in the Holy Land and Europe where he hopes to be able to attend the World's Baptist Alliance next July. The church twice rejected the resignation and voted to grant the pastor a six months' leave of absence. Mr. Simpson has served the church for about four years. One hundred and twenty have been added to the church on confession of faith and baptism, sixty-five by letter, fifteen by experience and restoration. First Church is one of the churches that oversubscribed its quota to the New World Movement. The readers of THE BAPTIST will hope to hear from Mr. and Mrs. Simpson during the next six months.

First Church, Houston, Texas, raised in a cash offering on Dec. 3, $61,276. The amount called for was $50,000. This offering paid for the new basement-auditorium which seats 2000. The main auditorium will probably be built soon, with a seating capacity of 2500, costing $150,000. The Sunday-school building has just been completed at a cost of $217,000. This offering in its nature is probably unprecedented. There was no gift larger than $1,000. Probably more than 2500 individual gifts were made. Unity and cooperation of the membership which exceeds 3400 is beautiful, even miraculous. The follow-up campaign proposes to swell the amount to $75,000. James B. Leavell has just rounded out five years in this pastorate during which time more than 3,000 have joined the church, a net gain of over 2,000.

Mrs. Henry W. Peabody writes: "We are anxiously awaiting returns for the Women's Union Christian Colleges in the Orient. The campaign ends Jan. 1, though checks will be received through January. Many are asking to keep the candle cards over Christmas when families will make their gifts, lighting candles in his name. Send to Mrs. Henry W. Peabody, 300 Ford Building, Boston, Mass., for cards and literature. We must not fail to secure this conditional gift."

The Georgia Baptist Convention at its recent session adopted by unanimous vote one of the most scathing denunciations of lynching on record and called upon the

Prayer of the Toiler

FATHER, I have a work to do.
It is not easy work, nor is it exactly what I would choose if I had my way. But it came along the pathway of life, and stood there fronting me, and challenged me to dare it. Sometimes it irks me, and parts of it are sharp and sting me like nettles, but it is my work and not another's. I would do it well, not merely with my hands and brain, but investing my very self in it and accompanying the task with singing. Help me to be grateful for this toil of mine and for the little acre where I sow and tend and garner, and may I reckon that in the toil itself, and in the joy of it, is the real and ample reward for what I am doing through the days and years. And whether the sun be out or hid, whether the air be mild or chill, help me to stand, strong, hailing the passing planets with the zeal which only the toiler knows.
Amen.

good citizenship of the country, as represented in the churches, to sound its death knell. Whatever the pretext, said the convention, lynching is murder, barbarous, heathenish and diabolical, a cancer on society and a disgrace to civilization. Mobs, it denounces as a menace to government, society and the church. The statement was presented by Rev. L. A. Henderson, of Columbus, Ga., as part of the social service report.

The Northwestern Baptist Hospital Association, which conducts Mounds Park Sanitarium, Merriam Park and Midway Hospitals, St. Paul, not only believes in the spiritual factor in its work of healing the sick but has made definite provision for carrying on a definite program of religious activities in each of these institutions by the appointment of a series of subcommittees composed of Twin City Baptist ministers and laymen. These committees have been instructed to work out a definite spiritual program recommending definite things to the executive committee for approval. The program includes regular vesper services in each of the hospitals, systematic visitation of patients by Twin City pastors, organized volunteer Bible study for employees, distribution of denominational publications and additional activities which will be developed later.

The newsboys of Stockton, Cal., root for Rev. Rufus Keyser, pastor in that city. The banquet rooms of his church were the scene of a big Thanksgiving feast for the boys. The big dinner was financed by the Baptist brotherhood.

The "Fundamentalist" is a new semi-monthly paper edited by Dr. John Rouch Straton. It succeeds the Religious Searchlight with which many of our readers are familiar. The change in name was decided upon because too many "searchlights" seemed to be played upon the denomination at large. Mr. E. C. Miller of New York the superintendent of the religious literature department of the Calvary Church is a prominent factor in the new paper. The Calvary pulpit carries a sermon by the pastor is a feature of the periodical. The subscription price is $2 a year.

Dr. Mary W. Bacheler, a missionary of the Woman's Foreign Mission Society, returning from furlough, has arrived safely with her party in Bengal-Orissa, British India. With her were three new missionaries, Miss Victoria Christenson, going to Assam, Miss Naomi Knapp who was on her way to Bengal-Orissa, and Miss Helen Bailey whose destination was South India. "This voyage will always stand out as the very best," writes Dr. Bacheler. "The fellowship with the other missionaries (sixty-five Presbyterian missionaries for Egypt, the Sudan and India were on board) the gatherings for service, the chats, the sings, the pleasant cordiality of the captain, the good weather and many other things have had their share in making it the best."

Rev. S. P. Shaw, general superintendent of the South Dakota Convention, residing at Sioux Falls, has had a wide and highly successful experience in assisting churches to raise funds for church buildings. In South Dakota and other states where Dr. Shaw has lived he has frequently been called upon to do this work. Recently, although heavily burdened with the tasks of the state convention work which has tremendously grown during his years of service in South Dakota, he found time to visit an Omaha, Neb., church and assist to raise in pledges and in cash $15,000.

Why not send a copy of the "Book of Remembrance" to one of our home missionaries? Through a special arrangement all of our foreign missionaries are receiving a copy of the book for 1923, but this has not been possible in the case of our home missionaries. If you send 2 cents to the Literature Department of The General Board of Promotion, 27 Fifth Ave., New York, with the request that a copy be sent to one of our home missionaries it will be forwarded and the name and address of the missionary will be sent to you, so that you can write to your missionary if you wish. Or you can send the name of the missionary to whom you want the copy of the book mailed. This is a fine opportunity to do a good service to some of our faithful home missionaries.

Twelve Baptist clergymen are now serving as chaplains in the United States Navy according to the latest bulletin issued by Capt. E. W. Scott, representing the Chaplain Corps at the Navy Department in Washington. Only three denominations have a larger representation than they are the Methodists with eighteen

Evangelizing Agencies

"Why should we be interested in our denominational journals?"

"Because—They are evangelizing agencies and every Christian's supreme duty is to promote Christ's cause.

"Because—They give a knowledge of kingdom advance or retrogression throughout the world.

"Because—They tell us of good works performed by others, thus stimulating similar works in us.

"Because—They keep us informed of changes in church leadership, and thus make us up-to-date in local church history.

"Because—As Baptists, we can only obtain the foregoing information, as to our own denomination, through Baptist journals.

—these are only a few reasons, could give many more and not exhaust the subject."—W. G. BRIMSON, President Baptist Executive Council of Chicago.

Our Denominational Responsibility

"Why subscribe for THE BAPTIST and Missions? Because it is the duty of every Christian to know about the progress of Christ's kingdom in this world. In particular it is the duty of each of us to know what part in this progress belongs to our own denomination, in other words, what is our denominational responsibility. This it is the business of THE BAPTIST and Missions to tell us, and surely they do it well. The circle is complete when we subscribe for these two periodicals and read them with regularity and interest. Because reading together of our common task tends to bring us together in sympathy and purpose and to give us that union which is the first necessity of strength.

"Because to do our great task, to meet our great opportunities, we have not only a sense of duty but deep interest and enthusiasm and these things come inevitably from knowing in detail of the achievements, the opportunities, the problems in the various fields where we Baptists are striving to advance Christ's kingdom and to bring mankind into allegiance to him and his truth.

"Let us, therefore, in spite of the multiplicity of other interests, take time to read regularly our two notable publications, THE BAPTIST and Missions."

Mission Society.

The Why of General Feng's Christianity

THE Acts of the Apostles did not end with the last verse of the twenty-eighth chapter of the book of Acts. Read this great twentieth century Bible story of General Feng (pronounced Fung) and Mary Morrill. In the Acts of the Apostles of the first century, we read:

"And they cast him out of the city and stoned him; and the witnesses laid down their garments at the feet of a young man whose name was Saul. And they stoned Stephen, calling upon the Lord, and saying, Lord Jesus, receive my spirit. And he kneeled down and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. * * And Saul was consenting unto his death." There might have been written: "The Boxers cast her out of the city and stoned her; and the witnesses laid down their clothes at a young soldier's feet whose name was Feng. * * She kneeled down and cried with a loud voice, Take my life, but spare those of my co-workers within the wall and 'Lord, lay not this sin to their charge.' * * And Soldier Feng was consenting to her death."

That happened in 1900 A. D.

Mary S. Morrill, a beautiful American girl from Maine, was the woman, and the great General Feng, was the soldier.

Mary Morrill was so timid that as a young girl, although she wanted to become a missionary, she feared that should any difficult crisis arise, she would be a coward "and run away." So for years she prayed for the courage to go to China, and when at last the courage came, she went to Pao-Ting-Fu, a city south of Peking in the province of Chihli.

Not many years later, Boxers were looming up everywhere; they told the people that foreigners' bullets could not kill them, so they could be trusted to rid China of all foreigners. What railroads there were, were torn up, and people were besieged within high city walls, for all roads were dangerous. No "foreigners" and no Chinese who were disciples of the "foreigners" were safe. The attacks came so suddenly that many were unable to escape to the port towns for safety. Eight American missionaries were caught in the little city of Pao-Ting-Fu. Rumors reached them constantly that they would be massacred on this day, or the next day.

Finally, Miss Morrill, once the timid girl in Maine, left the house without letting her comrades know that she had gone. She passed through the narrow quiet alleys on out to the city gate. She passed through it, and once outside the wall she saw hordes of Boxer soldiers. "Stay your swords, I pray you," she said as each hand went instinctively to his belt. "Stay your swords. I have somewhat to say to you, honorable officers and men. Eight of my companions," she continued, "are within the city wall. You will slay us all on the morrow, we are told, but I have come to offer my life, if you will but let my co-workers leave the city unharmed and return to their native land, America."

A hush fell over the assembly. She waited a moment for a reply, but none came; her offer had been in vain. One of the multitude of soldiers who had listened to this young woman was a young soldier, nineteen years old. He stood looking at her as she walked back to the gate, unable to take his eyes from her or to think of anything else, but of what she said.

"What made her do that?" he asked his comrades. "There is nothing in our sacred 'nine classics' to make a woman offer her life for others. What made her do it?"

Mary Morrill, with eight others, wrote their last letters to loved ones that night and on the morrow poured out their life blood as gloriously as did Stephen of old.

"What made her do it?" was the haunting, unanswered question of the young soldier who stood like Saul, "consenting unto her death."

What made her do it? The soldiers could not answer, but later after the Boxer Rebellion was over, and 10,000 Chinese young women and men had laid down their lives following in the train of Stephen, the soldier began to find an answer to his question.

He was told it was in a Book. He bought it at once. Later he was introduced to Mr. Liu Fang, whom people called Pastor Liu, who little by little explained to the soldier what it was that "made her do it."

Today, in 1922, should you visit the beautiful old city of Pao-Ting-Fu, which is on the Han Kow-Peking Railroad, and the first important station south of Peking, you would surely be taken to the sacred spot, just outside the city gate where Mary Morrill and her eight American comrades lie.

Today, in 1922, should you visit the province of Shensi, northwest of Peking, you would find as its military governor, General Feng Yu Hsiang—the soldier who twenty-two years ago had asked so insistently "What made her do it?" He is now the General Feng, the Christian soldier, known and admired by Chinese and Westerners alike throughout the length and breadth of China. Chinese young men and women, girls and boys of the providence of Shensi, do not fear the soldiers, as they do in many parts of China, for at their head is a Christian. For the uplift of his 20,000 soldiers the general has Sunday services and Bible classes. Into every town into which his soldiers go, gambling dens and houses of vice are closed, and schools for the children begin to appear in large numbers. The soldiers, desiring to know the secret of the general's greatness and goodness, begin now to inquire "What makes him do it?" So they, too, study of his Master and Miss Morrill's Master in the Book of books, and in consequence, last year over 960 of his soldiers were baptized and received into the fellowship of the church of Christ.

The first century and the twentieth century are very far apart in time, but the Acts of the Apostles are still being written in every country of the world.

The need for Christ is as great now as then, and the living Christ as powerful.—Missionary Education.

Shawmut, c/o Postmaster, New York; Lieut. E. W. Foster, U. S. S. North Dakota, c/o Postmaster, New York; Lieut. F. L. Albert, U. S. S. Prairie, San Diego, Cal.;

Lieut. J. M. Hester, Naval Home, Philadelphia, Pa.; and Lieut. A. E. Stone, Receiving Ship, Philadelphia, Pa.

A fine program has been arranged for the annual meeting of the Federation of Woman's Boards of Foreign Missions Jan. 13-15, to be held in the assembly room of the National Building of the Y. W. C. A., 600 Lexington Ave., New York City.

Dr. Arthur Stevens Phelps entered Dec. 10 upon his professorship at the Berkeley Baptist Divinity School. During the coming semester he will teach public speaking, the English Bible and the Apostolic Age.

F. D. Thinney, for forty-one years a missionary of the American Baptist Foreign Missionary Society in Burma, and during that entire period superintendent of the mission press at Rangoon, died Friday, Dec. 15. A review of Mr. Thinney's distinguished missionary career will be published in an early issue.

Missionary T. V. Witter of South India, reports that during sixty-five days of evangelistic touring recently, he was able to reach 144 different villages with the gospel message. A significant change in conditions is noted. At one evening meeting he was asked by one of the leading Hindus to pray. During the prayer there was absolute quiet and a genuine spirit of reverence. Several years ago it was almost impossible even to get a hearing because of opposition.

Rhode Island has a population of approximately 600,000, two-thirds of whom are either foreign born or children of foreign-born parents. The cooperation of the Home Mission Society with the state convention has made possible a growing work among the French, Swedish, Portuguese, Russian and Italian peoples.

The first Baptist Older Boys' Conference will be held at Cook Academy, Montour Falls, N. Y., Dec. 26-31. The conference is designed to acquaint the young men of our denomination with the great truths of the Bible, to increase their prayer life and to inspire them to greater Christian service. Registrations should be sent at once to Rev. S. W. Tomlinson, Syracuse, N. Y.

Lincoln on Prohibition

John W. Starr, Jr., has just published a book entitled, "Lincoln's Last Day." Mr. Starr is an enthusiastic student of Lincoln's life. He has the largest collection of Lincolniana in the state of Pennsylvania. Mr. Starr tells the following anecdote:

One of the hundred contacts of Lincoln's day was with Major Merwin, who lunched with him. Lincoln said to the major "Merwin, we have cleared up a colossal job. Slavery is abolished. After reconstruction the next question will be the overthrow and suppression of the legalized liquor traffic, and you know my head, my heart and my purse will go into this contest for victory. . . . In 1842," continued Lincoln, "less than a quarter of a century ago, I predicted that the day would come when there would be neither a slave nor a drunkard in the land. I have lived to see one prediction fulfilled. I hope to live to see the other realized."

This struck Merwin as so important a statement that he said, "Mr. Lincoln shall I publish this from you?" "Yes, publish it as wide as the daylight shines," the president replied.

The Christian's Christmas

IT has sometimes seemed that Christmas is not, and never was, Christian; its origin is so intimately bound up with the myths of our pagan ancestors, insofar as the date is concerned, and so many incidental features of that early festival of the winter solstice are preserved in the modern observance of the day. It is fairly certain that, whatever season of the year saw the birth of Christ, it could not have been in late December, since even in sub-tropical Judea shepherds would not lie out all night with their flocks in winter. Moreover, Santa Claus and Kriss Kringle, however appealing their virtues may be, are not apostolic characters nor do we discover them anywhere in the annals of church history.

At first view there seems little in the modern Christmas holiday season to connect it with Christianity. From one point of view it is mainly the pretext for a stupendous speeding-up of trade for the weeks preceding the day; for a riot of expenditure with a turbulent mob of shoppers; for purchases which a wise economy would not on any other occasion be thought to justify; for giving that is more lavish than we can afford and is often for ulterior reasons—by-ends, as an earlier generation used to call them. Would not a stranger in our land at the holiday season be likely to decide that the motivation of our Christmas idea was commercial rather than religious?

The observance of the Christmas time, moreover, is not limited to Christians, for those of non-Christian religions and those of no religion participate freely in what we may call the secular Christmas. It is true that the observance in America today does not involve the almost universal drinking-customs which our not-so-distant ancestors in Merry England considered inseparable from the day. It has not usually been difficult for those with the drinking habit to find pretexts—and even texts—to justify them in drinking themselves drunk. The age-long customs of many peoples who have reckoned the right to drink at the risk or certainty of getting drunk a priceless privilege to be defended to the last ditch—and it is frequently a ditch at the last—will help to explain why this Christmas, after three brief years of prohibitory law, has not seen quite eradicated the tendencies which have had sway in human lives and have wrought themselves into the structure of human nervous-systems for milleniums of history. Yet the Christmas stars will look down this year upon a multitude of homes in our land which are enjoying a happiness and well-being that in all the long years before this prohibition era were for them unknown and unattainable.

Perhaps it is not strange that early New England should have frowned upon and legislated its stern disapproval of the observance of Christmas, both for its association with and derivation from the church of Rome, which it regarded as a hybrid of paganism, imperial Rome, and adulterated Christianity; and also for its intimate relation with a flippant and sensual Cavalier regime in old England. But we believe that the America of today, in its most Christian mood, has wisely adopted the harmless Christmas ideas of the immemorial past as a part of the dream of childhood; as a phase of that beautiful world of make-believe in which every normal little child lives without ever being really deceived thereby. It is as unnecessary as it would be stupid and cruel to explain conscientiously to the little child that it is not really Santa Claus at the Christmas celebration but good old Deacon Bumble, clad in cotton-batting and false whiskers. Just as stupid, and worse, is it for parents to sacrifice their sincerity and veracity in the attempt really to deceive the child, who usually suspects the truth while he enjoys the illusion. Childish illusions will fade all too soon. Let us leave them while we may, if they are simply in the realm of make-believe; but let us not lie to a child in our Christmas pretending, or in the case of the hypothetical stork, nor in any other parental corner into which we are crowded by childish questioning.

And when all this is adjusted there remains a rich domain of the Christian's Christmas observance, a veritable Christian Christmas. We may celebrate at this time, as well as at any other, the coming of Christ into the world, with all that it meant to individual hearts, to the homes of the world, and to the course of human history. We may remind ourselves how it glorified childhood, how it dignified manual labor and the humbler strata of humanity, how it brought redemption to the sinful soul, and how it set up before the human race shining goals toward which it has ever since been struggling, and beyond which it will never pass. And perhaps with bowed head we will ask ourselves the poignant question, "What would it mean to the world—and to me—if He had not come?"

Then remembering the gifts which were brought him of old,—the gold, the frankincense, the myrrh—we too may seek out worthy gifts to bring him, remembering that he has said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of these least, ye have done it unto me."

No, Christmas has not been all commercialized nor secularized. There is still, and most beautiful of all the observances of this season of lights and fragrant flowers and lavish gifts, the Christian's Christmas.

Night—and Morning

A DARK night; stars in the sky; tired shepherds—perhaps about a camp-fire—telling each other strange stories; a visitor from out of the unknown; a startling message; a wonderful song; hastening shepherds; a lowly manger—a Baby! O, the seeming irony of it! There were no headlines then; even had there been a paper the event would scarcely have been chronicled. But today that story is being told and sung from the housetops; we rehearse it as though it were the event of the ages! It is! When he came the night was very dark; when he came the children had no friend. Is Christmas a pagan festival? The question answers itself. No pagan festival ever glorified the hearthstone, or centered the joys of home in a cradle. But the story of Bethlehem does all that—and more. At Christmas time the heart of the world is young. It will always be young if it keeps the Christmas story in the center. Ring it out—sing it out with gladness! God has come via the Bethlehem manger; though he is the Ancient of Days he is incarnate in that Event in Bethlehem.

The Passing of a Great Soul

SOME forty years ago in the old city of Philadelphia, there lived a "growing" man, fairly prosperous and with every appearance of a successful citizen. He went abroad one summer and on his return a number of business men proposed a banquet for him, with the suggestion that they were giving him honor as a successful man. But he modestly declined the banquet, in some such language as this: "I am grateful for your courtesy, but I cannot yet say that I am a successful man; it is too soon for that; I am in the midst of the battle; wait until the smoke clears away and the struggle is over—and then others may say whether my life has been successful or not."

That was forty years ago. In these years he held clearly to great ideals and big purposes. When he began his life he put by the side of his business the religious ideal; he established a Sunday school, out of which grew a great church. He was its superintendent. When he was called into service for the nation, which compelled him to spend practically all of his time in Washington, he insisted that every Saturday afternoon he should take the train for his home city, be in his place as superintendent of his Sunday school, and by Monday morning he was back at his desk in the great post office department in Washington. So he lived his life; he became one of the richest men in the land, and one of the simplest, truest, most devoted Christian men of his time.

He was close to ninety years when the Messenger called him, and John Wanamaker went "out of the strain of the doing into the peace of the done." Yet he was never at a banquet where he was willing to be greeted and honored as a successful man. But the day is done, his life is over. What about it—and why? He was successful in material things; he amassed great wealth; but was it not because he held the proper balances, knew how to determine the transient and the permanent? Unquestionably. The passing of John Wanamaker brings some of these things to the surface at a time when we are stressing all too much the things that perish with the using. Happy is that man who knows how to determine the life-proportions, what is real and abiding, and what will not stand the test of fire. God be thanked for such men as John Wanamaker; the world is poorer when they go.

"The Power of the Highest"

IT was a wonderful story—told to the maiden of Nazareth. No wonder she was frightened at the sight of the angel and startled beyond measure at the burden of his message. It was entirely natural, from the viewpoint of the heavenly; but it was supernatural from the viewpoint of the earthly. One cannot make anything else out of the story. It was a heavenly message—the strangest ever told. What was it?

It is the heart of the Christmas story. That Child yonder in the manger had a heavenly origin. There is no doubt about the plain teaching of the record. The annunciation explains the incarnation. He was heaven-sent, heaven-born. How straightforward is the language: "The power of the Highest shall overshadow thee."

It was Renan who said that the gospel of Luke is "the most beautiful book ever written." Its beauty and charm lie in its simplicity; there is nothing obscure in Luke's story. Jesus was to come to men by way of the lowly home, by the human way, but he was heaven-conceived, heaven-sent, heaven-born. So we take up the story once again, sing it in the same old way, and the music grows sweeter as the years go by. We are not looking for another. He was not one among many; he was the only one. There were others who could be called great; he was the "holiest among the mighty, the mightiest among the holy"; others were of the earth; the Son of Man came from heaven. He was the Word—becoming flesh. "Conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary"; so the old-time declaration.

How it simplifies things for us. Human was he—? Yes. Divine was he—? Yes, evermore yes. It is the custom these days to throw shadow on this old story; but it is not a modern custom. Men have humanized it until the message of the angel is a fairy tale, or a strange dream in the night; the heavenly choir has become a beautiful legend. But the great heart of the world will not have it so. Still the music rings down the ages—

*"Jesus my Saviour to Bethlehem came,
Born in a manger to sorrow and shame,
Oh it was wonderful, blest be his name—
Coming for me, for me."*

And the heart of the old world is glad once more. We shall not permit the mystery to rob us of the ministry. He came from God. "The Highest shall overshadow thee." That is the heart of the Christmas story. God has come—in Jesus! Wonderful, and humble in his beginnings; yet Luke declares his paternity. "The Highest shall overshadow thee." "Conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary." Luke and the old declaration are one! A purblind age will not see the angel visitor, nor accept his message; but the story of Luke will outlive the ages, and sing itself unto the Christmastides that are yet to be, until the day dawns when shadows flee away.

A World Peace Sunday

A CALL for the observance of World Peace Sunday issued by The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, says in part: "When can we more appropriately voice our appeal for peace than at the celebration of the coming into the world of him whom we hail as the Prince of Peace? Especially in a year when we are still haunted by the memory of 10,000 young men who laid down their lives in the last war; when famine and want continue to stalk in its wake; when intrigue and selfishness again are seeking to control the foreign policies of nations; when rival armaments and threats of war tragically harass the peoples of Europe, it would seem to be the clear obligation of every church that bears the name of Christ to raise its voice unequivocally against the whole war system and to demand that the governments of the world find other ways of settling every dispute which may arise.

"Other ways can and will be found if the Christian people of the world urgently and persistently demand it. By a concerted appeal at Christmas time, followed by unremitting effort during the year, we may bear effective witness to our conviction that war can be outlawed by the building up of international agencies for the preservation of peace and the development of a community life among the nations. . . .

"The task of getting rid of war and securing peace requires international organization, but it requires more. The trouble in our present international life is a spiritual trouble—the attitude of selfishness, of fear, of suspicion among men in organized groups. So the remedy must be a spiritual one, the acceptance of a way of life not yet generally accepted in economic and international affairs—the way of brotherhood, of friendly cooperation and of love, revealed to us in him whose life we now commemorate."

Association of Daily Vacation Bible Schools

REPORTS given at the annual meeting and conference of the International Association of Daily Vacation Bible Schools indicated that there were held during the past summer 5,000 schools with 50,000 teachers and 500,000 children in attendance. In other words, a gain of at least 30 per cent was made over the preceding year.

The association is a clearing house for the promotion of the vacation school movement. The association is headed by Russell Colgate as president. Of the 5,000 schools it is estimated that 1,000 were held under Baptist auspices, 1,000 under Presbyterian, 700 under Methodist, 150 under Christian, 300 under United Brethren and 600 under other denominations, while 1,000 were conducted under union or community supervision. The average cost of the schools was $1.12 for each child in attendance. The efforts of the association for the future will be along these lines: That more teachers be secured and trained, that local churches be encouraged to put the expenses of the vacation school in their annual budget, that publishing houses and workers be advised of the necessity of bringing out more and better textbooks covering the Bible, music, handcraft and mission stories. The association proposes to work through existing denominational organizations in the capacity of a clearing house. It is clear that we have not as yet fully appreciated the possibilities of the daily vacation Bible school.

President Harding and the Eighteenth Amendment

FRIENDS of law and order are proud of the stand taken by President Harding in his annual address to congress. He said, "The day is unlikely ever to come when the eighteenth amendment will be repealed. The fact may as well be recognized and our course adapted accordingly. If the statutory provisions for its enforcement are contrary to deliberate public opinion, which I do not believe, the rigorous and literal enforcement will concentrate public attention on any requisite modification." The president will call into conference the governors of the several states. It is expected that out of this conference will come a better understanding between the state and federal officers in the matter of enforcement of the law. Here and there a governor may be somewhat embarrassed but on the whole we can depend upon our state and national executive heads to stand four-square for law enforcement.

A Stampede For Peace

IT has been charged that the churches are trying to stampede the government into war in the Near East. Rev. Samuel M. Cavert, one of the secretaries of the Federal Council of Churches, denies the charge and says that the churches are trying to stampede the government into peace. "Are we to pour millions without end into saving of orphans and refugees in the Near East while we do practically nothing as a nation to prevent the making of orphans and refugees faster than a generous people can save them? We are not suggesting any resort to war. We are not trying to stampede the government into war; we are trying to stampede it into peace. We are trying to secure a just and righteous settlement so that future war can be averted. Who really doubts that by the positive and unequivocal use of America's prestige and economic power it might be possible for us to have direct and well-nigh conclusive influence in securing the protection of the oppressed minorities? If Great Britain and France and America should say together, clearly and unambiguously, 'All massacres must cease; permanent protection must be given to the Armenian people' that voice could hardly be disobeyed."

The Person of Christ: A Series of "Apologetic" Studies

V. "Incarnate for us men and for our salvation."

By FREDERIC C. SPURR

THE problem of God in relation to the life of man; his sin, his suffering, his salvation, his need, his aspirations and his survival of the shock of death is at once the oldest, the newest, the most tormenting and the most welcome of all problems. There is nothing so pressing as this, for everything depends upon our vital and harmonious relation to the Being who has produced us and for whose purposes we have been brought into being. God has "made us for himself," said St. Augustine, "and our hearts are unquiet until they rest in him."

The Crown of Divine Revelation

But how shall we know him? Men have sought him by the way of reason and of philosophy and they have found some kind of God; a "Power not ourselves that makes for righteousness"; "an infinite and eternal substance from which all things proceed"; a Law, an Order, a Mind. But nobody ever found the true and living God the Father in these ways. Wherever God has been truly known it has always been by the way of revelation. He never "left himself without witness." St. Paul told the pagans of Lystra, but the revelation was progressive. In the natural world, in the human conscience, in the judgment of nations and in the life of Israel—the crown of the divine revelation is Jesus Christ. To the fathers God spake "in many forms and fashions" (Heb. 1:1; Mof-fat). Once for all he has spoken in his Son the final word to man. "The word was made flesh and dwelt among us." Such is the Christian faith. And its implication is that in Christ man really sees what God is like, so far as man needs to know God. Christ perfectly reveals him. In Rome a mirror conveniently placed upon a table reflects perfectly a masterpiece of Michael Angelo painted upon the ceiling. Visitors no longer stretch their necks to behold the painting above them, they can see it at their ease. Jesus brought God to our very door, he was the mirror of God. He that hath seen him hath seen the Father.

There is more than this, however. Jesus came not only to reveal God to men; he came, savingly, to bring us to God. "For us men and our salvation he came down from heaven."

"He suffered for sins once for all that he might bring us to God." The incarnation is the central truth of Christianity. Had there been no crib there would have been no cross. The life and work of Jesus are meaningless apart from the central faith of the incarnation. If it falls, all else falls with it. If it be true everything else is explained. The Christian church believes that our Lord was not born as other persons are. It believes him to have been pre-existent and to have "come down from heaven" for man's redemption. This belief, of course, carries with it tremendous implications, which we must face.

His Person Drew the Disciples

Let us ask first of all, however, how it came to pass that this unique doctrine (for it is unique, despite certain superficial resemblances to it in other religions) came into existence? It must be understood at the outset that it did not commence as a theory to which certain facts were fitted. The church did not start with the hypothesis of an incarnation to explain its theology. The disciples who first came to Jesus were drawn, not by any doctrine concerning him, but because they could not help it. His person drew them and they followed on. He said "follow me" and they did so. They did not at first know all that he was. To them at that time he was the most wonderful of teachers, who spake as never man spake. They accepted him as the master; the leader of the new movement which was to inaugurate the long-prayed-for kingdom of God. It was not until they had been with him for two years that he put the decisive question, "Whom say ye that I am?"

Disciples at First Unitarians

We must further understand that the doctrine of the incarnation arose

O! lovely voices of the sky
Which hymned the Saviour's birth.
Are ye not singing still on high
Ye that sang, "Peace on earth"?
To us yet speak the strains
Wherewith, in time gone by,
Ye blessed the Syrian swains,
Oh, voices of the sky!

—Felicia Hemans.

amongst a people to whom the idea was entirely foreign. The Jews were monotheists who had no idea whatever of an incarnation. The disciples were at first Unitarians: they were not Trinitarians until Jesus came. What changed them, we are about to see. They were compelled by the necessities of the case to revise their Jewish belief and to become Christians. They encountered the mighty person of the Lord. They saw he was unique. They beheld his mighty works. They saw him crucified and buried. Yet on the third day he was alive again, the Victor of Life. They had "many infallible proofs" of all this, as St. Luke says. When finally he ceased to be seen of their mortal eyes, they experienced afresh his mighty power at Pentecost. He had promised to send them his Spirit and he kept his word. They knew he was alive and at work on the other side of the veil. The experience grew and deepened. Through him they came to know the Father—really know him. And then it was that the Holy Spirit led them into the further truth concerning Jesus—they came to see who he was. The fact of the incarnation had been present to them from the beginning; now it was formulated into a faith. "It was the necessary way of accounting for Jesus Christ." The fact of Christ before and after the resurrection compelled faith in the incarnation: it was their response to the divine revelation.

"He Became Poor"

Further, the doctrine of the incarnation arose early. The early letters of St. Paul contain it. To the Corinthians in the fifties St. Paul wrote "He was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor" (2 Cor. 8:9). The statement is not made in the way of dogmatic teaching: the apostle is employing a fundamental Christian fact for an ethical purpose: as a moral dynamic, in fact. It was "the grace of the Lord, Jesus Christ" which led him to stoop. The later and fuller statement of the truth of the incarnation is here its substance. In an even earlier letter St. Paul refers to our Lord as "the second man, the Lord from heaven." We cannot explain away creative words like these. They are evidence—out of much more—that quit early in the church the incarnation was an article of faith. The rationalistic theory that the dogma of the incarnation was legendary and slowly grew in at total variance with the facts. Here, before the year 60 A. D. it existed in substantial form.

The Purpose of His Coming

In another epistle, written a little later, probably in the year 59 A. D. the doctrine is more fully set forth. "Jesus was in the form of God—he emptied himself taking the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men" (Phil. 2). In another early writing St. Paul says, "when the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his son, born of a woman, born under the law (Gal. 4:4). When these earlier writings are duly analyzed they yield the following result: The early church believed that Jesus Christ was "originally in the form and nature of God." Equality with God was his by right. He did not consider it a "prize" to be grasped at. But in becoming incarnate "He emptied himself"—or, as Dr. Weymouth renders it, "He stripped himself of his glory." Whatever the self-emptying meant, it was his own act: that is the important point to grasp. He had the right to do it. Further he entered into human conditions at a definite point in time. He came across the barrier that divides us from the invisible world and entered fully into human conditions. He appeared at the appointed moment "in the fulness of time," when the purposes of God were ripe for his manifestation. The purpose of his coming was to redeem men, to bring them to their full sonship. Such is the earliest full deep doctrine of the incarnation as given in the earliest writings of the New Testament—dated before the year 60 A. D.

Size and Greatness

Within so limited a space it is not possible to do more than offer an outline, while it is utterly impossible to deal in any way with the many implications of this truth in metaphysical and psychological directions. We must keep to the main question. To the "Catholic" doctrine of the incarnation two main objections have been offered: the greatness of God and the insignificance of man. How can the Infinite become the finite? How is it possible to conceive of the Eternal God visiting one of the small planets and becoming man in order to redeem our pigmy race? And does it not mean that his being here withdraws him from the rest of creation? This is utterly to misconceive the whole thing. God and man are not so separate as to make the incarnation incredible. They are kin. Man is sinful and needs redemption, but none the less he is made in the likeness and image of God and it is this twin fact that constitutes the nexus of the incarnation. The greatness of God must not be set over against the littleness of man: it is rather the Fatherhood of God that calls in the immensity of its love for the loving homage of his earthly children and it is that love in Christ which re-creates the lost sonship. Man's rank in nature is not determined by his situation in space, but by what he is made for and by what he may be-

The Gift

Oh, there be many candles bright
Upon Thy tree on Christmas night;
What need that I should add a light!

Oh, there be many stars that shine
To make Thy Christmas heavens fine;
What need is there of gold of mine!

O, Little Lord, O Little King,
With men and angels worshipping,
What gift is there that I could bring!

(The angels turned their eyes on me;
The Shepherd looked surprise on
me;
The King flung cold surmise on me!)

"Give gifts," He said (and looked no blame!)

"Not unto Me, but in My name;
Tell some one why it was I came."

—Laura Spencer Porter in the

come in Christ. The smallness of our planet has nothing whatever to do with the reality of the great redemptive work Christ came to accomplish. Our planet is man's home and it is fitting that in the place of his sin the restoration should be given. It is a pity when men confound size with greatness, as they do who imagine that the smallness of our planet makes the incarnation incredible.

What Matters

It does not matter a scrap whether other planets are inhabited or not; what matters is this—that we are sick and need a cure and that the one medicine for our sickness is found in Christ. If there are beings on other planets who have sinned and need redemption the love of God is quite equal to dealing with them. But so far as we are concerned we have to deal with the fact which has materialized under our own eyes. God has been really manifested in the flesh of Christ upon our earth—that is the fact for us and in that fact he has revealed the heart of God to man and also revealed what man should be. Jesus was not another specimen of our spoiled humanity, he was a revelation of the true type after which we were created. "The head of every man is Christ." But he was not only revelation but redemption and dynamic. As he brought God to man, he brings man to God, by his one sacrifice and by the continued working of his spirit. And the truth of it all is shown in Christian experience. Through Christ we really know God and become one with him. Jesus is "of the value" of God to us and if we reject that value then we have no God at all of whom we can be certain and who alone can satisfy our hearts.

Pantheism Dissipates God

The more the matter is considered the more will it become clear that the alternative is either the truth of the incarnation or a series of hypotheses of God which can neither content the reason, satisfy the heart, nor save from sin. For all these hypotheses run down into pantheism sooner or later and pantheism, despite its intellectual charm for some, does as a simple matter of fact act as an acid upon the heart, slowly but surely destroying the inner fibre. As a theory it is nebulous: as a moral force it is hopeless. The proof of this is written large in history. Pantheism in any of its forms dissipates God, making of him a living atmosphere through which we thrust our hands, but with which we can never commune. The incarnation on the contrary brings

Future Belongs to the Faith

God to our very door. He touches both our senses and our spirits. It definitely reveals his personality and shows him, in Christ, as caring for the single soul. And this is what men want to know, whether or not God cares for the individual. The future will not be with the pantheistic creed in any of its forms—it is impossible. The future belongs to the faith which has at its heart the confession "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself."

Christ of the Virgin Born

"They shall call his name Immanuel"—Matthew 1:23

By JOHN MARVIN DEAN

SOME years ago a brilliant Christian thinker was asked to contribute an article dealing with the personality of our Lord Jesus Christ to the pages of the Encyclopedia Britannica. In due time the article appeared. It was then discovered that the most amazing fact about our Saviour had not been mentioned—his sinlessness.

The dazzling white light of the Redeemer's personality and earthly ministry smites the mind of the most casual reader of the Gospels, provided that casual reader be candid. No matter where you touch those marvelous three and a half years of public ministry—a ministry carried on in the midst of indescribable confusion and against an ever-increasing opposition that was nothing less than venomous—the same flawless perfection is found, and stainless integrity.

Even Mohammedanism declares the sinlessness of the Christ and that he will some day judge Mohammed himself. This need cause no surprise; the most remote acquaintance with the name and fame of Jesus of Nazareth exacts this tribute of superhuman flawlessness to his manhood and his ministry.

When by penitence and faith a man not only knows Jesus Christ intellectually but is touched by the power and presence of the omnipresent Master, then the fact of Christ's sinlessness passes through the realms of the mind into the holy of holies of a man's heart and he not only admires but worships.

We speak of the sinlessness of Christ because it predisposes us to faith in his pre-existence and his virgin birth.

The Terminal

When we ride over the desolate deserts of the West and stumble upon a rusty, weed-grown railway, we may only be able to see a few miles of its road-bed but we quickly erect in our minds a vision of its terminal. Such an insignificant road must, we rightly judge, lead to a half-abandoned mining camp or some desolate town unmoved by the high tides of civilization. But if, on the other hand, our trail intersects a beautifully laid "overland line," its road-bed well kept, its rails of the sturdiest steel and sharply glinting from constant use, we are confident that far to the east of us there arise the stately buildings and vast facilities of a great terminal, and that to the west of us, beyond the ranges, there is another mighty terminal to match it.

He who touches the line of Christ's perfect ministry and personality at any vital point of the Gospel narratives and carefully weighs the significance of what he there discovers, will find not the slightest difficulty in believing that at the beginning of that earthly ministry there was a virgin birth and at the end of that ministry there was a death-conquering resurrection.

I. The incarnation—the coming into human form and flesh of the pre-existent Saviour—was the answer to a universal desire on the part of humankind. Whatever may be our interpretation of the declaration of the prophet Haggai (Haggai 2:7, A. R. V. Margin), the God-man was "the Desire of all nations."

The record of the virgin birth of our Lord has been attacked on the ground that heathen and pagan religions enshrine the same idea. Christians are reminded that stories of miraculous generation have no novelty. Buddha, and Plato, and Augustus Caesar, and Zoroaster and Lao-Tsze, all were said to be virgin-born. Certain members of the Greek pantheon were also said to have nothing less than a heavenly paternity. But such a criticism is a sad misinterpretation of the pagan mind. These myths are the confirmation of the gospel narrative. They are the pathetic evidences of a universal cry for a redemptive unveiling of God, a passionate longing for a hero, or a prince, or a god, who would partake both of the human and the divine, one of whom we could say without self-delusion, "Immanuel—God with us!"

It is Cocker who reminds us that the idea of "a pure spiritual essence without form and without motion, pervading all and transcending all, is too vague and abstract to yield us comfort" and that, therefore, the need of an incarnation "became, consciously or unconsciously, the 'desire of nations.'"

The very fact that the idea of an incarnation was not unfamiliar, that it was

"WHAT means that star," the shepherds said,
"That brightens through the rocky glen?"
And angels, answering overhead, Sang, "Peace on earth, good-will to men!"
—James Russell Lowell.

no strange thought to the pagan mind which have created the numberless metamorphoses of Grecian mythology, the faith in the Lamas as incarnations of Buddha, the human form of Krishna, and the Avatars of Vishnu and of Dagon, presents not a difficulty but a secondary reason for faith in the virgin birth of our Lord.

Shall we, whose souls have been lighted by the incarnation, discard that torch-like truth?

If we commit that folly we will discover that the necessities of the human mind and heart eventually will make us victims of some religious system that will present to us in other forms, and without proper attestation, the mystery of a virgin birth.

Man is so made that an incarnation fits his need as the flower fits the stem.

You may recall the profound suggestion of Neander that "at the bottom of these myths there is an earnest desire, inseparable from man's spirit, for participation in the Divine nature as its true life—its anxious longing to pass the gulf which separates the God-derived soul from its original—its wish, even though unconscious, to secure that union with God which alone can remove human need and which Christianity shows us as a living reality. Nor can we be astonished to find the facts of Christianity anticipated in poetic forms, embodying in imaginative creations the innate, yet indistinct, cravings of the spirit, in the mythical elements of the old religions, when we remember that human nature itself, and all the forms of its development, as well as the whole course of human history, were intended by God to find their full accomplishment in Christ."

II. The incarnation was the meeting of human limitation. Cowper reminds us that "faults in the life breed errors in the brain." The individual mind and the mind of the race collectively have alike been impaired by sin. Man finds his greatest difficulty in endeavoring to think properly of God.

It is true that nature has never ceased to speak, from the day of the first responsible man until this present hour—whispering, flaming, thundering, the name and the glory of the living God.

"The Himalayas," cries John Henry Barrows upon his return from India, "are the raised letters upon which we blind children place our fingers and read the name of God."

The Message of Nature

But nature's message, infinitely varied though it be, if taken alone, has fatal omissions. Paul, in opening up his great argument in the Epistle to the Roman church, declares that "the invisible things of God since the creation of the world are clearly seen, being perceived through the things that are made." But he immediately follows with a limitation of nature's office by saying that these things that we see through the telescope of nature are "the everlasting power and divinity of God." Seas and shores, wheat-filled valleys and naked heights, bacilli in the test tube and stars in the night sky, crawling lizard and screaming gull, distilling shower and frightful tornado, rending claw and blossoming fruit, human life and human death—all these alike declare that God is and that God is infinitely great. Only by a dishonest selection of facts from nature can we go much beyond this.

The universe declares that God is, but it takes an incarnate Saviour to teach men that blazing fact which made the mind and heart of John the beloved flame to his latest hour on earth—God is love! Aye, there is a God and his greatness overwhelms the mind. But what is his character? What is his attitude toward men? What are his dealings to be with human guilt? What is his will for the race?

An interpreter must speak two languages. An incarnate Christ, who is both human and divine, alone can meet the limitations of the human mind and heart, and can alone become a true Mediator.

A Friend in the Fog

A man in a fog cries out in fear as a great distorted giant-form clutches at him. But brought face to face with this apparent giant, the thinning fog reveals his dearest friend! Thus it has been with some of us in our scientific reading. The fact and figure of God grows in immensity but in the same process becomes remote. We recognize the overwhelming power of God but we are made to feel both troubled and forsaken. With what delight, then, do we behold in the incarnation our Elder Brother, Jesus Christ! With what relief do we hear him say, "Truly I am one of you. Feel me and see that this is no illusion. Yet without me was not anything made that was made. I am behind the breaking surf, the rising continents, the wasting mountains, the million species of life, and the fifteen hundred million visible worlds that men call stars. Behold, it is I; be not afraid."

III. The incarnation, however, was more than the meeting of a human limitation: it was the unveiling of God's thought and plan for man. The incarnation reveals God's objective for the race.

The cry of the ages has been for a redemptive unveiling of God. But the ages had also pleaded for the unveiling of a Man. Stanton, inspired by his hour of devastating grief, witnessed the last breath of the dying Lincoln and said, "Now he belongs to the ages." It is those aspects of the life and death of Lincoln which remind us of the Christ that make such an utterance a fitting one. Christ himself is the Heir of the ages and the long, slow centuries of human history are his possession. He is the candle set in the heavenly window to guide man's moral wanderings back to the Father's house. But he is also the Pattern of Righteousness, the Exemplar, the Model, the Finality. "All things were created unto him," declares Paul. That is, toward him.

The Search Pathetic

How pathetic has been the search of the race for a perfect character or even a dependable leadership!

The chiefest heartbreak of history is the long succession of betrayals of noble and progressive movements on the part of leaders whose sins overthrew both them and those who trusted in them. Alexander and Cæsar, Henry the Fourth and Napoleon the First, illustrate one phase of this ever recurring betrayal. In the less dramatic worlds of philosophy and art and economics, the review is equally disheartening. With what relief then do we see the torch of the incarnation lifted, and hear the ages echo and re-echo the cry of Pilate, "Behold the Man!"

If I were to attempt to condense this particular meaning of the surpassing miracle of Bethlehem within the compass of a single phrase I would write it thus: After an incredible travail of un-numbered races and aspirations and epochs, the world has found a MAN at last!

It is in the eyes of this Man that we read the judgment of all men.

The wickedness of the ages is reviewed by his stainlessness: the folly of the ages is reviewed by his wisdom: the misery of the ages is reviewed by his peace: the injustice of the ages is reviewed by his righteousness: the weakness of the ages is reviewed by his strength.

And yet, the incarnate Christ is not our condemnation only, but our hope; for, so surely as there is an operation of grace, moving, despite all opposition, toward an incredibly bright consummation for the race, so surely shall those who follow him be like him "for they shall see him as he is." The destiny of the redeemed humanity is Christ. And to follow him (to use the phrase of Mr. H. G. Wells) is to "essay an incredible happiness."

IV. And now it is of final importance that we observe that both the fact and the method of the incarnation were evidential of the Christ's moral supremacy—His unique holiness.

There are those who sneer at us because we worship One who entered in so lowly a fashion the gateway of human life. Had the Christ leaped full-panoplied from the skies to the palace of the Cæsars, these critics might have believed on him. But the Babe of Bethlehem evokes their disdain. And yet how strange it is that the supremacy and deity of our Lord should be attacked upon this ground!

The root of all sin is pride: there is not an iniquity but can be traced to arrogance. The root of all virtue is humility; there is not a flower of righteousness that grows in any other soil. "What is the first thing in religion?" was asked of Augustine. "Humility," he replied. "And the second?" "Humility." "And the third?" "The third is also humility," he said. It is this virtue that our Lord supremely exemplified in his virgin birth. He is the pre-existent Lord of the universe. He is without human paternity. Yet he chooses to enter human life in the form of a babe. It is this very approach of his that predisposes us to worship him! Those who have knelt at Calvary find no difficulty in kneeling at Bethlehem. And those who do not kneel at Bethlehem will be less apt to kneel at Calvary.

Oh, let us then rejoice with wise and thoughtful trust! Let us joy and rejoice in the heavenly humility of the incarnation!

"That glorious Form, that Light unsufferable,
And that far-beaming blaze of majesty,
Wherewith he went at heaven's high council-table
To sit the midst of Trinal Unity,
He laid aside, and here with us to be,
Forsook the courts of everlasting day,
And chose with us a darksome house of mortal clay."

Let us scorn to bow in acquiescence to the intellectual fad of a passing hour—the corroding criticism of the holy virgin birth of our Lord.

If the vain winds of unbelief do not rattle at one door they will at another.

Let us be wise enough to see in that virgin birth not a point of weakness in the Christian position but a tower of impregnable strength. Let us echo the angelic song, our hearts filled with indescribable gladness, that heaven's richest gift to man, an incarnate Saviour, has come to human life in such a way and by such a manner as only God himself would choose. And let us hasten with our gifts to Bethlehem.

A careless tourist, being shown the very piano of Beethoven, seated herself before the instrument and began to pick out, without either talent or reverence, one of the great composer's more popular creations. The caretaker, standing near, shifted from one foot to the other in evident distress. At last he remarked,

"Paderewski was here a short while ago."

"Oh," said the tourist, "I suppose he played upon this very piano."

"No," said the caretaker, "he was invited to do so but he said, 'I am not worthy.'"

And who, I ask you, shall be worthy to speak of the surpassing mystery and glory of the incarnation? And who shall dare to make the pilgrimage to Bethlehem without summoning up within himself all the possibilities of praise and reverence?

"Ring out, ye crystal spheres!
Once bless our human ears,
If ye have power to touch our senses
so;
And let your silver chime
Move in melodious time;
And let the bass of heaven's deep organ blow;
And with this ninefold harmony
Make up full consort to the angelic symphony."

Is There a Santa Claus?

WHILE editor of the New York Sun Charles A. Dana received the following letter:

Dear Editor:

I am eight years old. Some of my little friends say that there is no Santa Claus. Please tell me the truth. Is there a Santa Claus?

Virginia O. Hanlon.

Mr. Dana gave his answer in the following editorial.

"Virginia, your little friends are wrong. They have been affected by the skepticism of a skeptical age. They think that nothing can be which is not comprehensible by their little minds. They do not believe except they see. All minds, Virginia, whether they be men's or children's, are little. In this great universe of ours, man is a mere insect, an ant, in his intellect, compared with the boundless worlds about him, as measured by the intelligence capable of grasping the whole truth and knowledge.

"Yes, Virginia, there is a Santa Claus. He exists as certainly as love and generosity and devotion exist, and you know that they abound and give to your life its highest beauty and joy. Alas, how dreary the world would be if there were no Santa Claus! It would be as dreary as if there were no Virginias! There would be no childlike faith, then, no poetry, no romance, to make tolerable this existence. We should have no enjoyment except in sense and sight. The eternal light with which childhood fills the world would then be extinguished.

"Not to believe in Santa Claus! You might as well not believe in fairies! You might get your papa to hire men to watch all the chimneys on Christmas Eve to catch Santa Claus; but even if they did not see Santa Claus coming down, what would that prove? Not everybody sees Santa Claus. The most real things in the world are those that neither children nor men see. Did you ever see fairies dancing on the lawn? Of course not; but that's no proof that they were not there. No one can conceive or imagine all the things that are unseen or unseeable in the world.

"You may tear apart a baby's rattle and see what makes the noise inside, but there is a veil covering the unseen world that not the strongest man, not even the united strength of all the strongest men that ever lived, could tear apart. Only faith, fancy, poetry, love, romance, can push aside that curtain and view the picture of the supernatural beauty and glory beyond. It is all real. Ah, Virginia, in all the world there is nothing else real and abiding.

"No Santa Claus? Thank God, he lives, and he lives forever! A thousand years from now, Virginia, nay, ten thousand years from now, he will continue to make glad the hearts of children."

Christmas Time Has Come Again

The Magi and The Star

"We have seen his star in the East, and are come to worship him."—Matt. 2:2.

By J. M. HOLMES

BABYLON the glorious, lay sleeping
'neath the moon;
The Magi on their towers read the signals of the stars:
When suddenly a star, clear as the sun
at noon,

Flashed out, and burned in splendor with the ruddy glow of Mars.

The morning broke in tender light o'er Shinar's level plain,
Filling all the earth and sky with radiance and glory:

The Magi met in secret clan, within their sacred fane,

And heard, in wide-eyed silence, the watcher's wondrous story.

The holy conclave waited for the coming of the night

To hang her golden lamps aflame in God's eternal space:

Again the glorious star burst forth with sudden rosy light

As if the heavens parted, and they saw a seraph's face.

It did not rise nor set, but stood supreme in heaven alone;

Amid the marching hosts of light it was the kingly one;

A dazzling spark of glory from God's refulgent throne,

It shone to lead the Magi to God's holy, infant Son.

Of all the stars that crowned the night
it was the brightest gem:

The Magi read in its clear light the secret of their clan.

With myrrh, frankincense, gifts of gold,
they sought Jerusalem;

Age at the feet of Infancy—there worshipped God in man.

Shine on, O Star of God, and bring all wise men from the East.

Shine on, O Star of God, and bring all wanderers from the West,

Shine on, and bring all sinners from the greatest to the least.

To find in that mysterious Babe all life and love and rest.

The Incarnation

By WILBUR FISK TILLET

OSON of God incarnate,
O Son of Man divine,
In whom God's glory dwelleth,
In whom man's virtues shine.
God's light to earth thou bringest
To drive sin's night away,
And, through thy life so radiant,
Earth's darkness turns to day.

O Mind of God incarnate,
O Thought in flesh enshrined,
In human form thou speakest
To men the Father's mind:
God's thought to earth thou bringest
That men in thee may see
What God is like, and, seeing,
Think God's thoughts after thee.

O Heart of God incarnate,
Love-bearer to mankind,
From thee we learn what love is,
In thee love's ways we find:
God's love to earth thou bringest

Christmas Greetings

By J. W. Conley

A TIME for joy and not for tears!
For faith and trust instead of fears,

A time to pass your smiles along,
And fill the earth with gladdest song,

Then do your part, both work and pray,

To make a Joyful Christmas Day.

A time to tell, and tell again,
Of "peace on earth, good-will toward men."

A time for war and hate to cease,
A time to hail the Prince of Peace,
All bitterness put far away,
And have a Peaceful Christmas Day.

A time for hope, with vision clear,
To see the Glory drawing near,
To shout hosanna and amen!
For Christ who came will come again.

"The King of Kings" will not delay,
Then have a Hopeful Christmas Day.
Cannon Falls, Minn.

In living deeds that prove
How sweet to serve all others.
When we all others love.

O Will of God incarnate,
So human, so divine,
Free wills to us thou givest
That we may make them thine:
God's will to earth thou bringest
That all who would obey
May learn from thee their duty,
The truth, the life, the way.

Christmas Carol

THE earth has grown old with its burden of care,
But at Christmas it always is young,
The heart of the jewel burns lustrous and fair,
And its soul full of music bursts forth
on the air,
When the song of the angels is sung.

It is coming, Old Earth, it is coming tonight!

On the snowflakes which cover thy sod
The feet of the Christ-child fall gentle and white,

And the voice of the Christ-child tells out with delight
That mankind are the children of God.

On the sad and the lowly, the wretched and poor,
The voice of the Christ-child shall fall;
And to every blind wanderer open the door

Of hope that he dared not to dream of before,
With a sunshine of welcome for all.

The feet of the humblest may walk in the field

Where the feet of the Holiest trod,
This, then, is the marvel to mortals revealed

When the silvery triumphs of Christmas have peeled,
That mankind are the children of God.

Bells of Christmas Morning

By EMMA L. MILLER

HARK to the bells of the Christmas morning,

Ringing their glad refrain,
Telling the joy of the old, old story,
Peace upon earth again.

Once and again have I heard thy message:
Shepherd and babe and star.

Wise men who came with their gifts and homage,

Seeking the King from afar.

Thou who art wiser than all the wisdom
Now to thy footstool bring,

Thou who art higher than all the holy,
Be of my life the King,

Make of my heart a fitting temple;
Cleanse it from sin I pray,

Come as thou didst at the dedication,
Enter this Christmas day.

Come, for I need thy peace and pardon,
Come, for I need thy power,

Need to be kept from the world's temptations,

Keep me each day and hour.
Then shall I live with a noble purpose;

Then shall I joyfully bring,
Like the sweet bells of the Christmas morning

Praises to thee my King.

(From "The World Through Mother's Glasses and Other Poems.")

The Holy Child

THE world was dark with care and woe,
With brawl and pleasure wild;
When in the midst, his love to show,
God set a Child.

The sages frowned, their heads they shook
For pride their heart beguiled.

They said, each looking on his book,
"We want no Child."

The merchants turned toward their scales
Around their wealth they piled;

Said they, "'Tis gold alone prevails;
We want no Child."

The soldiers rose in noisy sport;
Disdainfully they smiled;

And said, "Can babes the shield support?
We want no Child."

Then said the Lord: "O world of care,
So blinded and beguiled,

Thou must receive for thy repair
A Holy Child."

CAROLINE L. PALMER.

The Shepherds

THEY never sought; nay, but they woke and came

Quickly; nor paused they to bring
Gifts to the little King—

No gems had they, nor a remembered name.

E'en while they knelt, three Wise Men worshipping,

Over the desert rode afar,
Patient, and sought a star—

Yet came too late to hear the angels sing
Oh, wake us, make us simple, make us mild!

Spare us the desert thirst and fears,
The garnered gems, and years!

Oh, bring us to thee quickly, Holy Child

Interlopers or Disciplers!

By G. ARVID HAGSTROM

TO THE ordinary well informed member of the Christian church it may occasion no little surprise to read that Baptists and Methodists working in Scandinavian countries are looked upon and dubbed as interlopers and proselytes. But to one familiar with the history of these bodies this is not new. It ought not to be considered as information of a new state of affairs that Lutherans comprise 98 and a fraction per cent of the population of Sweden. Any one who knows that the dominating church in Sweden is a state church, and that church is the Lutheran church, knows that this accounts for the fact that practically the entire population is Lutheran.

On the other hand it may not be so generally known that the Mission Covenant of Sweden, a Swedish Congregational denomination, has a membership of 110,608, the Baptists a membership of 60,530, and the Methodists have 18,250 members. These three bodies together number 189,388, or, including the young people and Sunday-school membership, it makes a constituency of one half million—or one in every twelve persons in Sweden. In addition to these religious bodies there are a number of smaller groups such as the Salvation Army, the Adventists, The Apostolic Faith or Pentecostal Movement, the Swedish Evangelical Alliance, the Free Baptists, all of which, should they be numbered, would easily total 130,000, thus increasing the membership of the religious bodies that the ruling state church does not look with favor upon to 650,000.

That the work of these religious bodies is not of recent origin is borne out by the fact that the Baptists celebrate next year, when they are hosts to the Baptist World Alliance, the seventy-fifth anniversary of the beginning of organized Baptist work in Sweden.

Persecution by State Officials

The justification of a work which can show such a glorious history as will then be unfolded, if such a process of argumentation were needed, would need to seek no other ground than the Great Commission of our risen Lord and Saviour. That there was great need of discipling the people in Sweden during the last century is amply proved by the low spiritual state and religious darkness in which the people were groping. When the members of the state church did find the light of a new birth through faith in and fellowship with Christ and more abundant witness of their new experience, they were immediately and continuously subjected to persecution by the officials of the state church, even at the instigation of the religious leaders of the same. In fact, many of these early pioneers were subjected to bitter and cruel sufferings, unjust trials, imprisonment and one, Rev. F. O. Nilsson, was banished from Sweden, April 26, 1850, who when he was compelled to leave his native land came to Copenhagen, Denmark, and while there serving the little flock of Baptists he was privileged to baptize Rev. Andreas Wiberg, a Lutheran priest who had found the light of saving peace as well as the truth of the believer's duty to follow his Lord in scriptural baptism. From Copenhagen, Nilsson came to the United States and was instrumental in founding several churches in this country. The work thus

SOME weeks ago the American press carried an official communique issued by the National Lutheran Council. The issue was precipitated by an article published by Dr. Frederick Lynch, editor of "Christian Work" based upon observations made in Scandinavia in which he said, "Methodists and Baptists are looked upon as interlopers, and are regarded by the people as queer sects. The people cannot understand why they have come, and wonder why America sends them." Proceeding from this point, the Lutheran Council challenges the right of American Evangelical bodies to interest themselves in establishing their doctrines and organizing churches in Scandinavia.

In view of the importance of the whole question, THE BAPTIST requested Dr. G. Arvid Hagstrom, president of the Bethel Academy and Theological Seminary of the Swedish Baptist General Conference of America to give the readers of THE BAPTIST a statement of the reasons for and the results of Baptist work in Scandinavia.

started was nothing less than the kindling of a spiritual fire, which neither king, magistrate, nor priest could quench. It has spread so that more than 100,000 members of churches in Sweden and the United States, together with a large number of Swedish people who are members in American churches, constitute a spiritual and stabilizing element in such churches. The products and by-products of this spiritual movement are to be found in all countries contributing their liberal share to the world's uplift in evangelization, Christian education, social, industrial, and political service, bearing fruits in Christian character, better citizenship and cleaner commonwealths the world over.

As well might one say of a mighty river whose flow makes fertile the soil, thus making possible increased crops, that it is an interloper as to accuse these followers of their Master of being guilty of such an opprobrium. The theological seminary in Stockholm has produced and sent forth a type of men who have brought things to pass because they were men of a genuine, outstanding religious experience and deep, strong conviction upon which has been built an efficiency by the teaching and training of cultured men, which has developed the character and produced the successful work that has followed their labors in their homeland, this country, and upon several foreign mission fields. If they are proselytes it would be of the type of their Master, who could make an apostle of a publican or a devout disciple of a pharisee. The sturdy stock of the Scandinavian is good timber for the building of a college of disciples and followers of the Lord Jesus which he has used to build his kingdom in the Scandinavian countries as well as in other lands, and the results amply justify the efforts put forth. A galaxy of names could be produced in evidence of this.

Opposition an Incentive to Faith

The interpretations of scriptures, by which regeneration or the saving work of grace has been ascribed to a rite administered to infants, has in these lands, in part at least, brought to pass a condition that has made fertile and favorable soil for disciples who have been content to preach the word and trust the Holy Spirit to use his own weapon and instrument to make the seed germinate and grow. Thus when their efforts have multiplied in an encouraging degree this has, as in preceding centuries, awakened alarm and opposition within the ranks of the sacramentarian groups. But, as in the days of old, so in the present age, the opposition thus encountered will only be an added incentive to the growth of this work of faith.

It is a significant fact that when next year the city of Gothenburg in Sweden is to celebrate the three-hundredth anniversary of the founding of the city and an exposition is to be displayed including the work and achievements of Swedish people throughout the homeland, and when it has also been decided to invite Swedish people from all over the world to be represented by models, tablets, curios and other mementos of historic value, showing the rise, progress, and development of Swedish movements throughout the world, among the four denominations invited to be represented upon that occasion are the Swedish Baptists of the United States who are preparing to send models of schools, churches, hospitals, orphanages and other institutions for this exposition. This is of special significance in view of the fact that the Baptists are invited together with Lutherans, the Mission Friends, and the Methodists to share in this display of the rise and progress of our religious institutions found here.

When the Baptist World Alliance, which is to assemble in Stockholm, Sweden, in July, 1923, brings Baptists from all parts of the world, and not a small number of Scandinavian Baptists from this country, there will be ample opportunity to appraise the value and scrutinize the genuineness of this work and, till then, we may well content ourselves with the words of one of old: "If this counsel or this work be of men, it will be overthrown; but if it is of God, ye will not be able to overthrow them, lest haply ye be found even to be fighting against God."

St. Paul, Minn.

FOR every family there comes a day when the church is needed. Never is there a failure to give the call. Perhaps it is a christening, a marriage or a burial. In any case the church responds. For the moment it is all-important.

But after that, what? In some cases there is an interest in the church and its work that continues to grow into a solid relationship. More often, however, the beneficiaries dismiss all thought of the church, once it has satisfied their momentary needs. The average family wants the church to help with its burdens, but there the relationship ends. If the church has burdens, and of course it has, there is a big element of society that is content to let the other man carry them.—Minneapolis Journal.

Which is Martha?

By MRS. E. C. CRONK

CHRISTMAS was coming. It blew in the keen December winds, it glinted through the December sun, it sparkled in the gay shop windows, it shone in the faces of hurrying, bundle-laden shoppers. The world seemed full of joy, but Mrs. Saunders' heart was full of bitterness, as she walked home from the December missionary meeting. Somehow all the beautiful things she had heard there had filled her with an unutterable weariness and a deep resentment. It was so easy for some of the members, who had fine homes and everything she wanted and did not have, to stand up there and speak so beautifully and so feelingly about "giving the best for Christ at Christmas." Little did they know how poor her best was. Little did they dream of the numbness in her fingers and the ache in her back over the extra sewing she took in to make possible even the pitiful little gifts she brought regularly. She wished they could glimpse her scanty store, and pass judgment on what should be her best gift. Mrs. Saunders smiled with a touch of bitterness. "My best gift!" she thought. "I should just like to see them search my poor little cottage to find a gift worthy of that superlative."

Suddenly the weariness left her eyes and her face shone in swift, joyful response to the greeting of the radiant girl who opened the door, as her mother stepped up on the porch of the little cottage. "Oh, mother, dear, I've won it! I've won it!" called the girl triumphantly. "Not the scholarship, Martha?"

"That's just exactly what," said the girl as she gave her mother an enthusiastic hug. "Just think of your little Martha getting to go to the medical college. I can see my sign hanging out over the door right now—'Dr. Martha Benton Saunders, Office Hours, 9:30 to 11 A. M.' I shall not have afternoon hours, you know, on account of going to see my patients then, and taking you out in my little electric car. Note how naturally I say my electric, please. I can see that car standing in front of the sign. I can see a picture of you without any needle in your hand and without any horrid old sewing that has to be 'ready by Saturday without fail, please.'"

Two hours they talked about the wonderful things that were to be when Martha finished the medical course and was a full-fledged, practicing physician, following in the footsteps of her young father, who had died when she was a baby. Finally Mrs. Saunders made her radiant but tired daughter go to bed. When the mother was alone, she took up the needle that was to be laid aside in those glorious coming days and began to work swiftly on the dress that "must be ready by Saturday, please," which was at hand. Her thoughts flew as rapidly as did the needle. Joy-bells rang in her heart over the thought that her only child's life was not to be hemmed in, as hers had been. Martha would have a chance. Martha would succeed. Martha might even become a famous doctor. "After all," said the tired little seamstress to herself, "I really ought to make a special Christmas gift to missions. If I would sit up just a few hours later every night, I might take in one more dress and give the money as a special Christmas thankoffering for my own best gift,—which is Martha."

With a sudden new application the words held her—"My own best gift, which is Martha." Resolutely she tried to put the thought out of her mind. Almost viciously her needle attacked the long seam before her, but the faster the needle flew, the faster flew Mrs. Saunders' thoughts. They went back to the time when an earnest little girl had come back from a missionary meeting to ask mother whether she could not be a missionary when she grew up. Down through the years ran her thoughts to that day when Martha came back from a summer conference thrilled with an earnest purpose to go as a medical missionary. Mrs. Saunders could see again those eager young eyes as she argued with her daughter that the missionaries should come from families of many children and that God would not want an only child to leave a widowed mother alone. Mechanically the needle sped on, ever faster and faster. As it flew in and out it seemed to overcast John 3:16 into the seam—"For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son." As the clock struck one Mrs. Saunders held up the dress. "Finished, at last," she said, and as she said it she knew that the dress was not the only thing that had been finished during those hours. For a few moments she paused by Martha's bed. "Perhaps," thought she, "Martha may have changed her mind and may not want to be given, now that her mother is willing to give her. I wonder if I can plead as eloquently the reasons why she should go as I did the reasons why she should stay."

At the special Christmas service of the missionary society there were some liberal gifts. The eloquent speaker who had made the beautiful appeal for the best gifts for Christ at Christmas had her envelope well filled. Mrs. Saunders had taken in the extra dress, and by sewing far into the night, she had her special offering, too. As the offering plate passed she laid on it her envelope, but she knew with a thrill of holy joy that no plate could contain her best gift, and she gave Martha's hand a quick squeeze. As they walked home together, Martha said: "Of course, mother, dear, it will not be easy to be separated for a time, but eternity will be a long wonderful time for us to be together." And, somehow, both of them knew that though seas should divide them and though continents should separate them, they would be closer together than many mothers and daughters who live under the same roof, and, somehow, Mrs. Saunders felt nearer to the Father, who so loved that he gave his only Son, than she had ever felt before. As the Christmas bells rang out their call, her heart chimed back its response, "My own best gift, which is Martha." The Interior Splendor of Religion

By JAMES M. STIFLER

It has often been a wonder to me that so few of the great novelists have seen the romance and glory, "the interior splendor of religion" that there is in the lives and experiences of the men and women who are genuinely religious and whose faith is not a mental belief, but who actually "bet their lives," as Donald Hankey put it—that there is a God.

It would be a revelation to the modern novelist to sit through a prayer meeting such as was held in First Church of Evanston, Ill., the evening before Thanksgiving. These modern writers who are such close analysts of the human heart and emotions seem never to have known the deep faith and satisfaction that are the portion of great numbers of intelligent, educated and successful people, such as those who comprised this meeting.

The chapel was not large enough so they assembled in the splendid Gothic auditorium, men, women and children, to the number of nearly 300.

A psalm is read, several stirring hymns sung, a prayer offered and then the people are asked to give thanks to God for his goodness to them during the year.

A grandfather speaks of his joy in his family and pride in a daughter serving humanity for Christ's sake in a foreign mission hospital. A widow honors God for his comfort to her. A business man thanks God that his affairs have come out much better than he hoped. Another wishes to publicly thank God for the help that the preaching has been to him for the year that is just past. A college man declares that the church has been a defense to his soul. Several high school boys and girls wish to tell of their appreciation of their parents and the Christian fellowship that they have in their young people's society. A little nine year old is caught in the tide and stands in that great dignified church and lisps her thanks to God. A young man who is to be married the next day and a few moments later the young woman who is to marry him, thank God for their happiness. You can be sure that there will be no divorces in families that are founded like that.

The bereaved praise God for their hope of immortality, the ill thank him for his sustaining power, one for a great temptation overcome, the busy that they have interesting work. When the hour is over a mature professional man comes to the pastor and asks for baptism into that goodly fellowship.

One hundred and four persons give public thanks to God, two of them strangers who came in attracted by the lights and music and who confessed that they had never seen or heard anything like this before. And a dozen letters from those who could not come are read.

Yet this is but the uncovering of the real holy of holies—of the human heart of those who know God, and during the days when it is not so openly revealed, each one knows that it is there. In this faith they live and move and have their being. This is the salt of the earth. Would that the multitudes of the self-ridden, passion driven that throng our streets might know it.

The New World Movement in My Church

By J. E. SMITH, Pastor of the First Baptist Church of Spokane, Washington

A HARD task is a test of caliber and character in individuals and in churches. No one knows how much he can do until he tries. If he refuses to try he gets nowhere. If he makes an "honest to goodness" effort to do the seemingly impossible he surprises everybody and most of all himself in the results obtained.

The New World Movement was conceived in prayer. It was launched in faith. It challenged the faith of the Baptist hosts of the North. It tested the fibre of our Christianity. It revealed the fine gold of the sanctuary. It likewise brought to view the dross of our unbelief.

When we received our quota in Spokane the first result was a gasp for breath. We had to open the windows—the windows of prayer. The figures $63,300 startled us and seemed a mountain as large and immovable as Mount Spokane overlooking our city. Then we remembered that our Lord had something to say about mountains. "If ye have faith," he said, "as a grain of mustard seed, we shall say unto this mountain remove. . . ." We prayed. The mustard seed began to grow. Faith increased. We became familiar with the figures. The silence of doubt and unbelief was broken by one of our church leaders who said, "If that's our quota we ought to make an effort to raise it." We adopted the quota. We accepted the challenge. Then we began to organize, step by step, according to the standard plan.

When Nehemiah began to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem he said, "We made our prayer unto God and set a watch." They did not pray and forget to work. They did not work and forget to pray. Prayer plus work will get results where either alone will fail. We raised up a corps of four-minute men who brought facts concerning the triumphs and needs at home and abroad. Information kindled inspiration. As the light appeared and warmth increased, dormant powers in the church began to awake.

The time came to choose our team captains. We prayed about it. As a result, one half of the captains chosen to lead in the campaign were persons who had never taken responsibility in the church before. That was an eye opener. God knew there were such workers, but we had not discovered them. Prayer is a wonderful source of revelation. It removes spiritual astigmatism and enables us to see folks we had blindly missed; it also brings to light pockets of reserve treasure we had never suspected.

The last Sunday of April, 1920, came. The teams gathered after the morning service, had lunch together in the church, made their individual pledges, and in the atmosphere of prayer went forth in the belief that this was the Lord's work and that he would see it through. At the evening service we totaled the pledges obtained during the day and discovered that we were about $20,000 short of the goal. This was a test of our faith. During the week the amount pledged was increased to $50,000, so that Sunday morning, May 2, found us with $13,000 short of our quota.

The previous Saturday afternoon the campaign director and the pastor were led to go to a sign-writer and have a neat card printed with these words, "Let's Finish the Job." This was hung where the entire congregation could see it. There was no intention of asking subscriptions that Sunday morning. But some one reported a new subscription and then another and another. The meeting was taken completely out of its intended channel. Victory seemed near. Enthusiasm kindled. Pledges new and additional were made with scarcely any effort to secure them until the total reached the sum of $65,000. Amid tears and prayers, smiles and applause, we sang the doxology and thanked the Lord for the victory he had given us.

What have been the permanent results in the church?

First: It has put a new valuation upon prayer. We had always prayed. But per year." God knows his stewards.

Third: It has given the church a new standard of stewardship. Men and women who had been giving dimes have learned how to give dollars. And the beauty of it is that they have discovered that they are not poorer but richer by the investment. For two years after the campaign for the New World Movement we paid all our church expense bills with no canvass of the membership and with few appeals for funds.

Fourth: It has given the church a new sense of cooperative spiritual power. Three times we have organized the church for a campaign of personal evangelism. We have fixed a certain goal as a minimum of new members to be secured by a given time. We have never failed to reach the goal and go beyond it. God can give us evangelistic success as easily as financial success if we really want it.

Fifth: It has given us a new denominational interest. Hearing the wonderful facts about our missionary triumphs at home and abroad and listening to the recital of urgent kingdom needs has put new denominational loyalty into the hearts of many of our lukewarm and half-hearted members. Many awoke to the fact that Baptists were not at the tail but were leading in kingdom enterprises.

What happened in our church I am sure is not different from the experience of other churches who entered wholeheartedly into the New World Movement. Doubtless the results here have been duplicated and greatly exceeded elsewhere.

A New Kindergarten Sunday School

LITTLE bamboo chairs, a few kindergarten tables, and a room forty feet square were made ready for a Kindergarten Sunday School. Miss Lettie Archer gathered in from the streets of Chengtu, West China, the little tots who had never been to Sunday school, and that was the beginning. Miss Archer is a new missionary, studying the language, but she managed to secure some Chinese teachers who could tell the lesson story to the children grouped around the little tables and help them picture it more clearly by working it out in silhouette.

"You would enjoy," writes Miss Archer, "hearing these little tots, who, with few exceptions, never sang before in their lives, learning to sing 'Jesus Love Me,' 'The Little Lord Jesus,' 'Suffer Little Children,' 'I'll Be a Sunbeam,' and so on in Chinese. True, some of them come with unwashed faces and dirty clothes, and some have to carry baby brothers on their backs, but they seem to enjoy it as much as the children at home who come marching in to Sunday school in their dainty new dresses.

"The Chinese are passionately fond of flowers and most of them have none, many of them living in hovels back of shops without a square foot of room for grass or flowers. Often I take over a huge bouquet of daisies or nasturtiums which I divide among them.

The Sunday school was started with ten children, and within four months eighty-six little ones were happily learning there the first steps toward a Christian life.

A Prayer

By Arthur T. Fowler

TO GOD! Thy glory fills the heavens, and the earth is full of thy goodness. Thou art high above all our earthly limitations, separate from us, and yet how near thou art. Thy infinite love has crossed the gulf between us and thee. We are made nigh by the cross of Christ, and thank thee that we can come into fellowship and communion with thee. Come and abide in the room of our hearts. Make us worthy to be the temples of thy presence. Bless all who seek thy face this day, and be with all who seek to do thy will in sincerity and truth. Strengthen us for our daily duties, and guide us along the earthly path. We would make our own the great virtues and graces of thy Christ. We would covet earnestly the best gifts, bearing his image and superscription, and show by our daily life that we belong to him. Amen.

here was clear evidence that God answers the prayers of his children when they earnestly unite heart and hand for the work of the kingdom. No task is too hard for him. "If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ask whatsoever we will, and it shall be done unto you," were among the final words of Jesus. If we can meet the condition we can depend on the result.

Second: It has given us a new appreciation of divine resources in the church. God has men big enough and money in quantities sufficient for every demand of his kingdom. He reveals them when the church is in a position to use them. One of our team captains sent a night letter to a friend in Canada who had never seen our church and was not a member of any church but who had Baptist ancestry. A wire came back, "$1,000 in American gold." Another man, we prayed, would give $500 per year for four years. He made his pledge for $100 per year. On being told Sunday evening that we had hoped for a $500 pledge he said he could hardly do that but would increase his pledge to $125 per year and the next day left the city for a business trip. On Thursday a letter came to the pastor saying that he had been thinking the matter over and had concluded it could be done: "Put me down for $500

Building the Young Business Women's Class

In every city of over 8000 there is a large and rapidly growing group of young business girls. They are stenographers, clerks, typists, statisticians, insurance agents, publicity experts, and even lawyers and doctors. They are a splendid group, and we should be proud of them, but mostly we let them alone. They are entirely without normal home life, and probably more than anyone else in the community, they need the church and the Sunday school. Our problem is to appreciate them, know them, and then we will naturally love them.

Why are they not in our churches? One reason is that going to church in a strange place is by the nature of the case an experience conducive to home-sickness. The same hymns are sung, the same phrases are heard in sermon and prayers, but every face is strange. Then, in even the most cordial churches, we feel that we have done our duty: "Aye, there's the rub," we do it as a duty, when we have given the stranger a hearty handshake, have asked the name and said "come again." Then we immediately hasten to our friends of years and ask how Mary is, and whether Tom has his new car yet, and when Alice will be home. As we happily visit with our real friends, the stranger to whom we spoke so cordially is slipping out, feeling more lonely than before she came.

The Sunday-school class has a distinct advantage over the church in winning the stranger, because it is by nature less formal, and can specialize on groups. The young business women's class has therefore a very great and real work in the church. But the class must never forget its great aim.

The most serious danger in the large class is that it will become an end in itself, will become a mere eddy in which life that is needed in the main stream, goes round and round, feeling very active and useful, but getting nowhere. The great aim of the class is to interest these business girls in the first place, lead them to Christ, and then into the active work of the church. The world-wide program of the churches today is such as to enlist the interest of every worth-while girl, and she needs to feel herself a part of a world service if she is to be a happy Christian.

This being the general aim of the class, we come now to the specific task of reaching these girls. They belong to two classes; first, those who were brought up in the Sunday school but who drifted away in the early teens; and second, a larger group, who have never been regular attendants at Sunday school. Both classes are hard to reach, but that is what makes the game worth while.

No one can interest them who does not understand their daily lives, or who has a critical attitude toward them. Now we might as well admit at the first that they are different from the girls who live at home. We do not see them at their daily work, and have no idea what capable folks they are, what responsibilities they carry, and how efficient they are. We see them at night, going from one amusement place to another, dressed in what we consider rather daring taste, apparently with no idea but to be amused, and little apparent care as to our approval of them or their ways. Do we shrug and condemn them, do we dismiss them as flappers, or dub them "hard-boiled"? If we do they will rightly pass us by. Only one who can enter into their lives can understand and win them.

We naturally suppose that they spend their leisure time so carelessly because they are naturally light-minded and flip. They would say they were seeking excitement. They realize as we cannot that the worst place for their mental, moral, and spiritual health in the evenings would be their stuffy boarding-house rooms. They are using good sense when they spend as little time in them as may be.

Yet that fact alone will not account for their seeking the bright lights so industriously. The truth is that they are continually hunting for something to quiet an inner unrest. They go from this excitement to that, try out this thing and that, always seeking and never satisfied. No one thinks to tell them that this unrest is a blind seeking for the things of the spirit, for God. They hunger and thirst after righteousness, and are feeding upon husks, because no one tells them of the living water, or the daily bread offered so abundantly by Christ. They do not know that they are the children of a loving heavenly Father, created in his image, and they will never be happy till they find themselves at peace in him.

The whole world will be unhappy until it finds Christ. Therefore, the great aim of the business women's class is to tell the good news, to make friends of these girls, to help them to Christ, and then to lead them into active work in the church.—JESSIE L. BURRALL in Sunday School Worker.

International Sunday School Lesson for January 7

JESUS HEALING ON THE SABBATH

Lesson: Luke 13 Golden Text: Matt. 12:12.

Introductory

Our lessons for this quarter carry over without a break from last quarter, ending there with the twelfth chapter of Luke and beginning today with the thirteenth chapter. The parable of the barren fig-tree immediately precedes the printed verses of the lesson. Luke records neither time nor place for the occurrence cited, and no other Gospel tells the story. The Jewish Sabbath was our Saturday, the seventh day of the week. After Christ's crucifixion and resurrection on the first day of the week, the observance of the Sabbath was changed to that day.

The Lesson

"He was teaching in one of the synagogues on the Sabbath day. And behold, a woman that had a spirit of infirmity eighteen years; and she was bowed together, and could in no wise lift herself up. And when Jesus saw her" Jesus never failed to see the physically crippled or the mentally ill. We remember him asking the name of the demoniac a few lessons ago, giving to the outcast a definite personality. Now in the temple his eye travels to this cripple of eighteen years. "Thou art loosed from thine infirmity," he said, and laid his hands upon her and immediately she was straight, and glorified God. The Jews "strained at a gnat" when it came to the observance of their Sabbath. It was their boast that they would die rather than violate the holy day. And so the ruler of the synagogue was angry with Jesus for having healed on this day. He talked "at" Jesus through the multitude, reminding him that there were six days for men to labor and it was on those days they should come to be healed and not on the seventh which was the Lord's Day. But no one can talk "at" a Christ. "Ye hypocrites!" exclaimed Jesus, and then reminds them that they care for their beasts even on the Sabbath day, so how much more should he heal a crippled woman? His adversaries were put to shame and confusion and "all the multitude rejoiced for all the glorious things that were done by him."

Leading Thoughts

1. The act of Jesus on the Sabbath which called forth the criticism of the ruler of the synagogue was distinctly one of helpfulness—one which made a woman glorify God. 2. What would be the effect if every one who teaches in the name of Christ saw first the needy one in his congregation? 3. The crooked soul was as evident to Jesus as was the crooked body; his straightening of the body meant also the straightening of the soul.

HIGHER CRITICS AND HIGHER CRITICS

A friend has sent me your issue of November 18 in which there is a reference to me in the article on "Christian Scholarship." Speaking of a lecture I gave at Minneapolis last winter, you add: "The significance of this reference here is in the fact that a notable exponent of the most conservative school of biblical interpretation admits and defends the methods of the higher criticism."

I am afraid that these words give an entirely wrong impression of what I actually said. I pointed out that the mere use of our intellect on the Bible is tantamount to criticism and in this sense I said that "we are all higher critics, only we don't know it," but I stated then and I wish now to repeat that there are "higher critics and higher critics," and that what is usually called higher criticism today is characterized by methods which I not only do not "admit and defend" but, on the contrary, deny and oppose. My lectures at Minneapolis made this distinction perfectly clear without any qualification, and I added that if people would only keep together closely and continually the three kinds of criticism, lower, higher, and "highest," they could "criticise" the Bible as much as they wished, because the "highest" criticism, the attitude which has been expressed as "the criticism of the contrite heart" would balance and protect all purely literary and historical conclusions. If you or your readers wish to know still more of my position, I would refer you to an article in the Bible Champion for November in which I advocate the conservative position in criticism against the views held by Professor Peake.

I venture to think that your entire article, especially with its references to me and (more fully) to Dr. Hastings, is calculated to give an entirely wrong idea of the fact that between the higher critics of the type represented by Dr. Hastings and the criticism for which I contend there is a fundamental difference.

It is, of course, the barest duty to distinguish between naturalistic scholars and others who accept the supernatural incarnation, and who therefore see no incompatibility between the acceptance of the literary and historical principles of naturalism and a belief in the divine source and authority of the Old Testament. But it is impossible to say that the latter school give any clear assurance of the strength of the foundation on which they themselves rest and ask us to rest. While recognizing to the full that many of our British and American "higher critics" are firm believers in a divine revelation, it is impossible not to feel the force of the words of the late Dr. W. H. Green of Princeton, when he said:

"They who have themselves been thoroughly grounded in the Christian faith may, by a happy inconsistency, hold fast their old convictions, while admitting principles, methods and conclusions that are logically at war with them. But who can be surprised if others shall with stricter logic carry what has been thus commended to them to its legitimate conclusion?"

When in your closing paragraph you speak of the "methods" and the "assured results" of the higher criticism you seem to me to fail to recognize that we conservatives strongly oppose and deny the validity of the "methods" and though we have asked again and again to be told the "assured results" we have not yet obtained any satisfaction.

With all respect to the position of your article, I will venture to say quite frankly that if Dr. Hastings is right, the conservative school is wrong, while if the conservatives are right, Dr. Hastings is wrong. Between the two positions, with especial regard to "methods" and "results," there is "a great gulf fixed."

A NEW TYPE OF HOSPITALITY

Hugh Black says, "Some one missed a great opportunity in the little town of Bethlehem one night, when Mary, the mother of Jesus, had to find lodging in the stable because there was no room for them in the inn. She had the right to expect common kindness, but no one was willing to forego their ease." It is the old, old story of the lack of Christian hospitality. At many Christian conventions to give a little factory prepared breakfast food is to be "cumbered with much serving."

The delegates to "The Southwestern Iowa Baptist Association" were surprised and inspired by a new phase of Christian entertainment when ninety of them met with the Bedford Church, whose pastor is

Rev. Wesley Fletcher, who suggested to the church the following type of hospitality:

All delegates were to have lodging and breakfast. Any who could not entertain were to contribute $1 to aid in the purchase of food and the hiring of help. All food was to be bought, all help was to be hired, except the menu and buying committee and the ladies who served about an hour at the two meals. Twenty-five cents was charged for each meal. Any money above expenses was to be given to the missionary treasury of the association, and $3.17 was turned over. All meals were at the church. The nearly 100 Baptists went away feeling they had been well fed physically with the added spiritual blessing of those who were willing to go not only the first mile of necessity, but the second as well.

THE MINISTERIAL BUREAU

I heartily sanction the sentiment of G. C. Crippen's article, "A Cog Wheel Short" as presented by him on page 1335 of THE BAPTIST, Nov. 25, 1922, and commend the thought of a ministerial bureau to look after such work, with one central office either in connection with THE BAPTIST, or the Board of Promotion and a branch office in each state, in some way connected with the state convention and the state workers, but with some one in each state whose special business it shall be to look after this phase of the work.

A part of the expense of such a bureau might be raised by asking each church and pastor so brought together to send a voluntary contribution at the end of their first year, showing their appreciation or a lack of it as their case might be.

SABBATHS AND TITHES

Many Christians who have no question as to Sabbath-keeping are by no means clear as to tithing. Conscientious, they would not for a moment think of working on God's seventh of time to add a dollar to slender incomes; but they do not hesitate to use part of God's tenth of money for that purpose. Putting the Sabbath and the tithe on a par will help greatly. One is just as much God's as the other. The seventh of one is no more "holy" than the tenth of the other.

It will help, also, to get into the habit of saying "pay" in regard to tithes instead of "give." When God's time is used in his service, no one thinks of "giving" it to him. Why make the distinction when using some of his money, and speak of "giving" it? Neither time nor money is ours. We cannot "give" to him what is his already. We can "pay" it.

Northern Pines

*IF there is rank in growing things
I think that these must all be kings;
Legions on legions, loved of sun,
And straight when the day is done.*

*Who have to usher in the spring,
A host of merry songs to sing,
Who make, when winter breezes blow,
A fellowship with ice and snow.*

*Once these were food for savage eye—
That make a meadow of the sky,
And likewise they shall know the day
When you and I are passed away.*

And I will know that love has sent
No more majestic monument.*

LESSONS FROM THE PSALMS

- (1) The Guide-Board Psalm. Ps. 1:1-6.
(CONSECRATION MEETING).

"And he shall be like a tree planted by the streams of water."

Beginning with the New Year, we have a series of topics based on the Psalms, running through the entire year. A discussion of these topics should mean much to the devotional life of our young people. The result will be in proportion to what the young people put into these studies.

The Guide-board Psalm

Along most any highway, the traveler will find sign-boards which serve as a guide to places of interest, and from one place to another. The righteous man serves as a guide to those about him by what he is and by what he does.

1. The company he keeps. "Blessed is the man that walketh not . . . nor standeth . . . nor sitteth," (in bad company). The young fellow starts out with the best of intentions. He meets some old companions in the way. The first thing he knows, he is walking in their way and possibly discussing with them some things which at first did not seem right. But, he goes on. By and by he has become so interested that he carries awhile. The bunch stands at the cross roads or at a street corner. The influence of the crowd grows upon him, until at last he is sitting around with young fellows who care nothing about religion. They scoff at the church and the finer things, but our young man doesn't seem to care any more. The fellow who does that sort of a thing is a guide-board in the wrong direction.

2. The better way. Happy is the fellow who does not go in that way. "But (whose) delight is in the law of Jehovah." "He shall be like a tree planted by the streams of water." What a contrast! Look at the fellow with his crowd, probably with a cigarette chucked in his mouth and bearing the marks of a nicotine reservoir. The other fellow, a fine hearty, wholesome Christian, with high ideals. He is clean and good. He is like a beautiful tree beside the road in spring time, or even in winter, for he is an "evergreen." He is prosperous and happy. He is a guide in the right direction. To the weary folk who pass by he says, "This is the King's Highway."

3. The destiny of the wicked. They are "like the chaff which the wind driveth away." The winnowing process will reveal the shallowness of the wicked man. The storm and stress of life quite often reveal genuineness of character. What a picture: "Therefore, the wicked shall not stand in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous." Good people have to put up with a lot from the ungodly, but they can do so with the confidence, that some day things will be different.

4. The destiny of the righteous. "Man's chief end is to glorify God and to enjoy him forever," says the old catechism. Why not? All life is a stewardship. Sublime thought: "For Jehovah knoweth the way of the righteous." The finest destiny lies in the way of Jehovah.

Many young people will read our lives who will perhaps never read the first Psalm. Because of this, the ambition of the great apostle, should be ours:

"For me to live is Christ."

Baptist Young People at Work

THE YOUNG PEOPLE OF TEXAS report the best year in their history. The report submitted to the state convention showed that the workers had visited 339 churches, conducted 144 training schools, issued 16,394 diplomas, and secured the reading of 225,000 chapters of the Bible. There have been 394 conversions as a result of the personal work of the members of the department. Texas now has 2,525 B. Y. P. U.'s, with an approximate membership of 90,000.

IN THE TERRITORY OF THE SOUTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION, there are approximately 10,000 B. Y. P. U.'s, with a membership of 324,000.

THE INTERDENOMINATIONAL YOUNG PEOPLE'S COMMISSION, made up of a large number of young people's workers from the various denominations, held its annual meeting in the city of Nashville, Tenn., Dec. 8-11.

THE SCHOOL OF INSTRUCTION AND METHODS for Christian Workers for Washington, D. C., and vicinity, was held at the Calvary Baptist Church, December 3-8. The young people's course was under the leadership of Rev. E. J. Wright, B. Y. P. U. field secretary for Virginia.

GENERAL SECRETARY WHITE of the B. Y. P. U. of America, has visited the following states and provinces, since the beginning of the present fiscal year: Alberta, Arizona, California, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Manitoba, Minnesota, Missouri, Michigan, Nevada, New Mexico, Ohio, Ontario, Oregon, Saskatchewan, Tennessee, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming.

THE QUARTERLY RALLY of the city B. Y. P. U. of St. Louis and vicinity, was held at Delmar Baptist Church, Dec. 7, with

Rev. H. L. Reader as the speaker. The Baptist Herald, the official monthly of St. Louis young people makes the following report: "St. Louis observed the first week ever devoted by an American city to girls, on Oct. 14, beginning with a parade consisting of about thirty-five floats, comprising the different religious organizations which took part in the festivities, sponsored by the board of religious organizations. The Baptist Young People's Union was represented by a float decorated in the different shades of autumn leaves and wild flowers, occupying third place in the line of march. Complimentary remarks were heard from spectators along the parade route in regard to the appropriateness of our float, it being a credit to the occasion, as well as to the efforts of Mr. F. H. Wittneben, chairman of the parade committee, Misses Zada Griffin and Mary Woods of LaFayette Park Church, and Mr. Harry Steward, our vice-president."

MR. HAROLD I. MCKEEVER, president of Pittsburgh Association, dealt with the various objectives for the year; in his report to the association on Oct. 13. Some of these goals were: 1. Ten new local organizations. 2. At least one new group organization. 3. One old group reorganized. 4. A beginning in research work and the keeping of statistical records. 5. Aid in forming a state organization. In regard to the last item, the B. Y. P. U. Bulletin carries the following resolution: "That we, the Baptist Young People's Union of the Pittsburgh Association, heartily endorse the efforts of the state organization committee, in consummating a B. Y. P. U. of the state of Pennsylvania. That we further wish to go on record, as believing such an organization as the above, to be necessary to the progress and spiritual growth of the Pennsylvania young people. That we, the young people of the Pittsburgh Baptist Association, hereby pledge ourselves to support and further the cause of state organization in any and every way it is possible for us to do."

THE B. Y. P. U. OF BUENA, Washington is looking up these days. It has as president a veteran of the World War. He is six feet, eight inches tall.

BIGGER AND BETTER WORK: Last spring the B. Y. P. U. of the First Church of Ridley Park, Pa., started a membership campaign through which the membership was more than doubled and attendance at meetings increased threefold. The simple method of dividing the society into two teams was used, the losing team entertaining the winners at the close of the contest. Unlike many such contests, the members thus gained have proved to be of the lasting type, as attendance this fall has been larger than ever. The society undertakes to care for the social life of the church, in part by giving an evening's entertainment in one of the homes or in the church social.

rooms each month to which the entire church is invited and comes. This month, the president, Mr. G. T. Street, Jr., took one of the groups to visit a neighboring society, automobiles being provided by members. He intends to follow this plan by sending out one of the groups to a different society each month until every member has had at least one such visit. This will make for a sympathetic interest in the other societies in the association and will give the Ridley Park society new ideas. It has been found practicable to turn over the missionary nights to the pastor, Rev. Wayland Zwayer, who presents one of the Board of Promotion's stereopticon lectures on the topic of the evening. Without exception, all the young people of the church and Sunday school are actively at work in the B. Y. P. U. Just at present, after the benediction, the members resume their seats while Mr. Zwayer, the pastor, gives a five-minute talk on prayer, teaching the younger members to pray.

THE BIGGER AND BETTER BAPTIST SUNDAY SCHOOL CAMPAIGN is gaining in momentum. Bulletin Number 6 showed a total registration for the states of 1,150, and for the cities, 213. New York heads the list among the states, while Pittsburgh heads the list of the cities.

"KANSAS BAPTIST ADVANCE 1922-23," is a bulletin issued by the department of religious education, Kansas Baptist Convention, Miss Edna Umstot, director. It carries a unified program for church, Sunday school, and B. Y. P. U.

EAST WASHINGTON ASSEMBLY will be held July 17-27, 1923; West Washington August 7-17, 1923. Rev. T. H. Hagen is director of religious education.

FORT WAYNE ASSOCIATIONAL B. Y. P. U. Quarterly Rally was held Nov. 26, at First Church, Fort Wayne, with Rev. Albert H. Gage of Chicago as speaker. The next quarterly rally will be held at Garrett, Ind., with Ford Porter, state B. Y. P. U. president, as speaker.

FIRST ANNUAL BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONFERENCE of Southwestern Michigan was held at Kalamazoo, Nov. 18-19. The conference theme was "Constructive Evangelism." State B. Y. P. U. President E. V. Creed was one of the speakers.

THE ANNUAL B. Y. P. U. TRAINING INSTITUTE of Kansas City, Kan., and vicinity was held at the Edgerton Place Church, Kansas City, Dec. 3-8. The faculty included General Secretary White, State Director Miss Umstot, Rev. J. M. Justice, Drs. L. S. Bowerman, C. S. Osborn, L. M. Denton, W. P. Behan, and W. P. Crannell.

DR. HERBERT HINES, member of the board of managers of the B. Y. P. U. of America, was the speaker for the sunrise prayer meeting on Thanksgiving morning, held under the auspices of South District of Chicago B. Y. P. U.

EVANSVILLE, IND., Sunday School and B. Y. P. U. Institute and Twentieth Quarterly Associational Rally was held with the First Church, Evansville, Dec. 12-14. "Our B. Y. P. U." by White, was used as the text book for the young people's course.

Headquarters Message

Special attention is called to the following:

I. January Topics

January 14: "Why Do You Think the Bible is the Word of God?" II Tim. 3:14-17.

January 21: "Missionary Meeting. Great Hearts of India." Mark 16:15-19.

January 28: "What Are the Rightful Claims of Our Church Upon Us?" Heb. 10:19-25 (Denominational Day).

Note: For use in connection with the topic for Jan. 28, we have prepared a leaflet on "Religious Liberty" by Hon. Charles E. Hughes. These leaflets will be placed in the hands of all directors of religious education, who have requested them. The directors, in turn, will distribute them to local societies. Should a copy not reach your society by Jan. 20, drop a line to B. Y. P. U. of America, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago, and same will be mailed.

II. Missionary Topics for 1923

A large number of these topics are based on the mission study books for the year. The topics on home missions deal with the Negro problem. The two books, "In the Vanguard of a Race," and "The Trend of the Races," prices, cloth 75 cents each, or paper 50 cents each, should be in the hands of every society.

The foreign mission study books for the first half of 1923 are "Building with India" and "India on the March," price same as above. A number of topics are based on these books.

Young people's societies planning an intelligent consideration of the missionary topics for 1923, should order these books at once. Order from The American Baptist Publication Society or The General Board of Promotion.

III. Stewardship Topics

Beginning with February, there will be a series of topics, one each month for several months, on stewardship. The topic for Feb. 18 will be "Stewardship of Substance." The following materials are available from The General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York; 700 Ford Bldg., Boston; 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago; 504 Columbia Bldg., Los Angeles: "The Stewardship of Possessions" by Brink; "How to Inaugurate the Tithing System in the Local Church," by Wilson.

Write to the B. Y. P. U. of America, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill., for a sample package containing the following leaflets:

"Is the Tithe a Debt?"
 "Obedience the Master's Test."
 "Thanksgiving Ann."
 "Objection to Tithing."
 "A Tithing Catechism."
 "Does Tithing Pay?"
 "Does a Tenth Belong to God?"
 "Mine and Thine."
 "Talks with Money."
 "Who Owns the World?"
 "Proportionate Giving."
 "The Deacon's Tenth."

Christian Culture Course

Gentlemen:

I received yours of recent date containing Christian Culture Course literature for which I thank you. I am writing you to obtain additional information.

Could I enroll in the correspondence division of the course and after successfully completing each book teach it to members of a class here? Or must you be a graduate of the full course before you can teach it? If I understand the leaflet right in the First Year Course it would only be necessary for me to take one book as I

The Place Where the Young Child Lay

ONCE upon a time a magnificent church was being built in a certain city and there was need for one great stained glass window to go in a certain conspicuous wall. The committee-in-charge felt that it would be wise to have artists from all over the world submit designs for this window, so they issued a general notice about their requirements, and set a date when all sketches would be due. Many very famous painters entered drawings in the contest, but the one design on which all the committee agreed unanimously was made by an artist of unknown name and fame. The committee wrote him enthusiastically that they could not imagine any design which could better fill their requirements for the Church of the Redeemer than his sketch entitled "The Place Where the Young Child Lay." It was exactly what they wanted, so they commissioned him therewith to go ahead with the work, the details of which they entrusted to him, warning him to have all in readiness for the dedication of the church on Christmas Eve.

The unknown artist was naturally very much elated at this fine opportunity to win fame and money, and also he saw in it a chance to work out a certain grudge which he had against all mankind—a grudge so deep and bitter that he thought of it day and night, and kept himself secluded in his attic studio rather than try to mix with the people whom he hated. So he took the sketch of which the committee approved so enthusiastically, and he made certain little changes here and there with almost wicked delight, then he called in his wife and his baby so they could pose for the enlarged painting which he must make.

Now it just happened that his wife had been hanging out the family washing, and she came in wearing a shawl over her head and carrying the baby in the clothes basket. After she put down the basket she leaned over it, then looking up said gently: "Sh! the baby is sound asleep! If I pick him up he will awaken."

"Don't pick him up," cried the artist, "stay just as you are; that pose is perfect! Simply perfect! Imagine that the clothes basket is a manger, that you are Mary, the mother of Jesus, and you have leaned over to see if he is sleeping, but now you look up because you hear the approach of some one. Some one outside on camels; the three wise men . . . way up here at the top of the canvas, see, I shall paint the star that came and stood over where the young child lay. . . . Stay perfectly still, dear . . . Don't move . . . fine . . ."

So the painter's wife kept the pose that he thought was so perfect, and with quick, sure strokes he painted her as she knelt there. And it was a far lovelier picture than he had planned to make it, because in the heart of his wife there was none of the bitter grudge that was in his heart. For when she looked down at her sleeping child, a great peace stole over her, and when she glanced up at her husband painting so rapidly and eagerly, a great contentment stole over her that at last his true talent had been discovered and that the fame he deserved was to come to him. Then, too, as she knelt there in that quiet room she began to realize who it was that she represented: Mary, the

LOVE came down at Christmas,
Love all lovely, Love divine;
Love was born at Christmas;
Stars and angels gave the sign.
Worship we the Godhead;
Love incarnate, Love divine;
Worship we our Jesus,
But wherewith for sacred sign?
Love shall be our token,
Love be yours and love be mine—
Love to God and all men,
Love the universal sign.

mother of Jesus—the mother of the Savior—ah, what a wonderful thing to feel that in the life of your one little sleeping baby the hopes of the whole world centered! She fell to wishing that her little boy could grow up with hands that would bless all mankind, with lips that could comfort those in trouble as the Savior's lips had always comforted the sorrowing . . . Even as she brooded on the wonder of childhood and determined to train her boy in every Christ-like attitude, there came over her sweet tired face a peace and a beauty that was quite different from any look that had ever been there before. And the artist gasped with surprise, catching the rare charm of her expression and painting her in hushed delight.

Yet all the time, underneath his delight, the same old bitter hatred for mankind was working, and he kept saying to himself with fiendish glee: "The lovelier I make this picture, the better I can pay them back for all these years of hate and insults and injustice!" So with one-half of his soul he loved this wife who was so unexpectedly contributing to his picture, while the other half of his soul was steeped in unworthy mirth at the awful sensation he was going to create in that distant church on Christmas Eve.

Day after day the posing continued until finally his masterpiece was done, ready for the stained glass factory workers; and here his difficulty lay, for if they discovered his secret everything would be spoiled. But he thought of a plan—a clever, secret plan that could not help but work out as he wished, and the week before Christmas the various parts of the window arrived in that distant city where the new Church of the Redeemer was already completed. Trained workers began assembling the bits of glass and putting them in place, when a strange oversight bewildered them: neither face nor arms of the Madonna and Child could be found, high nor low. The workmen were nearly frantic until the artist arrived and calmed their fears by saying that he had brought the missing parts of the window with him separately. It was a whim of his to put in the faces and arms himself after all the rest of the window was ready.

"Just a sentiment of mine," he assured them. And when they discovered that he had mastered the correct process of fastening those extra pieces of glass in place, it was only natural that they agreed to his request. It was not at all the usual way to put up such a window, but surely the success of this one was his special concern, for it would be his dream come true. So that is how it happened that in the late afternoon of December the twenty-fourth, the artist went for the first time to the Church of the Redeemer. The whole building was fragrant with holly wreath and pine; the florists who had been busily decorating pulpit and pillars and pews had long since departed; and the artist was alone in the deserted building. Alone to carry out his secret scheme.

With set lips and grim determination he climbed the ladders and with sold and lead and little instruments fastened in place the lovely brooding face of the Madonna, and her tender protecting arms hovering over the sleeping Child whose face and limbs he also attached in place.

"Now!" hissed the artist vindictively, "now I have paid back the world for its treatment of me! Now all these Christian folks will have a new idea. They will be furious! They may even feel disgraced. Serve them right, but at least they will have a new idea. And I shall be more famous than they dreamed."

So he went out into the twilight of Christmas Eve. There was the cheerful clinkle-clank of sleigh-bells, and the bustling of many feet doing the last minute things that always are being done on Christmas Eve; there were men merrily carrying home hobby-horses and sleds at toy bureaus. There were women gaily carrying home turkeys and chickens and cranberries. There were jolly little red-mittened children skipping by him with mysterious parcels, and their faces beamed with Christmas mysteries. "I have my secret, too," the artist grinned; and went into a restaurant for a bite to eat.

Then when the time arrived for the dedication of the church, he slipped inconspicuously into a back pew; for he was unknown as yet to the committee. And just as he imagined, the entire congregation were looking up at his window with startled disapproving glances. There was whispering . . . nudging . . . occasionally even an angry gesture.

"I am paying them back!" grunted the artist to his soul. And his soul shrivelled with dismay at the hate in his voice.

The beautiful dedication service proceeded as it had been planned, but when the last carol had been sung and the benediction had been pronounced, it was very noticeable that groups of persons clustered in the aisles, and everybody was looking toward the window.

"The face of that Madonna is certainly black!" everybody was saying.

"She looks exactly like a Negro! Even the baby looks like a Negro baby! Where is that artist anyhow? The original sketch was not like this, certainly the glass factory would never have let such an error pass their inspector. Somebody has done us an injury! We cannot permit such a window in this magnificent church. . . ."

"Awful!"

"Horrible!"

"Disgraceful! A black Madonna here? Of course not!"

"Never!"

The artist, lurking behind a pillar, chuckled with high glee. "Paying you back, all you fine white Christians! All you superior disagreeable lordly beings! Paying you back for all the years of insult you have heaped on a poor Negro artist. Who knows but what the Christ-child was dark-skinned, anyhow? Go on being upset about it—nobody ever worried over upsetting me!" And his black face grew hard with hatred and spite.

The midnight chimes rang out on the Christmas air, but the congregation had left the church with anything but goodwill for men in their hearts. News of the marred windows was telephoned all over town, and although the service early Christmas morning was generally attended by only a few faithful souls, this year the capacity of the building was taxed. For everybody had come to see for himself and herself, that black Madonna.

Now is the time to tell you of the minister. For he was a very good man, and a very just man, and a very gentle man; and he had lain awake all night long wondering and wondering and wondering how he was ever going to preach the sermon he had announced from the text which was printed in that now famous window: "In him was life, and the life was the light of men." He intended to build his whole sermon around the window; he had intended to point at the Christ-child and tell how the hopes of all mankind had once clustered around the place where that young child lay . . . but now, should he point at that window? At that black Madonna and Child? He could hardly eat any breakfast, and seven o'clock found him walking into the dimly-lighted pulpit with a miserable sinking in his heart as he saw the church packed with a curious gazing crowd of people, whose eyes were turned, of course, in one direction.

"This settles it!" said the minister to himself, "I must preach about the window just as I planned. But oh, Lord, help me to find the words to say!" Yet he really had no least idea what he should say, even when at last he arose and announced his text: "In him was life, and the life was the light of men."

The congregation were reading those very words in the glass of the window, and some of them were resenting such words under such a picture, when suddenly the winter sun came blazing forth that Christmas morning with all the extra dazzle of a snowy day, and as its beams came breaking through the stained glass window a gasp of sheer surprise spread through the church; for in that blaze of sunlight the Madonna's face was shining, pure as an angel's and the little Christ-child was a sheen of dazzling glory.

"In him was life," repeated the minister, pointing upward, "and the life was the light of men." And inspired by the miracle of the transfigured black Madonna and Child, he preached a sermon that marked a milestone in the life of every person present.

"Who are you and I to say we do not want a black Madonna in our church? In that great day of beginnings when the Lord God made man, did he specify 'Let us make white man in our image? No—'Let us make man!' And to some he gave black skins; to some yellow skins; to some, brown skins; and to some, white skins. He must have seen but little difference in these external colors, for it pleased him to have an Africa with a hundred million black men, a China with four hundred million yellow men, an India with three hundred million brown men, a Europe and America with several hundred million white men. So in deep humility this Christmas Day I ask you—last evening when the Savior looked down into this Church of the Redeemer, who looked really black to his all-seeing gaze: that black Madonna? or you and I with black consternation in our hearts because we felt, of course, a Madonna needed flesh the shade of our flesh. Oh, the conceit of us! The curious blackness of our hearts that cannot see the God shine through those of another color. But now that we have had this miracle demonstrated, we need only lift our eyes to see God sending his life and his light to shine through the wonderful face of that black mother—was there ever tenderness like hers? Like Mary of old she seems to keep all these things and ponder them in her heart. Let us then, this Christmas Day, be wise men bringing gifts to the Savior of all mankind, and in the place where the young child lay let us put the most difficult present to give up—our race prejudice. For in him is life, and the life is the light of men: black men . . . white men."

There was a very curious sequel to this sermon. And although you may be expecting to hear first about what the congregation did, the artist himself did something so unexpected that it left everyone breathless. For with faltering steps he hurried to the platform and placed in the minister's hands a package, explaining brokenly: "It is my Christmas present to this church which I have wronged so insanely and selfishly. See, here is the original white glass for the face and arms of the Madonna and Child. I substituted the black glass myself. I wanted to prove to you what hypocrites you Christians were, that there was nothing to your religion but a snobbish superiority. But you have shown me that I was wrong, you have shown me that I was color blind, that in the sight of God Almighty there is neither black nor white—if his light shines through. Tomorrow I will change the black Madonna . . . today, I give my 'hate' to the Savior . . . I am ashamed . . . I have learned my lesson. . . ."

Then the congregation said: "We, too, have learned a lesson! Let us leave the black Madonna in its place, forever, so that our children and our children's children may see each Sunday how the light that came with the Christ-child is indeed the light of the world."

And there never was a Christmas gift so far-reaching in its influence as the legend of the Black Madonna in the Church of the Redeemer.

Your Two-Cent Gift

This is to remind the readers of the Chimney Corner of that special Christmas shower of two-cent postage stamps to be sent to Mrs. Helen Adams Moore, Morgan Community House, Pittsburgh, Pa., so that a new victrola may be bought! Read all about it in last week's Chimney Corner, then let us each do this simple act which will bring pleasure and profit to so many hundreds of Negroes. Wanted: A Two-Cent Santa Claus! Will you be one?

THEY all were looking for a king
To slay their foes and lift them high,
Thou cam'st a little baby thing
That made a woman cry.

O Son of Man, to right my lot
Naught but thy presence can avail,
Yet on the road thy wheels are not
Nor on the sea thy sail.

My how or when thou wilt not heed,
But come down thine own secret stair
That thou mayst answer all my need,
Yea, every bygone prayer.

Our Own Folks

Detroit Baptist Doings

By ALBERT H. FINN

The happiest people in this great city are the members of First Church. For eight long months, they were without a pastor, but patiently they waited and prayed, believing the Holy Spirit would choose the man. Finally a call was extended to Rev. Mark F. Sanborn, without a hearing and it was a unanimous call. Nov. 12 he and his charming wife and daughters came and a happy union has resulted. The congregations have been most gratifying. Thanksgiving was observed by a union community service held in the First Church, with Mr. Sanborn as preacher. His theme was "The Personal Element in Thanksgiving." The house was filled to overflowing into the galleries and chapel. It was an earnest plea for the spirit of thanksgiving in everyday living with a world-wide vision. Mr. Sanborn has been most cordially welcomed by the Baptist pastors and the B. Y. P. U.'s of the city. Monday evening, Dec. 11, the men of First Church gave a dinner in Mr. Sanborn's honor, with James A. Hoyt as toastmaster. A big, broad-visioned program for the future was presented. Being international president of the B. Y. P. U. of A., Mr. Sanborn is answering calls for addresses in outside cities. He surely is an inspiring leader.

The Baptist hosts of Detroit united in a great Thanksgiving service at Woodward Avenue Church. Dr. W. G. Spencer, president of Hillsdale College, who is proving himself such an acceptable preacher in these parts, preached a most profitable sermon, warning especially against a thankfulness that is nothing but Pharisaic self-praise and calling upon the nation to lead out in a program of righteousness and service. An offering was taken for the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board, designated for the Ministers' Home at Fenton.

Beulah Church welcomed Rev. Herman Lang as its new pastor on Dec. 3. This is an inspiring field and congregation and Mr. Lang and Mrs. Lang bring to it rich elements of strength, experience and consecration.

Temple Church

Temple Church is the consolidation of the Grand River and Fourteenth Avenue churches. The Fourteenth Avenue Church got into financial difficulties in its building operations and the Detroit Union was appealed to to take the title to the property and meet the pressing obligations. This was done. Then came the consolidation of the two churches. This has proved a success under the leadership of Rev. Llewellyn Brown. The obligations to the Detroit Union have been paid off and the title to the property is now in the Temple Church. This is but one instance of the advantages of a great united effort on the part of the Baptist churches of a metropolitan city. This is not the only church that has been saved to the cause and the denomination by the assistance given at a critical period by the Detroit Union.

The splendid structures being built this present year are every one made possible by the cooperative efforts put forward by the New World Movement and the Detroit Union. As soon as the individual congregations are strong enough to meet their obligations and continue their work alone, they will receive the title to their properties.

The new building for the former Monnier Road, now Grand River Avenue Church on Grand River Avenue, was ready for occupancy and dedication Dec. 17. Pastor W. A. Steinkraus did a fine work here during the past two years giving half of his time to this field. In October the Scotten Avenue asked that he give his whole time there. Accordingly, it was necessary to secure a new pastor. Rev. E. J. Parsons, lately of Petoskey, was called and is on the field.

Pay-up Sunday

Pay-up Sunday was observed at the Woodward Avenue Church on Nov. 26, when $12,000 was pledged for various local and denominational objectives. This grand old church is forging ahead with an ambitious program. Dr. Hoag has just concluded a series of sermons on the fundamentals of our faith, which were well received.

Jefferson Avenue Church has a great uncompleted gymnasium on its top floor. Plans are under way to complete this necessary adjunct to this splendid modern church house. Under the inspiring leadership of Rev. A. V. Allen this church is going forward with remarkable strides. Just now the Bible school is in a contest with the First Church in attendance and giving.

The board of trustees of the Detroit Union hold a monthly business meeting. Dr. Gleiss has suggested that a dinner be arranged each month by one of our foreign-speaking groups, at which time a presentation will be made by representative speakers of the progress being made with each nationality. The first was held in Woodward Avenue Church on Friday evening, Dec. 8, when the Roumanian group prepared the dinner and the presentation of the group was led by Rev. C. R. Igrisan. The members of the Women's Auxiliary, which is rendering such efficient help, were also present and participated. It was a unique, instructive and successful affair. The business session of the board of trustees followed.

It has been found advisable to organize another work among the Russians, this time on the west side of the city. The Roumanian brethren have also started another mission. Its location is in River Rouge. This makes the fourth Roumanian group in Detroit.

The work at the Negro Christian Center is progressing in a gratifying manner. It is catering to the needs of the entire community, white and Negro, in its educational, social and religious program. Rev. R. L. Bradby, Miss Alexander and Mr. Clay are doing a fine piece of constructive work.

There are now within the metropolitan area thirty-seven white Baptist churches and missions, four German, four Roumanian, two Hungarian, two Russian, two Polish, one Italian, one Swedish, one Bohemian, one Slovak, one Serbian-Croatian and forty-four Negro and one Christian Center, Negro. Detroit is gaining in a wonderful way and already there is need for at least twenty additional missions in communities that greatly need a gospel work.

Rev. Joseph Taylor, of West China, is to be with us Jan. 19-22. Also Rev. Albert H. Gage, of Chicago. An evangelistic conference for the Detroit area will be held on Jan. 22.

New Member Night

Our Detroit young people have been busily engaged in a membership contest looking to the doubling of the membership of the various B. Y. P. U. organizations in the several churches. At the First Church on Thursday evening, Dec. 7 was held a great rally, "New Member Night." It was a whirlwind meeting in numbers and enthusiasm. Director of religious education, Rev. Ben T. Leonard is building a splendid constructive program into this work.

A promising new church was organized Dec. 6, to be known as the Carmel Street Baptist Church. This work was begun as a mission by the Highland Park Church about two and a half years ago. Through the cooperation of the New World Movement and the Detroit Union, two lots were purchased and a chapel erected. The present pastor, G. F. Crown, has been on the field less than three months. It was necessary to purchase one hundred new chairs and the building is too small for the Sunday school.

San Francisco Bay Baptist Young People

By MRS. H. K. LANGDON

The young people of the San Francisco Bay Association have begun the year's work by mapping out some fine plan and have already started on some of them.

At the annual election in September the association chose a splendid crew of officers and great results are expected by all the five districts and ten departments this year. Classes in personal work have been organized in several of the churches and other churches are looking forward to having classes in the near future.

Four events of importance have occurred during November. On Sunday Nov. 5, a large group of young people from Berkeley First Church conducted the chapel service at the Alameda County Hospital, following which they, together with the Melrose and Dano-Norwegian young people, visited the various wards sang songs of cheer, and distributed flowers and young people's papers. The first Sunday of each month is "Baptist Sunday" at this institution and it is planned to have three or four unions go out each time. Miss Irene Reed of Melrose is the newly appointed leader of this work among other things is planning in conjunction with the Epworth League and Christian Endeavor organizations to make Christmas a "merry" Christmas for the inmates at the county hospital.

At a recent association meeting it was decided to begin a definite work among the navy men stationed at the United States Naval Training Station on Goat Island in San Francisco Bay where our own Chaplain Hall is located. The Senior B. Y. P. U. of First Church, Oakland, initiated this work on Sunday, Nov. 12, by taking eighty young people of the church to the island. The early part of their visit was spent in personally conducted tours through the station and at 4:30 they had "chow" with the enlisted men in the mess-hall. Chicken salad was the order of the day and every one came away convinced that at least Uncle Sam is not starving his employees. Young people from Berkeley First and Richmond churches visited the island on the succeeding two Sundays and others will take their turns respectively. Mr. Dane Bryant of the Twenty-third Ave. Church, Oakland, who is hoping to be a chaplain, is leading in this work and the Naval Training Station is to be another place where the young people of this association will make monthly visits.

Dr. James Asa White, of Chicago, made a three days' visit to this association the latter part of the month and on Thursday night, Nov. 23, a supper was held at First Church, Oakland, for the life-work volunteers with Dr. White as guest of honor. Assembly songs and yells were given and the convention B. Y. P. U. song was sung in which all heartily participated. Three short talks were given as follows: "Life," by Rev. H. C. Mathews, of Santa Clara; "Service," by Harriet Tingley, of Berkeley; and "League," by Irma Holmes, of Oakland. Dr. White then gave an inspirational address and tentative plans made for perfecting an organization soon.

On Friday night, Nov. 24, an associational rally was held at Hamilton Square Church, San Francisco, with President H. K. Langdon presiding. After a song service, led by Milton Meacham, of Oakland, a devotional service conducted by E. A. Fridell, assistant pastor of First Church, Oakland, and the roll call, Dr. James Asa White delivered an address on "The Attractive Christ."

The following is a song written by Mr. and Mrs. H. K. Langdon, of Oakland, to the tune of "America, the Beautiful," for the San Francisco Bay Association young people to sing at the assembly at Asilomar. The first two verses have since been used by the San Joaquin Valley young people in two institutes as well as in other churches.

Asilomar, we've come again,
We've dreamed of you all year.
We'll work and play, we'll sing and pray,
We'll make you know we're here.
Asilomar! Asilomar!
God fill us with his praise,
And give us here our wish sincere,
A wonderful ten days.

B. Y. P. U.! We sing of you,
To you we will be true.
In fellowship, in unity,
We'll train and study too.
B. Y. P. U.! B. Y. P. U.!
God shed his grace on thee;
And make us do a thing or two,
That we may loyal be.

Oh, blue and white, for God and right,
Stands San Francisco Bay.
We have some caps; we're happy chaps,
Our colors to display!
Oh, blue and white! Oh, blue and white!
San Francisco sets the pace,
We pledge to you allegiance true.
We hope to fill our place.

Logan Baptist Church, Philadelphia

The new building of the Logan Baptist Church, Philadelphia, was dedicated Sunday, Nov. 5. The morning sermon was preached by Dr. John Gordon, of Temple University, and that of the evening by President Milton G. Evans, of Crozer Seminary. The dedication service was held in the afternoon, the sermon being preached by Dr. Geo. W. Swope. Dr. Russell H. Conwell and Mayor J. Hampton Moore were guests at the afternoon service and spoke briefly. The celebration continued throughout the whole week. Rev. J. Francis Behrens preached on Monday evening. On Tuesday evening there was a reception to the people of the community with Dr. A. E. Harris as the guest of honor. A union prayer service was held on Wednesday evening with a sermon by Rev. Geo. Boddie. On Thursday evening, Dr. C. H. Woolston delighted the children with his address on "What I saw in Wonderland." Friday was devoted to a missionary conference, with Rev. Carey S. Thomas as the honored guest, the sermon of the evening being preached by Dr. Arthur C. Baldwin. The dedication services concluded on Sunday when Rev. Rittenhouse Neisser, pastor when the church was organized, preached in the morning, and Dr. E. B. Pollard in the evening.

The new building is the third which has been occupied by the congregation and was erected at a cost of about $150,000. The church and Sunday school are housed under one roof. The style of architecture is that of the English village church of distinct Gothic type. The outside walls are built of stones of various kinds and colors, many of them garnered from historic shrines and ancient buildings from Iceland to Rhodesia. The auditorium with its cathedral stained glass windows set in stone tracery work, its woodwork of quartered oak finished in subdued colors, its walls plastered in imitation of cut stone, and its beautiful baptismal pool is planned to compel reverence in all who may enter. The Sunday school has sixteen separate class rooms, besides the assembly room which will accommodate 300 persons. The recreation hall is fully equipped to minister to the social needs of both sexes and all ages.

Rev. Francis Everett Stever, the pastor, under whose leadership the church made this great advance, began his work Sept. 1, 1919, shortly after his return from over-sea service in the World War, as chaplain of the 209th Infantry Regiment, 78th Division of New York. Although he had not fully recovered from the strain of his rigorous life and heart-rending experiences upon some of the worst battlefields of France, he has brought this great undertaking to successful completion and is more firmly fixed in the affections of his people than ever.

Self-Support Accomplished

Rangoon, Burma, Oct. 26, 1922.

To The American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, New York, U. S. A.

Dear Friends,

At last the great day of our self-support has come! For many years we have been working toward this end. About four years ago when you so kindly paid off our debt of Rs. 9,000 on the construction of Community Hall, we promised to endeavor to pay the entire salary of our pastor as soon as possible. In 1920 we paid Rs. 229 per month towards the pastor's salary and gharry and last Thursday we voted to pay him the total amount of Rs. 525 per month besides our usual amount for benevolences and missions.

We now wish to thank you for your generous support during the past quarter century, for your money, your missionaries and your friendship. We thank God for the progress he has given us and pray that our mutual interest and prayers for each other on opposite sides of the earth may continue to strengthen the ties of Christian love between us.

Yours in his service,

V. W. DYER, minister.

G. F. LAVAL, church clerk.

J. H. FORBKEN, church treas.

LOGAN BAPTIST CHURCH, PHILADELPHIA

Wisconsin News and Notes

By ROBERT W. SHAW

Dedication

The Honey Creek Baptist Church dedicated its new meeting house on Sunday, Dec. 17. The exercises were continued on Monday. The speakers were Dr. A. LeGrand, Rev. Ralph Barry, who has led in the erection of the building, and Rev. Grant Grandholm, who began his ministry with the church the first of December. This gives the church a splendid equipment, consisting of church building, community hall, parsonage, together with sufficient ground for an athletic field. The church rejoices in this achievement.

Deaths

Recently two of our Baptist ministers passed away. One was Rev. C. T. Everett, who suddenly dropped dead while mailing some Thanksgiving packages. He has served as pastor in several fields, also as a field worker, and more recently as a visitor for one of our city churches. His work was constructive and abiding. For some years he was the historian of the Milwaukee Association.

George E. Dewey, for a number of years a worker for the Sunday School Union, recently died from pneumonia. His home has been at Wisconsin Rapids for a number of years, and he was one of our well-known brethren. He attended the state convention regularly, and though his work was along undenominational Sunday-school lines, he was a brother beloved among us.

Mrs. Anthony Jacobs, the wife of a well-known Baptist pastor in this state, recently died. Mr. Jacobs recently retired from the pastorate at Waupaca, and was living at Whitewater. He is doing supply work, preaching now at Stoughton. The funeral was held at Waupaca under the direction of the Ministerial Union. A large number of people attended the services.

The sympathy of Wisconsin Baptists goes out to these bereaved friends.

Some Notes

After a long period of time the Superior folks have begun work on their new church. A first unit is to be erected, costing about $17,000. Rev. E. A. Deake is the pastor.

Rev. U. A. Gibson, pastor at Neenah and Allenville, was recently made happy with a substantial increase in his salary. His work has greatly prospered during his pastorate.

Rev. Raymond G. Pierson began his seventh year of ministry at Janesville, Sunday, Dec. 3. The services were largely attended, and a huge bouquet of flowers was given the pastor. His heart is frequently cheered by baptisms. He has one of our best churches in this state.

Rev. H. H. Savage, pastor at Baraboo, recently held a meeting in his church with twenty-two decisions. Twelve have already united with the church. He was assisted by a gospel singer.

Pastor G. N. Doody, of Verona, has just closed a meeting with about fifty decisions. He was assisted by Rev. H. H. Savage, of Baraboo, and some workers from the Moody School.

Rev. J. H. Bruggink has accepted the pastorate of the Clinton Church.

Rev. Samuel Hookstra, of Princeton, Ill., has accepted a call to the First Church of Portage.

Rev. E. B. Fitzpatrick, of Hebron, Ill., is the new pastor at Dalton and North Scott, succeeding B. Owen, who resigned this autumn to attend the Kansas City Seminary.

Rev. J. W. Cleavinger, of Franklin, Ind., is now the pastor of our church at Waupaca. Years ago he was pastor at Marinette in this state. We welcome him back home.

Rev. O. A. Graham, has accepted the pastorate of our church at River Falls. He is already on the field. Some old misunderstandings have been ironed out and the church is quite happy in the new relationship.

Colorado Letter

By FREDERIC B. PALMER

Many of our churches over the state have heard "The sound of a going in the top of the mulberry trees." Notably among the special meetings was the one conducted by pastor F. G. Arnold at Canon City, resulting in more than 100 conversions, mostly adults. Successful meetings have been held in Briggsdale, Ft. Lupton, Keota, Lamar, Littleton, Longmont, Bethany, Colorado Springs, Broadway and Beth Eden, Denver, Simla, and Twin Lakes.

Sunday afternoon, Dec. 10, the cornerstone of a basement unit of a new church was laid at Littleton, where Chapel-car Evangelist A. C. Blinzinger has been at work for several months. Among those who took part were, Charles R. Brock, F. W. Freeman, J. W. Bailey, G. G. Laughlin, Joshua Gravett, Horace W. Cole and F. B. Palmer. The car will be moved early in the new year to Simla, where a new church was recently organized.

The dream of Pueblo Baptists has at last been realized. Early in December an initial payment was made on a fine, well-located two story brick block, purchased to house our foreign speaking missionary activities.

Our churches are now better and more largely manned than for a year past; at present there is not a single self-supporting church pastorless. Recent settlements have been: W. I. Fowle, Greeley; Horace W. Cole, Calvary, Denver; Wm. Jackson, Salida; F. E. Butler, Peyton; N. A. Coxey, Ault; W. E. Simmons, Montrose; W. A. Goudie, Iliff; D. S. McGlashan, Eckert; J. E. Bordner, Hotchkiss; Marion Flint, Lake City; H. G. Finley, Fruita; R. S. Wallace, Keota; F. R. Margetts, Barnum, Denver; J. M. Whisler, Berkeley, Denver; E. B. Hart, Ft. Morgan; Harry Hammann, Florence; P. H. Evans, Bethany, Colorado Springs.

State Wide Conference

The state wide conference meeting with the First church Denver, Dec. 7-8, was largely attended and resulted in much permanent good. Our people were never better united than at present. President F. E. Taylor of the Northern Baptist Convention, and President J. M. Wood of Stephens College, were the guests of honor. Their several addresses were enthusiastically received and won an abiding place in the love of Colorado Baptists for these denominational leaders.

On Thursday evening Charles R. Brock gave a dinner at one of the prominent clubs in honor of the visitors. Friday noon the Denver Union gave a banquet for them at the Auditorium Hotel. That afternoon the delegates were the guests of President J. W. Bailey for a house warming at Colorado Woman's College.

The regular quarterly convention board meeting was held Friday morning, and was an open session permitting the many conference delegates to see the board in action, revealing the many duties devolving on the board, and the varied activities of the convention along missionary lines.

Executive Secretary F. B. Palmer was overwhelmed and literally swept off his feet, when he was asked to retire, pending a resolution to be considered. When called back he was notified that the board had voted unanimously to pay his expenses as a delegate to attend the Baptist World Alliance meeting in Stockholm, Sweden in July 1923, in appreciation of his ten years of service as convention secretary.

Maryland

By O. C. S. WALLACE

Fifty years ago Dr. Richard Fuller was the pastor of the Eutaw Place Baptist Church of Baltimore. There were giants in those days. At the First Church Dr. John M. W. Williams, like Fuller an aristocrat in the true sense and great-hearted, was the greatly loved pastor. Less of an orator than the Eutaw Place pastor, the old people who remember him as he was in his prime will not admit that Dr. Williams was inferior to Dr. Fuller as either pastor or preacher; they distinguish between oratory and preaching. Each of these men was a conspicuous figure in Baltimore and in the Southern Baptist Convention.

There were great laymen in those days. Among the great names of that period the Levering name still has luster; for among the great laymen of today are the famous twins, Eugene and Joshua Levering, who were baptized when eleven years old and throughout long lives have given great service to the denomination and the city. Until October a year ago both of these great men were associated with the Eutaw Place Baptist Church. At that time this church gave forty of her most active members to the founding of the University Church; and of this group Mr. Joshua Levering was the leader; and now with all the energy of youth and the conservation of age he is promoting the new church. Meanwhile Mr. Eugene Levering, warmheartedly, enthusiastically, and incessantly is giving great services in the Eutaw Place Church. Each of these men is a Bible-class teacher of exceptional ability. Mr. Eugene Levering's class at Eutaw Place is composed of business men, bankers, students, and college professors, a strong group who are receiving strong teaching by one who loves and knows the Bible.

The Baptist cause has always had great adherents in Maryland, but not great numbers. Maryland Baptists have borne a fine testimony, by voice and gifts, in the South, but have not built up great congregations. In some parts of the state you might travel long distances without finding a Baptist. But there seems to be a sound of going now in the tops of the mulberry trees. Dr. W. H. Baylor for the last eight years state secretary has built constructively, and has seen great encouragement from the co-operation and consecration of pastors and churches. New churches are being organized in promising communities, new church buildings are under construction or projected, and old churches are working with increased power. In Baltimore the Huntington Church, long handicapped by a poor building, will soon dedicate a fine commodious building. The University Church is worshipping in its chapel, which was completed more than a year ago as the first unit of a church equipment that will probably cost $300,000 or more.

The First Church, leaving a neighborhood which has proved attractive to Negroes, has consolidated with the Liberty Heights Church. In the field of the latter the first unit of a large and well-planned and equipped modern church building will be built soon. Dr. J. E. Hicks and Dr. F. F. Briggs are the pastors of the consolidated church.

Out in the state there has been great progress in certain fields. Notable among these is Crisfield, where Pastor Kilgore has led an extraordinary work of growth and expansion, and Frederick, where Pastor W. C. Royal has done one of the best pieces of constructive work which this state has known. The great Crisfield Church has been already dedicated, and the corner-stone of the main building of the Frederick Church was laid some weeks ago.

The state convention met in October with the Brantly Church, Baltimore, where the veteran H. M. Wharton, pastor and evangelist, boasts of his seventy-four years and rejoices in the love of his brethren and the activity and devotion of his Brantly people. It was the largest Baptist state convention that Maryland has known, and in spiritual vision, purpose, and power it reached a high plane.

Philadelphia Letter

By ARTHUR C. BALDWIN

"I Believe in God and Evolution"—this is the title of a little book from the pen of Dr. W. W. Keen, our distinguished fellow Baptist and senior deacon of the First Church. It is the ripe contribution of a reverent scientist to a subject that just now seems to be developing heat in some Baptist circles. I wonder why and after reading the words of Dr. Keen one wonders why again. Evolution is not an alternative to creation but undoubtedly God's method of creating, else all this wonderful procession of facts means nothing at all. Long ago an earnest divine proclaimed that Newton's theory of gravitation substituted a law for Providence but it did not. Neither is evolution an apotheosis of materialism as some of the fearful seem to think. Read this latest output from Philadelphia and thank God for the glory therein revealed.

Grace Temple never lets slip an opportunity to celebrate an anniversary. This method is one of the expressions of its loyalty to the great spirit that has led them so long. In less than two months, Dr. Russell H. Conwell will celebrate his eightieth birthday. Already the church is making plans for it and it will be "some" celebration. Only the other day, they celebrated the fortieth anniversary of his pastorate. The record of these years is a romance. A great hospital established and equipped, a college grown from seven students in his study to a unique university with almost 10,000 students, a lecture given more than 5,000 times and the proceeds which would amount to an independent fortune all put into the work of educating poor boys, a church of complex and efficient organization, a congregation that every Sunday fills the vast auditorium—what a story it is. The other day in a popular debate in the Reformed Episcopal Church, Broad and Venango, the merits of four living Americans were eulogized and debated that the audience might vote as to the most popular. The vote was: Mr. Bryan, 25; Mr. Taft, 5; Mr. Wilson, 26; Dr. Conwell, 400. Many are already expressing their mind that the Bok prize of $10,000 to Philadelphia's most useful citizen should this year go to Dr. Conwell.

As I write this letter, the news comes of the passing of John Wanamaker at the age of 84. Of his life and work it is hardly necessary to speak save to say that we shall all miss him. As a religious force, this great Presbyterian layman has been a mighty power for good to all the churches in this city. He would not advertise in the Sunday papers. He would not use his fine wireless plant to broadcast on Sunday. He was devoted to his great Sunday school. He never lost an opportunity to speak for Christ when he met distinguished foreign visitors who came to liberty's shrine at Independence Hall. Without doubt the Presbyterian church is the strongest body among the Protestant forces of the city. It has been particularly wise and aggressive in the founding of new churches in the growing communities. Mr. Wanamaker largely made such things possible. His purse was always open. How great things God can do with a consecrated Christian layman!

The dedication of the Logan Church has added a great plant to the Baptist forces of the city. Thirty years ago, one of the missions that Dr. Conwell was interested in planting, it stands today equipped in modern style with all the appointments that a live church needs for the service of a community. The First Baptist Church of Pitman over in "Jersey" is one of those forehanded bodies that is getting ready for the big times that are coming when the Camden bridge is done. It has just remodeled and dedicated a plant costing $14,000 that will ultimately be a parish house. Now it is equipped with a social hall, kitchen and enlarged quarters for the school and the church. The community is rapidly growing and the pastor, Rev. Edward O. Clark is preparing for it. Rev. John W. Green at Tacony has just celebrated his second anniversary. During his pastorate he has seen a debt paid of $3,000 and a parsonage bought and paid for, costing $8,000. Rev. George E. Rees is acting as stated supply for the Chester Avenue church. First Church, Germantown, reports two weeks of special meetings with Rev. R. M. Green, of Franklin, as the preacher. It was a time of real spiritual refreshment and a good number of baptisms are expected. Rev. Theodore Heysham has resigned from the Lower Providence Church. The church passed a beautiful word of tribute to his ministry. Friends in Norristown are planning to publish his book entitled "The Birth of the Bible," a description of his Bible chart which has met with much favor.

In the church at Ambler, Rev. Ralph Mayberry has begun the ninth year of his pastorate. It has been a happy history for pastor and people. Brother Mayberry is recognized as an active, prominent spirit in all denominational matters. Over at the strong Linden Church in Camden a painting for the baptistry has been unveiled and a dedicatory service held that was said to be "one of the most impressive services ever conducted in Camden." More than 700 people crowded the auditorium. At the conclusion of his sermon Pastor Frederick Blaser baptized ten candidates.

The First Church at Norristown is finding its work increasing on every side. Rev. Will H. Houghton, pastor, is preaching to audiences that crowd the house. An assistant, Miss Irene Wiltrout of Indiana, has just been called.

The annual Baptist students' dinner in the Chestnut Street Church was attended by 176 students. They came from the University of Pennsylvania, Bryn Mawr, Temple, Haverford, Swarthmore, Drexel, Crozer, Pierce, Woman's Medical, Baptist Institute, University Hospital, Philadelphia General Hospital. These students came from twenty-seven states, Japan and China. Rev. L. V. Longworth of Assam and Dr. W. S. Abernethy of Washington were the speakers.

One of the great days of the autumn experiences was the missionary field day, set before us by the women's missionary societies of the Atlantic District. Eleven missionaries were present. Morning, afternoon and evening programs were given. An exhibit of curios revealed in Dr. Barras' words of description—totem poles from Alaska; raincoats from bear intestines; ashes of volcanoes, bronze Buddhas from Burma; prayer beads from India; linen and mango wooden bowls from the Philippines. And the people came, my word, how they came! They thronged the great auditorium in the morning when the managers of too little faith had expected an informal gathering in a small room. It was a great day and set a mark for others in the way of missionary programs. Yes, these women know how to do it. If we should scrap a lot of our cumbersome denominational machinery and turn missionary matters over to the women, inside of a year we would all be marching and in step to the tune they would pipe and be smiling as we did so.

MAINE

SPRINGVALE: Rev. C. W. Corey is beginning his work as pastor with encouraging prospects. He is a graduate of Acadia College and Newton Theological Institution and has held pastorates in the Maritime provinces in Alberta and British Columbia. For two years he was field representative of the Eastern Canadian Baptist Mission Board. Both Mr. Corey and his son, now in Bates College, saw service overseas. Since the war, Mr. Corey has been located with the Moncton Suburban Baptist Church. Springvale Church has suffered a great loss in the recent death of Judge George W. Hanson. For twenty-nine years he was superintendent of the Sunday school, being absent only two Sundays.

THE GREATEST TRAGEDY in the history of Maine colleges occurred Dec. 4 at Colby. Thirty students were sleeping in the Lambda Chi Alpha Dormitory when at about 3 o'clock the whole building seemed to break out in flames. A student coming from the night train saw the flames and sought to awaken the boys. Probably in effort to help other students, four young men were burned to death. A touching incident of the evening before is thus described. A group of students gathered in one of the rooms for "a sing." They began with rollicking college songs, but they ended with "Nearer My God to Thee." Only a few hours later, the leader of the group had passed through the fire, "nearer" to the God whom he had trusted and served. To their homes in Maine and Massachusetts, the bodies of these young men who had given their lives in an effort to save others, were borne, accompanied by their sorrowing fraternity brothers. The grief of the college has been paralleled only in its feeling for those who gave their lives in the war. The blow comes with a tremendous force upon President Roberts. He has borne his boys on his heart as though he were the father of them all. No possible responsibility rests upon the college. Everything in construction and equipment was comparatively new and in perfect order, while the fire escapes saved the lives of all who were sleeping on the upper floor. The sympathy of the city found expression in many ways. Before the ashes of the building were cold, subscriptions were in process to relieve the students who had lost their all. The money loss can be made up, but the loss of such lives as went out in that morning of terror is irreparable. By sympathy and prayer all who love this old and noble college, should stand by its president, faculty and students until their spirit is wholly restored.

THE STUDENT VOLUNTEERS OF COLBY AND Bates colleges held a conference at Chase Hall, Bates College, Lewiston, recently. About thirty of the finest students of these institutions gathered for what was a very significant and inspiring meeting. They were addressed by Dr. Tubbs of Bates, Dr. Longwell of the Foreign Mission Society, and Dr. Whittemore of the Promotion Board. An organization was effected, with the following officers: Pres., Harold E. Mayo, Bates; vice-pres., Avis Varnum, Colby; secy., Helen Hill, Bates; treas., Merlin Farnum, Colby. It is hoped that representatives of the other colleges will join the organization. These young people have caught the world vision, and are giving themselves to the world-will of Christ.

A NOTEWORTHY EVENT IN RELIGIOUS history in Portland is the recent vote of two of its prominent churches to form a union. Both the Free Street Baptist and the First Free Baptist churches have had worthy histories and have maintained strong men in their pastorates. In location they are close together at the heart of the city. The pastor of the First Free Baptist Church, Rev. Ralph R. Kennan, recently resigned because of ill health and retired from the field. When the proposition of uniting was placed before the two bodies, Rev. Birney S. Hudson, pastor of the Free Street Church tendered his resignation for the purpose of facilitating the union. This self-elimination of Dr. Hudson threatens to remove from Portland one of its ablest and most prominent ministers. Dr. Hudson has been strongly identified with moves for denominational progress and interdenominational fellowship. He was for three years president of the Church Federation of the two cities of Portland and South Portland, and very active and successful in his administration. He is now president of the interdenominational ministers union of the two cities. His many friends will watch his future career at this juncture, and take pleasure in bestowing congratulations on the field that secures the devoted and able ministries of this brother in the very prime of his powers.

RHODE ISLAND

EVANGELIST JOHN M. CRUICK, of Melrose Highlands, Mass., has completed a three-weeks' union evangelistic meeting in the Olneyville district of Providence, Trinity Baptist, Tabernacle M. E. and Plainfield St. Baptist Church uniting. The meetings were productive of many conversions and a re-united community.

MASSACHUSETTS

THE RESIGNATION OF REV. CHARLES H. DAY from the pastorate of the First Church, Watertown, came as a surprise. After seventeen years of effective service there, "Day and Watertown" had become a permanent mental association with us. Dr. Day has maintained a high level of pulpit work continuously, and had come to a strong position in the church and town. That is one of the most solid of our suburban churches and will command one of our best ministers.

THE TRINITY CHURCH OF ARLINGTON has unanimously called Rev. James E. Norcross, who until recently was prominent in our denominational counsels and service. This seems like a perfect fit. The field is especially inviting, presenting a rare opportunity to a leader who can lead and develop a church in that growing section between Cambridge and Arlington.

DR. FREDERICK B. GREUL is supply pastor for the church at Norwood. His efficient and purposeful ministry there will well prepare the church for a permanent pastorate when the time is ripe for it.

REV. THOMAS S. ROY IS PROVING HIMSELF an all-around preaching and pastoral force in the First Church, Brockton. Congregations are growing and constant results of interest and increase are gratifying to pastor and people.

THE BOSTON MINISTERS' CONFERENCE enjoyed a remarkable address on "Fundamental Education" by Prof. Conrad H. Moehlman of Rochester Seminary, on the eleventh. The prevailing notion that a professor of church history is apt to be dry was completely overturned. He made some other things that are claiming to be timely and juicy seem stale and moribund. It was glorious to come up from deep things, and come back from amazingly wide discussions, and find ourselves face to face with Jesus Christ. In education also He was all in all. We shall not forget Professor Moehlman.

THE MID-WINTER BANQUET OF THE NEWTON ALUMNI came the same day. It was an unusual occasion. Seventy-five were present. President Merritt of Newton presided, and made it delightful. The speakers were President Horr, Dr. Arthur W. Cleaves, Dr. A. K. De Blois and one of the representative students of the seminary. This gathering is surprisingly popular with the alumni; and furnishes a flavor of social fellowship that brings graduates to it from all over New England. Copley Square Hotel gives the best of its hospitality.

DR. JOSEPH C. ROBBINS is a Foreign Mission Secretary every inch of him. He proves it by the qualities that get into his public addresses. We had one of them at a recent ministers' meeting. Dr. Robbins has passion. In that he reminds you of Dr. Ashmore, the elder. He has temperament that makes him completely sensitive to unusual impressions. He has abounding love and devotion in the pursuit of his calling to help disciple the nations. So when he speaks on his great theme he makes you see what he has seen and feel as he has felt. That was the total effect of his address upon us. We had contact with our missions in China, India and Burmah. We felt the native response to the Christian appeal, and we saw the now veteran converts consolidating the great missionary endeavor in strong, self-supporting churches and schools. Nothing so wins Baptists to the World Movement as such inspiring reports from our honored leaders.—C. H. WATSON.

NEW YORK

THE AKRON CHURCH extended a call to Chas. S. Owen on Sept. 1. Mr. Owen accepted the call and took up the work immediately. On Oct. 1 he was officially installed as pastor, and on Nov. 28, a formal reception was given him and his new bride. Mr. Owen was graduate from Rochester Theological Seminary last spring. The church and Sunday school are showing renewed interest and activity; $1650 has practically been raised for rebuilding and repairing the organ. A church bulletin has been donated by the Baraca Class. The Sunday school had the highest percentage of increase in the Erie County campaign. The young people won the associational banner, and also the cup at the Older Boys' and Girls Conference.

THE STRONG PLACE CHRISTIAN CENTER was dedicated on Thursday, Nov. 23, in connection with the semi-annual meeting of the Baptist Church Extension Society, of Brooklyn and Queens. Presentation of the administration of the property was made by Mr. Maximilian Schimpf of the church and was accepted by Mr. Charles H. Sears of the society. Dedication prayer was offered by Dr. Charles L. White. The property used by the center was purchased in 1920 by the Strong Place Church in anticipation that the Extension Society would be able through the New World Movement to secure funds to erect a new building. This has been impossible as yet but the building has been renovated and put in usable condition by the Extension Society. The center now has a staff of three workers under the leadership of Miss Martha Mixer and contribute directly to the work of the Strong Place Italian Mission, which is served by Rev. Louis Zibelli. It is aimed to be of service to the work of the Strong Place Church generally in cooperation with the pastor, Rev. Floyd Adams. An effort will be made before the termination of the New World Movement to secure funds for the erection of a new building.

GREENE AVENUE CHURCH, Brooklyn, Rev. Charles F. McKoy, pastor: The church is closing one of the most successful years in its history. The debt has been reduced from $20,000 to $4,000 and it is expected that the church will be entirely free of debt by the beginning of the new year. Baptismal services are held nearly every Sunday. The Sunday congregations are the largest in many years. Several hundred people find inspiration at the weekly Friday night service. The Greene Avenue prayer meeting has grown to be one of the largest in Greater New York. The church has solved the problem of constantly shifting population by making its services so attractive that its members will gladly travel long distances to enjoy its fellowship and spiritual uplift.

ILLINOIS

SECOND CHURCH, CARLINVILLE, of which Rev. C. F. Stalker is pastor, has closed a series of special meetings. Thirty-nine persons united with the church. The pastor was assisted by Rev. J. L. Meads, 489 Mill Ave., Chicago.

FIRST CHURCH, CHICAGO, Dr. Perry J. Stackhouse, minister, under the leadership of Dr. F. H. Divine, closed a seven days' campaign for raising $90,000 for building in addition to the present church edifice. As planned, the new building, three stories in height, will have class rooms and complete equipment for all departments of the rapidly growing Bible school, the kindergarten, a commodious chapel, working rooms for the women's societies, kitchen, pantry, serving room and dining hall, with the necessary accessories, and a spacious assembly hall with balconies, having a seating capacity of 700 or more, to be used also as a gymnasium and for indoor sports and games. Also accommodations for the boy scouts, camp fire girls and other young people's organizations. There has been urgent need for such equipment ever since the church moved to its present location; and it is planned to begin work on the new building in the near future and have it ready for dedication early next autumn.

WHEN THE RESIDENT MEMBERSHIP of a church of less than 600 members make 3178 calls in one month they are doing the unusual, but this is the record of First Church, Jacksonville, in its November calling campaign. Under the direction of the pastor, Rev. A. P. Howells, the resident membership of the church was divided into two divisions, A to K names being known as the Reds and L to Z, as the Blues. One point was given for each house call and an additional five points was awarded for each subscription to the Illinois Baptist Bulletin. Not more than two members could make a call at one time and a visitor could not make more than one call at each home. All cards had to be registered on Red or Blue registration cards which had to be turned in before the morning service each Sunday to receive credit for the preceding week. Every call had to include an invitation to the church services and only residence calls were counted. The church entered into the spirit of the campaign, and visitors sought to make their calls in the interest of the church, rather than the making of points. The Reds carried off the honors with over 900 calls reported the last week. So thick were the callers at one home that the owner placed a sign on the front door, "Come round to the basement. We are washing." An increase is noted in attendance in all departments and there is every evidence of a spiritual awakening. The losing side will entertain at the annual church meeting, Jan. 3, 1923. The every-member canvass for church finances is in December; the church school of missions convenes in January.

MATTOON: A building campaign was begun by First Church, Oct. 31, under the leadership of Dr. M. W. Haynes and closed Nov. 17. The church membership subscribed $30,700. Then an appeal was made to the business men and other citizens who subscribed $12,777. This, with what has been promised by the state convention and local association, assures a splendid building in this important center. It is hoped to begin the erection of the building in the early spring. The giving on the part of the membership is encouraging when one considers that the church raised only $422.50 for current expenses fourteen years ago. The Sunday-school attendance is now around 300, while the attendance in the Grant Park Baptist Mission is nearing the 100 mark. Rev. James M. Lively is in his seventh year as pastor. He preached the sermon in the union Thanksgiving service this year as he did six years ago.

MICHIGAN

JOHN A. ROSS, the newly called pastor of First Church, Stanton, who is a member of the church of Big Rapids, and a brother to William S. Ross, its pastor, was ordained in the Big Rapids Church, Tuesday, Dec. 5. The ordaining council was comprised of the Osceola association of Baptist Churches in Michigan, and the Stanton Church, of Grand River Association. Rev. W. E. Orton, of Evart, was chosen moderator and Rev. W. E. Anderick, of Manistee, preached the sermon. Hugh Jamison, clerk of the Big Rapids Church, was chosen clerk of the meeting. Mr. Ross and family recently arrived from the Canadian Northwest where Mr. Ross has been employed by the British and Foreign Bible Society. The ordination of John A. Ross makes the third member of First Church ordained during the past three years. Two or three other young men members of the church are still in preparation for the Baptist ministry and will eventually return, it is expected, to the home church for ordination.

MISSOURI

THE CHURCH AT CHARLESTON has just closed one of the greatest revival meetings in its history. Sixty-five persons have already united with the church. The Sunday school has outgrown its present quarters and the church has voted to build a new addition to the present quarters. The church after careful consideration requested the pastor to conduct the special meetings with the assistance of a singer. Rev. P. D. Mangum is pastor.

MEXICO: A GO-TO-CHURCH REVIVAL projected during September and October for November and thereafter has yielded good results in attendance at all church services. This revival was promoted by the ministerial alliance. Rev. J. H. Hughes, pastor, took advantage of this tide to hold a series of meetings November 12-26. Rev. J. E. Turner, associate pastor and music master, conducted the song services and the pastor did the preaching. There were thirteen additions, eleven of these adults. This brings the total membership to 950. Kingdom Day Dec. 3, marked the seventy-five-million reinforcement drive and with it was coupled the regular pledge for the coming year's current expenses. A regular budget of approximately $12,000 has been set by the board of deacons. $2,000 of this will apply on the reinforcement campaign. This is in addition to the $6,000 a year pledged in 1919 on the original seventy-five million campaign. Capacity crowds fill the church at regular services. 200 children will share a Christmas banquet Dec. 24 under the auspices of the Booster Band. The Booster Band is regularly organized to tie up the children to the regular services and work of the church.

COLORADO

BETHEL CHURCH, DENVER, Dr. E. L. Krumreig, pastor, is making steady progress in its various departments. Dr. Krumreig is now in his fourth year with this church. More than 250 members have been received since he came to this field, new members have been received at nearly every communion service. The Sunday school has one of the best young people's class in the city. It is co-educational and has forty-six enrolled with Deacon W. M. Thomas, a young man himself, as teacher. The missionary spirit is also growing in both church and Sunday school. A missionary play, "The Pill Bottle," was given by the World Wide Guild of the Broadway Church in the Bethel Church the evening of Nov. 23. The production in which twenty-three characters were cast, was given under the leadership of Mrs. Thos. Mullen.

WESTERN WASHINGTON

ON NOV. 24 REV. G. H. WALKER, JR., was ordained to the full work of the ministry at the Lyman Church. The ordaining council was composed of J. E. Noftinger, chairman, C. P. Morris, sec'y, Dr. J. F. Watson, E. C. Cofer, L. L. Simmons, G. H. Hemely, M. Chamberlain, D. M. McPhail.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

NOV. 26 THE MODESTO Sunday school, and especially her Bible class, gave Mrs. W. C. Pratt an ovation in honor of her ninety-first birthday. She is the wife of the late Rev. W. C. Pratt who preached the gospel for more than fifty years.

VISALIA CHURCH HAS DONE well in all departments the last two years under the leadership of Brother Blowers. He left on Nov. 13 for National City, Cal. Mr. and Mrs. Blowers are greatly missed. Rev. C. M. Northrup, of Glendale, Ariz., takes up the work Jan. 1.

THE LOS ANGELES MINISTERIAL UNION with more than 150 members, has decided to cooperate with the movement to recall District Attorney Woolwine. Mr. Woolwine was a defeated candidate for governor on a liberal platform. He was opposed, it appears, to the Wright Act and favored a modification of the Volstead Act. In the report from the local press Dr. James A. Francis and Dr. J. J. Whitcomb Brounger appear among the leaders of the movement. Attorney Woolwine is striking back at the ministers in a way that promises some real sport.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

The Older Boys' Conference

One of the most successful and spiritually inspiring annual conferences of the Y. M. C. A. of Southern California, was held at San Diego Dec. 1-3. This is the Older Boys' Conference. It was participated in by most if not all the Protestant denominations in this part of the state. There were 547 delegates present from California cities.

Charles Noble, of San Diego, presided at the conference. John L. Bacon, mayor of San Diego, gave the formal welcome to the delegates. Among the local clergymen and laymen who participated in the program or are on the local board of directors, were Rev. L. A. Ferris, F. O. Belden, Theo. F. Smith, J. P. Smith, W. Wurfel, Ella L. Palmer, and Fred. B. Mitchell.

Outside speakers, who were listened to with close attention, were Elwood T. Bailey, of Chicago, formerly Y. M. C. A. secretary and now Chautauqua lecturer, and Arthur Rugb, of New York City, late Y. M. C. A. secretary in China. Among other state speakers were Harry O. Hill, state secretary; H. J. Payne, L. V. Shaw and R. Harriuan, of Pasadena; J. E. Adams, C. M. Waterman, J. A. McDill, of Long Beach; L. Scott, Pomona, Tom Hammond and T. S. Caldwell, Los Angeles; P. Edmunds, Glendale, L. Goodrich, Santa Barbara, W. E. Stevenson, Alhambra and James Britt, San Bernardino.

These Older Boys' Conferences are designed, not alone for an outing, but to draw all such members to an open confession of Christ, and to seek out "the leading boys of the state, capable of Christian leadership in their home, school, church, and community; and to inspire them to take their places of leadership, and to instruct them in methods."

"And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me."

"I beheld, and lo, a great multitude which no man could number, of all nations and kindreds and peoples and tongues, stood before the throne and before the Lamb."

It was a super-eminent life-journey the Son of God made from the manger inside the town to the cross outside the nearby city; for it embraced the world in its purpose; it transported, eventually, a world of believers into an eternity with him.

God sought him for his mission to the world before the world was. The old world sought to know of him before his birth; the new world, anno Domini, began seeking him at his birth, and is seeking him today.

The shepherds and the wise-men sought and found him in his infancy. His parents in his youth sought and found him in God's house. The world, touched by Jerusalem, sought him in his manhood ministry to men. A greatly enlarged world is seeking today this same Jesus of yesterday, today, and forever, risen from the dead, a living Saviour.

It was the enemies of Christ who claimed, "Lo, the world is gone after him." Enemies and friends alike crowded to hear him when he came into the temple that last week of his life. The chief priests sought him in order to question his authority for cleansing the temple of its desecrators. They sought him to oppose and to make away with him; but they went out from him unsatisfied by him. Then came the Pharisees seeking to entrap him with entangling questions that they might do away with him. He abashed them with an answer they could not gainsay and left them also unsatisfied, baffled in their purpose to entrap him.

With the chief priests and the Pharisees, came the Sadducees, the unbelievers in the resurrection. Some may have been honest doubters, while others sought the Saviour in a spirit of controversy. Christ showed them the cause of their unbelief—ignorance of the scriptures. He imparted to them the scripture but not himself.

A representative of the scribes had heard the questions asked by these seekers of Jesus and his answers to them. It may have been with mixed motives that he proffered his question of the law. But his seeking fell just short of finding satisfaction in Jesus, for he sought rather to know the law than to know Christ. The Master imparted to him the knowledge he desired, but withheld himself.

Then came strangers, foreigners, Gentiles—the Greeks, seeking Jesus. In the outer court of the temple they waited. They found a disciple of the Master, Philip, and made known to him their one burning desire.

"Sir, we would see Jesus."

Philip finds the soul-winner, Andrew, and they bring them to Jesus.

Christ knew the purpose for which these strangers sought him and satisfied them in their desire to see him. He showed them himself in his provision for the salvation of men. With the cross in view he declared: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me."

In a sweep of the age Christ saw, standing before him, the first fruits of the Gentile world and the efficacy of his death for the whole Gentile world.

The uplifted Saviour in his divine power, is drawing all men unto himself today. True seekers come to him and are satisfied in him and by him; others go away unsatisfied. As then, so now there is that other class who seek him and do not find him for they seek amiss. They are the unbelievers who doubt him while they seek, and those who seek to know the law instead of his grace; and those others who are seeking him to question his authority, to entangle him in order to do away with him.

It is stated that the lawless leaders today who are trying to seize the reins of government of the world, are forcing some to take oath not to mention the name of God or Christ, and hope to obliterate the church and the memory of God from the minds of Christians. They are eagerly seeking him to do away with him. They question his authority over their lives together with others who are not of the revolutionary class, and they cry, "Away with him!"

Nineteen centuries stand between us and the Christ uplifted on Calvary, and ascended that we too, might ascend and be forever with him.

The mighty drawing power of the risen Saviour is drawing the church today in its supreme effort thus far, to have his will done upon earth. The list of Philips and Andrews who will bring strangers to Jesus is greatly increasing; but the strangers to Christ number over a billion!

While the rulers and the Pharisees sought Christ to do away with him, the multitudes that heard him were astonished, and the common people heard him gladly; and the multitude answered him, "How sayest thou 'The Son of Man must be lifted up?' Who is this Son of Man?"

Millions of the billion of the multitude today are feeling the drawing power of the risen Christ and are ignorant of its source, and are asking "Who is this?" They await the Philips and the Andrews to bring them to Jesus. The harvest truly is plentiful, for lo, "The world is gone after him."

The church in prevailing prayer, the church seeking the world-seekers after Christ, in the marts, the solon, in the highways and byways, shall hasten the day when his reign shall be supreme and the multitude of his followers out of every nation, and tribe and tongue, no man can number.

"I Believe In God and In Evolution"

By HELEN B. MONTGOMERY

There came to my desk recently, with the compliments of the author, a book written by Dr. Keen of Philadelphia, under the title, "I Believe In God and in Evolution." Dr. Keen is one of our most distinguished and most widely beloved laymen in the Baptist church. He has felt impelled by a sense of duty to write his own "Confession of Faith" in both the Bible and evolution; and he has produced a book that will be a help to the faith of many people.

Dr. Keen's own surgical operations and experiments have led him to a substantial belief in the demonstrated facts of evolution. On the other hand, he has experienced an ever-increasing consciousness of God and an ever-deepening belief in and reliance upon the Bible. To him it is "a precious manual of religion, but not a text-book of science. It lays down rules of conduct. It is an inspirer of Christian faith and hope. It is the great Christ his Son and our divine Saviour revealer of God to man through Jesus who 'brought life and immortality to light.'"

Dr. Keen shows clearly the distinction between Darwinism and evolution; that evolution long antedated Darwinism; that a many statements made that the men of science are giving up Darwinism is supposed by the laity to imply that men of science are also giving up evolution are not true; "But to the biologist Darwinism does not mean the theory of man's animal descent, which was formulated, long before the publication of the 'Origin of Species,' but is confined to the ingenious theories which Darwin so patiently worked out to account for the facts of evolution. The statement that Darwinism dead does not mean that the evidence for the evolutionary hypothesis has in any way been weakened so that any really impotent man of science doubts our final derivation. It only means Darwin's explanations of how one species may have been derived from another, have proved, as a result of an increasing knowledge, to be mistaken or wholly inadequate."

Dr. Keen then proposes to approach evolution not from the controversial side nor from general arguments, but from a plain statement of a series of specific facts, many of them drawn from his own personal experience as a surgeon and an anatomist. Dr. Keen says that to his mind this series of facts absolutely demonstrates the solidarity of animal life. The closing words of his introduction are worthy of quotation, because they so sincerely breathe the spirit of the Master: "On the other hand, I am a firm believer in Christianity. I follow, very falteringly, as true, in the footsteps of my beloved Master, and adore him as my divine Saviour. In him are all my hopes for the future. As a Christian man, I find no difficulty whatever in believing absolutely in evolution, and also absolutely in revelation."

It is not possible, in this brief review, to discuss the contents of the book. Dr. Keen shows that the structural plan underlying human and animal skeletons is identical; that the human brain centers of the various motor activities are identical with the brain centers of animals for similar activities; that the internal organs of the body have a similarity to tell of likeness of identity between the organs of the animals and of man. He then discusses the various glands, the sympathetic nerve system, the alimentary organs, and the fact that men and animals have identical diseases. He then considers the evidence from the study of heredity and from the fossil man and the messages of the plants. He closes with these sublime words:

"Human life is the gradual unfolding of a majestic drama, covering aeons of time. In its dawn we see man groping his way towards the light; then slowly, but surely developing his intellectual life; and finally—how or when we know not now, but doubtless we shall know in the future, in the immortal life—the engrafting by the Creator upon his bodily life of a moral and spiritual life, a soul with a desire to worship, a faculty of adoration and of communion with his heavenly Father. This wondrous love of God for man and the final, lofty destiny of the human race—this is to me the most impressive, the most inspiring thought of all the ages."

CHILDREN'S CONCERTS

"Chicago would be the most musical city in the whole world," said Frederick

Stock, conductor of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, "if its children's concerts had been begun twenty years ago." In speaking of the double series of programs given by the orchestra on Thursday afternoons during the music season, Mr. Stock said that Chicago might point with pride to an undertaking in which it was a pioneer.

The children not only hear excellent examples of all sorts of music; they have learned to distinguish the various instruments and to follow the themes as they are played. Adventures in the "whole tone scale" which is so important in modern music will be made the coming season, and even more difficult music than was played last winter will be used for the youngsters.

"Training in music is all important," said Mr. Stock. "Those who love pictures can see them whenever they want to, but music lovers can hear music only when it is played, and more intensive education is necessary on that account."

I am taking the Standard Teacher Training Course written by Charles Oliver. However, I don't intend to do that. I am going to take all five books given under the First Year outline as I want to get the views and methods of more than one author. Also, under the practice work point two is all that I haven't completed and I am in position that within six Sundays it will be possible for me to complete that part if I say the word.

Please advise me if I can take the course and teach it at the same time. I think it will be possible to have about six of our society take the course. So far I have only had a chance to just glance through the books, but I have already decided that it is one of the best educational features on the market, and the practice work tips it off. My one regret is that I didn't write for particulars sooner.

Accept my thanks in advance for a reply.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) Fern M. Colborn.

Note: Send to the office of B. Y. P. U. of America, 125 No. Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill., for outline of the above course. Classes are being started in many parts of the territory. The purpose of this course is to train young people for effective Church and Kingdom service.

A satisfying story wrapped around the orphan Penelope and her problems. Her unselfish desire and effort to help others, stimulates to higher ambitions. We are delighted by the solving of each problem as if it were our own.

The Road of the Loving Heart, by Annie

An adventure story, the scene laid in the Alps. The Swiss twins are sent out into the mountains to care for the goats.
An avalanche cuts them off from their home. The outlook is for a time pretty dark but, following a series of adventures, they finally make their way home in safety. The story is fascinating. The printing is clear and, all in all, it will make a good gift book.

each year. While it is a juvenile book it holds the interest of grown-ups as well.

The Permanence of Christianity, by Thomas
Wilson. New York: Hodder & Stoughton.
$1.50.

The author of these lectures shows a familiarity with the thinking of all ages and lands regarding the origin, duty and destiny of man. Mr. Wilson makes it clear that, from the dawn of consciousness, there has been a soul craving which only finds its satisfaction in the life of faith in the eternal Father of love, as revealed by the God Man, Jesus Christ.
This book shows the possibility of the coupling of the highest learning with the simplest faith in the real fundamentals.

The Book of Books, by Philip Wendell Crannell. Philadelphia: The Judson
Press. 75 cents net.

Few writers are better known to Baptist readers than Dr. Crannell. His "Pocket Sabbath School Lessons" and other volumes have given him an enviable introduction. The present volume is one of a series of manuals issued by the Judson Press "for the school of the church."
Its contents are fifteen chapters on the Bible. Topics discussed are, "The Bible a Timeless Book," "A Timely Book," "A Book Unique," "The Bible as a Literature," as "soul food" and kindred discussions. It is prepared in Dr. Crannell best style both as to contents and presentation: lucid, terse, discriminating and full of information most needful. Each chapter is followed by reviewing questions convenient for class study. No student of this book can read it without appreciating his Bible more because he undestands it better. The volume is a valuable addition to literature about the Bible which is already large and rich.

Matter and Spirit, by Prof. James Bisse
Pratt. Lectures before the Yale Divinity School. New York: Macmillan.

Prof. Pratt has won an enviable reputation as a metaphysician. His published books are classics. The present volume is a welcome relief in an age when crass materialism is saturating the thinking of man. Reading it brings back vividly our college days when we were mentally free on Porter, McCash and other celebrities and we browsed over philosophical journals for our collateral readings. After devoting the opening pages to explanations and definitions of various terminologies the author plunges into his questions. The lectures bristle with polemic and are unsparing in their criticism.
Theologians are mild and sweet in their discussions compared with these astute philosophers. While the contents are most interesting to scholars it must be said that to the lay reader who seeks cursorily treatment of such great questions they will be found less readable. The technical terms and erudite discussion of ideas, and abstract propositions are not relieved by one anecdote or illustration to vivify and throw light on the "deepest things." We believe the book loses its "readability" by its obsessing abstraction and abounding technicalities. We have read the six lectures, parts we have reread and we find it, intellectually and spiritually, a health-giving book. If you have a taste for metaphysical thinking this volume will be a great stimulus.

"It Is to Laugh"

A man was lost in a London fog so thick that he could scarcely see his hand before his face. He became seriously alarmed when he found himself in a slimy alley.
Then he heard footsteps approaching through the obscurity, and sighed with relief.

"Where am I going?" he cried anxiously.

A voice replied weirdly from the darkness:

"Into the river—I've just come out!"

For an hour a man from Denver had been boasting to an Irishman about the magnificence of the Rocky mountains.

"You seem mighty proud of them mountains," the Irishman observed.

"You bet I am," replied the man from Denver. "And I ought to be, since my ancestors built them."

The Irishman thought this over for a few moments and then asked, "Did you ever happen to hear of the Dead sea in-in one of the old countries?"

"Yes," replied the man from Denver.
"I know all about the Dead sea."

"Well, did you happen to know the me great-grandfather killed the thing?"

Common Sense Applied to Singing

By WILLIAM A. C. ZERFF.

In entitling these few words "Common Sense Applied to Singing," I desire to appeal to all who feel that in the midst of the frantic disagreement and argument which prevails in the singing world, in the midst of all the talk of head tones, chest tones, white tones, dark tones, thick tones, thin tones, throaty tones, open tones, closed tones, high breathing, low breathing, chest resonance, head resonance, facial resonance, spinal resonance, singing on the breath, above the breath, or for the breath, there must be a simple and natural way to sing.

Paradoxical as the following statement may appear to be, it is the very simplicity of the whole question which has rendered it one of the most intricate and difficult to solve.

What is "Natural"?

The simplicity lies in the fact that the major portion of the problem has already been solved by nature; the difficulty lies in the attempt to determine which of our habits of speech and song are "natural" in the sense that they are correct, and which although incorrect and unnatural originally, have by long use become so "natural" as to deceive us as to their real origin. The statement has very frequently been made that singing should be as natural as speaking, but we must first of all make sure that our speech is natural before we attempt to enlarge it into song. If this is not done, it simply means that the faulty habits of speech which we possess will be carried over into the singing voice, not probably in an enlarged degree.

To force the voice may be defined as the attempt to produce a wider range of pitch and greater volume of sound than can normally be obtained. Since every shout or scream is the result of driving the breath through a tightened throat, it will be readily seen that from our earliest infancy we are liable to have contracted the habits of forcing. Is it therefore surprising that when we take up the study of singing, the inclination to "force" is already very definitely established?

Not until the attempt is made to sing very softly, not piano but pianissimo, is it possible to determine whether the tone long is being produced with complete freedom, and it is quite impossible for beginners to produce a tone even of comparatively small volume, without there being some element of strain present. The reason for this is that the vocal muscles having hitherto been accustomed to produce tones of limited pitch and volume (for speech) are not able to stand the added tension necessary for the production of singing tones requiring far greater range and volume, without being allowed sufficient time for development. No matter how gifted a person may be vocally, the same rules apply to all, and neglect leads to impairment of voice.

Unfortunately, however, it is by no means easy either for the singer or his audience to detect the presence of undue strain in the tone produced, for the singer grows so accustomed to the feeling that its presence is not noticed, and it is quite possible to force out tones which are of a quality good enough to deceive the majority of listeners.

Students very frequently take the stand that if a singer has attained success, it follows that his method of voice production must be a good one. This attitude fails to take into consideration the vocal physique with which the singer may be endowed. Many successful singers possess vocal organs of such phenomenal strength as to permit of years of overstrain before they begin to show signs of wear. Among successful singers, however, are to be found those whose voice while originally of beautiful quality, has by improper use become hard and strained, and who are then forced to recourse to development of other qualities such as acting or interpretation in order to compensate for their vocal shortcomings.

The impossibility of a singer ever being able to hear his voice as it really sounds to others is another difficulty which must be added to the many which already beset the vocalist's path. He usually has formed a fair idea of the kind of tone he would like to sing, and with this idea in mind he starts out to find a method of tone production which will enable him to produce tones which will sound as nearly as possible like those he has decided upon as correct. This, however, does not take into consideration the fact that the natural quality of his voice may be entirely different from the quality he is desirous of producing, to obtain which he is in all probability exercising an arbitrary control over his voice, and compelling it to assume a different quality than it was intended to possess. Not until absolute freedom of production has been attained can the natural quality of the voice be determined, and attempts to influence the quality lead to unnatural restraint.

A Method of Procedure

Should the singer whose method of singing I have outlined above be desirous of teaching, his method of procedure would probably be about as follows:

With this idea of tone quality in mind, he would direct the pupil by imitation of his own voice or by a description of the sensation he receives when singing to sing tones which approach as nearly as possible his ideal of correct tone quality. This again fails to take into consideration that the natural quality of the pupil's voice may be entirely different from the quality the teacher is desirous of having him produce, and the pupil labors under the double handicap of endeavoring to produce a tone similar to that which his teacher sings, and which will also produce the sensations which have been described to him as being correct. Need it be said that methods based upon such faulty reasoning cannot produce satisfactory results?

A common sense method of singing must first of all teach how complete and natural freedom of action for the vocal organ may be induced. To attempt to obtain the correct quality of tone without first establishing this necessary freedom is literally putting the cart before the horse and leads to the establishment of incorrect habits. Only when the principles of correct voice production have been thoroughly mastered is it possible to produce tones of fullest range and power without subjecting the vocal organ to a strain which will in time lead to permanent injury.—Musical Courier.

Chinese Girls to Have Outdoor Gymnasium

THE education and all-round development of Chinese girls has become of such vital interest to a Chinese military governor that he has given money for an outdoor gymnasium for the Hangchow Union Girls' High School. General Lu Yung Hsiang is the donor of 3,500 Mexican dollars for this gymnasium. A Chinese writes in this connection, "This gift was made as a result of the influence of Mr. K. T. Yuan, the head teacher of our school, and shows that Chinese are able and willing, on the one hand, to give, and on the other to solicit funds for our missionary work. We hope that friends in America will realize that Chinese have arrived at the time when they can appreciate missionary effort. Continued financial support from America will undoubtedly stimulate even more generous giving in China."

Is This the Solution of the Problem?

By WALTER J. SPARKS

It is said that there has been a shrinkage in the ministerial supply of 31 per cent in thirty years and this is not comparative but actual. With one exception the Baptists of the north have fewer men studying for the ministry in proportion to the membership than any other denomination.

What is the reason?

Without trying to connect cause and effect we find a few facts very significant.

About twenty years ago, with the worthy object of a better trained ministry we began to discourage men from taking the English Bible course in our seminaries. Finally such a sentiment was created against this course that it became almost a disgrace for a man to take it. Today the course is practically abandoned. This has robbed the Baptist ministry of a very important source of supply.

There used to be a good academy in connection with most of our colleges. Here young men prepared for the regular college course and many men also who were of more mature years began in the academy and then took a full college and seminary course. With the development of the high school most of our colleges abandoned the academy. As a result many who had been obliged to go to work when through the grade school were compelled in more mature years to attend a high school and be in classes with those so much younger as to make the course an ordeal most embarrassing. This robbed our ministry of another valuable source of supply.

At the non-denominational Bible institutes the attendance of Baptist young men has increased and increased until two years ago at one of these alone there were more Baptist men studying for the ministry than the combined attendance at all our seminaries of the Northern Convention. Thirty years ago these men would have been taking some regular course in our own institutions.

Facts such as the above make our Northern Baptist Theological Seminary an absolute necessity and it is no wonder that this institution has had and is having such a marvelous growth. Today it supplies more men for our small needy churches than any other Baptist seminary of the north and these men are doing such good work that applications for seminary graduates are coming in from all parts of the country.

In the past there has been considerable misunderstanding of the seminary but the work it is doing is now commanding the attention and interest of Baptists everywhere. Its purpose is not to appeal to any one section of our denomination but to serve the great main body of Baptists which it believes to be conservative in theology. The seminary is one denominational interest that really functions by sending out efficient men who preach the old gospel effectively.

There is a splendid seminary-collegiate course of which 40 per cent is English and 60 per cent Bible. This is especially for young men unable by reason of age or other cause to take a regular college course.

Since the seminary does not have to depend upon the colleges for its supply of students, but can receive them from every walk of life, it has possibilities of large development and usefulness. If, however, it is to reach its maximum attendance and efficiency, it must have the moral and financial support of the great Baptist Brotherhood.

It will be of interest to our Baptist people to know of the progress made by other denominations which conduct campaigns similar to our New World Movement. The Evangelical Association with headquarters in Cleveland, issued a statement giving the names of the conferences, quotas, amount subscribed and paid, similar to the financial report which appears in THE BAPTIST each month. The receipts are distributed 27 per cent for missions and church extension, 14 per cent for orphan and old people's homes, 2 per cent for contingent expenses, and 57 per cent for education. Of the last amount, 40 per cent is for endowment and new buildings, 12 per cent for theological seminaries to be used for a like purpose and 5 per cent for student aid. The most striking thing in the report is the fact that of the amount pledged and due only 3-8/10 per cent was unpaid. We cordially congratulate our Evangelical brethren.

Missionary Statesmanship In Latin America

The Hon. Edwin Denby, Secretary of the Navy, in turning his attention to Haiti, made the following observation: "It is my opinion that the missionary societies and churches of the United States could not do better than to send representatives to that field. Their kindly offices would do much to bring about a friendly feeling between the people of that country and the United States."

Other denominations have agreed that this is a Baptist field. The American Baptist Home Mission Society needs men and means to meet this responsibility in the evangelization of Haiti.

A new American frontier is in process of formation in the Caribbean. It is not a geographical but a spiritual zone where American traditions and ideals are rapidly displacing those of France and Spain. Shall we not have missionaries there who shall present to those peoples the Gospel of Christ?

This Society has planted the Gospel in five Latin-American fields, Cuba, Porto Rico, Mexico, Salvador and Nicaragua. Since 1918 eight churches have become self-supporting, two in Porto Rico, two in Cuba and four in Mexico. It has been distinguished over other missionary societies for its dependence upon native leadership in each field.

Men and means are required to build training schools in Central America to do for Salvador and Nicaragua what is now being done in Cuba, Porto Rico and Mexico.

Our Hope in 1923

THE spirit of the cross is the only hope of a world that is struggling blindly along trying to find a way out of the chaos brought about by the war.

In every department of life there is a desire for something or some one to save the situation. One of our labor papers about a year ago carried an editorial that covered the entire front page. It clearly stated that the only hope of the labor world was Jesus Christ and his spirit of unselfishness. The "Wall Street Journal" said some time ago:

"What America needs more than railway extension, and western irrigation, and a low tariff, and a bigger wheat crop, and a merchant marine, and a new navy, is a revival of piety, the kind father and mother used to have; piety that counted it good business to stop for daily family prayer before breakfast, right in the middle of the harvest; that quit field work a half hour early Wednesday night so as to get the chores done and go to prayer meeting. That's just what we need now to clean this country of filth, of graft and of greed, petty and big, of worship of fine houses and big lands, and high office and grand social functions."

Of course that means to come back to the spirit of the Christ in daily life. It means placing Christ at the center of the home and of business life.—Frederick E. Taylor, President of the Northern Baptist Convention.

Fresh from the Field

Carlyle S. Guibor was ordained by the Galilee Church, Chicago, Dec. 14. Dr. Geo. W. Taft, of the Northern Baptist Seminary, was the presiding officer. Mr. Guibor is pastor of the Galilee Church.

Harry S. Myers writes: "Considerable interest is being manifested in Baptist churches concerning Czecho-Slovakia. The Czecho-Slovakia legation at 2040 S Street N. W., Washington, D. C., has moving pictures and stereopticon slides concerning Czecho-Slovakia which can be secured by writing to Mr. Milan Getting, Press Attache. It is necessary to book these some time in advance and I understand that there is no charge."

The First Baptist Church, Fairbury, Neb., with the leading Protestant churches of the city will put on a great stewardship campaign beginning Jan. 7. There will be a school of stewardship for five weeks, a paper will be published devoted mainly to stewardship and distributed in the church homes, special literature will be prepared, and stewardship leagues will be organized in all the churches. Rev. H. M. Wyrick is pastor of the church.

Dr. J. J. Ross of the Second Baptist Church, Chicago, has received and accepted the unanimous call of the Ruggles Street Baptist Church, Boston, Mass., and will begin his work in Boston, Sunday, Feb. 18. Besides being pastor of the Second Church, Dr. Ross is a lecturer in the Northern Baptist Seminary in New Testament, is a trustee of that institution, is the president of the Chicago Baptist Ministers' Conference, a vice-president of the Baptist Publication Society and the first vice-president of the Illinois State Convention.

Rev. L. F. Taylor resigned as pastor of the Allison Avenue Church, Washington, Pa., Dec. 17. He has accepted the call to Glendale, Ariz., as successor to Rev. C. M. Northrop. This leaves a desirable pastorate open with a neat, commodious building, a splendid parsonage and a loyal congregation. The church is loyal to the Northern Baptist Convention program. The salary is $1,500 per year and parsonage. Mr. G. L. Zimmerman, 1000 Allison, Washington, Pa., is chairman of the committee.

The natives of southeastern Alaska have combined in forming the Alaska Native Brotherhood which, according to Mr. William L. Paul who is secretary of the Grand Camp of this brotherhood, "embraces practically every native in southeastern Alaska with the exception of the Tsimshians and Metlakala, who were originally under the Canadian government, who speak a totally different language, and being the only reservation Indians in Alaska, are separate and apart in thinking and problems." The brotherhood has four planks: Advancement in morals, advancement in education and mental development, advancement in commerce, and advancement in politics. Most of the leaders of this movement are graduates of the Sitka Training School which was the forerunner of the Sheldon-Jackson School. An annual convention is held when subjects like the following are discussed: The future of the natives of Alaska; better schools; fisheries, their depletion and the remedy; better politics; why every Indian should vote; and the future of religion in the brotherhood. An annual convention is conducted on these subjects. This brotherhood promotes the love of Alaska as the homeland of the people and the improvement of every class.

Miss Grace Abbott, chief of the children's bureau of the U. S. department of labor says: "Those states which today permit the employment of children under fourteen years of age rank with Japan, China and India in the protection which they give to working children." Only thirteen of the states have laws governing the working conditions of children which met the requirements of the federal law which was declared unconstitutional on May 15.

The Northeast Baptist Social Union of Philadelphia recently expressed its willingness to cooperate with the Lower Dublin Church in any movement that the church may think proper to make for restoration and maintenance of the old Pennypack church building as a memorial of great historic value to the denomination. We hope that some friend will give to the readers of THE BAPTIST some of the facts concerning this old historic spot.

Announcement is made at the University of Chicago of the university preachers for the winter quarter beginning Jan. 2. The first preacher in January will be Pres. Emory W. Hunt, of Bucknell University, Pennsylvania, the date being Jan. 14. On Jan. 14 and 21, Bishop Francis McConnell, of Pittsburgh, will be the preacher, and on Jan. 28, Dr. Harry F. Fosdick, of the First Presbyterian Church, New York City. The first preacher in February will be Pres. Clarence A. Babbour, of Rochester Theological Seminary who will be followed in the same month by Rev. Ivan Lee Holt, of St. John's Methodist Church, St. Louis; Rev. John D. McLauchlan, of St. Mark's Church, Seattle, Wash.; and Dr. Hugh S. Kerr, of the Shadyside Presbyterian Church, Pittsburgh. Professor Hugh Black, of Union Theological Seminary, New York City, will be the preacher on March 11.

"The Commonwealths and the Kingdom"

Baptists have followed the suggestions both of Scripture and of good business principles in establishing State Conventions. "Jerusalem, Judea, Samaria, and unto the uttermost" is the divine order. "In America the State is the unit of sovereignty."

Relations and Inter-Relations

Each State Convention faces problems peculiar to itself. It shares also, conditions that are common to all. A wise policy gives freedom in organization but cultivates cooperation in large, united tasks.

The State Mission program must concern itself within its own territory. Its effort is to plant the gospel through the living ministry in its own communities. It seeks to develop growing churches, establish denominational strength, and help to permanently occupy for Christ. Like the prosperous local church, the Convention that effectively cultivates its own fields, enters a wide fellowship and sends vital aid far beyond its own bounds.

The Denominational Plan

We have churches and associations and state conventions and general bodies. The chain, however, is nowhere stronger than the State Mission link, which brings all Baptists in a state together for the conquest of that state, and leads all the Baptists of that state out beyond for the conquest of the world.

Thus our State Conventions, whether in cooperation with the Home Mission Society or separately, serve in wide, harmonious, united action and constitute an enlarging force for kingdom advance.

Loyalty That Will Tell

These conventions face great opportunities. They feel the responsibility of weighty obligations. They see new conquests just ahead. They await only the hearty, intelligent, enthusiastic devotion of a mighty multitude of Baptists, that they may help establish in their commonwealths and beyond them the Kingdom of God.

The Difference

"If I thought people, day in and day out, would approve of my paper, I'd stop publishing it" said Editor Harrison of the Commercial News, of Danville, Ill., speaking before the Medill School of Journalism. If Baptist people do not approve of their paper, day in and day out, we will stop publishing it without an act of volition. Of course we make mistakes and meet criticism but on the whole the paper has the approval of its readers.

Killam's Kollum

All In Getting Used To It

A good woman soon after this Kollum was perpetrated on an unsuspecting constituency sent in her protest. She said if this Kollum continued she would discontinue her subscription. Well, we had so many others who indicated that this was the first, and sometimes the last, thing they read that we felt under compulsion to continue the publisher's page, even at the cost of losing our subscriber. This same friend has enclosed $5, covering two years' subscription, with the remark that the page is not as bad as it used to be. We sincerely hope that all our readers will do as well. Is there real improvement, or is she getting hardened to it? We dare not answer the question. We do, however, appreciate her opinion and her check.

Geisha Girls Not Slandered

Our own Douglas Gilbert Haring is the first to answer the charge of Julian Street to the effect that the bad name of the Japanese geisha girls is due to propaganda of missionaries at home on furlough. See what Mr. Haring does to Julian Street. The article will appear in an early issue of THE BAPTIST.

In That Day

On the calendar of the First Church, Kalamazoo, Mich., we find this warning: "Some day there will be a revolution in a Baptist church. The members will rise and righteously demand that they have an inalienable right to contribute to the support of the church and missions. They will stubbornly insist and fight for the New Testament right to give 'as God has prospered.' They will demand that the treasurer furnish them with envelopes and that no member of the church, rich or poor, shall be overlooked." Yes, and in that day every member of that church will have access to THE BAPTIST and Missions. You do not get the fuel for such a revolution out of the daily press or the almanac. The denominational journal worthy of the name specializes in furnishing weapons to rebels against an uninformed and uninterested church.

Wants to Keep Up

Rev. A. J. Nordlund of Sharon, Mass., writes: "I want THE BAPTIST. I could not keep abreast with the forward movements of our great denomination without it. I sincerely wish that success will attend all your labours."

The office of State Promotion Director Robert E. Farrier, D. D., of New York, is being moved from 276 Fifth Avenue to Syracuse, N. Y., which was recently established as the headquarters city of the New York State Convention.

It is estimated that more than 8,000 Negro Baptists are now in Los Angeles, having no affiliation with any of the Negro churches there. The Second Negro Baptist Church is negotiating the purchase of a $15,000 lot upon which to erect a $75,000 church building. This plant when completed will be of tremendous usefulness in reaching these unchurched Negro Baptists.

The First Church at Fremont, Neb., is planning to dedicate its new building on January 21. This will be the anniversary of the fire which completely destroyed the church one year ago. The splendid new brick structure was built at a cost of $65,000 and will be thoroughly equipped for Sunday School and social work. Harry W. Jones, of Minneapolis, is the architect. The building was constructed by R. A. Luehrs, one of our own members, who saved the church several thousand dollars over what it would have cost if let by general contract.

The United States Army Post Bulletin issued at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., is an attractive folder similar to that of a first-class church calendar. The activities of the post compare favorably with those of average city congregations. The chapel choir rendered the "Messiah" Sunday afternoon, Dec. 24, and in the evening marched through the streets of the post singing Christmas carols. Chaplain Frank C. Rideout in addition to his duties has recently assisted the Independence Ave. Church of Kansas City, Mo., in a series of special meetings which resulted in the addition of forty members.

Rev. Clarence W. Kemper was under the necessity of spending ten days, almost his last ten days in Lansing, Mich., in a hospital so that it was impossible for the First Church to hold its farewell reception. The calendar of Dec. 17, his last Sunday in Lansing, bears these words: "God bless you, Mr. Kemper, and your family. We had hoped to say these words to you at a reception this week when we might invite your friends in the Ministers' Union, the Council of Religious Education and the Kiwanis Club. We wanted to express our love and appreciation publicly but your physician advised us that this would not be kind and we abide by his decision." Mr. Kemper will begin his work at the Baptist Temple, Charleston, W. Va., Jan. 1.

Approximately 40,000 new subscribers were obtained by the Baptist newspapers of the South during the simultaneous subscription campaign put on by the majority of them during the fall months as one of the phases of the re-enforcement program of the 75 Million Campaign. This is a total gain of nearly 40 per cent in the previous subscription lists of all the papers of the South, though some of the papers did not enter into the movement because of local conditions. While the concerted movement was recommended by the conservation commission of the campaign, the commission believing that the campaign interests could best be promoted by increasing the circulation of the Baptist papers, each paper projected its can-of a new year lies before you. What will you do with it? Will it be just another "ordinary" year which slips unnoticed into the dim procession of the ages? Or will it be a "red-letter" year—forever memorable because you learned to think of "Others"?

vass in its own way. Those papers report the largest results which utilized the forces of the B. Y. P. U. in pushing the movement and enlisted the local churches in the matter of putting the denominational paper in their budgets.

By actual count, fifty-two fields of the Woman's Home Mission Society have been affected by the 25 per cent cut of which we speak so glibly and the equivalent in salaries of forty missionaries and thirty teachers has been withdrawn. This necessitates the closing entirely of some mission stations and the overburdening of workers at others. Splendid mission schools are having to discontinue some courses because of reduced appropriations, and this necessarily detracts from the standing of the schools in the communities which they serve. Meantime administrative expenses have been reduced to a minimum, and there is one less secretary on the staff at headquarters.

The last two years of political turmoil and social unrest throughout India have witnessed remarkable evangelistic gatherings particularly in the Telugu area in South India. According to a report of Missionary T. V. Witter, more than 50,000 converts have been gathered in the various missions that work in the area.

Missionary A. E. Bigelow of the Foreign Mission Society stationed at Iloilo, Philippine Islands, and at present at home on furlough, had the privilege of calling on the president of the United States at the White House, Saturday, Dec. 2, when he presented to the president a nut bowl and mallet as a gift from the students of the Jaro Industrial School. The bowl, made of the wood of an old mango tree more than 100 years old, which stood on the campus of the school until it was blown down by a typhoon in 1921. The handle of the mallet is of sapwood, otherwise known as Philippine Island ebony. This interesting souvenir was made by the students in the school, and Mr. Bigelow was commissioned to present it to the president on behalf of the faculty and the students. President Harding received this gift with deep interest and expressed his grateful appreciation of the courtesy that promoted its sending. He also intimated to Mr. Bigelow that he would be glad to have him write him concerning his views regarding Philippine independence.

Wait a Minute

By W. E. HENRY

WAIT a minute, think it over.
Just a bit of calm reflection
May make sure the right direction
In the crucial future day.
Hasty words quite often cover
Hooks of steel that bind us tightly
Unto those who take life lightly,
Who will draw us from our way.

Hurried action stands forever
Just as much as any other,
And its fruitage we must gather
Soon or late, with joy or tear.
Wait a minute, think it over;
Wisdom walks a step behind us,
Ready always to befriend us
Can she whisper in our ear.

The Baptist

A New Year Suggestion: Budget Yourself

IT WAS reported, after our national government had at length been persuaded to exchange its imbecile method of doing business and had set the peppery General Dawes at work on something like a real budgeting system, that a quarter of a billion of dollars' saving was effected in the first six months. Even Great Britain, which has long had a budget for ordinary times, based its hope in the great war, as an unusually frank official expressed it, on the belief it would "muddle through somehow, as it usually did."

It would be a healthful even if humiliating thing for each of us to make for himself a personal inventory of the year 1922, and then proceed with chastened mind to budget himself, not merely his money but the totality of his resources, for the untrodden year 1923. It is probable that with the most of us the year would seem an inexplicable mingling of successes, half-successes and failures. The humiliating thing is that one's life seems so haphazard. In candid moments our boasted successes appear mere "lucky strikes," while we still soothe our pride by considering our failures unavoidable and ourselves unblameable. We talk of "misfortunes," "hard luck," "not getting an even break," or, more piously but not less foolishly, we ascribe our failures to "an inscrutable providence." Old Uncle Esek has remarked, "Some men makes up deir minds to take a day's loafin' an' calls it bein' patient and resigned."

It is true that there are lives which seem exemplary from every point of view yet are apparently the sport of fate; there are very saints of God who are beset with disaster, suffering and sorrow. There are calamities unpredictable and unavoidable; there are strange providences both protective and destructive. But these are not the rule. It is better for us in general that we may depend on the uniform action of God's laws than that he should rescue his faithful followers from all unpleasant consequences whenever they fall foul of these laws, even blamelessly. If a sufficient emergency should arise God would doubtless intervene for our protection, by some reserve resource of his omnipotence which would break no natural law. We have a right to ask him thus to protect us, especially while we are engaged in doing his will; but we should not expect him ordinarily to save us from the consequences of our own folly or wilful ignorance or laziness, nor ask that he shall exempt us from all the contingencies of common destiny. It would not be a blessing to us to live in a world of haphazard instead of a world of orderly process.

Yet God in a world of law is not the slave of his law. He has his constant hand on the enginery of the universe which he designed and constructed. It is not a Frankenstein, nor will it ever get out of his control; it is a domain of law subject to modification by will. And Christianity is a religion of law and order. Our Lord rebuked the carelessness that would build without counting the cost or go to war without studying one's resources, or choose an impermanent foundation of sand when one might choose eternal rock, and Paul said to those who defended an irresponsible emotionalism, "The spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets; for God is not a God of confusion . . . as in all the churches of the saints. . . . Let all things be done decently and in order." Christianity is an expression of the free spirit working through orderly process.

Objections to tithing as legalistic fade out as one realizes that it is founded on the budgeting of our whole selves, our total resources, material and immaterial.

We should budget our time. We should apportion it, live with some definiteness of schedule beyond that forced upon us for our livelihood. The elements of tragedy in a misspent life are not so often carousal and criminality as they are trifling and aimlessness. Killing time is treated as a popular sport, but it is murder in the first degree. Let us confess: many of life's duties are taken up only when destiny seizes us by the throat and compels us to them; we are like prisoners working only under the lash or the bayonet-prod of necessity. Working under pressure we accomplish more in a day than in a week with all pressure of necessity removed. Do we think to thank God for the impulsion of a regular daily task which like the escapement of a clock keeps us steadily at our job? It is a snare of the minister that he so seldom has a definitely-ordered routine prescribed to him beyond his Sunday and prayer-meeting services. He may loaf if he will; and if he make a schedule for himself it is likely to be shot full of holes by the unscheduled demands that come to him, so that his life becomes simply the resultant of his interruptions. The only relief will be in a budgeting of his time which will be not too rigid yet insistent enough to provide for an irreducible minimum of necessary things, with large margins for emergencies and incalculables.

We should budget our energy. The child bubbles over with purposeless energy, rolling, tumbling, making noise for noise's sake; but the man must husband his energies, keep the human reservoir brimming, employ his energy at an advantage, stop the leakages of energy which may lead to insanity—in a word, he must budget his vital forces. He may put them, in some crisis of illness or disaster, to the strain of sleepless nights and unresting days, if he has stored up reserves of energy. Edison and his laboratory squad would work on a special problem twenty hours a day for days at a time; but this extraordinary use of our energies depends upon their wise conservation, their proper budgeting, on ordinary occasions.

And this means that we must budget our choices. Life is an elimination contest; less an active fight against the bad than a struggle to keep inferior things from choking out the best in the garden of our existence. Phillips Brooks, asked about certain amusements, grieved that people were more concerned to preserve some harmless but petty piece of uselessness than to achieve something worthy of themselves and God. How do the choices for 1922 stand our retrospective scrutiny? Christ spoke the ultimate word when he said, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." By putting the supreme choice first we secure also our secondary needs.

The budgeting of our mental processes, our speech, our influence, follows with the same necessity. As to the budgeting of our money, that falls simply into its place in this whole reasoned scheme of things. A study of our checkbooks might be helpful even though humiliating. A small boy said lugubriously, "It beats all how fast a nickel goes when you once break it"; and his elders murmur the same thing of the five-dollar bill, and the salary check and the legacy of thousands. Our money seems the slipperiest thing in the world. Tithing leads us to reckon our income and apportion its outgo; it is worth everything to a man for its influence toward the rational budgeting of all his money, all his resources, all his abilities. And when even one third instead of ten per cent of our members are tithers the churches will reach a new peak of efficiency, and each of us will find in himself a new coefficient of power.

For 1923, then, budget your whole self!

The Critics Criticized

CRITICISM is a safeguard to civilization and it may be a spur to individual betterment. Christians do not live their lives in a sequestered retreat. They live under conditions which constantly call for discrimination and judgment. It is their business to rebuke and reform those evils in the midst of which they find themselves.

Christians are furthermore exhorted to counsel and reprove their own brethren for their good. We are here making no plea for exemption from criticism. Acceptance of a public office makes one a public servant, and involves of necessity more or less public criticism. Those who serve the denomination as its paid officials or as voluntary workers not only expect but welcome such criticism. Few have any personal ends to achieve and most servants of the denomination are held to their tasks by a keen sense of obligation.

What we desire to emphasize here is that helpful criticism calls for a high type of character and a fine sense of feeling. No other Christian task is more delicate or accompanied by graver risks both to the critic and his subject. To form and at times to express an opinion on the character or conduct of men is a duty, and yet so closely allied is it to another type of judgment that it is an easy matter to fall into the evil ways condemned by Jesus when he warns us, saying, "Judge not that ye be not judged."

The man who sits in the seat of judgment and hands down constructive criticism of the character or conduct of others should keep constantly before him the implications of the Golden Rule. No one likes to have the worst possible construction placed upon his own words or acts. Why not in 1923 place the best construction instead of the worst possible upon the conduct of our brethren with whom we may differ? It is all too easy to suspect base reasons even for that which may look to be generous. No man likes to be condemned on external evidence, on mere surface appearances. Even editors are occasionally condemned, justly or unjustly, for some real or supposed indiscretions. Two letters came in a single week from well-known Baptist brethren. Both letters called into question the conduct of the editor in two widely different cases. Both charged ulterior motives in the acts of commission and omission. In neither case were all the facts in hand when judgment was passed. When we essay to deal with motives we are getting into the place which is best filled by the Almighty. One of the good men, for they are good men, when he received the facts at once wrote and told us of a favorite sermon on "Unwarrantable Suppositions" from the text "Trophimus, the Ephesian whom they supposed that Paul had brought into the temple," which he had preached many times to others. "But it seems" he said, "that I need to take a little of the same medicine that I have prescribed for others. All right, I have taken it and the patient is feeling better." What better evidence of his Christian spirit could one ask?

We cannot afford to become so generous that our eyes are blinded to the evil that is about us and in us. Let us reprove and rebuke the evil as occasions may require. Let us, however, consider the kind of judgment we find helpful in our own experience and then guard against a harsh, censorious judgment which freezes affection and creates an ice-wall of distrust. Such criticism hurts the man we wish to help and it hurts the man who judges even more, for of the same kind of judgment full measure pressed down and running over will men pour into his bosom. So far as in us lies, in 1923 let us resolve no longer to perpetuate the race of men whose outstanding characteristic of their religion is an indiscriminate abuse of the rest of mankind. The judgments of such make one mad, while the criticism of others may make one weep. What is the difference? The difference is in the spirit of the critic.

Actors Must Go Straight

THE COMMON sense of mankind will finally repudiate a double standard of morality—one for the man and another for the woman. In this same way it is becoming clear that actors—even favorites—cannot erect a special moral standard for themselves and maintain their places in the affection of the people generally.

Will Hays finds that the initial steps taken to reinstate "Fatty" Arbuckle have met with a storm of protest from all types and conditions of men. Theater owners in large number have raised their voices against the proposal. The mayors of Los Angeles and Boston, women's clubs the country over and the National Catholic Welfare Council declare that this man cannot come back without bringing a loss to the country and a blight to the movie business itself. The Canadian censors will not lift the ban in that country. The wages of sin is death even to the success of a moving picture actor.

An Editor Speaks Out of His Heart

DR. WILLIAM E. GILROY, Editor-in-chief of the Congregationalist, addresses an open letter to the subscribers to that journal which will be suggestive to the readers of THE BAPTIST. He says:

"It is a common supposition that it is the editor that makes or breaks a paper. Without seeming to shirk my own responsibility, may I suggest that in reality it is the subscribers.

"Not only do they furnish their share of the financial sinews, but the nature of their interest and support largely determines the character of the paper and its value.

"Double the subscription list of the Congregationalist and we shall go far toward doubling its value and interest. Give us a settled, substantial constituency of people who want to see the large issues of life and religion dealt with in a large way; of people who are patient and prayerful, who are not ready to cancel their subscriptions at the first expression of any opinion contrary to their own; of people who appreciate the atmosphere of friendly counsel and conference, and who recognize that the patient and brotherly methods of Jesus are the effective ways of proclaiming the Christian evangel—give us such a constituency of friends, appreciative of our merits, kindly critical of our faults and errors, meeting us upon a plane of confidence and intimacy, talking about us and winning others to the Congregationalist's fellowship, and we shall endeavor to produce a paper worthy of such a constituency. Subscribers of that sort can unquestionably make a paper.

"Fortunately, it is largely such subscribers that we now have on our lists. But we must not lose a single member from the family, and we must extend the Congregationalist circle very widely if we are to attain full effectiveness. Will you help us to make the paper?"

The South Has Denominational Jumping Jacks

THE WESTERN RECORDER gives a page to illuminating observations by "X" on Baptist conventions. He deprecates "the exceedingly unwise and needless custom of long addresses of welcome and responses." He finds another abuse in "long-winded, fulsome, flowery, bombastic nominating speeches," and feels that some brethren "nominate men not with the faintest hope of their election, but just to get a chance to sprinkle stardust and to be seen and heard." It is pointed out that this results in a waste of time and is a strain on the patience of the convention. "Since the last meeting of the Southern Baptist Convention so much has been written by editors and others in just criticism of the long-winded brothers, the repeaters, the platform writers and I have almost said the convention politicians, that little more needs to be said save to call names if these offenders fail to take the hint." "X" believes that these long continued customs should cease in order to save time, in order to give opportunity for more general expression upon the part of delegates and to safeguard the interests of the convention by wider counsel. He expresses the hope "that our editors will not again offend the brotherly amenities, the rights of the brotherhood at large by nominating and booming, in advance some brother for such and such an official position." It is refreshing to know that in Baptist conventions in the North a few men do not monopolize the convention's time.

A Sectarian Book

THE common King James version of the Bible is a sectarian book. The supreme court of California has so ruled. The school board of a certain public school proposed to purchase copies of the Bible for the school library and the matter was taken into the courts and the decision was rendered upon an appeal from the lower court. The court held that religious liberty is guaranteed without prejudice to any citizen.

On this matter the Lutheran says: "It is obvious that the King James version of the Bible is not Jewish, because it contains the New Testament. It is not Roman Catholic, because it is taken from Greek and Hebrew sources, while the Douay Bible, approved by the Romanists, is a translation of a Latin translation by St. Jerome. The King James version was made by Protestants, and was used by Protestants and by Roman Catholics, who had enough courage to desire to know the word of God. Finally the Roman Church had to provide its people with a copy of the Scripture and they produced the Douay.

"But the sources of King James translation are ancient manuscripts compared with every scrap of translation and quotation that its learned authors could find. They had no sectarian object in view when they prepared it. They sought to give Christians what Christ taught, what the apostles wrote, guided by the Holy Spirit, and what the ancient prophets had spoken. Their purpose was to transcribe faithfully into English the word of God to men. They believed that every believer in Christ, regardless of his "sectarian" relationship, being a Christian, would want the book pure and free from intrusions from any partisan source. The best scholarship in the world in 1881 "revised" this King James version with many new manuscripts to guide them. They made changes in expression but they found no errors of partisan prejudice.

"In short, the King James Bible is Christian. It will not suit an atheist, or an agnostic, or a Unitarian, or a Universalist, or a Jew, or anybody who is not simply a Christian. If the Romanists cannot stomach it, and if the Protestants agree with it, the reason lies in the fact that the latter are content to be guided by God's word as it has come down to us, adjusting doctrine, practices and ceremonies to its teaching. Being a Christian source they who accept it are Christians. Those who cannot do so, are not without fault. Maybe it is also Protestant. We do not presume to sit in judgment."

The Person of Christ: A Series of "Apologetic" Studies

VI. "Born of the Virgin Mary."

By FREDERIC C. SPURR

WE HAVE now to embark upon an exceedingly delicate study which it is not possible to avoid, if we would be true to the story of the Gospels, to the universal belief of the church, and to ourselves. The incarnation of our Lord is set forth in the New Testament, unvaryingly as the act of God by which he, in the person of Jesus Christ, entered into humanity to redeem it. He "came down from heaven," as the creed puts it. He did not spring from the earth as we do, but he was the divine messenger "sent" by the Father from the other side. Now it is clear that if this be so, we are in the presence, not of an entirely new beginning, as is the case with all human beings born upon this planet, but of a transition from one state to another. If Jesus Christ existed before Bethlehem; if he is the "Lord from heaven": if he "was rich and became poor" for our sakes, then in what way did he cross the border and reach us? How was the transition effected? The answer of the Christian church for nearly two thousand years has been "He was incarnate by the Holy Ghost of the Virgin Mary." There was the human mother but not the human father.

In the Name of "Science"

Now it is well known that in our time there is widespread hesitation about accepting this part of the church's creed, and that not amongst coarse-grained people to whom the most delicate story in the world would occasion an outburst of gross jesting, but also amongst earnest people who are prepared to fight to the last ditch for their Christian faith. We cannot treat these people with contumely: we must listen to them and then see if there be not some way of understanding. Some men, of course, reject the miraculous in toto. They do so in the name of a "science" which has nothing whatever to support them and which they have no right to invoke. They have made up their minds that nature is an enclosed system, that its "laws" are irrevocably fixed, that God is a prisoner in his own universe and that there is no room whatever for the free play of the divine will. Such an attitude has nothing to support it either in science or philosophy. It is not warranted by our slender knowledge of the universe, nor by our experience of the action of God in human history. It is not with this class of persons that we are at present concerned, but rather with that class which professes that the story of the virgin birth of our Lord "complicates" our Christian faith. It is thought to be an "encumbrance." "The divinity of our Lord" they say "is not bound up with his human origin" and it is a serious thing to stake everything upon a story which has so slender a foundation. In passing it may be remarked that from one point of view it is quite possible to treat the two things separately. And in this view the divinity of our Lord does not depend upon the truth or otherwise of the miraculous birth stories. His deity would be just as resplendent apart from any narrative of his entry into the world. The church does not believe him to be divine because of the story of the virgin birth: it believes the story of the virgin birth because it so admirably fits in with what we know Jesus Christ to have been and to be. But this is to anticipate.

Stories of Other Virgin Births

On what grounds is the virgin birth challenged? Mainly four: First, it is said, truly of course, that the story is found in only two of the Gospels and nowhere else in the New Testament. Second, it is pointed out that in the Orient it was not uncommon to transfigure after their death, the births of great men, casting the glamour and the glory of their later life upon the grey sky which heralded their dawn. We are also told that there are virgin birth stories in other religions. The suggestion therefore is that the Gospel story of our Lord's birth belongs to this order and it is therefore legendary. Third, the silence of the Epistles concerning this great event is regarded as evidence that it was not known in the primitive church, or if it was, that it was not an article of faith. Finally, of course, it is miraculous and as Mr. Matthew Arnold said with his usual air of finality, "miracles do not happen." These are the chief grounds upon which the Bible story is doubted or denied. Let us examine them carefully. The fact is admitted that in only two of the Gospels is there a narrative of our Lord's miraculous birth. But it is significant that these are the only two Gospels which mention his birth at all and in each of them the virgin birth is recorded as the means by which he entered our world. Neither St. Mark nor St. John deal with our Lord's earlier years at all. Both of them commence their narratives with the story of the opening of his public ministry. But is it reasonable to say that because these two evangelists never mention the early years of our Lord's life, there were no early years? Yet if the argument derived from the silence of these writers was pressed to its legitimate conclusion, this is where we should be landed. It is quite gratuitous to assume that the writer of the earliest Gospel (St. Mark) and the writer of the latest (St. John) knew nothing whatever of the story of the virgin birth. How can any man say that? It was not the purpose of St. Mark to record anything whatever of the early years of our Lord's life. But it is noticeable that when he begins to write he instantly strikes a key note which perfectly harmonizes with the miraculous in the person of Christ, "the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God." So also there are implications in the Fourth Gospel which harmonize completely with the stories in St. Matthew and St. Luke, although the actual story of the birth of Christ is never referred to. So also is it with regard to the silence of the Epistles. If it be pressed that there was no miraculous birth of Christ because none is recorded in the Epistles, the reply again would be that the Epistles never mention any details of our Lord's human life; shall we therefore argue that there was no human life lived in Galilee and Judea? The argument from silence therefore is an inconsequence—we can rule it out.

Stories Are Complementary

But coming to the two positive narratives that we possess of our Lord's birth, how are we to account for them if they are not genuine? There is absolutely no warrant on "critical" grounds for rejecting them as interpolations, or late additions to an original and simpler story. Whoever rejects them does so on quite other than literary grounds. It must be remembered further that one of the writers who tells the story was a doctor. "Luke the beloved physician," who opens his narrative of the life of Christ by saying that he had "traced the course of all things accurately from the first." On what grounds of sane literary criticism has any one the right to say that the stories thus introduced must necessarily be untrue or legendary? There is another consideration. The historicity of St. Luke is now unchallenged. Harnack has made that clear once and for all. But this carries with it important implications. Most of St. Luke's writing was completed before St. Paul's martyrdom—as a careful examination of his two books shows. St. Paul died in the late sixties. This means that the birth stories were in circulation and accepted by the church during the life time of the first generation of people who knew and followed Jesus. They were not introduced in a later age. The stories in the two Gospels differ from each other: they are quite independent, and they are complementary and not contradictory as is sometimes supposed.

Legend and Truth

Those who are troubled about the supposed "legendary" character of the narratives would be soon reassured were they carefully to contrast the New Testament story with the legends they are supposed to resemble. There is nothing whatever in common between these grotesque inventions and the sweet story of the Gospels. Legends gathered around the birth of the Buddha and the pagan world had many similar stories. But what stories they were, of lustful gods engendering a divine progeny: of trees bending before the miraculous infant, of milk exuding from the ground, of the sun veiling its face and the moon becoming bright as the sun. Had the New Testament writers desired to introduce legend into their stories they had a mass of material to draw from, as the apocryphal writings show. But the fact that they rejected it is evidence that they were not romanticists but historians. The Gospel story of the birth of Christ is distinguished for its wonderful reserve, its delicacy and reverence. "The whole story is as pure as the mountain air" said Dr. Fairbairn. There is nothing whatever of the atmosphere of legend about it. It has to be remembered also that the history belongs to Jewish soil, upon which pagan myths were never allowed to flourish. The monotheistic Jew become Christian, would never suffer himself to be defiled by the abominable stories of pagan mythology.

The Positive Side

It is time, however, that we passed to the positive side of the matter. If only two Gospels actually record the miraculous birth of our Lord, the rest of the New Testament presupposes and demands it. "The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us!" So deep a statement as that demands something exceptional in the coming of Jesus. So does the great statement of St. Paul that "He was in the form of God and took the form of a servant and emptied himself." The virgin birth at least harmonizes with these statements. If our Lord was really pre-existent in what other way could he have entered the world? The mode of our coming into life is known to all of us. We begin life for the first time at the moment of our human generation. But when he came he did not begin life for the first time. If he was pre-existent he must have crossed the barrier into human conditions: if he was not pre-existent, how in any true sense can we speak of an incarnation at all? And what authority is Jesus Christ to us if he did not, as he said he did, come to this earth from that heavenly world?

"We cannot" says Dr. Peake, "discuss the question in a vacuum. Were we treating the case of some ordinary man for whom this claim was put forward, we might excusably put it aside on the ground of the inherent improbability of the event. But in this case we are speaking of one whom we regard as the Son of God, and we may feel that in a person so supernatural the virgin birth was natural. The very character of the narrative pleads in its favor." This is admirably said. The virgin birth is fitting: it fits Christ, it harmonizes exactly with him. The virgin birth guarantees the continuity of his life, he is the same Christ here as there: he simply passed through a narrow channel to his life upon earth. Further, as DeGore puts it, "the virgin birth fits in with his universal impersonality." He belongs to humanity. He is neither Jew nor Greek nor Roman—he is the Son of Man. With the elimination of the human father, the national mark provincial and restricted disappears. Jesus belongs to all—that is the miracle. It is not as Jew that he is ours, both Lord and Redeemer, but as the Son of God and the Son of Man. He is omnipersonal and not the particular possession of any nation.

He Came To Redeem

Moreover, the virgin birth meant a break with sinful heredity. Our Lord took flesh from his mother only. He was not handicapped from the beginning as we are. He came with both hands free to raise us and to redeem us. "He is not" as Dr. Liddon said "less truly representative of our race because in him it has recovered its perfection."

Every Reason for Belief

There is therefore no reason for disbelieving or doubting the story of the virgin birth: but there is every reason to believe it. The two birth stories complement each other. In St. Matthew, Joseph's side is stated. All Joseph's perplexities are set forth. In St. Luke, Mary's side is given. St. Luke tells us that Mary "pondered these things in her heart" and kept silence concerning them. We can understand that the time had not arrived to speak of the sacred mystery. Joseph before his death told his story, and Mary in due time told hers. St. Luke inspired by the Holy Spirit gave it to a church that already believed in our Lord's divinity on other grounds. It is a fitting account of the manner in which divine love became bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh, for our salvation.

Ring Out, Wild Bells!

RING out, wild bells, to the wild sky,
The flying cloud, the frosty light;
The year is dying in the night;
Ring out wild bells, and let him die.

Ring out false pride in place and blood,
The civic slander and the spite;
Ring in the love of truth and right,
Ring in the common love of good.

Ring out old shapes of foul disease,
Ring out the narrowing lust of gold;
Ring out the thousand years of old,
Ring in the thousand years of peace.

Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart, the kindlier hand;
Ring out the darkness of the land,
Ring in the Christ that is to be.

Another King, One Jesus

"And these all act contrary to the decrees of Caesar, saying that there is another king, one Jesus."

By ARTHUR C. BALDWIN

"AND these all act contrary to the decrees of Caesar, saying that there is another king, one Jesus." It was a mob in Thessalonica that said this and one can imagine the contemptuous shrug of the shoulders that accompanied it. The idea! another king! Who could reign but Caesar? On every hand were the signs of his power. Along the post road sped his couriers, east and west like shuttles in a fabric bearing imperial orders, carrying imperial news. In the harbor were the triremes, swift and deadly, policing the seas and maintaining the will of Rome. In their midst was the Roman garrison, grim, hardy soldiers of the empire, before whom no insurrection could hope to stand. The bannered eagles bore their daily witness to the sway of Roman law and procedure. It was Caesar, strong, glorious, with power that was proud and absolute, the rule of blood and iron, ruthless and not to be resisted.

And now in this Roman town appear two unknown travelers, without retinue or pomp. Behind them appears not even the threat of armies and ships. Yet they talk of "another king, one Jesus." It is not surprising that they met a reception of derision and contempt.

We understand this phrase today. It is the other King that has conquered. Caesar is a memory. The vital power of Jesus leaps the centuries and makes men live today. Judged even by the standards of the men of Thessalonica, Jesus is greater. He has controlled more wealth, subjected more peoples, made and changed more laws, influenced more human history, directed the course of empire more than all the Caesars who ever sat upon the throne. Judged by real influence, the significant things were happening not on the banks of the Tiber but in the hills of Galilee, not in the golden palace but in the manger of Bethlehem, not in Rome with its long history reaching back to the fabled wolf but in Jerusalem with its inspiring record of the Jehovah God. Not Caesar but another king, one Jesus held the future in his hands.

The Modern Caesar

I. But the alternative between Caesar and Jesus is modern also. We face a modern Caesar in what appears under the broad name, Materialism. Sometimes we know this Caesar as Mammon, sometimes as Militarism, always as the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life. It is all one, the denial of the spiritual as cause or end and the limiting of life's horizon to the things of time and sense. This Caesar's rule extends beyond anything the ancient Caesars dreamed of. Our pleasures, our knowledge, our business activities, our possessions and theories of the social structure all feel his sway. What a court he has! What multitudes pass by the churches to do his bidding! How insignificant beside his allurements seems the appeal of that other One who bids the hurrying multitudes to remember prayer, to live with love and faith and a spirit of service. When he speaks, we can hear again the old contemptuous cry, "We have no king but Caesar."

Yes, he is a real king, this modern Caesar. Like the emperors of old who tried to hush the discontent with glittering processions and the excitements of the arena, Mammon tries to satisfy our hungry, burdened hearts with temporal things, the dizzy speed of the automobile, the strong and sensuous appeal of the jazz, the promise of things and yet still more of things.

But there is another king, one Jesus. The issue today is becoming more and more clear between a concept of life that is frankly materialistic, that knows no immortality or future save that of influence, and the belief that man is a spirit who cannot live by bread alone. To say with Frances Willard, not that I have a soul but I am a soul and to repeat the prayer of Augustine, "Oh, God, we were made for thee and we are restless until we find thee." We Christians have made our choice. We have turned from the Caesar of modern materialism to another king, one Jesus. The solution of all our problems, personal, social, economic, we are persuaded lies not in more laws and wiser systems primarily but in a better manhood working in the spirit of Christ.

The Old Year

FOR all the joy and happiness
To us the past year given,
For all the love and blessedness,
For all good gifts from heaven;
For all the care and sadness, too,
And hearts by sorrow riven,
As well as for all gladness true—
Our highest thanks be given.

Life passes—passes like a dream
And yet we, looking back,
See many a golden, sunny gleam
Upon the old year's track;
And, looking forward, can we doubt
That there shall yet be gleams
Of sunshine o'er us, and about Us many radiant beams?

With restraints we may supply palliatives to our labor difficulties. With laws we may curb the power of ruthless capitalism. But the real trouble for all of us lies deeper. We have wanted the wrong things; we have lacked the high, controlling ideal of brotherhood; we have been selfish and wrong-minded. The remedy can only be found in a power to make us new, not in Caesar but in Jesus.

And is not this the alternative that we face in the great world question of war? How make a real peace in Europe? France answers that we must curb the power of Germany, keep her poor and down. Then France will feel safe. We can understand this. France is desperately afraid. Twice in the life time of Clemenceau has she seen the invader. The awful devastations are now before her eyes. Who can keep from the deepest sympathy and admiration for her grand old patriot who has toured our land to plead for his beloved France? How else can one meet force than with force, how else insure a peace than by going to the Rhine, possessing the iron of Lorraine and the coal of the Ruhr? How else?

Ah, in this speaks the old Caesar that we have been talking about, the materialism of force, the same power that filled Europe with futile combinations, armies, secret treaties, alliances in the old days. He promises great things, this Caesar, but he cannot deliver. Right now Germany is filled with a hatred for France, a deep, bitter hatred far beyond anything she ever knew before. Said a matron to Fred Smith, "In the last war we had to encourage our soldiers to fight. In the next we shall not have to. We will all fight, the soldiers, the women, the babies in the cradle." Can you make a peace when people feel like that?

But there is another king, one Jesus, and he has a word for nations and men in their bitterness. A Christian young man had inherited a farm and with it a long and bitter lawsuit with an old neighbor over a line fence. He went at once to him and explaining his new ownership asked what the long trouble was about. "I maintain," replied the old man pugnaciously, "that your fence is three feet over on my land." "Is that all?" said the other in relief. "We can easily fix that. Get your men tomorrow and move the fence over six feet." The old man gasped, and gazed at him in astonishment. Then he said: "Young fellow, we'll let that fence stay right where it is. I did not want the land. It was the principle of the thing."

Weapons of the Spirit

Who would dare suggest that nations like individuals come to peace by Jesus' way of concessions and allowances? But after the Caesar of force has made such a sorry wreck of affairs, is it not time even for nations to give another king a chance. Could not a commission of France and Germany meet with a frank recognition of common interests, prepared for mutual concessions and forgiveness? Would not such a force be worth more in dollars and cents than this senseless and increasing hatred? Germany and France need the gospel, more prayer meetings, more faith, more of Christ. Too long have they been trusting the Caesar whose armies use guns. Let them use the weapons of the spirit for a while. Says Fosdick, I would rather trust a Quaker with a gun than a thug without one. The world can better trust the nations full of arms, explosives, and every refinement of military equipment if love has come than nations that have scrapped their navies and still carry hate in their hearts. Oh for the rule of that other King, for Jesus enthroned, loved and followed.

II. Another Caesar whose modern sway is regal indeed is know as Tradition. Everywhere are the signs of his authority. Everywhere are customs established whose only defense is that it has always been done in that particular fashion. Child marriage in India, bound feet in China, class divisions, slaveries, inequalities, a host of things are all defended in the same way. It is our custom. If any reformer comes along who desires to tear up some ancient superstition, he speedily finds how faithful are the servants of Caesar. "Idealist," "Visionary," "Reformer," "Socialist," "Rattle Brain," "Heretic," these are only a few of the high explosives that the cohorts of King Tralition will cast at those who dare to work in the spirit of another King.

If you will glance back over church history from the day that Jesus met the Forces of King Tradition in the persons of the Pharisees to the present time, you will see that every instance in the long, terrible story of persecution has been done in the name of this Caesar. The martyrs who were imprisoned and killed or who have been only maligned as blasphemers and apostate have all been attacked for the same cause, they opposed the established order. It was not because they were wine-bibbers and publicans, men of unclean life, devourers of the poor, living in gross and open sin, not at all. This Caesar does not have to wait for that. When some one comes along who dares to question a creed, to rewrite scientific conclusions, to attempt to do with religion what every prophet has done in the far past, restate it in terms of his own day, then Caesar's word goes out. Crush him, he is a heretic, he is unsound.

But there is another King, one Jesus. And it is for us to get back to him in days when the hand of Tradition lies heavy upon us. Intolerance has lifted its hand. All who do not interpret the Scriptures as the reformers must be opposed and driven from our fellowship,—so reads a recent pronouncement. I warn you against this. There is no room for it when Jesus is King. When we are tempted thus to deal with our brethren who have a different view of creation and inspiration from our own, remember his word to the disciples. "Master," they had said, "we saw one casting out demons and we forbade him because he followed not us." But Jesus said, "Forbid him not; for there is no man who shall do a mighty work in my name and be able quickly to speak evil of me." Behold the marvellous tolerance of Jesus. How far we get away from him, now quickly we even leave him for the sway of traditions that have little to do with his spirit or his purpose. I wonder if Jesus would recognize himself and his will for loving, gentle living before the heavenly Father if he came among us in some of our days of theological debate. So much that we have chosen to make into issues that divide the denominations or now divide conservative and progressive minds could all be harmonized if we came near to Jesus himself.

Some of us are undoubtedly wrong in the way we formulate truth. Probably all of us are. If we follow precedent the radicals of today will be the conservatives of tomorrow. But the wrong of all wrongs will be where Tradition in creeds, in speculations, in theories of inspiration, atonement or anything else serves to keep Jesus Christ and the sway of his spirit out of our lives.

From these modern alternatives of materialism and a harsh traditionalism we must turn always to Christ himself. Like Antæus, the child of earth who kept his strength only as he touched the earth, we must stand on the rock of Christ. One day Hercules lifted Antæus from the earth and held him there suspended until he shriveled away. There are days when we too seem to have been removed from him and in our devotion to forms and creeds and statements to have lost the power that alone makes for brotherhood, for unity, and peace. John Oxenham was right in his Credo:

"Not what, but whom I do believe

That in my darkest hour of need
Hath comfort that no mortal creed
To mortal man may give.

Not what but whom,

For Christ is more than all the creeds
And his full life of gentle deeds
Shall all the creeds outlive.

Not what I do believe but whom,
Who walks beside me in the gloom.
Who shares the burden wearisome,
Who all the dim way doth illumine
And bids me look beyond the tomb
The larger life to live.

Not what I do believe but whom,
Not what but whom.

get the denomination to set its house in order by open declaration of its faith and the removal from its schools and boards of those who are troubling Israel. I do not consider that "ecclesiasticism, dominated by modernism, has forced the orthodox into an unholy and God-forbidden alliance with the heterodox." Were we silent in face of the present serious defection their statement would be true. I could not therefore sign a "Call" that casts such an aspersion upon the character of the host of godly contenders for the faith in our denomination.

I could not agree with their "Manifesto" granting its members the right to "follow their own pleasure as to maintaining other denominational affiliations." If we are already "forced" into such an alliance how dare our worthy brethren consent to a fellowship which God forbids. God plainly commands his churches to "put away" those guilty of certain sins; it also gives them authority to appoint "faithful men" to teach. Such authority necessarily includes the right and duty to remove from office unfaithful teachers. The same authority and duty belongs to any and every association or convention organized by the churches through their messengers. The Baptist Convention is composed of messengers from Baptist churches of a common faith; it logically follows that the convention knows and holds that common faith and must—or break faith with the churches and with itself—refuse to recognize messengers from churches not holding such beliefs, even though they wear the name Baptist. Our Northern Baptist Convention was organized to promulgate a God-given faith, and not to make a fetish of a name. I repeat, that as long as we contend, and seek to purge, we are not God-forbidden, but rather in a God-commanded alliance with the faithful in our denomination who would remove from our midst unfaithful teachers and officers.

Neither Timely Nor Wise

Further, I do not consider the movement timely, or under existing circumstances, wise. The fundamentalists, I grant, were poorly organized at Indianapolis, but their motives were sincere. They had adopted a "Confession of Faith" which contains the essentials of both Christian and Baptist belief; but in the interest of peace they presented a confession which they believed would commend itself to the brethren. The Christian Register (Unitarian) is right in saying that "the issue is not settled at all, but only smoothed out for a season." It tells the truth when it says, "The convention voted for the New Testament as the basis of Baptist belief. The phrasing is general and inclusive. It is, in fact, a compromise, even an evasion, for there are beliefs as rigid and unacceptable to liberal Baptists in the New Testament as in the rejected confession." The fundamentalist knew what the Register affirms, and with a greatly increased constituency organized for a more aggressive campaign. Its "Statement of Principles" and published aims, call, I believe, for the undivided support of all fundamentalists in our ranks. When the real issue has been fairly presented, understood and met, we may discuss whether a new alignment is needed. The issue may be postponed but it cannot be forever evaded. Until there is a denominational Waterloo, we need and have, I believe, the right to claim the undivided, earnest, patient support of every loyal Baptist.

My Reason for Not Joining the Baptist Union of America

By JOSHUA GRAVETT

[IN RESPONSE to the request of fellow Baptist ministers, I wish to present my reasons for refusing the invitation of certain brethren, my warm personal friends whose loyalty to our blessed Lord I admire, to sign their "Call" as a member of the organizing group of the Baptist Union of America.

I unfeignedly believe each and every doctrine set forth in their "Doctrinal Basis." I also heartily approve their declaration that "it is important that Baptists should rehearse and emphasize" the truths set forth in their clear scriptural "Statement." I further agree with them that "in view of their (Baptist) historical witness and of the flagrant ambiguities and omission of fundamental and vital truths in the Doctrinal Basis of the modernists" that such statements are important and necessary. Yet, though I am a firm believer in the premillennial return of our Lord, I do not believe it should be made a test of fellowship in such a union. Baptists have expressed themselves as believers in Christ's personal bodily return according to promises; but they have not labeled their belief; nor have they made their interpretation of that glorious event the basis of fellowship. Imminent instead of "premillennial" would be in harmony with Baptist belief. The adoption of the word imminent would I believe help remove the false impression that the fundamentalist is a premillennial movement.

In view of the sincere protest and the consistent efforts of the Baptist fundamentalists to acquaint our peoples with the things troubling and imperiling our denominational testimony and life, and to

God's Call to America

GOD calls our nation as he called Israel to be a light to all the world, to carry his salvation to the ends of the earth. If we fail to save the Sabbath we lose all. If our nation fails to honor it and teach it to all people, soon our boasted treasures and liberties will be torn away like Solomon's temple. And in the Babylon of ruin our enslaved posterity will weep over the folly of their God-defying, Sabbath-breaking forefathers.—NOAH W. COOPER.

Famine Conditions in Russia

By W. O. LEWIS, European Representative of American Baptist Foreign Mission Society

IN THE early part of September, Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke, Dr. E. Gill, and I went into Russia to learn of conditions and needs. We spent two weeks in Moscow, conferring with the leaders of the various relief organizations as well as our Baptist leaders from various parts of Russia. Then Dr. Gill and I visited one of the worst famine areas in southern Russia.

Causes of the Famine

I was curious to know just why this famine was so much worse than the others that have occurred from time to time in Russia. On an average, about one in twelve or fifteen years, there has been a crop failure in the Volga region as well as in the Ukraine. When the hot winds from the East sweep across these districts, everything withers. But in the past there was a reserve on hand. The peasants say in these regions that the eleventh commandment is: "Thou shalt not let the bottom of thy granary be seen." But the World War used up much of the surplus. Then followed one of the most cruel civil wars in history. Almost everything left was requisitioned. Bands of bandits roved the country, robbing and plundering and burning the villages. After the Bolsheviks gained the upper hand, the system of taxation they imposed discouraged production. On account of the falling value of the ruble and the abolition of private property, for a long time if all supplies were evenly distributed, perhaps the country might pull through the winter. But the present government cannot do this.

Horses and cattle were taken by the armies. Many domestic animals starved to death. Many skeletons of such may be seen by the roadside. Most of what was left was eaten during the winter. Russia is three and a quarter million short of horses. In Saratove province alone it would take 200,000 horses to bring the number up to what it was in 1914. In Zaparof province there were 320,646 hogs in 1916. Now there are 4,219—about 1-1/3 per cent of the former number. In Donetz province, 300,000 are in January last, there were 6,000 inhabitants. Last winter 1,500 starved to death. Only ten families have anything laid up for the winter. All the cats, and dogs of the village have long been eaten. The people have sold all they could sell to get a little food. They have sold their furniture, their sewing machines and their clothes. Being in a prairie region where wood is scarce, they tore the wood out of their houses and sold it on the market for firewood to get food and even then starved to death. Last winter the wooden grave markers in the cemeteries in this vicinity were all burned. One deacon in a Baptist church here told us that he had carried out on his own shoulders and buried 153 members of Baptist families who had died of starvation. Many of the people have too few clothes to be seen in public. Those who want to be clean have a hard time of it as they have no underclothes and of course a change is impossible. Many are trying to get away from these parts. But they have no money to buy railroad tickets. They ride the bumpers and the steps. Often there are as many outside as inside. The sight of the many orphaned children begging for bread at the stations will never fade from my memory. Shall we abandon those whom we saved from starvation last winter to starve this winter?

Quiet Service

By J. V. McCall

LOVE of display seems to be inherent in human nature. To most of us it is hard to understand service without some form of visible activity; hard to note progress without physical movement.

To the man speeding through the country in his high-powered automobile at fifty miles an hour, it is hard to form a proper estimate of the poor fellow by the roadside with no artificial means of locomotion.

To the one gliding through the air in his aeroplane at a hundred miles an hour, the fellow down in the open field seems to be "doing nothing and getting nowhere."

Standing by one of our mighty western waterfalls, a person is deafened by the noise and bewildered by the mighty whirl of activity all about him, and yet is made to exclaim, "What tremendous waste of power!"

Let us get hold of ourselves and remember that the mightiest forces in nature are the silent forces; and the greatest powers for good in the spiritual realm are the quiet influences, often overlooked that go out from the lives of good men and women, that make for righteousness, peace and good-will among men.

When Elijah fled from his enemies in Israel and took refuge in Mount Horeb he was instructed to go forth and await the coming of Jehovah. He failed to meet him in the wilder storm, the earthquake and the fire, but did recognize him in the "still small voice."

Gravitation holds sway in its controlling influence upon every atom of the material universe, though working so quietly as not to attract our attention.

Six thousand kitchens such as this are now in operation in the Volga Valley, where the American Relief Administration will supply a meal a day to 3,000,000 until next harvest; 800,000 children will be fed in the Ukraine and 50,000 in the Crimea. These children have on "American" clothes. Compare their round cheerful faces with those on the opposite page.

in many places business was dead. So when crops failed starvation came to the peasants as well as to those who lived in the cities.

Needs and Prospects

Naturally, one of the first questions we asked was, "What are the prospects for the coming year?"

All who know conditions are agreed that the need will be fully as great this winter as last and that without outside help, thousands, if not millions, will starve to death. In some respects conditions will be worse than last winter for the people have sold about all they had to sell to buy food. Just about the same amount of food was produced last summer as in 1921. The fall sowing of wheat this year is the smallest on record. If all could be collected in the regions where there is a surplus and if the entire population were put on a famine ration and serious need now. Early in October the Red Cross delivered 35,000 rations. This supplied less than 12 per cent of the need, leaving 265,000 without help. In one part of Saratove one of the American Relief Administration workers told me that 25 per cent of the population have enough for the winter; 25 per cent could live until Dec. 1; 50 per cent have nothing but watermelons. They have dried the rinds and are mixing them with grass and weeds and grinding them. From this they make a bread on which they can live for a month or two.

Personal Experiences

We spent several days in southern Ukraine in Zaparof province in and around Melitopol where the Baptists have been feeding all in need, regardless of affiliation, and where we expect to enlarge operations this winter. In the village of Novo Vasilievka, the first of

The Cross at Turnov

A message from the president of the Northern Baptist Convention

By FREDERICK E. TAYLOR

WHEREVER the traveler goes in Europe he finds the cross. Especially is this true in Czecho-Slovakia, the land of John Hus. Not only on the cathedrals but all along the highways there are crosses, many of them with the figure of the Christ and many of them covered with a modern canopy to protect the figure from the weather. In front of the peasants' cottages and in the fields where men and women are laboring it is a common sight to see a cross six or eight feet high.

As I looked out of the window of my hotel room at Turnov I saw a cross on the opposite side of the square. It was a little different from any I had seen before. On the corner of the square was a great church building. Leaning against this church building was a wooden cross at least fifteen to twenty feet high. It looked as though some one had just placed it there in a careless sort of a way. But I learned that it was permanent and had been there for years. Underneath the cross stood a group of soldiers talking. All around were people going about their affairs as usual in every way. The places of sin were easily found within a short distance. Men were lounging, drinking, carousing, all within speaking distance of that cross.

For a thousand years the church that had made much of crucifixes had dominated the religion of that country but had made little impression on the life of the people. Apparently the only Christ the people knew was a dead Christ. The church existed for itself; there were crosses on all the churches but the cross seldom got into the lives of the leaders of the church. The sight of that large cross made me realize again that the only hope of the world is the life which that cross represents. Not more crosses on church buildings, not more golden crosses to be worn as ornaments, but the spirit of the cross in human hearts.

The spirit of the cross is the only hope of a world that is struggling blindly along trying to find a way out of the chaos brought about by the war. In every department of life there is a desire for something or some one to save the situation. One of our labor papers about a year ago carried an editorial that covered the entire front page. It clearly stated that the only hope of the labor world was Jesus Christ and his spirit of unselfishness. The Wall Street Journal said some time ago:

"What America needs more than railway extension, and western irrigation, and a low tariff, and a bigger wheat crop, and a merchant marine, and a new navy, is a revival of piety, the kind father and mother used to have; piety that counted it good business to stop for daily family prayer before breakfast, right in the middle of the harvest; that quit field work a half hour early Wednesday night so as to get the chores done and go to prayer meeting. That's just what we need now to clean this country of filth, of graft and of greed, petty and big, of worship of fine houses and big lands, and high office and grand social functions."

Of course that means to come back to the spirit of the Christ in daily life. It means placing Christ at the center of the home and of business life.

The spirit of the cross is the only hope of world peace. Just so long as selfishness and hatred and desire for vengeance prevail there can be no world peace. The only person in the world who can drive out a spirit of hatred and selfishness is our Lord and Master. The spirit of the cross will have to be in the council chambers of the nations before a peace worthy of the name can be secured. We have been asking who's to blame for the war? Well, no one in Germany will admit that Germany is to blame. In fact one of the leaders in religious life said to an American, "Germany was not to blame for the war. France and England and America brought on the war." That from a cultured Christian man is an indication of the blindness of some very good people.

While we may never settle that question to every one's satisfaction there is a question which we in America must help answer. Who is to blame for the continuance of the war spirit? And another which America must face is, who will be most to blame if war continues?

The spirit of the cross must dominate national and international life or the world is doomed. If we seek to save ourselves as a nation we will lose ourselves. God does not have one set of ethics for America and a different set for Europe. Have we forgotten the story of Meroz—that group of people who sat quietly and did nothing when there was a great question being settled? Everywhere in Europe one hears this expression uttered by all sorts of people, "America is the hope of the world." But suppose she fails? Suppose she elects to look out for number one? Israel tried it. She refused to accept her responsibility to help the world of her day and she failed to save herself.

The spirit of the cross is the only hope of our denomination. Whenever our churches have unselfishly sought to advance the kingdom of God, whenever they have had the world-wide vision, whenever they have been permeated with a passion for the promotion of Christ's gospel, it has been because they have realized the truth of Jesus' words, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth by itself alone, but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit."

Four Years of Sacrifice

When the New World Movement apportionments were ready for assignment to the churches the state secretary of Indiana called all the pastors of the state to a meeting in the city of Indianapolis. At the close of supper, Dr. Dinsmore spoke of the New World Movement, told how the great gathering at Denver unanimously voted the program presented, and then told them of the great sum of money needed from Indiana. As the pastors in that meeting realized what that meant there was silence. Men were there who needed and sadly needed larger salaries. If they voted to go out for this great sum it meant another four years of sacrifice. Men were there who had new church edifices planned. Some were planning to build parsonages, others wanted Sunday-school buildings. If their churches gave the amount they were asked for, it meant the holding up of all such cherished plans. There was a period of heart-searching and a season of prayer. Then one man rose and said, "We have our plans all made. We were to begin our new church edifice very soon, we have worked and prayed for it, but," and then he choked with emotion, and tears came, "we must give it up and wait four years; this movement is of God and he must have the right of way. I will go back and lead my people to victory in this campaign if possible." We all began to realize we were at the cross as man after man rose and stated his willingness to wait for his own plans to be fulfilled until the denominational program was completed. Our whole state felt the impulse of that meeting and the work has never been so greatly blessed as it has during these days. Churches have done the impossible and never again will they go back to the old standards and ideals. More than this, God has honored the spirit of sacrifice on the part of the pastors and we have more buildings, better salaries for the ministers, and more souls have been won for Christ than ever before. The hope of our denomination is the spirit of sacrificial devotion to the whole task of world-wide evangelism.

The starving, the sick, the dying and the dead—they are all crowded together in the refugee homes for children where the capacity means simply the number that can fit in. In this Uralsk home an American Relief Administration official found two dead children, who had been lying among the living for a couple of days.

The spirit of the cross is the hope of the local church. On a recent Sunday early in the evening, I stood and listened to the reports of sixty-three teams of men who had been out all the afternoon calling on the church membership. They went out on a raw, cold afternoon to visit every home, to carry a note of cheer, to secure 500 tithers, to promote the spirit of interest in a year's program. Many had never done such a thing. They were fearful and afraid. Among the men were a number who had only confessed Christ recently—indeed two who were baptized that morning. There were bankers, lawyers, judges, physicians, dentists, clerks, salesmen—men of all sorts and from every walk of life.

After several hours of visitation they came back. What a change had been wrought in these men! They could hardly wait to tell of their experiences, and when they began it was hard to stop them.

They told of visiting the sick and the aged. They secured the names of scores of people willing to become tithers. They received new pledges for the New World Movement. They found a large number of people willing to become tithers. They all wanted to go out on just such a trip twice a year and voted unanimously that it was one of the greatest days in their spiritual experience. Whether they knew it or not, it was the spirit of the cross at work. When they unselfishly sought to be of service to their Lord they came back even as the seventy did with shouts of triumph.

Suppose our whole Northern Baptist Convention should go forth into the new year in this spirit. Suppose we should for a year at least forget all of our personal differences and devote ourselves, our talents and our money to God. What a year of gladness it would be! How the kingdom of God would advance! What a spirit of courage would come to our missionaries! What a spiritual uplift would come to all of our churches! Shall we not begin now to cultivate the spirit of the cross?

"When I survey the wondrous cross
On which the Prince of Glory died,
My richest gain I count but loss,
And pour contempt on all my pride.
Were all the realm of nature mine
That were a present far too small;
Love so amazing, so divine Demands my soul, my life, my all."

What Do Your Church Members Know About Missions?

BY STACY R. WARBURTON

THIS is a question for pastors. And for deacons, Sunday-school superintendents and other church leaders. Stop and size up the missionary situation in your church and you will discover that the weakness in its missionary efforts (and most churches are not as strong as they might be in their missionary program) is due to lack of information. Perhaps your men are not interested. They do not oppose your missionary plans, because you are pastor and they are loyal, but they are not giving or praying for missions as much as they might. Well, how much do they know of missions? Isn't it rather a vague subject to them? The heathen, the missionaries—these general terms they know, but ask them what a missionary does in India, or what modern missionary problems are, or where our Baptist missionaries work, and for the life of them they could not tell you. The teachers in your Sunday school—some of them are burning with missionary zeal, no doubt. But not all. You know well enough that some of them never give a missionary application to the lesson, and never mention missions at all unless it is emphasized in the "quarterly"—which is not very often. And yet these are the teachers of your church. And they are giving the boys and girls—the church of tomorrow—the set of their lives, leading them in forming the conception of Christianity and of the meaning of Christ's teachings which most of them will carry through their lives. The simple reason is that the teachers haven't themselves been taught. They don't know much about missions and mission work and missionaries. And more especially they have not learned the fundamental fact in the Christian gospel they are trying to teach, namely, that Christ died for the world, so that the prime objective of the church and of every Christian is to give the knowledge of Christ to the whole world—and that is missions.

What about your deacons? Noble men, every one of them. Earnest, faithful Christian men, men on whom you can rely in the spiritual work of the church, men ready to take an active part in your plans for evangelism. But how about your missionary plans? Can they help there? Some of them can. Some have had good education in missions and can assist you in planning the church's missionary activities. But a good many others just

A New Leaf

*HE came to my desk with a quivering lip,
The lesson was done—
"Dear teacher, I want a new leaf," he said,
"I have spoiled this one."*

*In place of the leaf so stained and blotted,
I gave him a new one, all unspotted,
And into his sad eyes smiled—
"Do better now, my child."*

*I went to the throne with a quivering soul,
The old year was gone—
"Dear Father, hast thou a new leaf for me?
I have spoiled this one."*

*He took the old leaf, stained and blotted,
And gave me a new one, all unspotted,
And into my sad heart smiled—
"Do better now, my child."*

sit back and listen when you begin to talk about this part of the church's work. And if you have a large, thoroughgoing plan for developing a missionary church, they may not stand in your way—they think too much of you to do that—but they will not give much help. They can't. In a general way your deacon is interested, and perhaps he will see the great value of what you are trying to do. But as for leading a mission study class, or serving as chairman of the church missionary committee, or directing the local missionary activities of the church, or serving intelligently as mission treasurer—well, he simply does not know enough about the subject. Yet the deacons are the spiritual leaders of the church, the pastor's advisors and helpers.

The women are pretty well informed, and many of them can be depended on to help in a practical way. But a good many even of the women, especially the younger women, cannot put their abilities to full use in the church's missionary program, and some have no interest in doing so. They are not informed on missions.

In your church the situation may be better—let us hope it is a good deal better. But if yours is an average church—and most of our churches are average ones—you will recognize this description as being more than half true.

What Is Wrong?

Clearly something is wrong. If many of your members, or any of them, are not deeply interested in the world program of the church, something is wrong. And that something is a very simple thing: lack of knowledge. That is not the whole trouble, of course. There are church members, for example, who know the life and teachings of Jesus very well, who are cold and indifferent in their personal religious life. So with missions. Knowledge is not the whole thing. But a Christian may be very religious and very narrow. The fact is, you can't have a missionary church without missionary information. And the only way to have your whole church missionary is to have a program of information and education that will reach every member, old and young, men and women, and that will be a continuous, all-the-year-round program. This is a simple remedy—too simple, perhaps you say. But think it over and you will agree that your church will never be thoroughly missionary—and our denominational missionary program will never be a full success—without just this regular, thoroughgoing program of missionary information.

Here is the twofold program of information that is absolutely essential to missionary success: First, a continuous program of missionary information; second, a church-wide program of missionary information. No pastor can make his church thoroughly and permanently missionary unless he sets this twofold informational program in the foreground as an integral part of his plans for his church; and as a denomination we shall not take care of our missionary work at home and abroad, raise the funds for it and enlist the workers for it, unless we incorporate in our denominational program—our promotional program—this thoroughgoing plan of missionary information in every local church.

A program of missionary information that is to make your church—and all our churches—missionary must be an all-the-year-round program. It must be continuous. The trouble with the missionary

THANKSGIVING AND CONFESSION

Scripture readings—Psalm 40; Matt. 17:21; 2 Cor. 4.

Let us give thanks—For another year of the infinite patience and mercy of God. For every victory in our individual and national life of the spirit of Christ.

For the sense of failure revealing the greatness of our task; for the breakdown of worldly policies and the emptiness of earthly success, revealing our need of Christ and his sufficiency.

For every adventure of faith through he overcoming of fear and doubt; and God's response to it.

Let us confess—Our failure in past resolves; our lack of obedience; our denial of the spirit of fellowship; our feeble grasp of the range and glory of Christ's kingdom on earth; the closed mind and the hard heart and the censorious temper.

And let us pray—For the spirit of utter sincerity; the open mind to truth from whatever quarter; the ready heart to carry burdens in fellowship with Christ; the spirit of practical service and sacrificial sympathy; the willingness to learn from those to whom by temperament or conviction we are opposed.

That being stripped of pride and searched in light before the cross, we may claim no standing but in his mercy and grace.

THE CHURCH UNIVERSAL—THE "ONE BODY" OF WHICH CHRIST IS THE HEAD

Scripture readings—Isaiah 42:1-12; Luke 22:17-30; 1 Cor. 13; Eph. 4:1-16.

Let us give thanks—For all increase in charity, through a new sense of what lies behind our differences.

For an awakening social conscience throughout the church, and a braver claim to spiritual leadership.

For a clearer vision of the things in which we can work together for the dominion of Christ.

For all criticism through which we have come to see and confess our failures.

Let us confess—Our frequent blindness to spiritual issues in temporal things; our resentment of rebuke; our bigotry and prejudice; our want of faith in new enterprises; our foolish fears for the truth; our failure to explore and employ the powers which are ours in Christ Jesus; our want of the marks of the cross, reflecting the spirit of the Lord.

And let us pray—For a new and burning conviction of the world's need of Christ and of his glorious appearing; for a love that will win its way through all hindrances into the hearts of men; for a new fearlessness and hope; for a mes-

It is again the privilege of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America to issue this call to all Christians to begin the new year with a week of thanksgiving and prayer.

There are many things for which the church may be grateful as we cross the threshold of another year. Last year witnessed the largest numerical gathering of the church in this country. Religious education is receiving increased attention, and in spite of financial burdens, the churches are raising great sums of money for missionary and philanthropic work. In spite of social and political anxieties, a Christian mind cannot fail to notice signs which refresh our weariness and quicken our vigilance. The disillusioned world, baffled by wounds beyond its own power to heal, is turning with a more open mind to the message of Jesus Christ. The craving for peace is widespread; but the difficulty of securing it by the methods of the past is driving the nations back on the spiritual way of trust and good-will, which is the method of our Lord.

Combined with this there is a wistful longing for a recovery of personal religion. Both in the church and in the world there is significant evidence of a deep sense of the need of God stirring at the heart. The religious wistfulness of many outside the churches betrays a yearning which can only be satisfied by the ancient and abiding forces of the gospel of Christ.

How shall we face this call for light from a despairing world? Two things it demands of us. It demands a new perseverance in exploring the way of unity and capturing its spirit by a new loyalty to Christ. And it demands a new perseverance in prayer, both as a means of personal union with God and as a task for the kingdom. For true prayer is both a means of grace and a task of service, and one depends on the other. Only as we go out with Christ, taking on us with him the burden of a world, marred through sin, can we find him for our own personal fellowship. Only as we revive our allegiance to him can we become his helpers to bring in his kingdom through the mighty ministry of intercession.

sage without confusion and a heart without despair.

That the desire for unity among the branches of the one church of Christ may be strengthened; that movements toward fuller unity may be guided by the Holy Spirit in all things; that a new confidence in the evangel of Jesus Christ may pervade the whole fellowship of faith.

NATIONS AND THEIR RULERS

Scripture readings—Psalm 33; Psalm 72; Zech. 2:1-5; Eph. 2:13-22.

Let us thank God—For the deepening desire of peace; for the settlement of questions in the Far East which have long threatened the future; for efforts toward the restoration of Europe; for a closer international unity; the willingness to forget the past and to try new paths; for the quickened sense of responsibility among rulers in the maintenance of world peace.

Let us confess—The defects of our patriotism; our false ideas of national greatness; our want of sympathy with the difficulties of other nations; the cruelty and inhumanity which have mingled with progress; our slow emancipation from the spirit of national selfishness; our failure to abolish war.

And let us pray—For all rulers, that they may be fitted for spiritual leadership; have a clear eye for moral issues in political questions, and courage, at all costs, to follow the light.

For all nations, that the strong may increasingly respect the right of the weak.

That the rising spirit of nationality throughout the world may be safely guided; that a vision of God as holy may be granted to cleanse from vice and selfishness, and a vision of God as Love to deliver from disdain or strife; that all nations may come to see their mutual dependence in the family of mankind; that the kingdoms of the world may soon become the kingdom of God and of his Son, Jesus Christ.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

Scripture readings—Isaiah 35; Acts 4:5-12; Rom. 10:11-21.

Let us give thanks—For the courage and loyalty of mission staffs amid tremendous difficulties.

For the rallying of the church to meet the strain.

For the power of Christian ideas in the outlook of native governments; and the witness of the Spirit in countless hearts that had not known Jesus Christ.

Let us pray—For true conceptions of the kingdom of Christ, and for his reign in the whole world.

For unity on the mission fields, and deliverance from intolerance and narrowness, from carelessness and disloyalty.

For all missionaries, that grace may be given in the application of Christianity to the practical guidance of life among their converts.

That the sway of Islam may be broken; that national movements may become a new Christian opportunity; that Christian men may find an increasing place in native governments.

For the deepening unity of all nations in the fellowship of missionary service.

FAMILIES, SCHOOLS, COLLEGES AND THE YOUNG

Scripture readings—Matt. 19:13-22; Prov. 3:1-17; Psalm 119:9-16; 33:40.

Let us thank God—For the increasing demand for Christian education.

For the fresh interest awakening in many quarters in the teaching of the Bible.

For the growth of movements for child welfare, and the training of the young; for all Christian movements in our schools and colleges, and all they have accomplished.

Intensive Every-Member-Attendance Campaign of Twenty-Third Avenue Baptist Church, Oakland, California

By JOHN NEWTON GARST

"ALL the good things we have to-day we owe directly or indirectly to the church. The big men and women of the United States are church members. It is the exception to find a man or a woman of power, intelligence, and influence who is not also a church member. The people who have made the United States and who are making it today are church members. The church is not dead. It is the most permanent of all institutions, and the greatest asset of any community," says Roger W. Babson, the celebrated statistician.

"I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord," said David.

If what Roger Babson says about the church as the exponent of the Christian religion is true, all Christians—and all right thinking non-Christians as well—should gladly support the church with their interest, prayers, time, money, and presence. If they do not, is it not an indication that they fail to appreciate the real significance, the impregnableegis, and the unparalleled beneficence of the church? Even Christians and church members must be given an adequate understanding of these things if they are to be induced to support the church more loyally, conscientiously, and hilariously. That is what we attempted to do in this intensive every member attendance campaign through which we of Twenty-third Avenue Church have recently passed. We were of the humble opinion that we were doing fairly well along the line, but when I went into this matter of membership attendance—as I do systematically into all the phases of the work—I discovered to my dismay and to the consternation of the officers, that only about one-third of the membership attended the morning and about one-sixth the evening hours of worship.

The Purpose

In view of this prevailing condition I raised the condition, "Would it not be worth while to do our best this year to get every resident member to attend the meetings of the church and of its auxiliaries?" The church agreed and at its annual meeting last May adopted, for the ensuing year, the slogan, "Every member in attendance," with Psalms 122:1 as the text. Since the news of the campaign has spread it appears that multitudes of others think it something worth while, if we are to judge from the numerous inquiries and expressions of commendation coming from all over the country, from ministers, chief of police, business men, college and university presidents, city commissioner and so on.

The Plans

The effort was to be put forth throughout the whole year of twelve months, but an intensive effort was planned to give the movement momentum. Since the summer vacation period was at hand the months of October and November were chosen for the intensive effort. Careful organization and the beginning of the educational work preceded these two months.

At a regular meeting of the San Francisco Bay Baptist Ministers' Conference held Monday, Dec. 4, 1922, Rev. John Newton Garst, Pastor of Twenty-third Avenue Church, Oakland, Cal., read a paper on "Intensive Every Member Attendance Campaign." It was so favorably received that the conference voted unanimously to request Dr. Garst to prepare and send for publication in THE BAPTIST a revised and condensed copy of the paper. The methods and results of his campaign ought to be a spur and inspiration to all our churches.

The plans of the organization were as follows: We formed a committee of twenty, pastor, deacons, deaconesses and seven other key persons. These seven key persons, representing the church and all its auxiliaries, were to plan, advertise and execute all the programs of the church and its auxiliaries during October and November. These key persons were also to head up similar organizations for the auxiliaries. For instance, one of these seven was the Sunday-school superintendent, who not only helped with the whole plan but also organized the Sunday school to do its full part. Eight needed new teachers were secured, motion and stereopticon pictures were planned for fifteen minutes at 9:45 each of the eight Sunday mornings, special letters announcing the campaign were sent to all pupils, and on Sunday before the commencement of the campaign the teachers and officers brought lunch to church and spent the afternoon in visiting the pupils. Likewise each auxiliary was organized by these key men and women. The deacons and deaconesses were put in charge of groups of church members, all of which they were to get to attend by calling in September to boost the campaign, and during October and November, by calling again, and again, writing, phoning, sending others, and going in autos after them till, according to carefully kept records all had been brought out to the meetings. All this organization was done in committee, board and public meetings held at the church and at the pastor's home. Nine group meetings, including over 200 people, were held in the pastor's home. These were Sunday-school cabinet, deacons, deaconesses and their companions, trustees and their wives, Woman's Union, choir, King's Daughters, Senior B. Y. P. U., Intermediate and Junior B. Y. P. U., and a miscellaneous group.

The plans of education were as follows: We began by announcing, talking of and

If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him? Matthew 7:11.

Let us stir ourselves to trust our heavenly Father by all the force of this "much more"!—MARK GUY PEARSE.

praying for the campaign on every occasion. While on my vacation at Long Beach I wrote to each member of the church, and in September I sent a pastoral campaign letter to each member. Permanent and temporary signs were used on the outside of the building. One of these was a 12x2 footboard sign. We used special newspaper campaign stories and advertisements, church bulletins and leaflets, some of the subjects being: Roosevelt's reasons for coming to church; I-Hope-2-C-U-there next Sunday; Reasons for not going to church; Don'ts for stay-at-homes; An editor's reason for going to church; Go to church and be less critical, more charitable, healthier and happier in body and mind; Why I go on rainy Sundays; A rich man's reason for going; A baseball fan's reason for going to church; The social value of young women's going to church; The commercial value of young men's going to church; How far can you swim?; Doubling the preacher's power; What does my minister do?; What is my spiritual temperature?; Gunman's ten commandments for parishioners; Who is Smith that he shouldn't go to church?; Dangerous delays for men; I have married a wife and therefore I cannot come; The church; Wanted—A man. Each of these messages was prepared for a specific week of the campaign, and was mailed to all the members before the Sunday, or given out to all present at the Sunday services and thereafter mailed to the members who were absent. The eight weeks of the intensive effort were called and observed as Home-coming Day, Sunday School Day, Boys and Girls Day, B. Y. P. U. Day, Church Day, Men's Day, Woman's Day, Family Day. During the effort over 2000 campaign communications were mailed to the members. Campaign sermon subjects were as follows: Outdoing Ourselves, Disarm!, Snakes!, Putting on Christ, Awake!, Selling Christianity, Why go to Church?, The Foundation of the Church, Christ's Love for the Church, What the Church has Contributed, The Conquering Power of the Church, Empty Pews? The Mission of the Church, Let the Children Come unto Me, Remember now thy Creator, Our need of Christian Young People, Wanted—A MAN! She Hath Done What She Could, The Family and the Christian Religion.

The Programs

Each Wednesday evening the program partook of the nature of the subject for the week and following Sunday and was in charge of one of the key persons who was also in charge of the following Sunday night program, and directed the decorations for all the meetings of the week. To illustrate: Mr. F. M. Davidson, Sunday-school superintendent and member of the general committee, planned the program for Sunday-school week, directed the decorations, and presided at the Wednesday evening Sunday-school prayer meeting, when Judge E. C. Robinson of the Juvenile court addressed a good house of young and old. There was special music and a big boost was given the Sunday-school day for the following Sunday. Promptly at 9:45 on that Sunday morning

Religious Education

Make Believe

By ROBERT L. VANDEMAN

Our skill in teaching—our skill in teaching any thing—is measured by our wisdom in giving opportunity for the expression of native bents. For example, it is as native as breathing for little people to play that they are other people. We are wise if we take the hint, obey the opportunity, encourage the tendency, utilize it for the ends of religious education. For a child, however informally, to play that he is Samuel in the tabernacle, or David protecting his sheep against a lion or a bear, or Jesus seeking knowledge in the temple is for that child to be enriched.

In child dramas we must avoid too much elaboration. The more spontaneous the better. They tell us that they have had good results first gathering the group together with the understanding that we are going to "give a Bible play;" second, reading and talking the story all over; third, letting the children themselves decide who had better be who, and how to represent and interpret the characters. In the setting and costumes and all the joy of getting ready, too, let the children do it. Better a perfectly inadequate bow and arrows that the boy has made than ten-dollar ones you buy. Who cares what the audience sees or thinks, if there is an audience at all? But we care greatly that the children see with the eyes of participant faith and think with their responsive minds. Better the conscious shame of being a well clad priest or a Levite passing by on the other side or sympathy that goes with being a poor Samaritan wayfarer, than all public clat. There's deep nature philosophy in that and wisdom for the religious leaders of outh.

Another thing they tell us, they who have tried different ways, is that it is possible to get the atmosphere of worship in the presentation of a religious play. A certain spiritual team play can be realized in your little group. If to yourself it is religion you are dealing with, so it will be to them. And there can be a spiritual reality behind the outward form of your little group make-believe. It will be truth you are all trying to present, living truth. Truth acted, lived, is religious.

Those who wish to read the experiences of others and learn the principles to follow in religious dramatization would do well to secure access to a few books. Among the best are: Elizabeth Miller, Dramatization of Bible Stories, $1.25; Russell's, "Dramatized Bible Stories for Young People," $1.00; Meredith, "Paganry and Dramatics in Religious Education," $1.25, larger, and contains references to other books; C. D. McKay, How to Produce Children's Play, a thorough book and embodying much valuable experience; H. P. Willcox, "Missionary Study Through Educational Dramatics" and "Dramatization of Missionary Material," two fine little books by Rita Benton, "Shorter Bible Plays," each requiring from five to twenty-five minutes and "Bible Plays" for later elementary and high school people. Any bookseller can order these. If one is getting but one, for immediate use, perhaps one of the last two should be first. For a general understanding one or more of the first four.

International Sunday School Lesson for January 14

JESUS TEACHING HUMILITY

Lesson: Luke 14. Golden Text: 1 Peter 5:5.

Introductory

The time is 29 A. D. and the place is Perea, near Bethabara. Between the printed text of last week's lesson and today's Jesus has given the parable of the grain of mustard seed and the lamentation over Jerusalem. In this very house of one of the rulers of the Pharisees, where he has been asked to eat bread, he has just healed a man of the dropsy, the day being the Sabbath.

The Lesson

"And he spake a parable unto these that were bidden when he marked how they chose out the chief seat." It was the general custom as the guests assembled at a feast for them at once to take their places on the divan that lined three sides of the apartment and from which they ate their meal. There was no hesitancy manifested about trying to get the best place, that to the left of the host being the chief seat. Jesus marked this and it led to his exhortation to the practice of humility: "Sit not down in the chief place; lest haply a more honorable man than thou be bidden, and he that bade thee and him shall say to thee, Give this man place. . . . Sit in the lowest place that when he that bid thee cometh, he may say to thee, Friend, go up higher; then shalt thou have glory in the presence of all that sit at meat with thee. For every one that exalteth himself shall be humbled; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." The really great man never pushes himself forward. His worth is usually recognized and he is given his rightful place. Having given his lesson to the guests, Jesus turns to the ruler who is his host and says, "When thou makest a dinner, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, nor thy kinsmen, nor rich neighbors; lest [note the reason] they also bid thee again, and a recompense be made thee." What a blow to the hospitality of today—so much for so much. An invitation to a dinner demands a dinner given in return and so on. "But"—how significant are these connectives of Jesus—"when thou makest a feast, bid the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind and thou shalt be blessed because they have not wherewith to recompense thee." It was not uncommon for rich men of the Orient to give dinners for the poor of the city, but they sat outside on the grass, not at the rich man's table.

Leading Thoughts

1. "If ye love them that love you, what reward have ye?" 2. "Be ye clothed with humility." 3. "Doing nothing for others is the undoing of one's self."—Horace Mann. 4. We shall never be very big so long as we can see only advantage for ourselves.

The Baptist Test

It has long been a question whether the East, Middle West or the Pacific Coast had attained the highest place in Sunday-school work.

The question has also been raised regarding the work of our largest schools. Has the quality of their work exceeded that of other schools as has their numbers?

What is the rating in church work of the large cities of the country?

"The Bigger and Better Baptist Sunday School Advance" throws some interesting sidelights upon these questions. Sixteen hundred Baptist schools have enrolled and a study of the accompanying statistics will bring enlightenment. Later we will give the names of the large schools which are participating in this contest. The plans are so elastic that any school may carry out its own progressive program with few additions and still enter this Baptist fellowship. Enrolments at your state headquarters close on Jan. 1.

In order to make it a fair contest states having less than 150 Baptist churches are in class three; states with 150 to 400 churches are in class two and states with 400 or more are in class one.

Class three: 1. Montana; 2. S. California; 3. Idaho; 4. Oregon; 5. Rhode Island; 6. Arizona; 7. N. California; 8. S. Dakota; 9. Vermont; 10. Wyoming; 11. New Hampshire; 12. Colorado; 13. N. Dakota; 14. Delaware.

Class two: 1. New Jersey; 2. Nebraska; 3. Iowa; 4. Wisconsin; 5. Minnesota; 6. Michigan; 7. Washington; 8. Connecticut; 9. Massachusetts.

Class one: 1. Illinois; 2. Kansas; 3. Indiana; 4. Maine; 5. Pennsylvania; 6. New York; 7. West Virginia; 8. Ohio.

Eight highest cities: Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Chicago, Philadelphia, Greater New York, Minneapolis and St. Paul, Indianapolis.

WHY DO YOU THINK THE BIBLE IS THE WORD OF GOD?

2 Tim. 3:14-17

By CHARLES RUFUS OSBURN

Paul was making a passionate plea to his beloved friend Timothy to improve every opportunity to proclaim the gospel as a true follower of Jesus Christ. He entreats him to be diligent in presenting Jesus as the only hope of man's salvation. Paul, knowing some of the frailties of youth and the shy manner in which Timothy might conduct himself among a strange people, attempts to bolster up his spiritual life. He fears that young Timothy, like many since his day, might wonder whether the Scriptures, which he had been taught as a child were really the words of God—were or were not God's messages to men, even though various individuals were credited with being their authors.

It is interesting to note that Paul adopts the method and spirit of Jesus in giving him the assurance that the Scriptures come from God. He does not make an appeal for Timothy to accept them on the basis of what any one has said but upon what Timothy himself has found in his own experience the Scriptures to be. "By their fruits ye shall know them," declared Jesus in setting forth the determining principle of reality in any sphere. Timothy was to know that the Scriptures came from God because through them and his faith in Christ God had convicted him of sin and had helped him to live a righteous life.

If we go a little farther today in our thinking as young people we will find that herein lies the suggestion for our conviction that this beloved book, the Bible, which has been placed into our hands by some loving friend or parent is in its ultimate authority and in the nature of the inspiration which it awakens within our lives, the Word of God. We have not only found in it, from our own study, a record of God's plan of salvation, but we have found God's will and love so wonderfully expressed that we have met God himself in it. The emperor Napoleon who had time and thought for only the greatest men and the greatest books once said: "The Bible is no mere book but a living creature, with a vigor, a power which conquers all that oppose it. My soul, charmed with its beauty ceases to be its own; God possesses it entirely, directing its thoughts and its faculties."

When we speak of the Bible as the word of God these days we do not mean that God wrote it in heaven and miraculously delivered the manuscript, from which other copies were made, to some prophet. We do not mean that God even dictated it word for word to certain men and that in our common versions we have the very words God spoke. We do believe that God desired to reveal his will to his earthly children and that the men whom he chose were living so much in accord with his Holy Spirit and the needs of men that they became not only a reliable but an infallible channel for the progressive expression of his will.

God invites us to make the Bible an object of careful study. He has no doubt but what we will find our proper relationship with him if we will but submit ourselves to his guiding Spirit. He believes that out of our own experience we will come to say as did one of old, "Thy word have I hid in my heart that I might not sin against thee"; "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path."

Service for the Reception of Members to the B. Y. P. U.

(The president summons the new members to the front.)

President: It is our privilege tonight to welcome to our society some new members. That they and we may understand that membership means something more than just the enrolment of names, will the society please repeat the B. Y. P. U. motto?

Society: "Saved to serve."

President: In the light of this sentiment, will the new members entering the active membership list of the society repeat together the pledge of the B. Y. P. U.?

New active members: (Read or repeat in concert.) "Relying upon divine help, I (we) hereby promise to strive to be true to Christ in all things and at all times; to seek the New Testament standard of Christian experience and life; to attend every meeting of the union, unless hindered by reasons approved by a good conscience, and to take some part in the services, aside from singing, if it is possible to do so with sincerity and truth."

President: We have also an associate membership made up of those, who while not members of a Baptist church, are of good moral character and desirous of helping us in any way they can. Do you as (an) associate member(s) enter upon your relationship with this society wishing to cooperate in the activities and purposes of the society?

New associate members: "We do."

President: I am glad then, in behalf of this union of Baptist Young People to welcome you as members and to extend you each one, the hand of Christian greeting (shakes hands with each new member).

Prayer—for new members.

Sing: "Blest be the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love."—Written for the B. Y. P. U. of First Church, Fargo, N. D.

The Stewardship Library

A new library of eighteen volumes on stewardship has been added to the revised model missionary libraries prepared by the department of missionary education. This library has been selected after counsel with leaders in our own and other denominations and after careful study of the literature materials already in print. We commend this library to the consideration of pastors, teachers, churches, Sunday schools, reading and study groups. The library is classified and consists of the following titles:

Study Books

- "You and Yours"—Morrill, cloth, $1; paper 60 cents.
 "The Spirit of Service"—Lee, 35 cents.
 "The New Christian"—Cushman, 50 cents.
 "Stewardship and Missions"—Cook, 50 cents.
 "Money the Acid Test"—McConaughy, cloth 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Story Books

- "The Victory of Mary (Christopher)"—Calkins, 50 cents.
 "The Centenary at Old First"—Calkins, $1.75.
 "Ganga Dass"—Calkins, 35 cents.

Stewardship Principles

- "A Man and His Money"—Calkins, $1.
 "Stewardship Starting Points"—Calkins, 35 cents.
 "Stewardship and Life"—Agar, 75 cents.
 "The Withered Fig Tree"—Poteat, $1.
 "Enduring Investments"—Babson, $1.50.
 "The Larger Stewardship"—$1.
 "The Message of Stewardship"—Cushman, $1.

"Life as a Stewardship"—Morrill, 25 cents.

Stewardship Experiences

- "Adventures in Stewardship"—Cushman and Bellinger, 50 cents.

*The starred books are the two books authorized and recommended as textbooks for stewardship study classes.

Orders for above books may be sent to American Baptist Publication Society, 125 North Wabash Ave., Chicago, or any branch house.

In Re Baptist World Alliance, Stockholm and Proposed Conferences Thereafter

In view of the communications which have come up from various European countries, the Baptist Young People's Union of America has voted to send its general secretary, James Asa White, to the meeting of the Alliance next July for the purpose of conferring with other young people's representatives on the matter of a world organization for Baptist young people.

For some time correspondence has been carried on looking forward to the arrangement of conferences on Sunday-school and young people's work in the various European countries following the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance, the young people's worker to be furnished by the Baptist Young People's Union of America and the Sunday-school worker by one of the Sunday-school boards in the United States.

It has been suggested that in addition to the two representatives mentioned above, that a woman's worker be added and also a pastor with the ability to give a course in Bible study and church organization and administration. This team of four would be in position to give to the various groups a well-rounded conception of a church program.

It has been further suggested that should it be found advisable to hold such proposed conferences after communication with Doctors Lewis and Rushbrooke, Baptist representatives in Europe, that this team of four should work under the direction of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society.

The board of managers of the Baptist Young People's Union of America is desirous of rendering the largest possible service in the best possible way. This statement is prepared for the purpose of inviting suggestions.

Very cordially yours,
 JAMES ASA WHITE,
 General Secretary.

A world record in attendance upon a Bible class is claimed by the men's Bible class of the First Baptist Church, Kansas City, following the presence of 3,782 men upon the session of that class Sunday, Nov. 26, at the Ivanhoe Masonic Temple. The record was made in a contest with the Calvary Baptist Church, Washington, to which President Harding belongs. N. W. Dible is president of the class and Dr. D. J. Evans, pastor, is the teacher.

COPLEY SQUARE, BOSTON

The Chimney Corner

The 1922 Wise Men

AS FAR as doing Christmas shopping early went, it somehow never occurred to Bill that he had to do any shopping at all until the twenty-fourth of December had dawned, when at breakfast he would suddenly notice that he had a mother and a father, not to mention a sister or two, and the irresistible twins, sitting around placidly eating oatmeal.

"Good gracious!" Bill would sigh, "whatever will I give them all at this late date? I'll put in the day shopping. . ."

Judging by what happened that morning, one would suppose that the high schools of America were full of boys who had also just remembered having relatives and friends. Bill met his entire Sunday-school class, one by one, and compared notes about what a jam there was down town and how impossible it was to find presents for sisters and mothers and aunts and cousins. "But the kids are as easy as pie to get things for," Tom said. "I'm off to the toy department right now; come along."

Four of them went up in the crowded elevator to the fifth floor, where a perspiring Santa Claus glared at them in a rather bored fashion.

"Old Nick seems about fed up with this Christmas game," they chuckled as they headed for the doll corner.

You may have noticed yourself, that there is a startling family likeness between all dolls, yet the minute you come to buying one of them, it's invariably the $9.98 one that you covet, especially when there's only 49 cents remaining in your pocket, after getting that sled for Arthur and the xylophone for Stephen and the toy bureau for Mary. Bill fairly groaned, but was forced to be content with the 49-cent sawdust body with the crockery head, in spite of a decided squint leftwards in the glassy blue eyes. Collecting all his purchases he carried them over to the transfer desk, where extra bundle clerks were busy wrapping packages bought too late on Christmas Eve to be delivered.

A pathetic little clerk began tying Bill's things. So dead-tired was she that everything she attempted fell to sixes and sevens; the string invariably snapped in half whenever she had it all nicely twined around the many angles of Bill's toy bureau.

"Look here, Arabella," Tom twitted her, "a little less pep in tying that knot and the string wouldn't break!"

"My name's not Arabella," she snapped, "it's Annunziata."

"Nuncy—what?" cried Tom in high glee.

"An—nun—zi—a—ta," she answered, with frigid dignity, too tired to see what a mouthful of a name it was for such a wee little bit of a bundle clerk.

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

Then Bill, having a more sympathetic nature than the merry Tom, and seeing that his 49-cent doll was about to be wrapped, honored her with her full name as he said, warningly: "Now, see here, Miss Italian Annunziata, don't you go getting frisky with that expensive doll-baby of mine, for I'd have you know I've squandered my last penny on that bit of sawdust and china, and will have to tote her home on my own two feet, having not a carfare to my name!"

"A—ah!" breathed Annunziata softly to the clerk beside her, while a really beautiful smile spread over her tired face. "don't I know how that feels though? To spend your last cent on a little kid, even though you gotta tramp it home on foot! Of course I couldn't afford no such expensive 49-cent doll, but say, I gotta cute little 19-cent baby for Constantina, and I been sitting up nights for going on two weeks now rigging that doll out in the gladdest rags you ever seen on land or sea; clothes that buttons and unbuttons, and lace trimmings—say, it's a credit to me even if I do say it, as shouldn't! Only land sakes, poor Constantina's going to cry her eyes out, for what that poor kid really wants is one of them expensive $2.49 bureaus like what this here young fellow has just got. But I says to her 'Constantina,' says I, 'I ain't no Miss Vanderbilt to go buying you white bureaus all painted up with blue forgessamenots—not now, with me being your popper and your mommer and paying the rent and buying the food and clothes and every thing on my payroll!' But that little kid, she's gotta hunch the bureau's coming anyhow, and no 19-cent doll ain't going to quiet her. Land sakes, I hate to think of tomorrow morning with her crying all over the place. As for Beppo—he's me little lame brudder—say, he's gotta list a mile long of all the things he says I must fetch him home from my store. Ain't he cute, though? He think as how I own all this here big store, and all I gotta do is wrap me up a thing and fetch it home! I don't mind telling you but many's the night I've just ached to borrow a toy for him till morning. No body'd miss it from stock either. Poor kid he probably can't never walk again; jus sits there all day, he does, in his little chair, holding a little broke en-jine bought at a bargain onct. It beats all how he loves that en-jine. He wants as how Santa Claus should fetch him a long train of cars to hitch behind that en-jine. Sakes! Wish I could afford 'em. . . . Say, don't it beat all how tired you get at Christmas, though?"

It must be admitted that Annunziata could talk faster while she worked than anyone those high school boys had ever seen, and while she finished Bill's purchases he turned to the other boys: "Look here, fellows," he said, "what about our playing Santa Claus to that little Bepi kid? Perhaps we shouldn't have listened in on that girl's talk, but she's nothin' but a child herself, with a whole family to support, so I move that we all chip in and get that train of cars for Beppo."

"I'm for it," Tom agreed, heartily.

"Same here," said Dick, "only I insist on a bureau with blue forgessamenots for the young Constantina, too."

Then Harry made the crowning suggestion: "Why not 'phone Miss Johnse and have our whole class rig up a regular little Christmas tree with tinsel and candles and things? A woman would know lots of things we'd never think of in hundred years."

"Right you are!" they all agreed, and telephoned their teacher, Miss Johnson, who was the sort to do anything at short notice, even on Christmas Eve. It took some maneuvering on her part to discover Annunziata's home address, but at ten o'clock that night Miss Johnson's entire Sunday-school class went tiptoeing along the dark hallway of a certain shabby tenement until they reached a certain door. Annunziata had just returned from her store, so her hat was still on as she answered their knock.

"Sakes alive!" she gasped, as she instantly remembered four of their faces, "don't tell me I've done something I hadn't ought. Forgotten some of your packages . . . or something. . . ." "No! No!" they assured her cheerfully, "we're just playing Santa Claus," and began piling up their bundles on the chair nearest the door.

"It's that train of cars for Beppo," said Bill, reassuringly.

"And Constantina's bureau," Tom added.

"And a tree . . ."

"Oh!!!!" cried Annunziata, her tired eyes like stars, "I guess likely I'm just dreaming things, ain't I?"

"Not a bit of it," said Miss Johnson, "It's a dream come true, my dear."

And the next morning—oh, that next morning! How shall mortal words ever describe that wonderful Christmas morning when Constantina knelt before her precious bureau, busily dressing and undressing that little 19-cent doll, while Beppo gazed contentedly at marvelous trains of cars already hitched behind his darling en-jine.

"Nunziata," he managed to say while sucking a Christmas orange, "why for did you ever keep telling how there ain't no such thing as Santa Claus?"

"Oh, Beppino," Annunziata answered gently, "how was I to know, honey boy, that any fellow with two hands and a pocketbook could turn himself into a Santa Claus—just as easy?"

Indeed, it seems to me that the Friend of little children whose birthday falls on Christmas Day may be looking at our hands and pocketbooks this very minute—dreaming dreams for each small child in Every Man's Land. And across the centuries I seem to hear him reminding you and me once more: "Inasmuch . . . as ye did it . . . unto one of the least of these . . . ye did it . . . unto me."

"My father is lots older than you, and he has Christmas stockings every year. If you won't tell anybody, mister, I'm going to put a new ink eraser in it for him, myself, tonight. That will be pretty nice, won't it? Ink erasers are awfully useful in offices, aren't they now?"

"So! So!" growled the Christmas Eve Man grouchy. But Timothy is awfully brave. He would not be crushed by such crossness as this, so he said cheerfully: "If I knew where you lived I could even put something in your stocking! Just some funny surprising little thing in the toe, don't you know! Maybe just a walnut, maybe just one tiny piece of candy, but you'd reach way down and be awfully glad to find something there, wouldn't you?"

The Christmas Eve Man stroked his beard harder than ever: "Oh stop it!" he said, "I might as well tell you I don't believe in Christmas. It's just a day like any other day, kid. Quit bothering me about it!"

Timothy really was crushed then. He says he wanted to cry. He says the pain all up and down inside him hurt him worse than usual. But he sat as quiet as a mouse and wondered what he had better do. He wanted some pills, so he couldn't leave. Then suddenly the lovely idea popped into his mind. He tiptoed from the office and found his way to the doctor's kitchen. He asked the doctor's cook for a candle and a match. She loves Timothy, just as everybody does—everybody but the Christmas Eve Man, I mean, so she gave him a candle and a match: "You aren't up to mischief, are you?" she asked.

"No ma'am!" said Timothy politely, "this is a very Christian thing I'm going to do."

Then he tiptoed back to the office, put the candle in the window, tiptoed to the electric light switch and punched off the light. The room was as black as ink!

"Look here!" growled the cross man, "what do you think you're doing, kid? Put that light on!"

But Timothy was over at the window lighting the little Christmas candle: "I tell you what I'm doing, mister," he said, "I'm lighting the Christ-child through our street. It's pretty early yet, and I thought—I thought—well, he might stop in here on his way past! And then you'd just have to believe in Christmas, see? And maybe he'd lay his hand on you as he used to lay them on the sick people years ago, and you'd feel lots better."

Well!!

The doctor told mother that never in his life had such a beautiful thing happened in his office. He heard every word of it, for he had just let a patient out of the side door and he was surprised to see the office so pitch dark, then he heard Timothy's voice and saw the tiny candle like a star in the window. Then—then he heard crying. It was the Christmas Eve Man; he put his head forward on the table and sobbed: "Oh God," he whispered, "forgive me! Forgive me!"

The Young Reserves

Timothy's Christmas Eve Man

By PEGGY

OF COURSE in our family we think that there is no one in the whole wide world quite as darling as Timothy. He is so little! He is so quaint! He says such adorable things! He loves everybody! He is never afraid of people! But quite the dearest thing he ever did was on Christmas Eve.

The truth of the matter is that Timothy felt sick all up and down inside him, and the sicker he felt the sadder he felt, for he knew it was Christmas Eve and that mother would put him to bed and he might, oh! he might miss all the Christmas fun. So without saying a word about those queer little aches and pains, Timothy dressed himself up in his goloshes, his muffler, his coat, his tam, and his mittens and went to the doctor's. Our doctor lives just six houses away from us, and he is a Perfect Dear. So many people think just as we do about him that his office is always full, and when poor little Timothy got there on Christmas Eve there were "most a hundred persons there, Peggy, honest injun!" Timothy told me afterwards.

"Oh not a hundred, Timothy dear; a dozen, maybe!" I said.

"No, honest injun, Peggy, there wasn't chairs enough for everybody so I sat on the floor and looked at the picture books."

Of course you and I know that there couldn't have been a hundred persons there, but there must have been a great many for Timothy had to wait and wait and wait, until finally there was just Timothy and one man left. The man was ahead of Timothy. He was a cross man.

"He had such a beard, Peggy. It was the beard that made him cross!"

"Nonsense!" I said, "beards never make people cross."

"W—well," said Timothy, "he kept stroking it, don't you know? And when you stroke cats' fur they purr, but the more he stroked his beard the crosser he got. See?"

Dear Timothy! It was just another of his queer little, absurd little notions which we all love. But it seems that the longer Timothy watched him stroke his beard, the more anxious he grew. So finally he piped up: "Had you tried thinking of something pleasant, mister? It helps a lot, don't you know?"

"G'r'r'r!" growled the Christmas Eve Man crossly, "I have nothing pleasant to think about, kid."

Timothy is not used to being called kid, but he politely pretended not to notice, he was so anxious to soothe the savage breast. "Well now," he said, "how about thinking of your Christmas stocking?"

The man rumbled his throat grumpily: "Haven't got a Christmas stocking. Too old!"

THE best of Christmas joy,
Dear little girl or boy,
That comes on that merry-making day,
Is the happiness of giving
To another child that's living
Where Santa Claus has never found his way.

Our Own Folks

John A. Howard Writes to the Home Folks

I have just returned from a week's touring on my field in India and I thought you might like to hear about it. This, as you know, is the rainy season. When it is possible to dodge the raindrops the traveling is very fine because it is generally cool. The car which you so generously gave us carried us over the 157 miles of our trip without any trouble. Oh yes, she can plow through a quarter of a mile of road covered with broken brick or red laterite rock or sail through the blizzard-like cloudbursts. The torrents are so heavy sometimes that in a very few minutes the yard before a house becomes a lake.

We left our car on the inspection bungalow veranda. When I opened the shutter door of the bungalow a centipede dropped on my hand. Wiggling its way, it fell to the floor to enjoy but one more minute of life.

All the roads to the villages are plowed up now and turned into rice fields. There will be no more village roads until Christmas. Our path led us on the steep, slippery, wet clay banks between the fields. The white man's burden, known as shoes, had to be discarded.

When the sun came out the air was hot, thick, moist and sickening, for on both sides of the path were rice fields filled with silmy, foamy, muddy water. The rainy season is very late this year so all the farmers are exceedingly busy plowing, harrowing and pulling up rice plants from their "hot-bed" fields. These are transplanted by being stuck one by one in the mud of the larger fields. The springs are covered with flood-water and all drinking water has to be taken from tanks or fields. This liquid, although it was boiled, had a milky white hue and a few glasses put us out of commission.

One of the leading men in the potter village, the storekeeper, has accepted Christ. This ends a struggle of over a year. Pray that he may be spirit-filled for he is very influential. Already four or five more people are about to follow his example.

As we slipped along the ridges to another village a big black cobra glided across the surface of the water near our feet. When the path became too interesting, we suddenly assumed a sitting posture with our feet in the air! Later we crossed a watery field and sunk in mud and water over our knees. At noon under the bright sun the water became so hot that our feet felt as if they were being parboiled. One swollen stream was very swift and over our heads in depth. After considerable reconnoitering we found that by making quite a detour we could get around by crossing in water just chest deep.

Dead tired, we arrived at the preacher's home in Monicura. Down by our feet we noticed a friendly visitor, a large brown scorpion. He certainly would have made life spicy if he had been given the opportunity. Villagers say that the bark of the persimmon tree is best for scorpion bites. This is how they learned the remedy. One day a tree lizard and a scorpion were fighting. The scorpion did not relish becoming a delicious morsel 'neath the tongue of the lizard so every time the lizard attacked his enemy the scorpion sunk his tail into the lizard. The lizard would retreat, rub his wounds against the persimmon tree, then continue the onslaught. Thus the people judged persimmon bark to be soothing for such burning pain.

The old village witch of Nilpura accepted the Saviour and was happily baptized. She has a very kind face. The villagers said she was possessed of a terrible demon. Did not her fortune teller inform them about her? Did not the drop of oil on water confirm what he said? She had already eaten several children and caused all the sickness and death in the village they thought, so they broke down her house and drove her out. We are happy indeed that she has become a Christian. Now we will have the help of her influence in the community. The most powerful person by far in any non-Christian village is an old grandmother.

It was our privilege the next day to baptize in this same village a fine young couple who had wanted for a long time to follow Christ. We hope and pray they may be spared for many years of testimony for our wonderful Savior.

Will you not make this prayer, "Oh God, make the Howards and their flock in India prayer-consecrated, spirit-filled, mighty winners of souls"? We deeply appreciate your loyal spiritual support. Without it we could not continue. We crave a larger share of your devotions. You are not forgotten when we talk with him.

Cordially yours in his service,

JOHN A. HOWARD.

Southern Seminary Students to Broadcast Bible Stories

By CHAS. F. LEEK

Starting the first of the year, the Courier-Journal and the Times, local Louisville newspapers, formerly operated by the late Henry Watterson, will broadcast between 7:30 and 9 o'clock each evening, sketches of Old Testament characters prepared by the students of Dr. John R. Sampey's Old Testament Interpretation class in conjunction with students of the Presbyterian seminary. The sketches are to be of from 400 to 500 words and are being selected from competition contests, the Baptist students having the latter Old Testament characters to present. Successful writers will speak over the radio, and their stories will be printed in the paper the following mornings and later put in book form.

A quartet composed of R. A. Kelley of Virginia, H. S. Cushing of California, A. C. Magee of Louisiana and D. E. Montgomery of South Carolina will give a sacred music program over the same radio on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 14, from 3 to 4 o'clock.

For the information of radio fans desiring to listen-in on these programs, the local station is described as follows: Western Electric apparatus, 1-A 500 Watt, 400 meter wave-length. Persons have heard the local station all over the United States, parts of Canada and South America, Cuba and Porto Rico and it will be possible for those interested to pick up these seminary offerings. The time is Central time.

A moving picture machine is soon to be installed at the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary for the purpose of teaching. Dr. H. C. Wayman, professor of Biblical introduction, is author of the novel idea here and will use reels to present life and customs of Palestine in connection with his course.

Three students matriculated just before Dr. Mullins left for the North Carolina State Convention bringing the total enrollment to 402 and consequently making the largest group of bona fide ministerial students in any seminary. Indications are that last year's record enrollment of 416 will be surpassed. There are approximately 250 women special students also, women not being candidates for degrees according to the charter.

Christian Education at Denison University

By CLARENCE M. EDDY

Denison University is teaching the Bible. The study of the Bible is having a larger place in the curriculum of Denison University. With the coming of Prof. George Platt Knox to take the chair of Christian education there has been possible the increasing and emphasizing of courses in Bible and general religious subjects. Professor Knox, with his years of college and public school experience, possesses fine qualifications for this new service. Immediately preceding his present connection he served the International Sunday School Association as superintendent of religious education.

The wisdom of the Board of Trustees of the University in establishing the new department of Christian education is clearly manifest through the interest shown by the student body. Without any public announcement setting forth the courses offered with their contents, the enrollment in the Bible classes and religious education is heavy and the interest sustained.

A careful study of the contents of the Sacred Word is being carried through in an effort to bring the students to a thorough knowledge of their Bible so that they will learn to love it and use it.

The courses in religious education include an elementary course viewing religious education in all its phases and agencies, a course in special methods in Sunday-school work in the several departments, and in the lines of organization and administration; courses covering the psychology of the development of religious experience in children and youth; the extension fields of church vacation schools and week day schools of religious instruction; church history, organization and government; the history and development and present status of missions; music in church work and worship services, with interpretation of hymns; church building, equipment, art, and architecture; the oral and dramatic interpretation of the Bible, the story telling; organized forms of church work with its young people, including B. Y. P. U., World Wide Guild, week-day activities in organized classes, recreation and athletic activities; with emphasis upon evangelistic effort and appeal in connection with methods in community service. An especially interesting course is contemplated in the history and geography of Bible lands, in which use will be made of maps, charts, diagrams, and tables, and other plastic materials, illustrated by lantern slides, and if possible an out-of-door miniature Holy Land.

The Department of Christian Education aims to be of immediate service to the field, in addition to developing courses in the university. It is hoped that in time material can be gathered and office service rendered to the field so that the department will become a bureau of information through which cooperating churches will contribute matter and material setting forth their best plans, while churches desiring suggestions will find here a most valuable fund of information. Several churches have already applied for help and a study has been made of the needs and the resources of the individual church, followed by suggestions showing steps or immediate improvement. Specially trained students are sent out to observe conditions, and help is provided through these students toward the organization of larger and better plans. Short term courses are contemplated during either university sessions or vacation time, in which elected lines of work in theory and in method shall be set forth and problems discussed. Correspondence courses and prescribed readings for ministers and Sunday-school superintendents, teachers, and workers will be offered. Short term intensive training courses for workers in week day and vacation schools are under consideration.

As rapidly as can be effected surveys are contemplated so that existing conditions will be carefully studied leading to knowledge of the actual conditions of the field. Only in this way can the real and immediate needs be developed and the best help extended. Assistance will be offered to summer assemblies, camps and training schools, and every possible help afforded to the development of the teacher-training courses in the local church, and in community training schools, in line with the latest advance in this important branch of work.

In furthering the work of the department Professor Knox has spent most of the week ends this fall visiting strategic points in the field, filling church pulpits, attending and participating in Baptist association meetings, assisting in institutes and assemblies, regional B. Y. P. U. conventions, addressing ministerial groups, and helping in state and international Baptist and interdenominational committees.

In short the Department of Christian Education in Denison University aims to develop trained workers in church and Sunday school, so that it shall immediately serve the churches, and what is equally important, it specifically aims to awaken and strengthen in the students the sense of religious values, a feeling of the nearness of God in daily life, a love of the Bible, and a ready sympathy and support for the work of the churches, when they shall have become men and women in their own community.

Report of Commission on Rural Churches for 1921-22

Given at New Jersey Convention, Oct. 25, 1922

By JOHN H. EARLE

Your rural church commission welcomes the opportunity of rendering an account of its stewardship. In virtue of the authority vested in us by the convention last year, we have been able to secure the cooperation of the county work department of the state Y. M. C. A. and of most of the other Protestant denominations of the state, not only for the purpose of holding a country church workers' conference in connection with agricultural week, but also for the forming of a town and country church federation. A very excellent conference was held last January and another is already planned for Jan. 19, 1923. An exhibit was placed in the midst of the agricultural exhibits in the Armory which commanded great attention and received nothing but favorable comment from the farmers and all in attendance. Several even suggest that such an exhibit should be carried to every state and county fair. The federation is now planning to hold both county and local rural church conferences. It has a vision of increasing influence and usefulness for at least a decade to come.

The two institutes for rural pastors and church workers were held as directed. The time was May and the places were Roadstown and Ledgewood. These institutes were each two days and a half in duration and were attended by about a score at the day sessions and by large congregations in the evenings. We wish to acknowledge our indebtedness to Dr. Rolvix Harlan, then social service and rural church secretary of our home mission board, for his assistance in planning these institutes, and for his helpful lectures and addresses. We regret that he is no longer the leader of this department of our Northern Baptist work; and we wish him Godspeed in his new work as professor of sociology of the Richmond, Va., University.

You authorized us to spend not more than $500 in the pursuit of our task. Our expenses were $369.57 less than that amount; our total outlay was but $130.43.

So much for the past. Now, what of the present and the future? . . . We believe that the following declarations are so tremendously true that the whole denomination may well take prayerful, careful note of them:

1. The small, country community is as worthy of life investment as the populous town and congested city.

2. Fidelity in a rural field will earn as great a return on the investment as will fidelity in a metropolis.

3. Not how many people, but how adequate and faithful the service, is the consideration which really counts.

4. The great men and women of the Christian church may as well be those of the country as those of the city.

5. Denominational interest and denominational money should be much more largely invested in rural fields—especially in non-competing fields.

6. The attitude of our educational institutions should be one of keenest interest in and for our vast domain of rural service. That school, if it exists, which makes a man feel that after he has passed through college and seminary he is too big a man to go to a country parish—or to remain there if he goes—deserves to be put outside the pale of denominational sympathy and support.

7. The members and leaders of our rural churches must be helped to come to a new appreciation of their opportunities. They must be trained to live up to these opportunities, for opportunity constitutes responsibility from which there is no righteous way of escape except in the line of sacrificial service.

But what shall come of these considerations? Though we all acquiesce heartily—though we adopt this report unanimously—what difference is it going to make in the state and nation? We recommend:

1. That some way shall earnestly be sought to add a man to our state staff who shall devote himself to the conducting of short series of training institutes in our town and country churches. A week to a church would permit him to render invaluable service to nearly half a hundred churches in a year.

2. That study blanks be prepared and all such churches be asked to furnish thereon such information concerning their communities and programs as will enable this commission and the secretaries and pastors to better understand the needs and render real assistance.

3. That a library of appropriate books be provided and circulated systematically among rural church leaders.

4. That each village and rural pastor be provided with such a periodical as Homelands or Rural Manhood or, better still perhaps, that we request our Home Mission Board to establish a bulletin or periodical to which rural state secretaries, pastors and others shall be asked to contribute and which shall give real news of the methods, mistakes and successes of work in our rural fields.

5. That a distinctively rural-minded professor be added to the faculties of our seminaries, who shall have every possible assistance in the great work of training men for our country fields.

6. That our home mission board be requested to add a rural church secretary to its staff at a very early date, and that he be given adequate support in the matter of assistants, literature, stereopticon lectures, and other facilities for the study and encouragement of our country church work.

7. That we be authorized to arrange two interdenominational training institutes if such a plan be approved by our sister denominations; and that we again be given a sum not to exceed $500 for the legitimate expenses of the work of this commission.

8. That our convention officers and workers shall lead us in making strenuous efforts to help those smaller churches where inadequate equipment, insufficient support, and intermittent pastoral care lead to stagnation, discouragement, and eventually death.

Finally, brethren, let us call upon ourselves, upon all our New Jersey Baptists, and upon the entire Northern Baptist Convention, to recognize and to deal with rural needs and rural opportunities in a strong and a statesmanlike manner, remembering that one-half of America's population still lives in the country; and that our great God loves the tiniest wayside chapel as well as the great temple. "The smallest community is big enough for all the efforts of the best-equipped man and woman."

William Jewell College Drops A. W. Slaten from Faculty

Dr. A. W. Slaten, head of the department of Biblical literature and religious education in William Jewell College has been dropped from the faculty by unanimous action of the board of trustees of the college. "Serious question has arisen concerning the views of Dr. Arthur Wakefield Slaten, professor of Biblical literature and religious education in William Jewell College regarding the Bible and the Christian faith. He was invited to appear before the board of trustees to give expression to his views on these matters. He stated, the report goes, that he does not believe in nor subscribe to the following doctrines which we deem essential to the Christian faith: The pre-existence and deity of Christ; the infallibility of his teachings; his vicarious death; his bodily resurrection and his mediatorial and intercessory work. He also stated before the board that he does not worship Christ nor pray in his name. By reason of these views the board was of the unanimous opinion that he is disqualified longer to remain in his present position as head of Biblical literature and religious education." Prof. Slaten's services will be discontinued January 1, 1923 and the treasurer was instructed to pay his salary to the end of the term for which he was engaged to teach. The agitation leading up to the action noted above was occasioned by the book "What Jesus Taught" which was recently published and of which Dr. Slaten is the author.

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

CONNECTICUT

REV. W. S. ABERNETHY, pastor Calvary, Washington, D. C., addressed the Baptists of New Haven and surrounding towns, in Calvary Church, Nov. 24, on his experiences in Europe last summer, as one of the representatives of the A. B. F. M. Society.

Nov. 15, FIRST CHURCH, Stamford, held its "Get-together" dinner which was largely attended. Interest ran high. The finances are in a flourishing condition. Dr. Wm. J. Barnes, the pastor, is preaching an interesting series of sermons on the general theme "Old Testament Types of a New Testament Experience."

REV. ELLIS GILBERT, Danbury, is leading his people to do things. The by-laws of the church have been changed so that the principal officers of the Sunday school are elected by the church. Dr. Catherine Mabie, Africa, and Mrs. D. C. Haring, Japan, recently brought to the church "Messages from the Piling Line." Rev. W. H. Houghton, Norristown, Pa., will conduct an evangelistic campaign for the church in February. The W. W. G. Girls gave a supper in November with Miss Edith Wing of New Haven as speaker.

THE MONTAUK AVENUE CHURCH, New London, is mourning the loss of its esteemed pastor, Rev. Welcome E. Bates, who passed away suddenly Thanksgiving morning. He served six churches in the N. B. C. and two churches in Canada, covering a period of forty-seven years. A strong preacher, a faithful pastor, a devoted husband and father, a true friend—his place will be hard to fill.

THE ITALIAN BAPTIST CHURCH, New Haven, celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary Nov. 27. Rev. A. D. Domenica, Philadelphia, a former pastor; Dr. A. B. Coats, Hartford; Dr. James McGee, Mr. Charles P. Walker, Rev. M. R. Foshay, New Haven and Rev. J. E. Parrella, Meriden, were the speakers.

REV. E. SCOTT FARLEY, pastor Second Church, Suffield, is preaching to the united congregations of the Second Church and the Congregational Church of the town. On Thursday evening a men's supper of the united congregations was served in the Baptist vestry. Chancellor McGowan, president of the International College, Springfield, Mass., was the speaker on "Our American Institutions, Can They Withstand the Attack?" Mr. Farley presided with his usual grace and wit.

MAINE

REV. D. JONES, recently of New Brunswick, begins his pastorate at Mapleton under encouraging auspices.

WHAT MAY BE DONE in an educational center, even when the school is not denominational, is shown at Farmington. Pastor Andem preaches to a great throng of students in the State Normal School. Three of these students were recently baptized; as many more from the high school will come at the next baptism. Mrs. Andem, the wife of the pastor, not only finds time to be the efficient head of the Children's Crusaders in the state, but has a class of normal school girls numbering over sixty. A feature of the work of this class is the Sunday morning prayer meeting held at 10 o'clock and well attended. At this meeting decisions for Christ have been made within the past two weeks. Another feature of the work at Farmington is the orchestra of eighteen pieces conducted by Mr. Ray Davis. With this church the Farmington Association met for its winter session. Eighteen churches were reported, and the reports were in general full of thanksgiving and of hope. Dr. Hamlen conducted a series of devotional meditations. Pastor Freeman of Livermore Falls gave a heartening sermon. Miss Clarissa Hewey of China instructed and inspired her audiences. Mrs. A. D. Paul of Saco presented the Continuation Campaign, and Promotion Director Whittmore spoke.

Dedication of Lewiston United Baptist Church

What is probably the finest and best equipped church building among the Baptists in Maine was dedicated on Sunday, Nov. 26, as the church home of the United Baptist Church of Lewiston. Into its building has gone an unusual amount of thought, loyalty, vision, in order that the completed church might express the love, the aspiration and the faith of this great church. It was to be more than a mere place of assembly. It was to be a confession of faith and a medium of service. Such was the loyalty of the people that during the building of this noble structure the house of God has held first place in the thought of his people. It has been made possible by the great subscriptions of a few, and by the small subscriptions of the many. Its cost is in the neighborhood of $200,000. Its equipment provides for all the varied service of a modern Sunday school and includes gymnasium, social, and committee rooms, as well as a fine room for the prayer meeting, and an auditorium not only beautiful, but rich in its suggestions of worship. An organ of the highest class is included in its equipment.

The address of dedication was delivered by the pastor, Rev. George F. Finnie, who presented in a remarkable way, the spiritual element in the work accomplished as in itself a recognition of God and an example of the best in faith and service.

President Gray of Bates, Dr. Mower of the state convention, and Dr. Salley former pastor of the church, had part in the significant service.

On the following Monday the church kept open house and in the evening there was a special address by Rev. Carl Herick of Fall River. After that the mayor of the city, and president of the Pastors' Union, presented their greetings.

NEW JERSEY

LEDGEWOOD, REV. JOHN H. EARLE, pastor: This semi-rural church finds room in its commodious new building and on the large field which surrounds it, for extensive social-religious work of various kinds. There are baseball games, lin games, races, organized play hours and story-telling hours all summer. A trained worker, member of the church, was in charge of the children's work this year. The Y. P. S. C. E. conducts a monthly social evening and has arranged a course of five high-class entertainments—lecture and musicals—for the winter. A gam and reading room is being fitted up in the basement of the old church. All this is made soul-winning work through the prayers and intensely spiritual leadership of Pastor Earle and the older members of the church. The end of the summer found several ready for baptism. Three weeks of special meetings have just been concluded. The pastor and several efficient musical assistants, conducted the first part of the campaign. Evangelist Charles Wirter and his assistant, Miss Emma Purdy came in for ten days. There have been about fifty decisions and definite recollections. Classes for the training of the boys and girls and for the young people have been formed. The latter have undertaken to promote the work of the Pocket Testament League as their particular form of service. Conversions continue and frequent baptisms are in order. Pastor and Mrs. Earle, who is a talented vocalist, have labored on this field for more than eight years. They are in frequent demand for musical and evangelistic service elsewhere.

REV. CHARLES WINTER, musical evangelist of Cleveland, Ohio, opened his fall work at First Church, Dover, N. J., the first of October. Rev. E. O. Wilson, pastor, reports over 100 decisions and nearly forty baptisms already. Other local churches profited also. At the large Flemington church, Rev. E. W. Miller, pastor, a two weeks' campaign brought large blessing. Mr. Winter is now at Cedarville. Rev. David Jones, pastor. He will spend the month of January with Rev. Frank Holmes at the Mt. Olive and Netcon churches, and then go to Bordentown.

EDWARD W. MILLER, pastor, Fleming, N. J., reports that the church has just passed through a period of special evangelistic effort under the leadership of Chas. Winter. Both the church and the Sunday school feel the impetus given by these meetings, and progress has been made in the kingdom of God because of this blessing. There were twenty-four additions to the church, and twenty-two who expressed a desire to unite with another denomination of their choice. The meetings were spiritual and helpful in many ways. The evangelistic program in the church goes forward, and from these meetings enlistment in the service of the King continues. A junior congregation has been organized for the smaller children, which meets every Friday afternoon and Sunday mornings at 11—11:15. There are seventy-eight children enlisted. A Boy Scout and Camp Fire Girls Council have gone out of the Junior Christian endeavor, as a week day activity; also the World Wide Guild is in progress of beginning its work for the older girls. The evangelistic emphasis in the church has aroused the people to a need of an all-around program of evangelism—planning to save and to keep the young people of the church and community, and deeper consecration on the part of the older members. This is "A people prepared."

MASSACHUSETTS

REV. HENRY F. WIDEN, Central Church, Quincy, baptized ten young people on Sunday, Dec. 17, and among these one entire class from the Sunday school. The merger of the two churches, the Swedish and the Calvary (American) churches has so far proved the wisdom of the union of the two congregations. There is within the new Central Church a fine spirit of aggressive cooperation, and the Lord is blessing evangelistic efforts in every department of the church. A new and modernly equipped church edifice will be erected in the spring.

THE COMING OF DR. J. J. ROSS to Ruggles Street Church fills us all with hope. That old requires a rare combination in a pastor that is not easy to find. Dr. Ross' experience upon somewhat similar fields doubtless strengthened the impression that he would be a fit. There are people in plenty all around the church, and they respond to the gospel when it is simple and hearty.

THINGS ARE SOLID AND THRIFTY at the First Church, Northhampton, where Dr. F. F. Watts is pastor. A balance in hand and a gain in membership made the annual meeting gratifying—also a recent request of $8,000 to the church. The Smith College Baptist Girls Club is strong in evidence in the monthly programs, and the church ladies led in the city-wide campaign for the Union Christian College of the Orient.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

REV. M. C. J. WESTPHAL, of Pittsburgh, has accepted a unanimous call to the Lansdowne Church, near Philadelphia. He will begin his new pastorate Jan. 1.

THERE WERE THREE BAPTISMAL SERVICES last month at Elizabeth, Rev. Eugene Neuner, pastor, and several are awaiting the ordinance. On a recent Sunday the financial record of the church was broken when $270 was laid on the plates in the course of the regular work without prearrangement. The parsonage fund is growing. The combined number of professions at the A. W. Miller meetings at Uniontown and Elizabeth was 135, or one for every eight members.

Rocky Mountain States

IDAHO

REV. JOHN E. KANARR HAS BEEN appointed district missionary for the Central and East Associations. Some years ago Brother Kanarr was one of the field workers in Idaho, but for the last few years he has been working as district missionary in Western Washington. His many friends in Idaho are glad to have him back as a member of the field force of this state.

THE STEWARDSHIP CAMPAIGN has been very successful in many of the Idaho churches. Shoshone Church has signed up 91 per cent of its membership as tithers, the Buhl Church 76 per cent and Knuhl 53 per cent. In many of the other churches from 25 per cent to 50 per cent of the members are tithers.

THE ARCO CHURCH IS TAKING on new life under the efficient leadership of Miss Mary C. Ayres, our missionary working under the Woman's Home Mission Society. Gospel teams have been organized and regular services are being held at three outstations. A radio outfit has been installed which will be used in "listening in" on some good sermon on Sunday evenings.

AN EVERY-MEMBER CANVASS for New World Movement funds has been held in many of our churches. Collections from the churches are steadily increasing and the financial outlook is more hopeful than at any time since the beginning of this year. Special mention should be made of the churches at Hailey and Hagerman. Each of these churches felt that the quota given them was not large enough and insisted on increasing it. New pledges secured at Hailey will more than provide for their new quota.

REV. NEWTON F. SMITH has been called to the First Baptist church at Mt. Home and is already located on the field. This church has been without a pastor for over a year and the people are delighted to have a pastor on the field once more. They believe that Brother Smith is the right man in the right place.

REV. J. B. WAKEM, who has been doing Christian Americanization work at Pocatello for the last two years has accepted a call to the Baptist churches at Middleton and Eagle. These churches are responding enthusiastically to his leadership and the outlook is very hopeful on both fields.

REV. FORD M. BURTCH AND PARTY have held successful revival meetings at Midvale and Wilder. Both churches have had a number of additions by letter and baptism. The party is now holding a meeting at Roswell.

Pacific Coast

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

IN AND AROUND LOS ANGELES there are many communities that are unchurched.

others that are underchurched. Into one of these, Maywood, Dr. and Mrs. S. C. Holmes, members of the Huntington Park Church, went to hold tent meetings. Brother Holmes is a regularly ordained Baptist minister, but for some time past he has been earning his livelihood otherwise. After several very fruitful weeks of tent meetings it was thought best to organize a church. This was done with thirty-seven charter members, calling themselves the Emmanuel Baptist Church of Maywood. The next problem was a permanent place in which to worship. By prayer and faithful effort it was not long until a lot 80x155 was purchased at a cost of $1,675 and plans were made to build at once. A building was put up costing $3,500. It is all paid for except about $1,600. The church called from several of the sister churches a recognition council to meet Tuesday, Dec. 7. The council after hearing of the good work accomplished, were happy to have the privilege of recognizing this church as a regularly organized Baptist church, and of further recommending it to the fellowship of all other Baptist churches. A unanimous vote was passed expressing the sincere appreciation of the council to Dr. and Mrs. Holmes for the untiring and self-sacrificing services they have rendered in organizing such a church.

OHIO

REV. L. S. COLBORN HAS RETIRED from the active pastorate and is now living at 143 West Park Ave., Columbus. He is ready to assist in evangelistic meetings or act as a supply pastor.

REV. EDWIN S. STUCKER OF OTTAWA, Kan., will be the evangelist at the Lakewood Church during the simultaneous campaign in greater Cleveland, Feb. 25-March 11, and will assist Pastor C. R. Parker at the First Church, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, about Easter, but has open time as yet for January and February.

CENTRAL CHURCH, COLUMBUS, recently held a successful four-weeks' evangelistic campaign. Previous to the time of meetings the church was thoroughly organized. A committee on committees put a dozen different groups to work, including as many of the members as possible. Plans were made, prayer meetings held, advertising done, and the people aroused and enthused. Evangelist William Pfeffer, pastor of the church, did the preaching, and Professor Ralph Clark of Chicago directed the choir, sang solos, did personal work, and visiting, and taught an afternoon Bible class. About fifty took a definite stand for Christ. Nineteen have already been received into the church, fourteen by baptism and there are more to follow. The pastor is in his fourth year and has held four evangelistic meetings during this time, doing the preaching himself. The annual business meeting in December showed a marked advance over the year preceding, most all reports showing progress and a healthy condition, the financial condition in particular presenting a decided step forward. Plans are on foot to make the S. S., B. Y. P. U., W. W. G. and other organizations "bigger and better." A Christmas program was presented Friday night, Dec. 22, at which time the pastor was presented with a substantial cash gift in appreciation of his services throughout the year and in particular during the recent revival.

MICHIGAN

REV. O. P. BESTOR DIED Dec. 17, at his home in Kalamazoo. He was born in Suffield, Conn., and was a graduate of Suffield Literary Institution, Brown University class of 1872, with honors of Phi Beta Kappa. His preparation in theology was obtained at the Morgan Park Theological Seminary. In 1874 he married Miss Laura Ellen Moore who survives him. Two children are carrying on a noble work, Ruth E. Bestor, a teacher in the public schools, and Arthur E. Bestor, president of the Chautauqua Institution and also president of the New York Social Union. Mr. Bestor served churches in Wisconsin, Illinois and Michigan. His leading pastorates were in Evansville, Beloit and Madison, Wisconsin. He also served as secretary of the Wisconsin State Convention. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Elmer W. Powell, assisted by Dr. H. L. Stetson, President Allan Hoben, of Kalamazoo College and Rev. Frank C. Vreeland.

EVANGELIST H. P. HOSKINS, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York, has held successful evangelistic meetings with the Lake Odessa Church and with the Birkett Memorial Church of Detroit. Both churches have received a number of additions to their membership.

KANSAS

THE FIRST CHURCH, Coffeyville, has extended a call to Rev. Earl Riney of Norman, Okla. He has accepted and begins his work at once.

ILLINOIS

GEORGE W. POWELL OF CANTON, writes, "Our church is without a pastor, Rev. Chas. H. Gray having resigned."

Dedication of New Organ

The North Shore Church of Chicago reached another goal when the new pipe organ was dedicated Sunday morning, Dec. 17. The new church was dedicated a year ago, at which time pledges were secured not only to complete the payment for the building but in addition nearly $10,000 was pledged toward the organ; $6,000 more was needed to cover the cost of the organ. When the pastor, Rev. William H. Jones, presented the matter to the church on the morning of dedication, over $8,000 was subscribed. It was a great victory for the church. The North Shore Church now has the most modern and well equipped Baptist church house, and one of the best organs among Baptists, in the city.

The new instrument is a three-manual Austin organ of unusual beauty of tone quality. It has twenty-nine stops, 1621 pipes, with every modern device of couplers and adjustable pistons. It is equipped with a delightful set of chimes. Three well-known artists gave recitals during the dedicatory period: Mr. William H. Barnes, Miss Frances A. Cook and Mr. Eric DeLamarter.

The church records progress in other directions also. It has taken action toward the securing of a foreign pastor, probably a man working in India. The Bible School is growing steadily under the leadership of Supt. J. L. Kraft. A strong musical program is being developed under the direction of Mr. Frank Parker.

Our Japanese Sisters

Forty Years Ago and Now

By EMMA HAIGH FISHER

IT IS just forty years since my husband and I sailed for New York to our appointment in Ongole, India. It was there we had our first glimpse of a country given over to idolatry, and well do I remember our saying as six weeks later we were sailing away to Japan at the behest of the board, that it would take a hundred years to move India. For years after I was haunted by the faces of the low-caste women, so little human intelligence was in their eyes. Now this year the first graduating class of the first Woman's Union College in India was cheered to the echo by the audience of 2000 men who rose to do them honor as they filed in to receive their merited diplomas, and the grandsons of some of those low-caste women are members of the Indian parliament. As Dr. Mott says, "God sometimes does one hundred years' work in ten years."

On our arrival in Japan, we found things quite different from India. Women of the lower classes seemed to have some education. Higher class ladies appeared in jirrickshas with the tops up, the younger ones always with an elderly chaperone. Primary and secondary schools were well established, but the higher education for girls was little thought of. Some of our number even said that a college for women could not be successful as too few would be allowed to postpone marriage long enough to finish such a course. Now all high schools for girls are overcrowded, some doubling their student bodies in one year. On inquiring where such an increase came from in these hard times, the principal said they were farmers' daughters, that the high price of rice permitted their coming. Our Union Christian College for Women has graduated its first class of sixty, and other women are now studying in the universities. They have entered into commercial and industrial life in a degree not dreamed of twenty years ago. The daily papers in 1890 criticized the changing manner of school girls, saying that they were walking along the main business street with heads up—great impropriety!—and some even swinging their arms in the awkward manner of the foreign tourist. Now the streetcar and trolleys are full of girls going about freely, some earning in one month more than their fathers did in one year.

Of what are these girls thinking? Are their ideals as much in advance of their mothers' as is their education? At our own Mary L. Colby School, I heard a young woman read a paper before the literary society written entirely by herself; and this was her line of thought: "We at this school have received wonderful teaching and inspiration which will make us better wives and mothers in our homes, but they will have failed of their purpose if they do not lead us to help all those about us. Our church and school should be the stronger and better for what we have learned here. We have a duty to make our town a better place for our children to live in, but even this is not enough; for we are citizens of the world, and as such have a duty to every one in the world, and should not rest until every one in the whole world knows of God's love."

The World a Home for God

Sounds like a missionary address: home, does it not? In fact, it is very like one that I heard at a woman's club in Chicago. Who shall say these darker hues sisters in Japan will not outstrip the American sisters even as Madam Yajima has done in her effort to make peace preparedness? Who of us would have taken the money given us for comfort in our old age, and spent it in a journey of 8000 miles to beg the American sister to join in prayer and service "to make this world a home for God"? Rich has God answered her faith and that of those who united with her. The faces of our workers here glow as they tell us of the great change wrought by the Washington Conference, of the forsaking of militarism and of the growth of democracy of the spirit of revival that is among our churches, and of seeing the fruits of long years of Sunday-school work, so much of it done by our women. The demand for Christian social workers is beyond our power to supply. Our women are sounding the cry for prohibition and equal suffrage, so the next five years will prove as eventful as the last.

On return from my furlough, I am less anxious about Japan than America, having witnessed the so-called wave of crime which swept over the states in 1910 and the long delays in courts of justice and having heard the slogan of would-be statesmen "America first," while the world is suffering from the lack of moral and spiritual leadership which America alone is able to give, according to the testimony of Dr. John R. Mott and Mr. Fred B. Smith, recently returned Thankless from crown to root!

Thou who, these twenty years, hast come and found
On tree or ground,
Sound, be it, or unsound,
No fruit to praise thee for thy patient

Stubborn, and hard, and bare!

One year more, Master! — one year for

Ah! give me one year more!

rom separate world-tours. On the other and, I was glad to see that in some places the Bible is beginning to have the place it should in education, and I was proud of the work of our missionary societies. The greatest cause for rejoicing is in the dedication of young lives to world service even by the hundreds at St. Paul, Minn., this last July. So I hope to hear that in America, as well as in Japan and India, "a hundred years' work has been done in ten" through God and his followers.—Gleanings.

Dr. W. E. Raffety of the Publication Society, announces that a new group-uniform lessons series is to be issued beginning with January, 1924, in the same series of lesson helps now used for the Improved Uniform Series."

The financial report of the Christian hospital at Shaohsing, South China, shows to what extent the Chinese are willing to pay for its healing ministry. Out of total income of $49,524, less than $3,500 comes from mission funds, all the remainder coming from the Chinese either as gifts or as fees.

Rev. J. B. Fox, superintendent of the Los Angeles Baptist City Mission Society, writes that more than sixteen new fields among a fine class of American people ought to have vigorous Baptist churches. This is a great challenge to the denomination.

San Juan, the capital city of Porto Rico, reports an enlargement of work through the completion under home mission auspices of the fine new church and Christian center building. During the year, thirty-nine members have been added to the church, offerings have been increased and the central Bible school together with its three branch schools, has had an average attendance of 228. The average attendance has been seventy-five in the first grade school and kindergarten.

The buildings of the great Clough Memorial Hospital at Ongole, South India, are now practically completed. Twenty buildings, some small outbuildings and a stone wall around the twenty-three acres have been erected, entirely by hand labor and without any competent contractor. This achievement is largely due to the efforts of Dr. J. W. Stenger, who has been in charge of the building operations and to Rev. J. M. Baker. Only those who have tried to build in India can realize what a triumph this hospital is. It has taken over five years to complete the task, in spite of the fact that dozens of masons, carpenters and coolies have been busy during practically the whole time. During the past year 10,711 patients were treated in the dispensary and there were 521 in-patients. A Bible woman and an evangelist are continually at work among the patients.

Rev. F. C. Mabie, of the faculty of Shanghai College, writes enthusiastically about the opening of the new Science building, made possible by the gift of a friend: "There is a joyful task before us. We are packing bottles and crocks and moving from the six old rooms where the science department has been housed for twelve years to the spacious new building which is just being completed. This building contains forty-five rooms—a floor each for physics, biology and chemistry, and a fourth floor for special laboratories, a storage battery and stock room. And so the dream dreamed ever since the first day we landed in China has at last come true, the much needed building is a reality and in consequence we hope to send out men better equipped for service along scientific lines. Our prayer is that they may also be better able to render efficient Christian service. Perhaps no one can realize the deep thankfulness and joy with which we begin our new term housed in our fine building."

A most significant innovation has taken place at Ellis Island, the gateway to America. Regular religious services are now being held every Sunday. Definite opportunities for worship through religious services have been made possible through the splendid cooperation of the present commissioner of immigration, Mr. Robert Todd. Every Sunday morning three types of religious service are held: At 8:15 o'clock the Roman Catholics have their mass; at 9:15 the Protestant service is held; and at 10:15 all Hebrew immigrants have an opportunity for worship, with a rabbi presiding. These religious services were inaugurated through a special committee of the general committee of immigrant aid, composed of thirty-three religious and social agencies. Representatives of the three distinct religious groups from the general committee were appointed to this special committee for religious services. It was gratifying to watch this committee of Protestant, Roman Catholic and Jewish representatives at work, and to note their spirit of cooperation and the conviction of every member of the great need for religious worship at Ellis Island to comfort distressed immigrants in detention. A Protestant sub-committee was organized through the helpful assistance of the offices of the Home Missions Council to take charge of the Protestant services every Sunday.

An automobile bus, purchased by the Los Angeles Baptist City Mission Society, is used in gathering up boys and girls for the Sunday school at Moneta. Since the field covers a territory of ten miles long and four miles wide, the need of the bus can easily be imagined. The Japanese have raised more than $600 to apply toward its purchase, and have agreed to raise the balance in eight months.

The new salesroom building at Mandalay, owned by the Baptist Mission Press of Rangoon, Burma, is said to be the handsomest building in the city. It is well adapted to the growing business of the press in that city. No American funds went into its construction as it was paid for entirely through the income of the press.

While a number of southern states did not hold general state elections this year and several of them did not have to choose a United States senator, in the elections that were held Nov. 7, Baptist men were elected governors in four southern states—Georgia, Florida, Texas and Tennessee, while South Carolina elected a Baptist lieutenant governor, Florida, Georgia and Oklahoma a Baptist United States Senator, and twenty Baptist congressmen were chosen, these coming from the states of Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, Oklahoma, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia. In addition, eight other Baptist men were elected to high state offices and six Baptist jurists were chosen to the highest courts of their respective states. L. E. Thomas, state bank examiner for Louisiana, was chosen mayor of Shreveport by a big majority over five opponents, and Hon. Clarence Cannon was elected to congress from the ninth Missouri district by the largest majority ever given a candidate in that district. Hon. Claude Kitchin of North Carolina, re-elected, is not only a prominent layman but is also minority leader in the lower house of congress. The Baptist governors chosen were Cary A. Hardee, Florida; Clifford M. Walker, Georgia; Austin Peay, Tennessee; and Pat M. Neff, Texas. The United States Senators mentioned include Park M. Trammell, Florida, Walter F. George, Georgia, and J. W. Harrell, Oklahoma. Practically without exception, every Baptist man elected to high office is active in the work of his local church and the denomination generally. Many of them hold positions of responsibility in the denomination.

Obituary

MRS. R. J. TICHENOR

Mrs. R. J. Tichenor, widow of Dr. E. J. Tichenor, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. A. H. Beaver in Trinidad, Colo., Oct. 11, 1922. Her remains were taken to her former home at Lebanon, Ohio. She was born at Oxford, Ohio, Sept. 14, 1827, and was the daughter of Rev. Thomas Craven, a Baptist minister. She was a devoted member of the Baptist church from her childhood and was always deeply interested in every movement for the betterment of humanity. In her death as in her life she revealed the steadfast faith which she cherished in her Saviour.

Helpful Literature on Prayer

The topic for January in the promotional program is "Prayer." A folder is just being issued by the literature department of The General Board of Promotion which will be helpful. It is entitled, "The Book of Prayer Which Has Most Helped Me." It is made up of a symposium of suggestions by a number of pastors, business men and others, and is free for the asking. Other free literature available includes, "The Stewardship of Prayer" by Rev. F. E. Taylor, "The Daily Bible Readings" and "The Cycle of Prayer."

Special attention should also be called to "The Book of Remembrance." The purpose of having the topic "Prayer" for January is of course to establish habits of prayer, not for the month only but for the whole year. Nothing will help more than "The Book of Remembrance." It contains daily topics of prayer, covering the needs of all our denominational interests, local, state, national and foreign, and has the names of all our missionary workers at home and abroad. Pastors could not clinch more effectively their appeals to their churches for the strengthening of the prayer life than to secure a wide use of "The Book of Remembrance."

Every Member Attendance Campaign

all doors were closed for fifteen minutes while a motion picture or stereopticon lecture was being enjoyed. Thereafter the doors were opened and the late comers were let into their classes. Needless to say there was on the very first Sunday an unprecedented on-time attendance. All the classes above the second year primary were urged to attend, with their teachers, the special 11 a. m. preaching service. Following the special 6:30 p. m. B. Y. P. U. service there was at 7:45 a unique Sunday-school program which partook of the nature of the annual rally with promotions and exercises, as well as other special features. On this Sunday the key person in charge of the following announced interesting features of the programs of the week. Each of the eight weeks the programs were made and executed after this order. Most of the Sunday evening talent was secured from outside the membership. To these careful explanation was made as to what was desired and the response was most gracious and commendable.

The Profits

We cannot tabulate all of the results; they are too far-reaching, evasive, and immature, but there are some of which we can here speak. The attendance at Sunday school increased 39 per cent, at church worship 56, at prayer meeting 60, at senior B. Y. P. U. about 22, intermediate 120, and junior 270 per cent, an average of 94 per cent. Some of these were practically made anew by the campaign. Membership attendance at the 11 a. m. worship increased from one-third to three-fifths, and at evening from one-sixth to one-half. During the two months all but six of the resident members attended. Two of these were legitimately detained, one has come since, and we still have five months (till next May) to bring the others out and to get all to come to as many meetings as possible.

Some by-products: Finances increased 47 per cent over October and November of last year, and 117 per cent over September of this year, 65 per cent in plate offerings (loose collections) over that of October and November of last year, and 100 per cent over the plate offerings of September of this year.

While there was no special effort put forward to secure new members there were some who came and asked for admission. A new and most gratifying spiritual awakening and interest is in evidence.

The campaign has been a blessed experience, and we are now facing the question, "What next?" If you wish to avoid much anxiety and arduous work, never undertake such a campaign. But if you long to make your church a spiritual oasis where there is abundant life and grateful rejoicing, try this, and you may be rewarded some thirty, some sixty, and some a hundredfold.

What Do Your Church Members Know About Missions?

information most of our churches get is that it is not enough to count. We give a little dab of it now and then—especially when there is some financial goal ahead. But it is not very much because it is not continued long enough and is not systematic enough. I am not overlooking the growing number of churches that are reaching out for something more extensive. But the fact is, churches that have a continuous program of missionary information as an integral part of the year's plan are quite the exception. Members of the church have the right to expect to be taught God's missionary plan for the world, who our missionaries are and what they are doing, and how they can relate their own lives to God's world plan. And this information cannot be given in a few prayer meeting talks, an occasional Sunday-school lesson, or an indiscriminate handing out of a few leaflets. A solid grounding of the church in missionary knowledge, as a foundation for adequate participation in the program of Christ and the plans of the denomination, means a thorough course of training throughout the whole year and indeed for several years.

Into every church plan (does every church have a plan?) should go such a continuous program of missionary information. It need not be elaborate, but it should be continuous, on a par with evangelism, religious education and social fellowship. Not until a pastor and his associates grasp the prime necessity of such a plan—see that it is really fundamental and essential—will their church take full place in relation to Christ's world program.

Now for the second part of the two-fold plan. Take stock of the different groups in your church and the missionary knowledge possessed by each. If your church is thoroughly informed on mission all of the following classes should be informed, and a church-wide program of missionary information must include them all: (1) The pastor, (2) the deacons and other officers, (3) the teachers in the Sunday school, (4) the men, (5) the women, (6) the children and young people.

First of all the pastor must be informed. He ought to have had a good start on missionary information in the seminary, but unfortunately the seminaries do not give a very thorough missionary equipment to the prospective pastors. One must remember, too, that good many pastors have not attended theological seminary. In any case, the pastor needs up-to-date information. The missionary situation is changing, the problems of the missionary are different from what they were a decade or two ago and missionary methods have changed and developed. The pastor needs to know this changing missionary situation, and to know it in the concrete terms of Baptist missions and Baptist missionary Missions ought to be his familiar companion, and missionary books of varied character he should read frequently while among the subjects to which he will be giving solid study if he is a living progressive, growing man, will be son of the missionary themes suggested by his reading. The pastor surely needs a good large place in the plan of missionary information for the church.

Next the church officers must be provided for. Strange to say, we have not even much attention to the missionary training of church officers. But let a pastor remember that the success of the missionary program in his church depends a very large measure upon the quality of support given by the deacons and other officers—in other words, the kind of missionary leaders they are. The pastor is the key to the situation, but he can multiply his effectiveness many fold if he has around him a group of well-informed deacons. So the officers need information. The deacons' meeting is a fine place in which to give some of the instruction; for example, in the devotional service, in the discussion of the plans and objectives of the church, or in a series of talks by the pastor. A special officers' discussion group as in some churches helped in training the official leaders for their task.

The teachers in the Sunday school need missionary information. How else can they teach their pupils the great missionary message of the Bible? Strangely enough, a good many teachers forget that a teacher must be continually learning, and are content with what they learned long ago. To teach the teachers is a real problem, but a pastor must obviously include them in his plan for missionary information if his church is to be fully informed on missions. The superintendent is the key man here. The teachers' meeting or workers' conference may give the opportunity for missionary instruction or the teachers may be induced to read selected missionary books, or if the Bible school curriculum includes missionary themes, as it should, these may perhaps lead to the securing of proper missionary information. But by all means do not overlook the teachers. You will find in many cases they sorely need missionary information.

Then come the men—those who must provide most of the missionary funds, and who should naturally be the leaders in this big task of the church. Yet how remarkable that they are almost entirely overlooked in plans for missionary information and are consequently the poorest informed. Your church will not be a missionary church unless the men are adequately instructed in missions, and the success of our denominational missionary plans waits largely upon this. The men's brotherhood gives an opportunity for improving the situation, and a men's discussion group on some popular theme may meet during the week, perhaps on "church night," or the church literature secretary or a member of the literature committee can get selected missionary books into circulation. At any rate, put some real energy into efforts to inform the men.

The women are generally the only group in the church who are receiving much systematic missionary information. A good deal more can be done for them in most cases, but this part of the problem is relatively easy.

Last of all—first in potential importance—are the children and young people. The hope of the future is here. Strategically this is the place to lay the chief emphasis. C. W. C. and W. W. G. will help, but the principal educational effort should be in the Sunday school, and hardly any school has a curriculum in which missions has an adequate place as an integral part of the course. You will need to study the curriculum of your school to see that it is adequate on the missionary side. Study classes ought also to be organized for the young people, perhaps in connection with a "school of missions." We mention the children and young people last, but they are the ones first to be considered in plans for a church-wide program of missionary information.

The important thing in this part of the plan is a unified, inclusive program which shall take in all the various groups in the church. It may center about the home or foreign mission study topic for the year; or better, a thorough course may be outlined to run through several years. The essential thing is to have the plan.

The meaning of all that has been said is that there is a dearth of knowledge of the facts of missions, that this knowledge is fundamental to active interest, and that means and methods for disseminating the knowledge are at hand. How can any one be enlisted in an enterprise of which he has only vague knowledge? How many will know unless the interest and importance of the knowledge is shown and the way to the facts is pointed out? The "pointing out" is the business of the church—of the denominational experts first, and finally of the pastor. Given a real spiritual life, an informed church will be a missionary church. In these days God is hurling at us the facts of his world. What these facts are to mean for his great kingdom depends on the knowledge, vision, faithfulness and courage of the pastors of the churches.

Love, which is the law of the spiritual life, finds its way gently and quietly into millions of hearts dispelling darkness, doubt and fear, and shining into these hearts fellowship and heavenly service. In many Christian homes may be seen this form of quiet, loving service where parental solicitude takes form in all kinds of sacrifices for the welfare of the child. There is no effort at display or anxiety for publicity, and the matter is never reported to press committee of the social club.

A godly life is a benediction in any community, inspiring emulation on the part of those touched by it. It was said of Phillips Brooks that his face carried a message of peace and comfort to all who knew him. A merchant in his town was known to keep a photo of the great preacher in his office and when perplexed by business cares and worries he would go into his little office and stand for a while looking into the face of that picture and then return to his work with his own face illuminated.

Though absent from our friends we may have so lived and served that they will carry memories of us into the silent watches of life.

Breaking the 11th Commandment

From time immemorial the Russian peasant has had an Eleventh Commandment, almost as sacred to him as the Ten in the Decalogue of Moses.

"Thou shalt not let the bottom of thy granary be seen"

Stern necessity and periodic famines have compelled him to break this Commandment.

In millions of Russian homes this Commandment has been broken. Granaries are empty; food is gone; multitudes have perished; people have bartered their clothing and everything they had for food. Unless America helps, the death toll this winter will again reach staggering figures.

To help as many destitute sufferers as possible in Russia and other countries of Europe, is part of the program of the Foreign Mission Society for relief work in Europe during the present winter and next spring.

An opportunity will be given to every Baptist church and Sunday school to take a special offering on Sunday, January 21, 1923.

According to an agreement with the Near East Relief, this offering, unless specifically designated otherwise, will be divided between European Relief and Near East Relief.

Send checks to George H. Huntington, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City, or to your State Collecting Agent, plainly designated Relief Offering.

Timothy's Christmas Eve Man

The doctor beckoned to Timothy, and took him into the other room. He kissed Timothy and gave him some pills. "You'll be all right tomorrow, Timmy dear," he said, "God bless you!"

And an hour later the doctor stopped at our house to tell mother about the Christmas Eve Man. "He's all made over!" he said, "he's cured! It was melancholia, and Timothy changed his whole point of view. Timothy brought him Christmas!"

Do you wonder we love our dear little brother? Or that the Christmas Eve Man brought him a brand new sled the day after Christmas?

Our Book Shelf

Yellow Butterflies, by Mary Raymond Shipman Andrews. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. 75 cents.

The story is dedicated to "Those Americans who gave in the Great War even more than life—to the blinded." An exquisite bit of literature breathing of hope and immortality.

The Community Church, by Albert Clay Zumbrennen. Chicago: The University of Chicago Press.

The book considers denominational unity and some of the things that show a trend in that direction. In detail it discusses the rise, types and activities of community churches.

Crannell's Pocket Lessons for 1923. Philadelphia: The Judson Press. 35 cents.

Crannell's Pocket Lessons is now in its sixth year. It contains the Bible text for all of the international Sunday school lessons for 1923, with references, daily Bible readings and analyses. Vest-pocket size. About 200 pages clearly printed on good opaque paper. Size 2½x5½ inches. Bound in cloth.

The Gist of the Lesson, by R. A. Torrey. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. 35 cents.

This gives the lesson text in full, an exposition of it, and notes changes in the revised version. It also gives prayer meeting topics. It is a vest-pocket edition in cloth binding.

The World Through Mother's Glasses and Other Poems, by Emma L. Miller. Los Angeles: A. K. Tate & Son. $1.10.

A collection of poems grouped under the headings missionary, family, Palestine and miscellaneous. The dedication is "To the great body of splendid alumnae of the Baptist Missionary Training School the world over," and the profits from the sale of the book will go to the rest fund for the missionaries of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary societies. Many who knew Miss Miller and her work as a missionary will desire the book because of its associations as well as to help on the cause which is an incentive for the publication of the poems in this form. The book may be purchased from the Baptist Literature Bureau, 504 Columbia Bldg., 313 West Third St., Los Angeles, Cal.

The Altar Steps, by Compton Mackenzie. New York: George H. Doran Co. $2.

The first one hundred pages or so of this novel of Anglican church life are quite readable. The reader then gradually perceives that the book is an unblushing apologetic for the Anglo-Catholic movement,—mass, confessional, altar for the dead, and all the rest of the Romish phantasmagoria affected by the high church party. Why so excellent a house as Doran ever consented to publish it is beyond us. The major portion of the book is tawdry and even nauseating, both in its literary form and its monkish nonsense. One startling line suffices to indicate its qualities. A young squire keeping his shameful assignation with a rector's sister finds her in the grip of a penitential mood inspired by a stone image of Mary Magdalene over a church door. In a rage he climbed up to strike the image in the face and hurl it to the ground; "but the effort he made to overthrow the saint carried him with it; his foot catching in the ivy he fell head downward and striking upon a stone was killed." From this point on the book grows steadily worse through another 200 pages. A purposed caricature on the Anglo-Catholic movement could not have been more effective than this naive apology.

The Spiritual Messages of The Miracles, by Rev. George Henry Hubbard. Boston: Pilgrim Press. $2.

In this unpretentious book is a mine of material. The forty chapters cover 333 pages of lean type. One could wish that a book of such value did not have the appearance of an "undersized book." It is just what the title says it is—the spiritual messages of the miracles. No attempt is made to discuss the critical or controversial aspects of the subject, but fine discrimination between the miracle story and its moral purpose is to be found on every page. To one accustomed to Trench or Bruce on the miracles, this little book brings a sense of relief. It is scholarly, modern in spirit and fresh as an ocean breeze. The young preacher may discover here, in excellent form, the preaching value of the New Testament miracle stories.

The Victory Over Victory, by John A. Hutton. New York: George H. Doran. $1.75.

Friends of Dr. Hutton will welcome this new volume of sermons, which reveal the soul of the "greatest preacher in Britain." In these sermons one is permitted to counsel with a master in things of the spirit. "He searches like a surgeon and heals like a physician." The grim facts of life are not blinked at, but treated seriously with that illumination of thought that shows the way out. A few ingenious handlings of subjects and texts are found in, "How a Smile of God Lights up the World," "Helping a Man on to His Own Conclusions," and "A Little Drama." The moral passion of a prophet breathes in every sermon.

"It Is to Laugh"

A little girl was told that polite people did not talk about their ailments in company, or outside of the family. So when a visitor asked her if she was well, she said, "Well, in the family, I have a stomach ache and other childish ailments. In company I am quite well, thank you."

The politest man was hurrying along the street when another man, also in violent haste, rushed out of a doorway and the two collided.

The second man looked mad, while the polite man, taking off his hat, said, "My dear sir, I don't know which of us is to blame for this violent encounter, but I am in too great a hurry to investigate. If I ran into you, I beg your pardon; if you ran into me, don't mention it."

And he tore away with redoubled speed.

A traveler rushed up to a stranger on a railway station as the train was about to start, and asked:

"Are you going on this train?"

"I am," was the reply.

"Well, my friend," said the traveler, you might do me a favor. I have two big trunks, and they always make me pay extra for one of them. Would you mind taking one? It will cost you nothing."

"But I haven't a ticket!" said the stranger.

"I thought you said you were going by this train?" exclaimed the traveler.

"Yes I am!" was the answer. "I'm one of the company's inspectors!"

Benedicite Omnia Opera.....Martin
God said, Behold I Have Given You.....Calver

The Martin opus is specifically Episcopalian—service music—a chant anthem, well-written, strictly choral in form. Of more practical value to our Baptist services is the other title, a brilliant anthem for harvest or general use. It needs a good choir, capable of ample volume and sympathetic shading; at such hands it would be a most effective number.

Five new songs of splendid potency for the concert platform or for the studio. They are well-written, finely conceived melodically, richly harmonized—songs of fine distinction. They will merit and receive wide use.

From The Rodeheaver Co., Chicago.

Rodeheaver's Plantation Melodies.

Choirs and vocal ensembles will welcome these old-time tunes as set by this great evangelistic singer. He has arranged some fifty of the finest of the old Negro melodies for mixed chorus; and while he has quite evidently striven for the utmost simplicity of statement, there will be found many fine opportunities for choral and solo effects. This reviewer is grateful to him for one thing preeminently: the simplicity and directness of these folk-tunes have not been submerged in a flood of modern chromatic harmonies until the pristine beauty of the originals has been smothered in a whirl of foreign sophisticated additions. Here are the old tunes, burnished for use, but not gilded. Choirs will welcome this volume; it will afford golden material for special services and choir concerts.

From the White-Smith Publishing Co. Boston, Mass.

Just as I am.....Danks-Harts
Just as I am.....Danks
Dreams of GalileeMorrison
Where Wild Judea Stretches Far.....Sloughton

The first two titles are different arrangements of the same work—the first listed is a four-part version for mixed voices, the other a duet for soprano and alto. The music is simple in structure and content. The Morrison number is a duet for soprano and tenor, of the like type as the Danks title. The final title is another of the colorful, exotic, somewhat invertebrate organ pieces turned out in profusion by this composer. It will interest even on a small organ; it will be more valuable as service music than much of his work; in other words, it is closer akin to the conventional than much of this composer's product.

THE ART OF ENUNCIATION

Judging from the number and sincerity of the letters sent this department of THE BAPTIST, the enunciation and pronunciation of our noble language as used by the soloists and chorus-singers in the church services is a real, live matter of interest, and rightfully so. Very few singers realize the close connection between the fine art of singing and the perfection of elegant, distinct speech. Too little attention is paid this vital art-element by the teachers of voice; but this attitude will certainly alter when the public decides that it will have text as well as a string of vowelized tones. A few days ago I ran across the following letter from Jessie Smith Beagles to a New York musical journal, Musical America, and reproduce it in these columns for its pertinence along this line:

"I have studied with three splendid teachers, and now, when I look back on my years of study and think of the hours and hours that are spent in vocal studios teaching the pupils to pronounce the consonants with the lips and tip of the tongue, it seems to me that this should be taught in the public schools right along with the letter sounds as they are taught today.

"I have a small boy in the first grade so I visit the school frequently and when I hear the teacher giving the sounds for l, n, t, d, r, how I wish she would tell the children to make them with the tip of the tongue and the sounds for m, p, b, etc., with the lips. What would it not mean to future singers and public speakers to say nothing of every-day conversation?

"I am sure this suggestion would be welcomed by the teachers, for when I spoke of it to my boy's teacher, she was very much interested and asked me if I would help her, not only for her teach-

A Choir Member's Creed

I BELIEVE in the worship of God.
I believe in the church of Jesus Christ.

I believe my own church has a real place in this community.

I believe music may be made a large factor in real worship.

As Christ came not to be ministered unto but to minister, so

I believe those who can minister in the music of the church should do it.

BECAUSE—

I believe in the efficacy of the ministry of song and, because I have been selected by persons in authority to assist in this service,

I believe it my duty to be faithful in the preparation of the musical service as a part of the worship of the church.

I believe this duty includes prompt and regular attendance at rehearsals and services and if obliged to absent myself notice should be sent to choir officers promptly.

I believe the best service I can give is none too good and therefore I pledge to do my very best to make the ministry of song in this church count in the largest way possible.

—Edward T. Clissold.

ing but for her own sake, as she said her throat fairly ached after teaching all day and she realized that she contracted the back of her tongue and throat muscles but didn't know how to overcome it. I know from experience that one can read aloud for hours without tiring the throat if he uses the tip of the tongue and lips as he is trained to do for singing.

"I do hope that some one with a far-reaching influence like yourself will become interested in this and bring it before the educators of the country.

"If we could eliminate the guttural and nasal sounds from our speech who could say that our language is not musical?"

Topics for Prayer Week

Let us pray—For the recovery of home religion and the practice of family prayer.

For the restoring of reverence by which love is purged of passion and base caprice.

For the capture by Christ of the student mind and a new recognition of him as Leader and Friend of youth.

For the uplifting of ambition in youth from the spirit of gain into a spirit of service.

For increased efficiency in Sunday schools: that the church may lay the burden of the young upon her heart to bring them to God.

HOME MISSIONS

Scripture readings—Isaiah 60:1-5, 18-22; John 15:1-17; Ephes. 3:14-21; 1 Cor. 1:18-31.

Let us pray—That the church may make a fresh discovery of Jesus Christ, and be delivered from lukewarmness into a spirit of daring and loyalty up to the point of sacrifice.

That Christian men and masters may witness for Christ in business and industrial life.

That Christ may become real to his church as in the early days and find the same response of utter surrender.

That work among those of other races may not be hindered by past prejudices; that the spirit of Christ's sympathy and yearning love may replace ancient hostilities.

For patience to wait God's leisure in results, and zeal that knows no tiring; for deliverance from material values in results; for a new sense of our own resources in Christ and faith to use them; for a love which refuses to be content with an individual or national salvation.

Thrift and the Collection Box

WHEN the industrial department of the Y. M. C. A. started National Thrift Week, it tied the plan up with Poor Richard's birthday, Jan. 17. No better patron saint could have been chosen because, as Benjamin Franklin saw it, thrift was much more than economy. It was not only starting a bank account, it was starting an adventure. Thrift for Franklin did not end with his own house or business. It never lost sight of other people's business. What he considered one of his best investments was a loan to a needy acquaintance. He made the loan with the understanding that it was not to be repaid to him but passed on to some one else in need. Years later that little sum of money was still passing from hand to hand helping folks in want and in time giving them the chance to help some one else.

Thrift Week is a good name, for thrift means making the most of what one has. In the mind of its organizers the aim of the week is to bring before young people the principles that underlie an all-around life, that make good citizens, good neighbors and generous sharers of prosperity. Each day of the week, Jan. 16-23, has its special topic with Sunday, the twenty-first as "Share-With-Others Day."

The value of this annual campaign has proved itself in former years so that it has now warm friends in the heads of schools, banks, merchant associations, chambers of commerce, and all sorts of community and business organizations.

Bankers of Detroit were the first to invite the school children and their teachers to visit the banks and learn what they do and how they do it. Some 200,000 children were taken through their local banks last year, and since the number of people who do not understand the use of banks is menacingly large, it is hoped the plan will be widely followed this year. The president of the American Bankers' Association, J. H. Puelicher, in commending the campaign lifts the idea beyond that of mere saving, or "getting on in the world," into the realm of good citizenship and dependableness. He writes:

"Thrift and saving, expressed in a savings account, in the ownership of a home, in the possession of adequate insurance for the protection of those in the home, are so closely related to good citizenship, that the desire for these possessions should be deeply implanted in the hearts of our people."

Dr. Alvah S. Hobart, pastor of Warburton Avenue Church, Yonkers, is active in arousing public sentiment against the Ku Klux Klan. The public press has been giving considerable space to his open letters on the subject.

INSIDE AND OUTSIDE

Northern Baptists have gathered more than a million pupils into the Sunday School, but twenty-seven million children of school age are uncared for by any evangelical church.

Churches need help in securing and training teachers for the work of the Sunday School. For this training work, the American Baptist Publication Society cooperates with State Conventions and City Unions in maintaining a Director of Religious Education, and a headquarters staff of educational experts.

Last year the Society's workers held 1500 training institutes for Sunday school teachers, and assisted in 30 Baptist Summer Assemblies, reaching 10,000 young people in study courses.

The work of the Sunday school was supplemented by 800 vacation schools. Thousands of boys and girls from families not ordinarily reached by a Baptist church, were attracted to these vacation schools.

This Religious Educational work is seriously curtailed for lack of funds. We need to help the Sunday school work of New American groups, of our Negro brethren, of European and Asiatic churches, strengthen the summer training schools, increase the number of vacation schools and initiate week-day schools. This is impossible without additional financial support.

The Mission of Baptists

IN the providence of God, the Baptists have been raised up. If he feeds the fowls of the air, notices the falling of a sparrow, counts the hairs on the heads of his people and clothes with beauty the lily of the valley, he certainly is not regardless of the growth and influence of a religious denomination, numbering millions. Whether their origin and progress are to be traced to the folly and fickleness of men, or to the truth, grace, and overruling care of God, they are, doubtless, destined to perform an important part in the concerns of the world. Their rise, advancement and struggles; their persecutions, sufferings and perils; their numbers, resources and prospects all point in this direction.

• God has called us to a great work; has opened to us a wide sphere of usefulness; has committed to our hands a laborious task; has laid upon us weighty obligations; and if we would fulfill our glorious mission, we must be wide-awake and active. All our energies, all our gifts, all our resources and all our influence, are demanded in the fulfillment of our task. The world is opposed to us. Our progress must be made against a strong current, and by continual and vigorous efforts. We should heal our divisions, consolidate our ranks and present to our opponents an unbroken front. Our operations should be concentrated or isolated, as may best promote our Redeemer's cause. Let us have no squeamishness about "proselyting." It is our vocation. To "proselyte" sinners to Christ, and believers to the whole system of divine truth, is our solemn mission. We should seek to convert the whole world to Baptist principles, not by any sophistry, or any motives addressed to vanity or selfishness, but by a kind, honest and earnest exhibition of God's truth. By this course, whether we are successful or unsuccessful in the diffusion of our sentiments, we shall merit and receive the praise of keeping the ordinances as they were delivered by the apostles, and "so an entrance shall be ministered unto" us "abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ." Amen.

—J. B. Jeter, 1867

Fresh from the Field

Sunday, Dec. 24, the Baptist churches of Portland, Maine, held their first united service. The Free Street Church abandoned its morning service and its pastor, Rev. B. S. Hudson, preached the sermon before the united congregation.

Rev. Elisha M. Lake and Mrs. Lake were in Palestine at the time they sent out their Christmas greetings to friends in this country. Mr. and Mrs. Lake are spending the year abroad, having sailed immediately upon the close of their work in Springfield, Mass.

Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts, for twenty-eight years superintendent of the international reform bureau, died in Washington, Dec. 27, at the age of seventy-three. He was a familiar figure in congressional lobbies and committee rooms for many years. He was always outspoken in his opposition to all forms of vice.

Rev. G. N. Gardner, former secretary of the Nevada-Sierra Baptist Convention, has resigned the pastorate of the First Baptist Church of Pocomoke City, Md., and has accepted a call to the Second Church of Cumberland in the same state. He will assume his duties there Jan. 1. During Mr. Gardner's pastorate in Pocomoke City more than sixty have united with the church, thirty-four of these by baptism.

The First Church of Covington, Ky., has installed two moving picture machines with stereopticon. The church will present on ten successive Friday nights special pictures suited for church meetings. The pastor, Rev. L. L. Henson, is assisting the church in a series of evangelistic meetings in Hillsboro, Ohio, in which all the churches in the town unite.

Dr. Gilbert N. Brink, general secretary of the Publication Society, has returned to his office and taken up the reins of active leadership in connection with the work of the society. Not only the society but the denomination at large has suffered through the illness of Dr. Brink and now rejoice in the measure of health which makes it possible for him to take up his active work again.

The Free Street Church of Portland, Maine, in taking formal notice of the resignation of its pastor, Rev. B. S. Hudson, desires to give expression through the press of the service he has rendered to the church, the community and to the denominational and interdenominational work of the state. A lengthy testimonial treating in detail this service was prepared by a special committee and unanimously approved by the church. He was earnest in his promotion of the plan for the union of the Free Street Church and the First Free Baptist Church, the realization of which is now being consummated.

Dr. O. C. Wright, executive secretary of the Oregon Convention writes concerning the destructive fire at Astoria in December. He says that it is probably the most destructive fire in the history of Oregon. Thirty blocks in the business section were burned. Rev. E. A. Gottberg deserves much credit for his service in saving the Baptist church building from destruction by fire, although the building was considerably damaged by the dynamiting of nearby structures. Our Baptist families have suffered the loss of property as well as the loss of opportunity for work. The Oregon Convention through its secretary made a special appeal to the Oregon churches for a Christmas offering for the church at Astoria. Astoria is the oldest town in the Northwest and the property loss to the city will approximate $20,000,000.

The Broadway Church of Providence, R. I., held a memorial service in honor of its former pastor Rev. L. A. Clevenger who was suddenly stricken by death Nov. 13. Dr. Clevenger served the church for seven years and made for himself a place in the affections of the people of the church and vicinity. Suitable resolutions were passed by the congregation. Rev. G. C. S. MacKay is pastor of the church.

Mrs. J. R. Hopley, wife of Senator Hopley of Ohio, died Dec. 16 at Bucyrus, Ohio. She was formerly state president of the Ohio federation of woman's clubs. She was the author of the amendment to the constitution of Ohio permitting women to serve on all boards of the state, county, township or city where the interests of women and children are concerned. Previous to her marriage she was a teacher for over three years in the Chicago mission kindergartens and later an instructor at Shephardson College, Granville. She was active in the First Church of her home city.

The Baker Avenue Church, Great Bend, Kan., Rev. C. E. Hanes, pastor, recently completed the construction of a $35,000 church building. A series of evangelistic meetings led up to the dedication on Dec. 17. Rev. L. D. Lamkin and Rev. F. L. Rose assisted in these meetings. Twenty-four persons have already been baptized and eleven others have been received as candidates for baptism. The church building is one of the best in western Kansas. Rev. J. T. Crawford of Topeka preached the dedicatory sermon.

Mr. Frank E. Avery, chairman of the pulpit committee of the First Church of Peoria, Ill., writes: "I have been connected with the church about fifty years and while the church regrets very much the resignation of Dr. Hazen, yet it cannot help but rejoice with him in his opportunity. We are in perfect harmony and wish to secure a new pastor to take his place. Never in my experience of half century have we been in the prosperous condition and ready to cooperate as at the present time."

The City Park Church, Denver, is a suburban church of about 300 members, a large number being children and young people. In the light of this fact an item in a recent issue of the church calendar.

1361 BENEFICIARIES

In addition to cooperating with Baptist ministers and missionaries in providing for retiring pensions, larger than could otherwise be obtainable, the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of the Northern Baptist Convention is today making grants to 1,300 beneficiaries.

This is in harmony with the object of the Board, as stated in its Act of Incorporation in 1913: •

"The objects of the corporation shall be to administer its funds for the benefit of worthy Baptist ministers and Baptist missionaries, their wives or widows, and their dependent children."

The Board has no debt. Nevertheless, ordinary justice requires an increase not only in the number but also in the amounts of the grants made to old and broken ministers and missionaries.

THEY GAVE THEIR BEST.
CAN WE DO LESS?

It requires the income of a fund of $6,000 invested at five per cent in order to make possible a single annual grant of $300.

They Need Salt

"It seems a desperate task to get my people to subscribe for any Baptist paper. I have urged them repeatedly to take THE BAPTIST and Missions. Have you anything to suggest?" The words of this pastor might have come from a hundred other men. It is a hard task. It is not a hopeless one. It has been said that you can lead a horse to water but you cannot make him drink. That may be true but you can salt the horse. Why spend time trying to make him drink when a little salt will make him want to drink? It is just as futile to urge people to take certain journals in which they have no interest. They need "salt." We know of scores of pastors who know how to use "salt."

THE BAPTIST an Educational Institution

"Permit me to congratulate you on the splendid paper you are issuing. I am personally gratified, for I believe that the denomination needs the organ and you are filling the need more and more adequately. You have made a splendid triumph thus far financially. Nothing would please me more than to have THE BAPTIST self-supporting and I see no reason why it should not be; although it would not disappoint me if it were not, for it performs an educational function and no educational institution is self-supporting. I believe a rightly conducted denominational journal is as strictly educational as a college or a seminary; of course I mean in the material work."—Pres. Milton G. Evans.

The Ideal Subscriber

How dear to the heart the steady good member
Who pays in advance at the birth of each year;
Who lays down the money and does it quite gladly,
And casts round the office the halo of cheer.

Of our paper she never says stop it; I cannot afford it,
I'm getting more magazines now than I read;
In fact we all think it a help and a need.

How welcome her check when it reaches our sanctum,
How it makes our pulse throb, how it makes our heart dance;
We outwardly thank her, we inwardly bless her,
The steady good member who pays in advance.

—The Druid.

Why?

Dr. H. K. Carroll in a discussion of the denominational newspaper situation says: "That the Baptist press should have less than half a million average circulation among nearly 8,000,000 communicants, notwithstanding the fact that their attachment to denominational doctrine, principles and practices is tenacious and their denominational loyalty intense, is a phenomenon for which I can offer no explanation."

We will give six months' subscription to THE BAPTIST for the best answer. Three months' for second best.

World Survey Number II

The World Survey Number suggests the story of the Genie in the bottle. Its rich material, covering nearly the whole globe, refuses to be confined within the space that can be allowed in one issue. It has burst the bounds and will be continued next week in a second World Survey Number.

is of unusual interest. "Pledges to the New World Movement during the month ending Dec. 13 amounted to $392.71. The contributions of our church for missions and Christian education since May 1, 1920, (31 months) have reached a grand total of $30,000. Let us keep up a good record for prompt payments." The clerk of the church, Mr. John Hipp, says, "For several years tithing literature has been generously circulated in our church. Our minister, Rev. W. R. Schoemaker, frequently preaches on stewardship and while I am not able to give the exact number of tithers, I know it is very large for our membership and that it is the secret of our success."

Miss Mary Berkeley, after a life devoted to Christian service, died Dec. 19, at the age of seventy-six at her home in Portland, Ore. She taught in early life in the public schools of Marietta, Ohio, and Salt Lake City, but for the past fifteen years she served under the Woman's Home Mission Society as a teacher among the Chinese of Portland. In that city her memory will be cherished by hundreds of Chinese who have been inspired by her life and many of whom through her have found the Christ.

Mr. F. Taylor Gurney, of the Woodlawn Church, Chicago, is teaching in the American high school, Teheran, Persia. This school is carried on by the board of foreign missions of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Gurney sailed from New York with a missionary party Aug. 26. The trip, including four days in England, occupied ten weeks and two days, but a letter from him received recently at his home came through in thirty-two days. From Bagdad, Mesopotamia, to Cairo, Egypt, it came by air mail. What would Abraham the patriarch have thought of that?

The First Church of Linton, Ind., presented its pastor, Rev. D. Heitmeyer, with a latest model Underwood typewriter at the close of the service Sunday night, Dec. 24. The pastor's wife was given a floor lamp, and the daughter a string of pearls. The first Sunday in December marked the completion of the third year of Mr. Heitmeyer's pastorate. During the time the membership has been increased by about one third and now numbers over 500. All departments have prospered. Plans are on foot for an enlarged program for the coming year.

The Berkeley Divinity School has just closed the first semester. The second semester opens Jan. 15. Dr. D. J. Harris of Evanston, Ill., a warm personal friend of President Hill and of the school has made it possible by a special gift to add another man to the faculty. The man selected is Rev. Arthur S. Phelps, M. A., D. D., so well and favorably known both in the East and the West through his work as pastor in Waterville, Maine, Los Angeles and San Francisco. He will offer courses in public speaking and the English Bible. Dr. Phelps holds three degrees from Yale University and is an accomplished speaker, a versatile author, lecturer and preacher.

Tuskegee Institute has promoted the holding of schools and conferences among the scattered families of Alabama and then of Georgia where groups of people from a radius of ten miles could gather to learn to do practical pieces of work in which everybody should be concerned. This idea has been taken by the board of home missions and church extension of the Methodist Episcopal church in co-operation with Gammon Theological Seminary which has held a summer school for 110 Negro ministers, brought together from the small towns and county districts of North Carolina, South Carolina, Geor-

The Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention, Incorporated 1920, succeeding the American Baptist Education Society, Constituted in Washington, D. C. in 1888.

Baptist Educational Institutions in the Northern States

There are nine theological seminaries with 880 students, 100 teachers, buildings valued at $1,402,484 and an endowment of $4,449,127.

There are seven training schools with 239 students, 75 teachers, buildings $735,000, and an endowment of $116,348.

There are twenty-two universities and colleges with 25,411 students, 1,166 teachers, buildings valued at $39,789,720 and an endowment of $66,796,830.

There are six junior colleges with 1,447 students, 151 teachers, buildings valued at $2,575,060 and an endowment of $329,025.

There are twenty academies with 3,181 students, 251 teachers, buildings valued at $4,781,120 and an endowment of $2,078,088.

There are a total of sixty-four schools with 31,151 students with 1,743 teachers with buildings valued at $48,783,893 and an endowment of $73,769,418.

"The future of the Christian college is now assured. If the college has sufficient equipment and income to give a good education it need have no fear for the future. The demand for its service is demonstrated.

"The Christian forces in America are now squarely facing a definite issue. We have long professed our belief that besides the system of state education there must be a system of Christian education sufficiently strong to make a compelling impression upon the state system. That system is now developing so rapidly that unless the Christian system is greatly strengthened it cannot possibly exert an influence sufficiently strong to affect the moral and religious standards of the state schools."

gia, Alabama, Florida, Tennessee, Mississippi and Virginia. Through these ministers thousands of the rural population in these eight states will be reached and taught better methods concerning their daily living. Classes in orcharding have been held, classes in the preservation of eggs, classes in nursing and classes in farm mechanics, which really means how to build a hen house and a shanty. They have learned how to spray fruit trees and how and why to "swat the fly." Teaching in the formal manner has been supplemented by the actual doing of various things by each member of the class.

In the proposed budget for 1923 of the First Church, Seattle, the items total $60,136. This budget has been recommended to the church.

Des Moines University enrolled 168 students in its Bible classes last term. All of these received college credit. It was to accept the position as head of this new department that Dr. Howland Hanson resigned his pastorate at Morgan Park Chicago, a little more than a year ago.

At the Ontario and Quebec convention a stewardship committee was appointed and instructed to push stewardship in the convention for the coming year. A series of conferences have been arranged, the first being held in Toronto. About 100 men representing nearly fifty churches met in the chapel of McMaster University. Dr. Harry S. Myers of the General Board of Promotion was the speaker.

In the church calendar of the First Church, Baldwinsville, N. Y., the pastor Rev. J. L. Coote, says: "I became a Baptist by conviction; I remain a Baptist by choice. My parents were Presbyterians, devoted to the Bible as the word of God. By its clear teaching, the precious example of our Saviour, and his explicit command, I became and remain what I am. I believe in the Bible as the supreme rule and guide for faith and practice. I believe in the local church, loyal and responsible to Jesus Christ as head, and in the presence and guidance of the Holy Spirit. I believe the church is in the world as salt to preserve, light to guide love to enrich; life to make new; and the bride to make ready. Where the commands are plain we should obey; where the silences are inferential we should be charitable; in all things humble as a pattern of good works."

The natural resources of Utah seem almost inexhaustible. Rev. Henry Jacobs Baptist pastor in Salt Lake City, states that in the Pinto Iron Springs district there are now known by measurements to be 13,058,900 tons of iron ore, that more than 400,000,000 tons of iron are in the Iron County field and that the government estimate of coal in the Carbon Emery field exceeds 80,000,000,000 tons. In Bing ham the greatest copper enterprise in the world exists, where the top of an entire mountain is being removed, and in Marysville, in southern Utah, are said to be the greatest potash deposits in the world. Here is a place where people will live and make money. The population of Utah is about 450,000. Approximately 100,000 of these are non-Mormons and about 10,000 of these 100,000 are professing Christian and members of Protestant Christian churches. This Protestant evangelistic force, therefore, is relatively small and faces many discouragements in the prosecution of its work. Fortunately there are friendly relationships and close cooperation between the Christians of different denominations. The territory of Utah is allocated to the responsibility of single denominations, thus removing competition and crowding in these different areas. However, there is need of very much more mission work and of churches and schools maintained by Protestant Christians.

The Baptist

A World Baptist Commonwealth

CAN any Baptist fail of a thrill as he opens this number of THE BAPTIST with its messages direct from the Baptist bodies dispersed throughout all the world? There is now no continent and scarcely a country without them, from the Americas North and South through Europe to mysterious Africa, vast and forbidding Asia, Australia and the islands dotting the seas. Often organized in great general bodies numbering hundreds of thousands or even several millions each, but elsewhere represented by general bodies of but a few thousand in some great nation, elsewhere still they exist only as disjunct local bodies, often not even aware of the existence of the vast host of ten millions which hold with them to essentially the same truths.

In his recent lectures before the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary, Dr. A. H. Newman, the world-famous church historian, said that if there were anywhere an apostolic succession of Baptist churches reaching back without a break to the first century it would doubtless be found through the Paulicians who, taking a Judaistic rather than a Pauline type of Christianity and being long segregated in the mountainous valleys of Armenia, continued through the early centuries, reaching into Southeastern Europe in the middle ages, and were probably the source of various pre-Protestant sects, such as the Bogomils, Albigenses, Waldenses and the Anabaptists, and, in large part, of the Reformation in the sixteenth century. Dr. Newman thought that Baptists should interest themselves in the Paulicians still found in Armenia today, since they repudiate Rome and insist on believer's baptism, even though in certain respects they may be rather far from Baptist views. This attitude of the distinguished southern professor, representing the "most straitest sect" of the Baptists, raises the question as to the latitude and longitude of the Baptist position; as to how widely the principle of denominational inclusion may reach; as to what general recognition may be given to bodies of Baptists with whom perhaps we might not be able to hold close and continuous relationship; and as to where we reach the clear limits of the Baptist faith, unless indeed there be no limits and no right to ask a Baptist preacher or teacher to define in any way his faith.

But we shall not enter into these questions. The Paulicians are not knocking at our doors, and even the apostle Paul is having his credentials scanned. In this World Survey number we wish to indicate the great principles held in common by the many Baptist bodies far sundered in space or in details of belief or in both;

to set forth our agreements rather than our differences; our unity rather than our diversities.

Negatively, it may be said that Baptists everywhere and always repudiate sacerdotalism, the view of the ministry as a priesthood with the power of forgiving sins or consigning to perdition, and the power of miraculously transforming bread and wine into the literal body and blood of Christ. They repudiate also the hierarchical system, which limits salvation to membership in a great world church, with its ranks of officials culminating in bishops or a pope, and its claim to unbroken apostolic succession.

Positively, Baptists stand for the authority of the New Testament instead of that of pope, councils, or creeds. At the last Northern Baptist Convention this position was reaffirmed, and if a minority seemed to dissent it was doubtless only because they felt the need of some pronouncement as to what Baptists believed the New Testament to teach. At any rate the Northern Baptists have reaffirmed the historic acceptance of the authority of the New Testament, a belief which, in a truer sense than that of old Vincent of Lerins, has among Baptists been held everywhere, always and by everybody.

And, just as unanimously, Baptists hold to the principle of a personal religious experience as pre-requisite to baptism and church membership. Not the sacramental act of a priest can convey saving grace to a soul; not the authority of a prince can determine the religion of his subjects; not even the tender solicitude of a parent for his child can replace that personal choice of each soul for itself of Christ and righteousness.

And there is the principle of the absolutely separate spheres of church and state which marks the Baptist belief more consistently than that of any other body of Christians. Everywhere intensely loyal to country and forming an invaluable element in citizenship, they yet ask no patronage from the state and allow no dictation from it in matters religious.

Other characteristic Baptist beliefs spring from these, but enough have been named to show a splendid wealth of common principle—to constitute a world-wide and age-long Baptist Commonwealth.

We seem to see the Baptist hosts standing rank on rank throughout the world. They are of divers races and tongues; among them are the prosperous and the poor, scholars and the unlearned, statesmen and the low castes and outcasts of India. They are not of one blood but of one spirit, for they "are all one in Christ Jesus." These great principles of the faith are enunciated in their hearing:

No sacerdotalism.

No hierarchy.

The New Testament our authority.

A regenerate church membership.

The separation of church and state.

Baptists of Great Britain are these your principles? "Aye!" Baptists of France? "Aye!" Germany "Aye!" Sweden "Aye!" Russia? "Aye!" Czecho-Slovakia? "Aye!" China? "Aye!" Japan? "Aye!" The Philippines? "Aye!" Canadian Baptists? "Aye!" Spanish American Baptists? "Aye!" Southern Baptists? "Aye!" Negro Baptists? "Aye, Hallelujah!" Northern Baptists? "Aye! Aye!"

The World Survey

THIS number and the one which follows next week will have a brief word concerning the work on practically all of the fields in which Baptists are engaged. As one reads the reports from every corner of the globe he receives first an impression of the wide diversity in our work and, second an appreciation of the wonderful unity of our people in spirit and purpose. It will from the nature of the case be impossible to deal with these reports in detail. There are, however, some observations which should be recorded.

In the first place, one is clearly conscious of the far-reaching effect due to necessary curtailment. There is no word of complaint. The fact, however, of the 25 per cent reduction in the budgets of all our cooperating organizations furnishes the background for the reports. It is an element in the atmosphere which all the workers breathe. The bounds of the financial situation are back where the most obscure native worker is ministering—here a native pastor may be obliged to give more time to making his living with his hands and therefore less to pastoral work; there a Bible woman has been discontinued; over there is a station where for months and years they have prayed and waited for additional help. In this land are the young men and women fully equipped and ready to go. They must remain at home indefinitely and the missionaries must continue to do double service at the risk of their lives. A hospital is without a physician and another has an overworked force and an illy equipped building. In our great cities important lines of work have been suspended and workers dropped. In our various states the retrenchment has meant in scores of cases the cutting off of the few dollars which spell the difference between a church with a pastor and a pastorless church, and that difference is vital. This is observation number one.

We take another look and we understand that the deplorable condition described above is not all loss. The Lord Jehovah is not dead. The present year like the last promises to be one of rich ingathering into our churches at home and abroad. Hundreds of thousands during the past year have been baptized in the name of Christ. Churches left shepherdless have been possessed of a revival spirit. The Lord has been their shepherd. When the arm of flesh failed the arm of the Lord was revealed. It has been made perfectly clear that while financial support is essential, it is not the all-essential. Just so much money does not necessarily equal just so much blessing. A new spirit of dependence upon the Lord is to be seen in the reports of our workers in this and other lands. This is observation number two.

Perhaps no greater inspiration will come to one as he reads these pages of reports than that which is received from the knowledge of the growing spirit of independence in our churches in foreign lands and among foreign-speaking peoples in our own land. In some of the foreign fields a larger percentage of Baptist churches are self-supporting than in some of our old settled states in America. More and more the burden of evangelizing the foreign lands will rest upon the churches now inherent in the soil of other lands. Even now the work of our missionaries is largely that of supervision, training and counselling of native workers. The day is coming, and in some lands it is coming apace, when the active leadership will be the native leadership.

In our work here among foreign groups there are the same signs of hope. Read the story of the Polish Baptists, for example. In their recent conference they set aside no mean sum of money, when their numbers are considered, in the expectation of sending some of their own members to help evangelize war-torn and priest-ridden Poland. It warms one's blood to read the reports of these foreign groups, which show clearly the power of the Gospel to remake their lives.

As one reads, the feeling becomes overwhelming that we must finish the task we have begun at home. We have set our hands to a plow; we dare not turn back. The spirit that moved upon the hearts of our people at Denver was the spirit of God. We should fear to grieve that spirit. Our solemn obligation is to pray and pay every dollar as it becomes due—before it becomes due, if possible, for a dollar in missionary work today is above par.

A Plea for Charity

WITHIN a few days the Chicago Daily Tribune has made two plaintive editorial pleas in behalf of "Fatty" Arbuckle. The good people are dogging his steps. They are unwilling to give him opportunity to earn his living. He should be given a second chance. The plea is not in the name of "art for art's sake," for the Tribune admits that he is not an artist. The plea is on the grounds of Christian charity. We confess that the appeal would have more weight with us were it not for the fact that for months this same journal both in its new pages and editorial columns has been making a similar plea for old John Barleycorn. The good people of the land should give the old fellow another chance to "come back" in the form at least of light wines and beer. We are amazed at the lengths to which this great journal would carry Christian charity.

The Person of Christ: A Series of "Apologetic" Studies

VII. "He rose again on the third day from the dead."

By FREDERIC C. SPURR

CHRISTIANITY, we have said, is the only serious great religion which is vitally bound up with a single Person. The religions created by men known to history are only partially dependent upon their founders. The name of Mohammed follows that of God in the Mussulman confession of faith. The value of Mohammed to Islam is that he is deemed to be "the prophet of God." Behind Mohammedanism, also, stands the Koran, that book, which, it is claimed, came direct from God. Mohammedanism, therefore, is only in a secondary way dependent upon the Arabian mule driver. It is not so with Christianity. It entirely depends upon Christ. If he is false, it is false. Christianity stands or falls with him.

Faith and Fact

It is necessary, however, to specify more clearly than this the exact position, since today the attempt is made to separate the Christ from all with which the church has associated him during two millenniums. We may retain the Easter faith, says Harnack, without the Easter fact. It is said that we may believe Jesus to be alive without committing ourselves to the Gospel story of the manner of his rising from the dead: that indeed the story of a literal bodily resurrection is an incubus to faith and that it must be abandoned. "All men rise" so the slogan proceeds "in that their spirits survive that shock of physical dissolution we call death. Jesus rose in that sense, but the story of a miraculous rising from the dead is no longer credible." Now this will not do. The resurrection of our Lord is not a question of a man passing, as all men do, into the spirit world, but of this particular Man—this divine Man, the Lord of all—fulfilling a certain promise and offering a certain demonstration. Faith in a spiritual or a poetic resurrection is not what the church is built upon. It is simply not possible to maintain the Easter faith apart from the Easter fact. We cannot treat the question in vacuo; that is to say, as detached from his person, his character and his claim. The resurrection belongs to history: it belongs also to eternity. The value of our Lord's resurrection is not in a rising from the dead, but in the kind of rising. It professes to be a revelation of a higher order than any known to us upon this planet. His rising was not a revival of the old matter, but a transformation of it. The resurrection body belonged to a new order. "Flesh and blood do not enter into the kingdom of God." A simple resuscitation of the flesh could give no light upon the nature of the spiritual world. Yet our Lord's new body was definitely related to the old. It was recognized by infallible marks in the hands and side.

There is a mystery here that we cannot solve at present, but it is only a mystery of explanation. We see a working of God beyond our knowledge: it is not on that account contrary to nature or incredible for the mind. The "modern man" of all men should find no difficulty in accepting the Gospel story as true. The old ideas of matter, which were regarded by our fathers as finally fixed, are now suffering the process of disintegration. It is today generally admitted that matter has a spiritual basis and that its transformations are unlimited. The transformation of our Lord's body by a special forthputting of divine power, cannot therefore any longer be set aside as an "incredible legend." It is believeable, even in the name of science. We need not then humbly apologize for the ancient Christian faith. The resurrection, or transformation of our Lord's body is not an incubus to faith: it is essential to a full and rich faith. It is set forth in the New Testament as a "first fruits" of our rising and as a revelation of the "spiritual body" which one day we shall wear (Phil. 3). If, therefore, there was no resurrection of Christ, then there is neither "first fruits" nor revelation for us. In this larger light we may see the impossibility of denying the fact of the resurrection while maintaining its ethic. More than this, our Lord definitely predicted his resurrection on the "third day." This note of time is meaningless if all that he intended was a spiritual resurrection. His credit is therefore at stake. He gave his resurrection as a sign, but if it did not take place, of what is it a sign? They who think to win the faith of men by giving away the case for the resurrection of Christ are on the wrong track. There is nothing to give away, there is much to understand.

No Via Media

The resurrection of our Lord must be, on account of its unique character and its far-reaching consequences, either the most marvelous and sublime of all facts, or the most extraordinary and grotesque of all impostures. There is no logical via media between these two positions. The denial of the resurrection has taken many forms. Rationalism has been compelled continually to change its weapons and its mode of attack. The road over which it has retreated is strewn with broken missiles. Nobody, for example, today holds the "fainting" theory. Dr. Strauss, himself an unbeliever, destroyed with bitter ridicule that impossible theory. Nor does any one suggest at this time of day that the apostles swore falsely concerning their Master's rising. The honesty of the apostles is fully admitted. The favorite position of rationalism today is this: The apostles were good but mistaken men. They thought they saw their Master alive, but their visions were purely subjective. In a word, the resurrection was only an affair of receptive minds and sensitive nerves; consequently the Chris-

CHRIST, who art my life without,
And endless life within,
I long to hear th' assuring shout
That brings Thy kingdom in.

But Thou;—Thou speakest low and sweet
Upon the mountain-side,
And where Thy true disciples meet,
There calm and love abide.

Then help me to wait th' angelic praise,
And toil, that here, ere long,
I make my length of choral days
A prelude to their song.

No ills Thy great intent may thrall
With fear of pain or loss,
For larger is my sky than all
The clouds that drift across.

No oracles from lonely cave,
Or incense-clouded shrine,
My poor discordant tones can save,
To harmony divine.

Only the Voice that stilled the seas,
The Voice that Lazarus heard—
E'en now from fear my spirit frees,
And speaks th' eternal Word.

FRANK W. GUNSAULUS.

tian faith reposes upon a beautiful but entirely unreliable dream.

This theory conveniently omits one important fact: namely, the disappearance of our Lord's material body from the tomb. If it was not transformed, it abode somewhere. Where? And why was it never produced? One moment's glimpse of the dead body of Jesus would have killed the infant church and established the triumph of the enemies of Christ. If our Lord's body was not transformed and raised, as the Gospels say, then it must have been removed from the tomb, either by his friends or his foes. If his foes removed the body, they had but to produce it and there was an end to all the apostolic preaching. His friends could not have removed it. Let rationalism face and answer the question "What became of the body of Jesus, if it did not rise?" It is idle to say that this does not matter: it matters everything. The gospel account of it is, after all, the simplest. It is straightforward and it bears the marks of truth upon its face. Every theory invented by rationalism to avoid the Christian fact, bears the impress of awkward invention, untruth, or special pleading.

The Creation of the Church

The miracle of the creation of the church is the next thing to be considered. On Good Friday the band of the disciples was suddenly broken up, each man returning to his home. The cause was apparently lost. Jesus was dead. But on Easter day the community rallied. The Master appeared to them. They knew he was alive—the Lord of Life. And he who had bound them together in the days of his flesh, rebound them in a new fellowship.

Within six weeks over 3,000 persons, in the very city where Jesus was crucified, were baptized into the faith of Christ. Put plainly, thousands of people, including "a multitude of priests" who knew for a fact that Jesus had died by crucifixion, deliberately joined a society whose main business was to affirm that this same Jesus had risen from the dead and was the Lord of Life. Is it rational to believe that a few apostles who, according to rationalism, were the victims of hallucination, could have persuaded thousands of people (priests included) to accept as a fact the resurrection of a man whom all knew to have died and been buried? It is sheer nonsense. The church is not built upon a foundation of hysteria. The apostolic preaching was utterly devoid of anything like fanaticism. There is no raving, no heated appeal, nothing vague or dreamy: in short there is an entire absence of the peculiarities which are everywhere associated with the vaporings of visionaries. On the contrary their preaching was reasoned and based upon the Scriptures. The resurrection was shown to be in the true order of divine events. The existence of the church then, cannot be explained by postulating the vision theory. This would be to have cause and effect unrelated by any logical link—a contradiction in terms. The church which is a substantial edifice, demands an adequate foundation for its support. It could not have survived during the ages and been what it is, had it been founded upon a lie.

The number and character of the witnesses to the risen Lord is an important factor in the case. First a woman saw the risen Saviour: then two women: then Peter and John: then James: then two disciples on the way to Emmaus: then eleven apostles in an upper room: that is, five or six times in one day, he appeared to different people in different places and at different times during the day. Eight days later he appeared again to the eleven and especially to the skeptic of the party, Thomas. For forty days the manifestations occurred, generally in the open air and once by the seashore. They were not given in dimly lighted apartments to nervous people working up a manifestation, but to normal people in broad daylight, with the winds of God blowing all around them. At the end 500 people saw him at one time: the greater part of whom were alive when St. Paul invoked their witness (1 Cor. 15-5). Here then are the witnesses, over 500 in number, and we are asked to believe that these numerous persons were all the victims of hallucinations!

The number of the witnesses makes such a theory ridiculous. Their temper also forbids it. Mrs. Humphry Ward declared that the disciples were in a "receptive" state and ready to believe in the miracle. The gospel writers, on the contrary (and they are better witnesses here than Mrs. Ward) declare that the "disciples believed not"; that the Magdalen's story about the risen Lord was at first received as an "idle tale"; that Thomas point-blank refused credence of the fact. The disciples were all skeptical at first: they became believers because the fact compelled them. The spiritual change in the witnesses proves it. Belief in the resurrection entirely transformed the apostles, redeeming them from self-seeking and cowardice and making them fearless in their witness for Christ. Their after career justified their faith. Hallucination is only temporary save in the case of the hopelessly insane. But the disciples never amended their witness to the resurrection. To the end they maintained it and suffered death for so doing. "I believe in those witnesses who die for their faith," said Pascal.

It Is True

Every rationalistic theory, then, which seeks to account for the resurrection, crumbles into dust. There is only one way of accounting for it—it is true. Jesus really rose again from the dead on the third day. If historical science be real, then no fact of history is so well attested as the fact of Christ's resurrection. The resurrection, however, is much more than a historic fact. It has eternal implications. It is a gospel. It proclaims the victory of life. Jesus is the Lord of life. He "could not be holden of death." The victory he won is ours also in him. Man now knows that he is not under the tyranny of matter: he has the liberty of the spirit. Hence we offer to Christ our worship and we place in him our hope. He has opened the kingdom of heaven to all believers. At his girdle swing the keys of destiny. He rose as the Son of God and as the Son of Man—both.

And he continues his redeeming work. He remains forever the One Priest whose sacrifice and intercession avail for our salvation. He is the eternal prophet who teaches with the final authority. He is the only King of man's life, to direct and to lead it into the true way of progress. And he is alive for evermore. The final proof of the resurrection must ever be personal. It is only when we come under the empire of Christ and commune with him that we personally know he is alive. The Christian faith, intellectually, is sublime. It has nothing to fear from the assaults of men. But it is a dead faith to any man who cannot complete the apostolic witness by adding, "He was seen of me also."

LORD, grant us grace to love thee so
That, glad of heart and glad of face,
At last we may sit high or low,
Each in his place.

—CHRISTINA ROSSETTI.

A Strategic Hour for Service by Baptists

By JAMES H. FRANKLIN

TO ANY one who attempts to study the currents of life and thought running today in all sections of the world, there comes a sobering impression of conflict, confusion and chaos. With such an impression comes also a consciousness of the inspeakable suffering resulting from such conditions, and one may be tempted, temporarily at least, to take a pessimistic view. Much of the old order has been overthrown and men are groping for something better. Many old institutions have fallen, and no one seems able to say exactly what will be erected in their stead. It requires faith today if one is to be optimistic and is to doubt not through the ages one increasing purpose runs, and the thoughts of men are widened with the process of the suns."

Never in our age have we seen such convulsions, and the subterranean rumblings to make us fearful of further eruptions. It is difficult at times to believe firmly that good can come out of such widespread chaos and suffering. Nevertheless, men with hearts and minds delicately attuned are telling us that, in spite of the harshness and rancor of loud voices which are broadcasting themselves over the world, whisperings may still be heard which represent the aspiration of multitudes and are prophetic in their meaning. They tell us that the thoughts of men are really being "widened with the process of the suns"; that democracy is steadily gaining in its titanic struggle with autocracy in well-nigh all realms of thought and life. While this struggle between autocracy and democracy, raging everywhere, seems sharpest in the realms of politics and industry, there are corresponding movements in all the thought-life of the world, religion included. If these things be so, the hour seems peculiarly appropriate for service by those whose historic principles have exalted the freedom of every soul and have condemned every form of spiritual despotism.

"A Free Church"

Whatever may be our faults, historians agree that Baptists have made a noble gift for "a free church in a free state," the complete independence of the individual congregation, a regenerate church membership, and freedom in matters of religion as the inherent right of every soul, as well as for other principles. But these principles in particular seem to be struggling for expression at this moment in the world at large.

Through the walls of hut and palace shoots the instantaneous throe. When the travail of the Ages wrings earth's systems to and fro; at the birth of each new Era, with a recognizing start, nation wildly looks at nation, standing with mute lips apart, and glad Truth's yet mightier man-child leaps beneath the future's heart."

Despite the anguish of soul through which the world is passing and the fears of many regarding the outcome, there are signs of a new era in which religious liberty will have a larger life.

In Europe several thrones have tottered, and with their fall several state churches have lost the support of governments.

Men are denying the right of ecclesiastics to dictate their religion. "Away from Rome" is the slogan of hundreds of thousands in Czecho-Slovakia, where the soil was fertilized for the seed of religious freedom with the blood of men inspired by John Huss. In the summer of 1922 two American Baptist pastors were thrilled at the hearing which they received in Bohemia, Moravia and Slovakia as they gave their messages in crowded churches and theaters, and as large numbers professed a personal Christian experience, where a religion of ceremonialism has been dominant. "Evangelical" is the word which now appeals to multitudes in Russia, where only a few years ago our Baptist brethren were branded "heretics" by the Orthodox Church before they were sent into Siberian exile. And "evangelical" we are told, is almost synonymous with "Baptist" in Russia, where our denominational kinsmen have increased at least ten-fold in the last eight years, and some say twenty-fold. A million is the lowest estimate of those in Russia now said to hold the views common to Baptists. It is reported that on a single Sunday a few months ago, in a Russian city, more persons were baptized than on the day of Pentecost. In Sweden, where a state church is still recognized, the Baptists established their first church just twenty-five years ago. Today there are 600 Baptist churches in the land, with over 60,000 members, besides the 30,000 or more who have emigrated to America. Next July the Baptists of Sweden are to entertain the Baptist World Congress.

Take Religious Freedom for Granted

Here in America we take religious freedom for granted, but in parts of Europe and the Orient, such a thought is impossible to the ruling classes. In such lands, however, men are catching a vision of soul freedom, and are suffering for their principles until ecclesiastical autocracy is threatened in several regions.

"When a deed is done for freedom, through the broad earth's aching breast Runs a thrill of joy prophetic, trembling on from east to west."

At such a moment we count it a joy to have fellowship with those who are trying to free themselves from the domination of state or priest. Wherever men struggle for a religious freedom and an open Bible we are called to serve with them. Such an hour as this presents a challenge to any body of people like Baptists, who pioneered their way in the fight for separation of church and state, the priesthood of the believer, a regenerate church membership and kindred doctrines. The atmosphere is favorable for the transmission of our message if our practice is consistent with our profession, if our spirit is fraternal, and if our motive is one of disinterested service. But we may be sure of at least three questions as we try to serve humanity through the proclamation of our convictions: (1) "How have your principles worked where they have been tried?" (2) "Have they inspired you to nobler living?" (3) "With what motive would you teach us?"

In the Orient the religious questions are different in form from those rising in Europe, but there also the desire for complete freedom is back of the unrest.

The foreign mission work has grown to large proportions. Church members are now counted by the hundreds of thousands, whose leaders, often strong and well-trained men and women, are impatient at foreign domination and are embarrassed and hindered by having Christianity known as a "foreign religion." Within the last twelve months national Christian conferences have been held in India, China and Japan, in which strong native leaders, with prophetic boldness, claimed for themselves and for their own churches the freedom wherewith Christ has set them free. Many of their utterances were inspiring. True, their deliverances presented new problems for ecclesiastics, with systems to perpetuate, but the conferences were thrilling for those who are sure that God gives his spirit to oriental Christians even as unto us of the West.

Our principle of the independence of the local church is the Baptist answer to the spokesmen for the oriental Christian forces. We are well aware that questions will now emerge, as they arose between the Christians at Jerusalem and the converts of missionary work at Antioch. In such a crisis our cry is "back to the New Testament." We are glad to believe that God gives guidance to the churches on the mission fields as well as to churches in America. Our great door is open for service in the Orient for all who can join the late Bob Burdette in his "Why I am a Baptist," the conclusion of which is as follows:

"I love the free responsibility of the human soul, standing on a level platform face to face with God, with no shadow of pope, or bishop or priest or man-made creed falling between himself and his Master. That's why I am a Baptist."

Fortunately, native leaders are appearing in the Orient who can interpret these principles widely in their own lands.

New Duties

But let no one think that Baptists are now the sole exponents of the doctrines which are mentioned in this article. Happily, many who do not bear our name accept and proclaim these views, although they are recognized as the principles which have especially distinguished the Baptists. To quote again from the beloved Bob Burdette: "Then I love the simplicity of the Baptist organization. If there wasn't a Baptist church in the world, there would, nevertheless, be millions of Baptists in every generation." Nor should we deceive ourselves with the idea that nobility of our denominational ancestors is a sufficient recommendation of our own generation. The men of today require that we render here and now the needed service if our message is to be heeded.

"New occasions teach new duties; Time makes ancient good uncouth; They must upward still and onward, who would keep abreast of truth."

We have been told recently that the relief work of the Quakers, who have ministered so unselfishly for the suffering peoples of the war-worn countries, has done more than anything else to create respect in Europe for Christianity. It is always so. They serve best who give all and ask nothing in return except the joy

A Survey of Baptist Work for 1922

The achievements of the past year and the outlook for the coming year are told by those near to the base of operations

General Organizations of the Denomination

Northern Baptist Convention

THERE have been no "outstanding achievements" in the Northern Baptist Convention during 1922. The convention is not organized to conduct specific works, but to consider and promote the interests of the kingdom of God so far as they have been entrusted to the Baptist denomination. All achievements, therefore, must relate to triumphs of fellowship, to spiritual enthusiasm, to plans devised in clarity under the illumination of the Holy Spirit, to union in consecration and to earnestness in the support of the enterprises which the denomination has approved.

It is evident then that any great success of the convention will show itself by the way in which its constituency has supported the work of its cooperating organizations and its two boards. This test will be supreme, and the condition of our agencies will reveal the results.

The needs of our convention are a deeper devotion to our Lord in every Baptist heart, more of his spirit in our souls. If this primary need be realized, then we shall love one another, and work for all interests of Christ's kingdom, and shall not be diverted from the major interests of evangelism, missions, philanthropy, and education. There is no other need comparable to this one. The satisfaction of it will solve all problems we have.

General Board of Promotion

DURING the year 1922 the General Board of Promotion has sought to continue fulfilling the function with which it is charged of serving the denomination "as the cooperating agency of the various boards, societies, state conventions, city mission societies and educational institutions, for disseminating information about them and raising money for them." The year began with grave questions as to the financial future of our denominational organizations. Intensive efforts to relieve the situation was put forth during the early months and the fiscal year of the denomination closed on April 30 with receipts amounting to $9,897,804.74. With the single exception of the fiscal year 1920-21, this is the largest amount given by Northern Baptists in any one year to missionary, educational and benevolent objects. According to statistics compiled by the United Stewardship Council, the per capita giving of Northern Baptists during the year, amounting to $7.16 per member, was the largest of all denominations having a membership of 500,000 or more.

At its meeting in Indianapolis, the Northern Baptist Convention, after reviewing the results of the past year and prospects for the future, adopted as the denominational goal for the year 1922-23 the sum of $10,000,000 in distributable receipts. This would provide for the current operating expenses of all organizations and for a goodly portion of the denominational indebtedness.

Diligent preparation during the summer months enabled us this year to begin promotional activities on the field at an unusually early date. During September and October there was held in almost every state a conference designed to bring to our leaders in associations and local churches the fact of the present situation and suggestions as to practical steps to be taken. October was observed as stewardship month in many churches, with a presentation of the obligation of Christian stewardship and an effort to enlist every member as a tither.

Those who made pledges on the basis of the statement of needs contained in the "Survey," which was published at the beginning of the movement, will be glad to learn of a new volume entitled "On the March in the New World Movement." This volume gives a summary of the achievements thus far made possible. It presents, in interesting and readable form, valuable and surprising information concerning the progress made during the last three years. It will be ready for free distribution shortly.

The American Baptist Publication Society

WE SOON begin our ninety-ninth year of service. We are hoping that when we are 100 years old The Northern Baptist Convention will meet in Philadelphia, and help us celebrate the event.

From that first meeting held in the home of George Wood, in Washington City, Feb. 25, 1824, attended by eighteen men and seven women, to this hour there has been a sure and steady growth. From the time when Samuel Cornelius carried a few tracts in his hat to the time when our great printing-presses turn out tons of good literature annually, there has been but one supreme purpose—the establishment of the kingdom of Christ in the whole world.

We have two departments, business and missionary. The business department has direction of all publications, and the missionary department has direction of colporters, Bible-school education, and social education work.

In the business department every effort is being made to reduce the heavy debt which came because of war conditions, and splendid progress is being made. It is of course, understood that this is not a denominational debt, and money contributed by individuals and churches is never used in the business department. We are confident that, in the not far-distant future, this department again will turn over to the missionary work of the society substantial financial help. Unusual progress and development mark the work of our branch houses, which are wholly under the direction of the business department.

One of the significant events of the year is the still closer relations of our society with the Home Mission Society, whereby the secretary of our Bible and field department becomes superintendent of the colporter-missionary work of both organizations.

We are under deep obligations to The American Baptist Home Mission Society for counsel, cooperation, good fellowship and financial help.

An outstanding event of the year is the dedication of a chapel auto car equipped much like the chapel car, but with the advantage of being able to go where a chapel car cannot go, and with much less expense. The new chapel car auto is called the Crawford Memorial, and it is hoped that at least five similar memorial cars may be built in the near future. The Crawford Memorial chapel car auto is endowed, the income to be used for maintenance, upkeep, and a new car to take its place when needed. The cost of the car and its endowment represents a total of $63,000.

Important Campaigns

The bigger and better Bible-school movement is proving a genuine success, many hundreds of schools having enrolled and much interest having been manifested.

The church vacation and week-day religious schools' plans are going forward with great vigor and success. We believe these to be among the most important campaigns of the future.

Our institutes and summer assemblies have shown unusual efficiency and are becoming more and more popular. The attendance has been large and many of our young people have publicly dedicated themselves to specific Christian work.

We are stressing our work among children, and shall have a fine Children's Day program for next June.

Our teacher-training work will prepare many to teach children more efficiently and thus to increase the value of our Bible-school work.

With so wide a field, and such urgent calls for help, it has been difficult to live within our income, but we have almost succeeded, our debt remaining about the same as last year. This has meant, however, the withdrawal of a number of workers, and the lessening of our efficiency.

The printing, during the last year, of the whole Bible in the Russian language is, we believe, a real contribution to the world's need. It is generally conceded that we have never published so many high-grade books in any one year as we have this last year.

The meetings of the board of managers are largely attended, and there is much interest manifested, both in our society and in the denomination at large. Our five new board members are proving themselves exceedingly helpful, and among all our workers there has never been a better spirit of cooperation, loyalty and good fellowship.

Our needs for the immediate future? Now, prepare yourselves! We must pay our debt. Banks still insist upon interest being paid for loans.

We need fifty additional colporteur-missionaries in the United States, and twenty-four in Latin America—and for this we need $100,000.

We need at least five more chapel automobiles which will cost $40,000. We need for each of these cars—for their maintenance, and for their replacement when they have been worn out—at least $50,000, or an invested fund of $250,000.

We need a special worker for foreign-speaking churches, and one also for Negro churches, a week-day school director, three institute lecturers, specialists for graded work, five additional state directors and ten city directors.

We need special funds of at least $200,000 to enlarge our church-vacation and week-day schools, our institutes and assemblies, our teacher-training and foreign Sunday-school work, and other departments of our ever-growing religious education work.

Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board of the Northern Baptist Convention

THERE has been a substantial increase in the development and work of the benefit board during the past year although no outstanding features are marked.

There has been a steady increase in the number of beneficiaries for whom the board is caring. The total number now benefited by the grants of the board is 1375. One clearly defined feature is the increase in the proportion of widows. The experience of the boards of other denominations that have been engaged in this work for a longer period than the Baptists has shown the number of widows as exceeding those of the men in this department of the work. Up to the present time in our own task the men have been slightly in excess, but it will not be long before in all probability the relative numbers will be not unlike those in other denominations.

The membership in the retiring pension plan has steadily increased. A large number have joined during the past year. This statement applies especially to the men receiving modest salaries. Several plans are now under consideration, which, if adopted, will materially benefit our older ministers. The fact that other denominations are not only approving, but adopting substantially the plan inaugurated by the benefit board is a source of encouragement.

In response to the appeal of the board or help for the men who are receiving lower salaries a generous gift was received from a donor whose name cannot be revealed. This gift has aided a good many men whose salaries have been below $1,500 to take advantage of the retiring pension plan. The present offer terminates Jan. 31, 1923 unless the gift for this purpose shall have previously been exhausted.

As yet our board has received little from the General Board of Promotion for endowment purposes. If the hopes of the Board of Promotion during the current year are realized the fund of the benefit board will be increased by a part of the amount which has been collected, but withheld.

The inability of the board in the present cooperative movement to go out on a campaign to increase its endowment has limited its efforts largely to the development of the various phases of the work for which it was organized. Steady improve-

The Northern Baptist Convention

THE convention was tentatively organized on May 16, 1907 at Washington, D. C. The first meeting of the convention was held at Oklahoma City, Okla., in 1908 with Chas. E. Hughes as president, W. C. Bitting, corresponding secretary, G. W. Coleman, recording secretary and P. S. Henson as preacher of the sermon. There were 956 delegates. At the meeting in Indianapolis last June, fifteen years later, there were 2,837 registered delegates. The convention was incorporated June 6, 1910 in the state of New York. W. C. Bitting has served as corresponding secretary from the time of the organization of the convention. M. A. Levy has served as recording secretary for the past ten years.

Declaration

The Northern Baptist Convention declares its belief in the independence of the local church, and in the purely advisory nature of all denominational organizations composed of representatives of churches. It believes also that, in view of the growth of the Baptist denomination and its extension throughout our country, there is need for an organization to serve the common interests of the entire denomination as state and district organizations serve their respective constituencies.

Its Object

The object of the corporation shall be to give expression to the opinions of its constituency upon moral, religious, and denominational matters, and to promote denominational unity and efficiency in efforts for the evangelization of the world.

ment has come with experience and only the members of the board can fully realize what the developments of the past ten years have meant and are meaning for the Baptist ministry in the Northern Baptist Convention.

The Baptist World Alliance

A VERY important meeting of the of the Baptist World Alliance was held in London last July. The attendance was thoroughly representative, and careful consideration was given to the condition of our work on the continent of Europe. First-hand information was furnished by Commissioner Rushbrooke, supplemented by reports from other brethren who had personally visited many of our continent churches. Not a little time was given to the discussion of the program for the Alliance Congress to be held in Stockholm in the summer of 1923, and plans were matured whereby it is hoped to make this meeting of the largest possible value.

Since the meeting of the Executive Commissioner Rushbrooke has visited Russia, and his report as to the progress of Baptist work in that country both encourages and challenges us to greater helpfulness. His recent visit to this country enabled many American Baptists to share in his knowledge of and interest in Baptist work in countries recently devastated by war.

The Baptist World Congress to be held in Stockholm next summer should call out a large attendance from America. Few cities can compete with Stockholm in attractiveness, and no Baptists of any kind surpass our Stockholm brethren in gracious hospitality. The writer was privileged to be present at the European Baptist Congress held in Stockholm in 1913, and can never forget the constant and thoughtful courtesies of which he was the recipient. The changes wrought by the war make possible a great advance in our work on the continent, and it is important that Baptists of the world confer together concerning this and other features of our common task.

Baptist Young People's Union

THE outstanding feature of the work of the Baptist Young People's Union of America for 1922 was the thirty-first anniversary convention held in the city of St. Paul, July 5-8. Thirty-two states and provinces and the District of Columbia were represented in the convention with a total registration of 10,208. Possibly the greatest meeting of the convention was the life-decision service in which between four and five hundred young people decided to give themselves to some form of Christian service.

The key-note of the convention was "Forward with Christ." Its influence has extended to all parts of the United States and Canada as well as European countries.

A large service has been rendered the denomination through our departments of the Baptist Tithers' League and the Daily Devotions League. The Life Service League now has enrolled something like 3,000 young people who are looking forward to definite Christian service.

The thirty-second anniversary convention of the union will be held in Tremont Temple, Boston, Mass., July 4-8, 1923. The key-note to this convention will be "The Attractive Christ."

Perhaps the most interesting development for 1923 will be the cooperation of the Baptist Young People's Union of America with the young people's organizations of the various European countries in the formation of a World's Baptist Young People's Union or a like organization.

Baptist Survey

American Baptist Historical Society

IT IS the business of the American Baptist Historical Society to preserve the records of Baptist thought and activities, to arrange these records so that they are accessible for students of Baptist history, and to devise tools for investigation of such Baptist materials.

During the year 1922 the society has made considerable progress in discovering important manuscripts, rare minutes of local associations and state conventions and unusual collections of Baptist newspapers. Among such documents may be mentioned especially the manuscript history of the Chemung Baptist Association written nearly 100 years ago by Rev. Thomas Smiley, a unique account of Baptist activities in southern New York and northern Pennsylvania from the beginning of Baptist life in that territory, donated by Mrs. Julia Smiley Goodfellow of Media, Pa., a granddaughter of Thomas Smiley. An outstanding acquisition of newspapers is a collection covering incompletely the journalism of Canadian Baptists from 1850 to the present, a gift of the family of Mrs. Willard E. Kent, Westport, Nova Scotia. A similarly rare collection of Baptist magazines, minutes and other records has been received through the efforts of Mr. J. Theodore McArthur, president of the Georgia Baptist Historical Society; and by Mr. Harvey C. Camp of Stanford, Conn., we have been favored with a very exceptional collection of photographs which he gathered in the course of many years for use in connection with his important lectures on hymn writers and hymns, these lectures themselves coming to us as a part of his gift.

Through the support received because of the interest in Baptist history exhibited by the General Board of Promotion we have been able to make a beginning of the binding which is so greatly needed both for the protection of rare documents and facility in using this material. The promise of a continuance of this support is a much-needed encouragement in our efforts, even though the best that can be done at present is only a fraction of what our historical materials deserve. The process of indexing, so essential for research, has been continued with important results, including a card index to the names of a considerable part of Benedict's History of the Baptists.

The needs of our work for the future are obviously such an enlargement of our income as may permit us not only to continue and develop the work already undertaken but also to provide for the employment of some one qualified and interested to travel and discover Baptist historical treasures in the possession of persons who would be willing to place them in our care for permanent preservation and use.

The Board of Education

THE most encouraging fact in the field of education so far as Baptists are concerned is the unmistakable development of interest upon the part of Baptist people in the education of their children. We are on the wave of a rapidly rising tide of interest in this subject and our Baptist people are being carried forward with it. It spells success for our future as a denomination. Our schools and colleges are rapidly filling up and some of them have already reached the limit of their capacity. They must expand or we must send our children elsewhere.

We also have reason for gratitude that the tide of interest in the ministry seems

The General Board of Promotion—Inaugurated by unanimous vote of the convention in Denver in 1919.

THE General Board of Promotion is the agency through which the denomination is responding to the larger need of our work. It is "to serve the denomination as the co-operating agency of the various boards, societies, state conventions, city mission societies and educational institutions for disseminating information about them and raising money for them.

A study of the financial reports shows that on April 30, 1922, the total amount of pledges and cash payments to the New World Movement fund was $49,023,958.88. To this amount should be added the amount which the administrative committee has agreed upon as a proper credit for the five-year period on account of income from legacies, matured annuities and invested funds, namely, $2,619,769.95. This would make a total of $51,643,728.83.

On Nov. 1, the last report we have in hand, there was due on the state quotas in round numbers $5,000,000. The collections reported to Nov. 1 were $1,836,458.19, or a little less than 37 per cent of the amount due on that date, and 87 per cent of the amount reported one year ago—the year in which there was paid into the treasuries of our denominational organizations $12,595,694, the largest sum ever contributed by Northern Baptists in one year to the support of their missionary, educational and other benevolent enterprises.

to have turned. Our seminaries are getting back to their pre-war enrolment. This does not mean that we have a sufficient number of men preparing for the ministry, but an encouraging number are hearing and heeding the call. The seminaries report an unusually fine group of men in their entering classes last fall.

The new book "On the March" which the Board of Promotion is issuing at once from the press, tells a wonderfully interesting story of the progress of our educational work during the period of the New World Movement. Watch out for this book and read that chapter. You will be amazed to see what progress our schools have made with the small percentage of receipts (11 per cent) which have come to them from the New World Movement.

In the field of missionary education we are witnessing most gratifying advance. Our mission study classes are increasing rapidly. The new church schools of missions were organized in over 330 churches last year. Our people are determined to know what is being done to make the gospel effective in all parts of the world. New chapters of the World Wide Guild (1350 in three years) and new companies of the Children's World Crusade are being formed every week. We never had so much intelligent interest in our world wide enterprises as we have today.

The most significant phase in our Baptist field of education is that during the period of the New World Movement we have nationalized our educational work, that is, as a denomination we have been endeavoring to put all our schools on a solid financial basis. This is much more than a financial gain. It is a new attitude upon the part of our denomination toward education. The most important question now is whether we are going to consolidate these gains or turn back to the days when we left our schools to sink or swim as best they could.

The most pressing need just at present is a few thousand dollars which could be applied to the relief of three or four schools that are in financial distress. Our New World Movement funds must be divided on a predetermined basis among all the schools. This does not permit us to come to the aid of a few schools that are in a precarious position. We hope that they will weather the storm but these are trying days for their directors and in some way help for them ought to be found.

The Southern Convention

Southern Baptists

NINETEEN TWENTY-TWO has been in many respects a great year in the history of Southern Baptists. It is impossible, of course, to tabulate all the results. Up to date we have secured more than $35,000,000 toward the $75,000,000 which we are engaged in raising. We are at the half-way post in the five-year period, and we have great hope of succeeding in raising the full sum. Prices of cotton are now better than they were, and while our people have not recovered fully from the depression, they are much more hopeful.

During the last convention year there were about 250,000 baptisms into our Southern Baptist churches. This revival work was in all parts of the convention.

This fall there was a reinforcement week, during which special emphasis was placed upon the enlistment of new members of our churches as contributors to the $75,000,000 fund, when special stress was laid upon the importance of paying the pledges.

At all our state conventions during the autumn the Seventy-five Million Campaign has been featured. The objective which is now occupying the minds of our people chiefly is the campaign for stewardship and tithing. This is preeminently a lay men's movement, but it is gaining much momentum and is full of promise. Already a host of people have been enrolled as tithers, and the contributions from these will begin to manifest themselves in enlarged receipts.

During the early part of next year much will be done to reinforce this campaign and every indication is that at the next convention in May, in Kansas City, we shall have encouraging reports.

With the Missionary Societies

The general note is optimistic in spite of gigantic difficulties to be overcome

The Year 1922 and Foreign Missions

SEVERAL significant events have characterized the year 1922 in the work of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society.

The year has shown a record in evangelistic results. A total of 12,174 converts have been added to the membership of the churches on the foreign field by baptism. This is the largest total in sixteen years. Of gratifying encouragement is the fact that the evangelistic movement is gathering momentum, and indications now suggest the probability of exceeding its record in the new year. The total church membership on the foreign field is now reported as 203,586, having increased from 201,655 in the preceding year. These members are enrolled in 1,889 organized churches, of which 1,114, or 59 per cent, are entirely self-supporting.

2. An event of wide denominational interest was the evangelistic preaching tour in Czechoslovakia by Dr. Carter Helm and Dr. Frederick E. Taylor, and an evangelistic tour of the leading capitals of Europe by Dr. W. S. Abernethy and Dr. William T. Sheppard, the latter having made the trip at his own expense. All four men are members of the board of managers. Their remarkable experiences and the gratifying success of their missions have been reported to the denomination, both orally and in printed form.

3. Relief efforts for the destitute people of Europe have constituted another unique achievement. The immense cargo on the Ship of Fellowship, accompanied by Percy W. B. Lippard, which was distributed in nine different countries of Europe during the winter of 1922, and the shipment on the second "Ship of Fellowship" which sailed from New York Dec. 3, 1922, and the fellowship and loving kindness which these shipments demonstrated, will never be forgotten by the multitudes in the war devastated and poverty-stricken lands of Europe.

4. Other significant events include the remarkable conference of missionaries and Chinese leaders at Shanghai in May, 1922, an inspiring and epoch-making visit of Percy J. C. Robbins to India, and the gratifying increase in contributions from native Christians toward the support of their own work, and the increasing emphasis on the training of native leadership.

5. Another event which unfortunately is far from gratifying was the substantial addition to the deficit of the society, which now stands at $914,000, an increase of $25,000 over what was reported during the preceding year. This increase was largely due to the fact that contributions were substantially less than those of the preceding year, doubtless on account of the financial depression throughout the country.

Prospects for the new year are difficult to forecast. The financial situation presents a serious problem. Unless receipts in the current year should be large enough to liquidate a part of the immense deficit, the society cannot do otherwise than face the necessity of a drastic reduction in missionary work. Prompt and full payment of pledges toward the New World Movement is therefore imperative.

The meeting of the Baptist World Alliance in Stockholm next July will prove to be of immeasurable benefit to the work of the society in Europe, not only in stimulating denominational unity and solidarity, but in encouraging the Baptists of the countries of Europe through their realization of membership in a strong, influential world-wide Baptist brotherhood. The growing evangelistic movement in all fields, the numerous open doors which cannot be entered because of lack of resources, the depletion of the missionary staff and particularly the rise of cost of doing missionary work present other problems which will require most careful thought and wise consideration. Only reliance upon God and dependence upon the loyal support of the constituency will enable the Foreign Mission Society to carry forward its missionary program for 1923.

"The problems that face the church today on the foreign field are not the problems of failure, but the problems of success."

The Problems of Success

ON a church calendar, a few weeks ago, appeared this sentence, "The problems which face the church today on the foreign field are not the problems of failure, but the problems of success."

This exactly describes the situation in which the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society finds itself. Its problems today are the problems of success. For fifty-one years it has been working and giving and praying that the children and women of the Orient might come out of their seclusion, their ignorance and their suffering and attain to the privileges which are rightfully theirs, in an enlightened and Christian world. The past year is a record of overcrowded schools, of girls turned away for lack of room, of opportunities lost for work among women and children in the churches, the schools, the hospitals and the community centers, which makes it painfully evident that the woman of the Orient is demanding the best in education and training that the church of Christ can offer.

This is, therefore, our achievement—more work than we can do, more chances to lead women to Jesus Christ than we can accept. It seems strange to be embarrassed because God has answered our prayers and because success has marked our path.

Yet we are beset with more problems than ever before. They loom large on the horizon for 1923. It may be unfortunate but it is true that many of them are closely connected with the question of money. How shall a society whose work has been steadily growing suddenly reduce its expenditures by $67,000? How long can a society conduct its business and carry a debt of $398,000? How far does God expect us to exercise our faith in the face of his apparent leading and to what extent should cold facts regarding the contributions from the churches dampen our ardor? What answers shall we give to the urgent calls from Kiating, Kobe, Hangchow, Chaochowfu, Kaying, Promé, Pegu, Madira, Donakonda, Midnapore, Manipur, and so forth, for a definite Christian program? What shall we do with buildings that can not be used—not because they cannot be filled but because money is not in hand to maintain the work? How can a society meet one-half of the year's expenses with one-sixth of its income?

If these were the problems of failure we could close our schools and hospitals, turn the hundreds of eager girls away, bring home our missionaries and give our attention to other matters. These are, however, the very real problems of the successful work of the W. A. B. F. M. S.—and they constitute the outlook for 1923.

The pressing needs of the society are synonymous with its problems. If "safety first" is to be the rule, the denomination should recognize that a growing, living gospel message carried to the ends of the earth must have a steady, regular support that puts it above a hand to mouth existence. The W. A. B. F. M. S. should be in a position to meet its honorable, recognized bills of the year; to pay off its debt; to reinstate the work represented by the cut of $67,000 and able to advance, not simply in the name of the 1,500,000 Northern Baptists, but more, for the sake of Jesus Christ, our Lord and Saviour, in the winning of souls, whenever and wherever God leads the way.

Our pressing need is to be enabled to bring Jesus Christ to the hearts of the women and girls of the Orient, unhampered by the lack of physical means to accomplish these spiritual results. The fields are white to the harvest—in 1923.

Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society

THE Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society has taken some forward steps during the past year in spite of the necessary reduction in the operating budget.

Puebla, Mexico

The fine building in Puebla occupied by our grade school and missionary training department, was purchased last spring. The society had rented the property for four years, but the lease could not be renewed and no other suitable building was available. The property is advantageously located and our work is now not only suitably housed but has before it the possibility of large expansion, and a corresponding increase in service through Christian education and missionary training.

Weirton, West Virginia

In this steel and mining community of 10,000 inhabitants, largely drawn from foreign lands and representing many peoples and races, there was dedicated in November the first unit in a new Christian center building. The work of the Christian center was already under way but lacked many necessary facilities for teaching the people and had practically no opportunity for growth. The first unit of the new building includes a hall seating 500, which will serve not only as an auditorium, as was the case on the day of dedication, but also as a gymnasium for young and old and where the children of the kindergarten will find more freedom for their games and play.

There is also a club room for men, a laundry for women, and shower baths for both men and women, all of which are greatly needed by the community. The building has been provided by the American Baptist Home Mission Society, the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society and the West Virginia State Convention. We believe it means the opening of a new door to a larger service in the name of Christ in a city which is without any community work, and also without a Young Men's or a Young Woman's Christian Association.

San Francisco

The work carried on by the society among the Chinese in the states on the Pacific Coast has been especially blessed during the past year. In San Francisco, our oldest station, both the day school and the Sunday school have had a larger attendance than ever before and a larger number of the young men have accepted Christ than in any previous year. A significant fact in connection with these conversions is that they were largely due to a covenant of prayer and personal effort on the part of the young men who had already accepted Christ. One by one those for whom definite prayer was made yielded and gave themselves to Jesus Christ.

Locke, California

In this small community where the work among the Chinese began through the devotion of a Christian Chinese woman, Mrs. Ong, there was dedicated in 1922 a Christian center building. The building has been provided by the American Baptist Home Mission Society, the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society and the Northern California State Convention. The work now includes church services and Sunday school, a play garden and day school.

Seattle

The work among the Chinese in Seattle has been strengthened and given an opportunity for larger growth by the dedication in October of a new church building, which is also a cooperative undertaking on the part of the two home mission societies and the state convention. The building includes a church auditorium and rooms for various lines of Christian service and activities used in reaching the large Chinese community.

Mrs. GEORGE W. COLEMAN,
New York City.

The American Baptist Home Mission Society

THE American Baptist Home Mission Society, grateful to God for his providential guidance, finds it a privilege to render a report of the progress of the work in the various departments during recent months in the confident expectation that the evidences it has had for the favor of God prophesy a still larger ministry in the years to come.

The American Baptist Home Mission Society and the American Baptist Publication Society, working in heartiest accord, are determined that so far as their resources will allow under the blessing of God they will not neglect the people in the sparsely settled regions of the more remote areas of the country, but that they will give them the gospel with as much care as it is taken to those who can be more easily reached in the settled communities.

There are now forty-one colporter-missionaries engaged jointly by the American Baptist Home Mission Society and the American Baptist Publication Society, and six missionaries in charge of chapel cars.

In the field of evangelism forty conferences in fourteen different states were held during the convention year 1921-1922 with pastors in order to study a statewide cooperative plan to reach every church with some form of evangelistic effort. Twelve states attempted such organization and reported gratifying results. The force consists of twenty-two field evangelists serving the year around and such special evangelists engaged as emergencies require.

Enlargement of the work among the Mexicans in the United States was one of the goals we set for ourselves in the New World Movement, and most gratifying results have rewarded even a moderate advance. During the past year there were reported more baptisms in our various stations in the United States than were reported from old Mexico.

"The task of the missionary society grows as the population increases. The income for this work should keep pace with its opportunities."

Two splendid church buildings and Christian centers were recently dedicated in Seattle, costing the denomination, with the land equipment, approximately $75,000, and another Christian center for the Chinese has been erected in a distinctly Chinese town in Northern California, Locke, on the usual cooperative basis. New fields in California and Washington have been occupied among the Japanese.

Today the home mission societies are cooperating in the conduct of twenty-nine Christian centers, and there is another under construction and plans drawn for three others which will be erected shortly.

In the department of social service the most notable achievement is the equipping and opening of the Judson Health Center, in connection with the Judson Memorial Church, Washington Square, New York City.

During the period of the New World Movement, The American Baptist Home Mission Society has in large measure supported seven higher schools for the Negroes and has helped to support eight other schools. The society has also administered endowments of these schools in their behalf, and gifts of the general education board, amounting to about $85,000 a year for these schools. They have enrolled 7,000 students, of whom more than 500 are preparing for the Christian ministry; about 600 are in college departments and 3,000 in academy or high-school departments; the remainder are in special industrial and grade classes. About 300 professions of faith are made each year by students, and very few graduate without becoming members of a church.

There are 225 enrolled at Bacone College, Bacone, Okla., which is perhaps the best school in the country for Indians.

The society has received large gifts from the Indians for this school and for the Murrow Indian Orphans' Home, which is connected with the school and has used about $300,000 of these gifts for the erection of new buildings; the remainder is added to the endowment of the two institutions.

In addition to the International Baptist Seminary at East Orange, N. J., which combines various foreign-speaking ministers' training schools which had grown up in different parts of the country, the seminary has departments now for the training of preachers in the following groups: Russian, Slovak, Hungarian, Polish, Roumanian, and has affiliated with it an Italian department, which is supported by Colgate Theological Seminary. The number of students has increased in three years from thirty-five to sixty-one.

The society has opened at Los Angeles, Cal., a Spanish-American training school for ministers for the Mexican churches in the southwestern part of our country. It has enrolled twelve students.

Our educational work in Latin North America is presented under separate headings elsewhere in this issue.

Indian Mission Work

In our Indian mission work we have twenty churches, with 2,395 members, as follows: In Western Oklahoma, eleven churches with 1,695 members, in six tribes Kiowa, Comanche, Cheyenne, Arapaho, Apache, Caddo; in Montana, six churches with 299 members, in one tribe, the Crow; in Arizona, three churches with 69 members, in two tribes, Navaho and Hopi; in Nevada, one church with 59 members, in the Paiute tribe; in California, six churches with 251 members, in the Mono tribe in Alaska, one church with 22 members in the Kaniagmiut tribe. When it is recalled that a majority of these were born in paganism and bred in savagery, it is a remarkable fact that two-thirds of our Indian members are able to read, so that the Bible is open to them.

Rural community work has been undertaken by the society for the past three years. At present we have directors of town and country church work in Michigan, New York State, Northern California, Ohio and Nebraska. The society also cooperates with state conventions in the work of rural demonstration parishes in Minnesota, Nebraska and Wisconsin.

The work of the department of architecture during the last twelve convention months has been double that of the previous year. During this year 310 projects have applied to the department for consulting advice, an average of one project for each working day. The estimated value of these 310 projects is $10,000,000.

Conferences have been held with 22 of these projects at their sites, the representatives of the department having travelled more than 40,000 miles during the year, visiting thirty-four states, besides touching Canada and entering Mexico.

There are pressing needs in all of the Latin-American countries and in the congested districts of our great American cities which may be only partially expressed in terms of more workers and new buildings. The task of The American Baptist Home Mission Society grows as the nation increases in population. The income for this great work should keep pace with its opportunities.

With Our Southern American Neighbors

There has been opposition, but persistence and prayer are mighty

Latin North America

THE different missions of The American Baptist Home Mission Society in Latin North America are distinguished over all others for the extent to which they put responsibility upon national leaders and for their success in developing self-supporting churches. In the five fields of Cuba, Porto Rico, Mexico, Salvador and Nicaragua there are eighty-even pastors and only fourteen American missionaries, and of these latter five are doctors and teachers in charge of one hospital and three schools of higher education. At the beginning of the five-year period there was only one self-supporting church in all of these fields; now, at the end of three years, there are nine—two in Porto Rico, two in Cuba, and five in Mexico. During this period the society has built two church buildings in Porto Rico, one in Salvador, a Sunday-school building as an addition to the church in Mexico City, and helped in the erection of a church in Cuba. Of these buildings those in San Juan, Porto Rico and in San Salvador, C. A., have rooms for school and social purposes. In many of the churches in all of these countries there are primary schools for which the society provides equipment. At the beginning of the five-year period the society reported for Latin North America a total membership of 6,322 members in 134 churches, whose total annual contributions for all purposes were $26,965. At the end of three years it reports 7,168 members in 39 churches whose total annual contributions amount to $51,851.

Porto Rico

Six churches this past year have outgrown their Sunday-school equipment and have appealed to the society for aid in building additions to the church. One of these Sunday schools has an attendance sometimes exceeding 400. Another one of these churches is located in the densely populated and growing suburb of San Juan called Santurce. It urgently calls for a new building. Two of our churches are self-supporting, with others making progress toward the same goal. The Baptist Association supports a missionary pastor among the hills in the northeastern part of the island. In Porto Rico the Home Mission Society is part owner of a mission evangelical press from which there is issued a periodical that serves all the denominations, whose editor is a Baptist. Even denominations cooperate in the Evangelical Seminary housed in the Grace Conaway Institute at Rio Piedras. This strong seminary is having a decided influence on the students of the University of Porto Rico, located in the same town. Our Dr. Steelman teaches a Bible class of these students every Sunday.

Cuba

Our mission in Cuba reports two self-supporting churches with others very near to it. The Cuban Home Mission Society supports six pastors in the Baracoa district and helps in the support of another pastor in Santa Cruz del Sur. In the latter place a frame chapel was erected by the Cubans themselves, costing $2,000, of which the Home Mission Society contributed half. Los Colegios Internacionales at Cristo had a prosperous year.

The higher department of this school, called its institute, which grants the bachelor's degree, now has an enrolment of 108, and is developing a department for the training of Cuban preachers. This number is more than double what it was three years ago.

Mexico

There are now five self-supporting churches in Mexico in fellowship with The American Baptist Home Mission Society. The national convention, representing both the northern and southern Baptist missions, supports two of its own people as missionaries to the non-Spanish speaking Indians. In Puebla the society maintains a hospital with fifty beds, and in cooperation with the Woman's Society conducts a nurses' training school. This is the best equipped hospital in the whole republic of Mexico and has helped to break down the prejudice of fanatical people against missionary work. In cooperation with the foreign mission board of the Southern Baptist Convention, the society has been supporting a theological seminary in Saltillo, which this year has

At the beginning of the five-year period there was only one self-supporting church in the five fields of Cuba, Porto Rico, Mexico, Salvador and Nicaragua. Now, at the end of three years, there are nine!

forty-five students, several of whom come from our churches in Central America. In September, under the same direction a boys' high school was opened, which already has an enrolment of 210 students.

Nicaragua

After four years of absence and completing his course at the seminary in Saltillo, Mexico, our first trained Nicaraguan pastor has returned to his own country and is now in charge of our church in Managua. This church, under the experienced leadership of General Missionary Wilson, has outgrown its rented quarters. The work demands that the society soon erect its first church building in Nicaragua. Land with two buildings has just been purchased for a boys' school which will be opened within the new year.

Salvador

There have been important changes in the personnel of this mission. Rev. P. T. Chapman is now acting general missionary. This republic has also received its first trained national pastor after the completion of his course in Saltillo, Mexico. Preparations are being made to open a day school in our new church building in the capital under the direction of a missionary teacher of the woman's society. In this republic at least two men are supported by the churches each year for varying periods up to five months as they leave their work to go upon evangelizing tours among the villages. Our missionaries have a small press and issue tracts and a periodical for their evangelical propaganda.

Haiti

Haiti has been surveyed as a mission field and efforts are being made to secure a general missionary for the island. The society has by a designated gift purchased land for a school for the training of Christian workers in Jacmel under the direction of Rev. N. L'herisson. This will be the first evangelical secondary school to be opened in Haiti.

Jamaica

At the request of the Baptist Missionary Society of Great Britain the American Baptist Home Mission Society is assisting in counsel and in the support of the Christian workers' training department of Calabar College, Kingston, and also in the support of the missionary superintendent and of the church sustentation schemes for the island. This new enterprise for the rehabilitation of the Baptist cause in Jamaica was just begun near the close of the year.

CHARLES S. DETWEILER.

Baptists in Nicaragua

NEVER since the early days of gospel work in Nicaragua has there been a more determined opposition from the Roman Catholic hierarchy than there has been within the past few months. Not only in their own periodical publications, and through pastorals and circulars by the bishops are they waging a bitter and slanderous campaign against Protestants, but the political dailies are used freely, and article after article appears in which American missionaries and native pastors are unsparingly denounced. They have exhausted their vocabulary in the use of the most opprobrious epithets to describe Protestant propagandists. Heretics, renegades, apostates are among the mildest. We are freely denounced as hypocritical, immoral, devilish. We are said to be buying the people with money, and leading them headlong into hell. The article in the constitution of the country which guarantees liberty of worship, is openly denounced, and the civil authorities are frequently reminded that Protestant propaganda should not be tolerated.

But I think this rabid opposition, together with occasional acts of violence, has fallen out rather to the furtherance of the gospel. The attendance at our services has increased, every one of our Sunday schools is growing, and we are witnessing conversions right along. The people have never shown greater desire to hear and to read. In Managua and in Masaya we have outgrown our accommodations and are much crowded for lack of room.

The girls' school at Managua has grown steadily until it has been necessary to provide additional space, and still they are crowded.

The Home Mission Society has recently taken a step forward of very great importance in the purchase of a valuable property for a boys' school. This was a necessity if we are to have a well-balanced educational work in Nicaragua. These schools will lay the foundations of Christian homes, which in turn will be the stronghold of the church. They will also greatly aid in furnishing trained workers. Our most urgent need, after the direct power of the Holy Spirit, is a trained ministry for the churches, and trained Christian teachers for the schools. Only recently our first trained native pastor, who has been studying abroad, returned and is actively and efficiently engaged in the work. He needs to be duplicated many times.

Another pressing need is buildings. The two boards own two school buildings which for the time being serve the purpose. The main society owns one building, which is used for church purposes; but in all Nicaragua Baptists own not a single church building. In Managua this is already a pressing need.

Since the days of Christ the ministry of healing has been a mighty proof and a mighty power in the church of God. With sorrow and pain we have to see our people suffer and our cause lose ground for lack of any means of caring for the sick and helpless. If the church has lost the power to heal the sick through the prayer of faith, the church ought to furnish the means to build hospitals, asylums and sanitariums, and until it does it cannot properly fulfill its mission to the world. Nicaragua greatly needs such an institution.

D. A. WILSON.

Managua, Nicaragua, C. A.

Central America

1. With regard to outstanding achievements in the work. I think that the most impressive is the solid advance in the evangelization of the republic; the establishment of new congregations, and one or two new churches. We are doing a more extensive work with a smaller staff.

Another extremely important feature is the great work that our own publication El Heraldito is doing in the whole of the republic, and especially in the outlying and distant places where it is sent by post. In the follow-up work, to the small extent in which that has been possible, it is seen that it has caused an active ferment amongst the very ignorant Romanists, and in different places has brought us fierce opposition or a warm welcome.

2. The outlook for 1923 is of course bright—very bright. It is "the path of the shining light"—see Prov. 4:18. We believe that the Lord is going to do great things for El Salvador in the coming year—and we shall be glad.

3. Our chief need is the frequent concentration of our constituents in prayer—believing prayer—for this turbulent little republic, which at the commencement of our work was prophesied that it should be the Saviour of Central America in fact as it is in name.

In equipment we have one or two very great needs. The services in our fine new temple—the G. H. Q. of the Northern Baptists in their sister republic—have at present to be led in music by a wheezy little portable organ, which really deserves to be pensioned. The rate at which the organist has to pump makes one glad that her efforts are hidden from the congregation. Then if somebody wanted to do something especially effective among the mountains of El Salvador, and to impress the very ignorant, fanatical people of the more remote districts, a portable cinematograph; and a good stereopticon for the church in the capital.

PERCY T. CHAPMAN.

El Salvador, C. A.

Cuba

THERE are two outstanding features of the work of the American Baptist Home Mission Society in Cuba.

1. The great opportunity that is before us in educational work. In this field we stand easily in the front rank. No finer opportunity for gospel work is to be found anywhere in Latin America. The financial depression of the past two years has affected our attendance to a certain extent, nevertheless the present year's attendance promises to be one of the largest in our history. Our morning chapel service is a sight that would delight the heart of any lover of missions.

2. The continued splendid success of our Cuban Home Mission Society was all the more noteworthy in a year of general financial depression. This society raised during the year more than $4,000 and with the small help of $600 from the North supported seven of our native brethren on their fields. This means that every third pastor in Cuba is now supported by Cuban funds.

The Outlook for 1923

We enter the year with the firm determination that we will advance all along the line. We are just beginning an intensive evangelistic campaign that is to include every field now occupied by our board in Eastern Cuba. The leader chosen is the Rev. Fred J. Peters, at present of New Jersey but for long years a missionary in Latin America. We are praying for a large ingathering and we are working with that end in view. We believe in Carey's motto, "Expect great things from God. Attempt great things for God."

Pressing Needs

1. A consecrated man to train our future ministry.

2. A consecrated man or woman to take charge of our proposed normal work.

3. More buildings with larger and better class rooms for our central plant at Cristo. Our present outfit is not more than adequate for the proper housing of the lower school. In fact, even for this purpose an administration and class room building should be added. This leaves our upper school or junior college work entirely unprovided for. A dormitory and a class room building should be put up at once. This work is becoming more important every day. Our matriculation class has over fifty students. The first year of our Cuban A. B. course has forty-nine young men and women. Most of their work is done in a class room meant for thirty pupils. In our boarding department we are forced to place four boys in rooms designed for two. Give us larger and better class rooms and you will see our numbers increase and our efficiency doubled.

Our school at Cristo, the Colegios Internacionales, is one of the most important if not the most important evangelistic institution of learning in Cuba, and one of the most important single factors in the evangelization of Latin America. As Baptists we occupy an enviable position among the educational forces in this republic but that is not sufficient. We must grow if we would observe the law of life. We must conserve if we would increase and we must increase if we would continue to live.

Cuba needs your help, needs it supremely at the present time. She needs the best you have for her in citizenship and in life and in training of her young manhood and womanhood. Above all she needs that which alone can make for righteousness, that which alone can make a nation great, the gospel of Jesus Christ the Son of God.

R. ROUTLEDGE.

Cristo, Oriente, Cuba.

The Work in Porto Rico

OUR outstanding achievements are: (a) A very considerable increase in attendance and efficiency of the Sunday schools. (b) A notable development in self-support and responsibility for their own work on the part of the native leaders and the churches in general. (c) A deeper grasp of the fundamentals of kingdom efficiency on the part of the churches such as the securing of more and better prepared pastors, the need of a better development of our educational facilities.

The outlook for 1923 is the brightest we have known since beginning my work here. There seems to be a high spiritual tone that promises well for the evangelistic and financial campaigns which we are just now beginning. Unless all signs fail we are on the eve of a considerable harvest of souls during the next few months.

Our chief needs are: (a) More trained workers, both pastors and lay missionaries. (b) At least an educational institution of preparatory and junior college grade, both to prepare candidates for the ministry without losing them before they reach the seminary, and to uphold higher ideals of education for the laity. (c) Better physical equipment for our country churches.

To the North

The Maritime Provinces

OUR brief letter of a year ago expressed the expectation that the great event of 1922 with us would be the erection of a new administration building at Acadia University. But shortly there came a proposed amalgamation of Maritime Colleges in a great university at Halifax, N. S., accompanied by generous offers from the Carnegie Corporation. At present, therefore, all building operations are held up until the final decision of our Maritime Baptist Convention is reached in the summer of 1923. It now seems unlikely, as far as we can see, that Acadia will enter into this suggested federation. If not, then after next August there will probably be great activity in rearing the handsome and commodious new edifice which our needs so urgently demand.

Dr. George B. Cutten, our college president for twelve and a half years—years of great material advance—has gone from us to the headship of Colgate. The inauguration of his successor, Dr. F. W. Patterson, of Winnipeg, is to take place very soon after the opening of the new year. Those who know Dr. Patterson and what he has done are confidently expecting that he will do a great work for Acadia which of course means a great work for our churches and our denomination in these parts.

A. C. CHUTE.

Wolfville, Nova Scotia.

Western Canada

NO startling features have characterized our Baptist work in Western Canada during 1922; it has been a time of conserving what we have and pressing quietly forward. The interests of evangelism and religious education have been kept well to the front. Fully 85 per cent of our Forward Movement pledges have been paid. Mention should be made of the notable service rendered by our four superintendents of provincial missions. They are a most devoted quartette. The able administration of Dr. F. W. Patterson, general secretary of the Baptist Union of Western Canada, terminates with the close of the year by reason of his accepting the presidency of Acadia University. He goes East after twenty-three years of conspicuous ministry rendered to our Western cause as home missionary, pastor and general secretary. We cannot replace him but are glad to announce as his successor, Rev. M. L. Orchard, assistant secretary of the foreign mission board of Canada. The work at Brandon College has moved forward slowly but steadily. Of the original Half Million Dollar Objective, $425,000, including a conditional bequest of the late Mr. William Davies, has been subscribed. For two years Rev. W. J. Sparks gave heroic help and took the heavy end of the load in securing pledges for $120,000 from the people of Brandon and for $100,000 from Baptist friends in the three prairie provinces, so meeting the terms of the Davies bequest. The hard persistent work of Mr. Sparks during a time of financial depression has meant a great deal. We must soon push forward to complete the revised objective of $800,000.

European Nations in America

The Roumanian Baptists in America

THE Baptist work among the Roumanians in America was started in 1910 when the First Roumanian Baptist Church of America was organized in Cincinnati, Ohio, with some Baptists who had come from Roumania and some who were baptized in this country. In 1913 the Roumanian Baptist Association of North America was organized. It began publishing a sixteen-page monthly religious review Crestinul (The Christian) which is still being published, but now semi-monthly. The work has progressed so that at the close of the Great War there were more than 1,200 Roumanian Baptists. When the way to Europe was opened almost one-half of them went to Roumania: some to their families, others to see their parents. Some are returning and there are many who would like to come back to America, but are confronted with many difficulties.

The Roumanian Baptist Association has met regularly every year since it was organized. This year (1922) it held its annual conference in Detroit, Mich., in the Second Roumanian Baptist Church. The delegates to this conference represented eighteen churches and missions. Sunday schools, B. Y. P. U.'s, and women's organizations were also represented. The reports, considering the circumstances, were inspiring. There were forty-one baptized. The total membership is 628. There was raised $13,267.29 this year to help the work. New work was started in South Bethlehem, Pa., and Newark, Ohio. There are eighteen Roumanian Baptist students studying in different schools, that is, in high schools, academies, universities and seminaries, eight of whom are studying for the work of the ministry. The association elected as its officers for this year Rev. C. R. Igrisan, president; Rev. I. Trutza, vice-president; Rev. J. Ardelean, secretary; Mr. J. Heghean, treasurer.

The outlook for the future is encouraging. The opportunities are many, but the needs are also great because there are more than 250,000 Roumanians in this country and our work is just a small beginning. There are many Roumanian colonies where no Baptist work is being done at all. We are suffering because of the lack of workers. We have only seven ministers that are giving their full time to the work. The rest of the work is done either by supplies or by laymen.

All this work is being done in cooperation with the American Baptists. Credit is due for it to the American Baptist Home Mission Society, the American Baptist Woman's Mission Society, American Baptist Publication Society, and city and state mission societies for their brotherly helping hand. Thanking the Lord for this work, we are also praying him to send more laborers into this needy field.

German Baptist Churches of North America

THE past year shows marked progress in spite of reverses and struggles common to all our brethren. There have been 1586 converts added by baptism and seven new churches organized during the past year. The number of churches is 296 with a total membership of 32,766.

Eight new Bible schools and an increase of 2188 scholars are reported, making a total of 364 schools with 30,618 scholars. 3112 teachers are active in teaching the classes. 203 young people's societies report a membership of 8,171. The young people's and Bible-school work give promise of new growth and greater efficiency.

The women's missionary societies report an increase of 228 members and a total membership of 6383.

The 296 churches with less than 33,000 members raised $308,243.26 for missionary purposes, or $9.40 per member.

Russia and Germany have received substantial aid.

There are at present about fifty students studying for the ministry, twelve new students entered last fall in the German department of the Rochester Baptist Seminary. All the men are being prepared to preach in the language of the country.

A new English paper has been launched, the Baptist Herald, published for the present monthly, which is meeting a great need.

Our most pressing need is the faith that can truthfully say: "I can do all things in him that strengtheneth me." We need a revival of fervent prayer, of warm devotion and cheerful witnessing for Christ.

Swedish Baptist General Conference

DURING the past year the general conference celebrated the seventieth anniversary of organized Swedish Baptist work in America. The fact was duly commemorated at the annual meetings in Chicago last September. The completion of seventy years of active work, however, does not indicate impending senility, but rather renewed power, which manifested itself in plans for stronger evangelistic work, a more extensive educational program and a more perfect coordination of executive agencies.

During the year Dr. C. G. Lagergren, for thirty-four years dean of our theological seminary, was retired on pension and succeeded by Dr. G. Arvid Gordh, until recently pastor in New York. Dr. Gordh is a man splendidly equipped for his important position. Dr. K. J. Karlson, formerly of Clark University, is another valuable addition to the seminary faculty. A fine class of graduates finished their work in the seminary during the year, giving evidence that normalcy is replacing war-time conditions in our educational life.

During the year, 1,354 baptisms have been reported. Total contributions reported something over one million; of this amount more than $133,000 for benevolences. Present membership 31,437.

One outstanding need for the coming year is more men of great evangelistic power, men who can fill the constantly growing need for strong, virile gospel work.

For our educational work we need more funds—an endowment fund that will adequately meet our growing educational program; funds for more buildings to house the increasing number of students.

If the year of 1923 supplies these needs another new year will see us moving a long way toward the goal of ultimate victory.

The Portuguese Work

DURING the past year the work among the Portuguese has been blessed as in other years, with conversions and baptisms in the several missions of the Baptists in Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

The mission in New Bedford, which is the oldest, had sixteen additions the past year, twelve by baptism and four by letter. The mission at Fall River, Mass., as well as the mission in Cambridge have had about the same number of additions or nearly so, and the missions in Providence and Pawtucket, R. I., have had success, and have added several to their membership.

There is a self-supporting Portuguese Baptist church in Bristol, R. I., that is doing very well. It has had several conversions and baptisms in the past year.

The Portuguese mission at Taunton, Mass., is not doing as well as it should, though during the year several young men have been baptized there. The work has been under the care of the Portuguese missionary in Fall River, who visits the mission for preaching three times during the month. Mr. White, one of the leading members of the Taunton Baptist Church, takes a great interest in the mission and is a great help to it, but there should be a settled missionary there, and until there is the work cannot grow very much.

We had several Baptist people in Plymouth, Mass., and we visited them once a week for two or three years, but the railroad fares doubled and the best part of two days was required to go and come. It was finally given up. A settled missionary should be put there, but as nothing was done, the Methodists took up the work among our people there, and last Labor day baptized five or six of the converts, children of the Baptists. We have lost by not having missionaries in these destitute missions.

There are other places which could be opened if we could get missionaries to man them. Let us pray the Lord of the harvest to send laborers into his fields for the harvest is great, but the laborers are few.

Hungarian Baptist Union of America

THE Union is made up of twenty-eight churches and ten mission stations with a membership totaling about 1,600. Every church and mission, as a rule, has its Sunday school usually with a membership higher than that of the church's. Thus our Sunday-school scholars number about 2400. There are twenty-six regular Hungarian workers and a few laymen who are sacrificially giving their time and talent in the service of the kingdom. Speaking in round numbers, there are 500,000 Hungarians in the United States. The Baptist work was started in 1900 at Cleveland. Among the first active men are: Rev. M. Fabian, Rev. S. Gazsi (now president of the union), Rev. M. Vegh (now retired) and Rev. Nicholas Dully. Every one of them came to America as Baptists.

Within the union there are several organizations through which it chiefly functions. The union of the ladies' aid societies endeavors to help the needy here and in Hungary and supports missionaries in the old country and the occupied territories thereof. The Sunday-school union is a rather new organization which promotes teacher-training classes and standard Sunday schools. A condensed translation of the "Keystone Teacher-Training Course" first year book is ready and the first two sections of it have been mimeographed and studied more or less completely by about 200 teachers. A plan is under way now to put the material into book form to make it more accessible to our people both on the other side and here. The young people's union is also on the way toward perfection under the able leadership of Mr. William Tatter of Chicago, a Rochester graduate (German department). The aim of this organization is to interest our young people in higher Christian education, missions and general kingdom service. On the whole the Baptist Union of America promotes unity and united actions among the churches in evangelizing our people here, but lately a great deal of relief work has been done to help out our brethren and fellowmen in Europe. It has its welfare-missionary committee through which thousands of dollars were sent over and the end is not yet.

A Hard Year

During the last convention year (1921-22) 133 baptisms were recorded. It was one of our hardest years for many reasons. An incorporated bookstore was opened with an office in New York City. Three mission stations were accepted into the union. Teacher-training conferences were held. Two or three missionaries began to preach the gospel among the Hungarians in Europe as a result of our humble efforts here.

Our needs are many. The chief among these is more workers—men and women—to do regular and specific work. At least one man should devote all of his time to literature. And we have the man, but—! There should be one to take care of the young people's union, the Sunday-school union and the union of the ladies' aid societies. By all means we need a man, a general evangelist-secretary. He would help out churches where there are no pastors and seek out new fields of operation and would assist in special evangelistic campaign. Colporters? We ought to have five more—at least that many!

As to the future just before us, would say that it is quite hopeful. With the coming of the better working condition, there will be a better chance in every way to carry on the work. Every day we are a little bit better known by the outside people and the general prejudice against us is gradually vanishing. The best of all is that we sincerely endeavor to be on the side of our Lord and with him there is victory.

Russian Baptists, 1922-1923

The Facts

Foreigners in the United States of America	13,000,000
Russians and Ukrainians (Ruthenians)	1,000,000
Russian Evangelical Christians ..	1,000
Russian Baptists	550
Russian Baptist congregations ..	35
Mission fields or centers of activity ..	3
(Eastern Conference with headquarters at Hartford, Conn., Central Conference with headquarters in the state of North Dakota, and the Pacific Coast Mission.)

Achievements

During the past year two phases of work have been especially emphasized, namely, evangelism and benevolences. Effort has been made not only to hold what we have, but also to win men and women for Christ. The exact number of baptisms is not known, approximately fifty-five. Benevolences were centering around starving Russia, for nobody else feels more keenly the unspeakable suffering and sorrow of Russia's starving millions than their own sons and daughters on this side of the ocean. Something over $10,000 has been contributed by the Russians themselves. A number of Bible conferences or institutes have been held in the territory of the Eastern Conference in order to instruct believers and to promote personal consecration. Sunday-school work has been taken more seriously this year than ever before; new schools have been organized, and lessons prepared in Russian which will be published in the near future. It is gratifying to notice that lately some of the leading brethren have come to see the great need of trained and paid ministry which was not the case a few years ago. This indicates that a new era is about to break upon the Russian mission work. Twenty-five Russian students are enrolled in our International Seminary, headed by two competent professors. Stewardship has been taught and practiced, and a better cooperation between the American Baptist Home Mission Society and the Russian congregations has been brought about.

Needs

The needs are so many and the problems so great that it is impossible to mention them all here. One of the principal needs is of course a much greater number of well trained leaders and preachers in the field. Many more mission stations should be opened without any delay. It is heartrending to contemplate the hosts of ignorant and superstitious Russians in the mining centers without any spiritual care whatsoever. They verily are like sheep without a shepherd. This means that much more money should be put into the Russian work than has been done heretofore. There is a great need of evangelical and doctrinal literature. Almost nothing has been published in Russian on subjects like church discipline, Sunday-school, missions—home and foreign—stewardship, and so on. The racial and linguistic differences between the Great Russians and the Little Russians must be taken into consideration by our boards and especially in the training of workers. Ignorance and the radicalism of present day Russia are the chief forces that work against Christian influences among Russians. But the one supreme need, towering above all others, is the love of Christ manifested in every-day life toward the poor and ignorant Russian brother in America.

Every thoughtful Russian is sincerely grateful to the American Baptist Home Mission Society for all that it has done for them, as well as to all those who so beautifully manifested their sympathy with starving Russia in "rushing a ship to Russia."

In view of the gratifying achievements of last year, and in spite of the great difficulties and many needs mentioned above, the outlook for next year is brighter than ever before. We expect great things from God and shall attempt great things for God; we shall pray as if all would depend on God, but we shall work as if all would depend on us.

RICHARD J. INKE.

General Missionary to the Russians.

Danish Baptist General Conference

DURING the year our conference has been engaged in a mission campaign. We began ten days before Pentecost with daily prayer meetings in nearly all our churches. On Pentecost or immediately after, as many churches as could, began special meetings which largely had the aim of promoting a deeper spiritual life among our members. As could be expected, a revival broke out some places and especially in Camp Douglas, Wis., Walworth, Minn., and Gilmore City, Iowa. A considerable number were added to the churches. The summer and fall were thus spent in building up and quickening the inner life in our churches and unto the end of the year of the campaign we shall now try especially to reach out and win the lost to Christ. Many of the churches are having special evangelistic services, or will have a series during the winter and spring.

It was a loss to us that evangelist M. A. Wegsard saw it necessary to discontinue his work with us. He has been successful in the work the years he has been with our conference. We are now trying to find a man to fill his place.

The churches of Gilmore City, Iowa, and Eureka, Wis., are completing new houses of worship, and at Milltown, Wis., they are remodeling the church. The church at Gilmore City will be an honor to our cause as it will be by far the most prominent Protestant church edifice in the town. All the services are carried on in the English language, as in several other of our churches. The church has made good progress the last year, and has made a very favorable impression on the town and community.

In Foreign Lands

Poverty, starvation, nakedness, turmoil, typhoon, flood and pestilence have marked the year in many places, and yet they report—achievement!

The Baptist Work in Czecho-Slovakia

TO understand the present condition of work, it is needed to have in mind these facts: Before the war there were but three workers in the whole country. During the war there was but one, i. e., Rev. J. Novotny in Prague, as the other two were in the Austrian army far from their homes. The brethren were dispersed. In the first and second year after the proclamation of our national liberty suppressed life of the nation began to live anew. First thing for the two pastors to do was to gather together the dispersed flock. There were helpers ready to help and they helped with sacrifice. But missionary workers were wanted who would spend all their time in the work. This was not realized until in summer, 1920, when more than 20 workers at once were set to work with the help of the Southern Baptist Convention. After the dove from the S. B. C. others came bringing boughs of promise and hope and brotherly love. These came from the Northern Baptist Convention through the medium of Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke. The years 1921 and 1922 were spent in organizing and consolidating single churches and the Union of the Baptists in Czecho-Slovakia. This process has not yet been finished. In 1921 we had in our statistics 1,500 baptized members. And we saw an immense field for the Baptist work given us from the mighty and loving hand of our Lord. At this time there are 30 workers and nearly 3,000 members, beside the Sunday school and Young People's Union.

The Year's Achievements

1. Our Seminary for training ministers started in November, 1921, finished its first year with the end of June. In October the second year was begun. There are 14 students. We are persuaded that with the Lord's help the school shall have a profound meaning for our mission in the country.

2. In February distribution of the gifts from the Ship of Fellowship was finished. The gifts meant to the poor both of our and other denominations a great help in difficult times. With us it especially meant strengthening of the Baptist consciousness of brotherhood with brethren beyond the ocean. May I thank once again the generous givers for their gifts in the name of those who received them!

3. In April Peabody-Montgomery Children's Home in Czecho-Slovakia was opened. During the war the Baptist church in Prague resolved to get an institute for war-orphans, and gathered more than 60,000 crowns. Nearly 200,000 crowns Rev. J. Novotny gathered while in America, 1919. At last a generous contribution has been made by the generous sisters of the N. B. C. to this purpose, while Mrs. Kolator was in America in 1920. So with this help it has been made possible to give to 15 orphans a home.

4. From March to May an action was made to help our brethren in Russia during the famine. There has been gathered together a sum of 73,000 crowns which was sent to Dr. Rushbrooke.

5. With the beginning of the year our Publishing Company came into being. Its importance for the denomination and for the whole nation is apparent. And we begin to feel its work and meaning. Its seat is in the capital of Slovakia Bratislava.

6. A society to help fallen women was organized in Bratislava and began to work. Its name is Save-Society and its achievements are being acknowledged and sustained by the Government itself. Its larger development depends on sufficient means which are not at hand at this time.

The mentioned achievements are strong helpers in our mission-work standing in close contact with it. But there are several direct missionary achievements in which we rejoice. These are:

7. From March till October five new chapels or meeting-houses were consecrated to their purpose. The sixth one is just being finished and will be opened within a few days. The chapels are: In Bohemia 2, in Slovakia 3 and in Moravia 1, representing all together a sum of more than one million crowns. They are situated in our centers, from which the light of the Cross is being dispersed.

Evangelizing Campaigns

8. There were three evangelizing campaigns. First in Bohemia where Rev. A. Knobloch successfully preached. After his arrival from America Mr. Hok helped, visiting and preaching in different places of the Republic. At the same time the other missionary workers led by their ministers evangelized. In July and August Dr. Jones, the pastor of the First Baptist Church in Philadelphia and Dr. Taylor, pastor of the First Baptist Church in Indianapolis came to evangelize in the centers of the work. Their campaign was most successful and raised warmest interest in the places where they preached. At the same time all the workers preached and led people to Christ. To make a possible greatest use of the effective work of Dr. Taylor and Dr. Jones a new campaign was carried out. It contained three periods: The first had to prepare and awake the spiritual and mental powers of the members and friends by a four weeks' Bible School, the second being a prayer week had to consecrate our decision to serve the Lord and man with all our power. And the third period contains the proper evangelistic meetings in great public halls we were able to get. To God be glory. In Prague the effects of this are great and blessed. In other parts of the Republic this scheme is just carried out.

9. The young people of our local churches organized themselves in the Young People's Baptist Society. They already have begun to work on this large basis.

To enumerate these facts means but one side of the work of the past year. There was a quiet work still going on inside the church. And it is even this work out of which grow pillars and walls bearing the upper building.

The Outlook for 1923

There is one slogan for the coming year and this is: Intensive work inside and outside the denomination. Our ideal is that each member of the church may be a missionary. So deep religious education among all the brethren is needed, that would keep their hearts and minds in constant touch with our Lord. And then with burning hearts to evangelization. There will be at least two campaigns—one in January and February, the other in October, November and December. During the summer months tent mission in several places will be carried on—if we get tents. We hope that having at least one traveling evangelist, we shall have rich harvest.

So it is hoped that several new centers of the work will be founded throughout the country. Then it will be needed to secure new buildings or chapels. In the middle of next year also in our country naturally stands The Baptist World Congress in Stockholm. We look forward to it with many hopes, as it will surely be a mighty lighthouse which shall throw its light upon the whole of Europe. It will bring a spiritual quickening to all churches and to those of Czecho-Slovakia, too.

Besides this we intend to make several big collections among the brethren. One of them will be, if needed, for the brethren in Russia, others for denominational purposes—Seminary, Evangelization, Save-Society, etc.

The Needs

The bright outlook for next year as briefly sketched in the previous lines, is somehow overshadowed with clouds of difficulties, out of which grow needs. These are the chief of them:

Being comparatively a small denomination which, although it has existed some thirty years already, took its more definite shape after the great war, is chiefly the reason why we have no Baptist culture or tradition. And there must be some premises under which also the Baptists of this country have to face their future. But as yet we have not been able to work out such Baptist eugenics, as needed today. It is not enough to make propaganda for Baptists and their lofty principles, but it is needed to found churches and keep them in growing existence. This all leads to education, to literature, to scientific work combined with deep religious, New Testament or Baptist culture. This is one of our needs that is to be solved as soon as possible. How do we meet this need? We publish two monthly papers, issued in 4,000 copies; we publish tracts and books; we distribute them. And the writers write their articles and essays by night spending the days in missionary work. Thus education with all its components is our first need. And with it the most perfect and closest relation with our Father who is in heaven through Jesus Christ. We wish to have our seminary of first rank, to have our literature of the first rank. And we should like to go to school of our more progressive and more fortunate brethren who have got their own Baptist culture, the center of which is the Lord. We are persuaded that in this sign of Jesus' culture we shall go on victoriously.

On the other hand there is a material, black cloud hanging over us. It is the way leading to self-supporting our churches. This year only on salaries to ministers was paid a sum of about 580,000 crowns out of which our Union gave 70,000 cr., to which at least 10,000 cr. will be added. Next year it is needed that our Union get together 30 per cent. In 1924 40 per cent and so on. This is a beautiful scheme, but with us remains a heavy responsibility. We try to do our best and are sure that our work will have its fruit. We are sure that behind the cloud the Sun of God's Love shines having its reflex in the eyes of our brethren, who will help their weak and poor brethren.

For evangelistic purposes we need at least one or two evangelists and one or two mission tents.

This is but a very rough and brief survey of our work, outlook and chief needs. But there are immense possibilities of leading people to Christ. With thankful heart I beg to say on behalf of the Union of the Baptists of Czecho-Slovakia: May God bless all those who in whatever way helped to spread the kingdom in this country. For "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it for me."

Praha.

J. PROCHAZKA.

Echoes from Latvia

AFTER the hurricane of the great war our country was greatly devastated, and also our Baptist churches. From more than two millions inhabitants of Latvia there were left scarcely half. Likewise in our eighty churches, of about 10,000 members there remained in the country about 4,000. The greater part fled to Russia.

In the last two years some thousand members returned, but very naked and very poor, not only bodily but also spiritually. The churches had much to do to help in both directions. Surely they would have failed if the American and English Baptists had not sent help, visiting us and feeding and clothing our poor people. All feel the heartiest thanks for the generous work.

Also caused by the terrification of the war there has been some disorganization in our churches, especially by the Pentecostal movement, which caused an emigration of some hundred people to Brazil, people who had lost their hope for the recovery of the country. But the churches are recovering and taking courage. They are continuing mission work with new hope, so that the outlook for 1923 is a promising one, as we enjoy great religious freedom in Latvia.

The outstanding achievement in the past year is the establishment of our seminary in Riga with fifteen students. It is the fulfilment of our dream of decades.

Our chief needs to go onward with mission work now are: Evangelists, colporters, tracts and good Christian literature. As our people are still poor by the damages of the war, so we ourselves cannot yet afford all the needs.

The leaders of the Lettish Baptists have in mind the opening of schools for education of our children and the youth. Just now we have established in Libau a public school in connection with a high school. That will save many children from the bad influence of atheistic teachers.

Riga.

J. A. FREY.

Burma Rangoon

PERHAPS the most noteworthy achievement of the past year is the mass movement among the hill tribes just across the border in China where we have but recently opened a new station. During three months of the touring season more than 2,500 were baptized by Mr. Young and his assistants, and thousands more were appealing for the missionary to come and baptize them. The number is limited only by the number of workers we are able to put into the field. Truly a nation is being born in a day.

It is also worthy of note that the Kachins, another animistic people, dwelling in the hills of Upper Burma, are gradually awakening. Whole villages are asking the missionary to send them teachers, the supplying of whom soon leads the people to destroy the altars erected for the worship of the nats (evil spirits).

In our educational work the most remarkable achievement of the past year is the 41 per cent increase in attendance at Judson College. Moreover, the percentage of Christians is the largest ever. The hostel for girls is running over. Several had to be refused.

The completion of the Ko Tha Byu Memorial, accomplished without aid from America, has attracted wide attention in Burma. The 50,000 Karen Christians of Bassein district unified by the spirit of Christ, have accomplished what some prominent non-Christians have said a similar body of non-Christians could not do for lack of such unity. The Hon. A. F. Whyte, president of the Indian legislative assembly and chairman of the Burma reforms committee, during the course of a reception held in his honor in this building recently, paid a high tribute to the work of the A. B. F. M. S. in Burma. He said that he doubted if there were any single agency for the betterment of human welfare in any part of the world that had achieved greater results.

As to the outlook for 1923, the chief event will be the inauguration of the reforms scheme whereby a larger measure of self-government will be given to the people of the country. The agitation and education in connection with this scheme has awakened a new sense of responsibility within the Christian community and it is probable that the coming year will find them assuming greater responsibility for the Christianization of their own race and undertaking a larger measure of the financial burden which this involves.

Our chief needs are more trained workers for the great work among the hill tribes, and more missionaries. Five large Burmese stations are now vacant and two more will be vacant within the next six months.

An increase of appropriations next year is also most urgent. The heavy reduction this year due to the financial depression will result in a very serious setback, and if continued another year may compel the closing of some stations.

WALTER E. WIATT.

Toungoo

THE cut in appropriations for the work has struck our Burma mission hard as doubtless it has every other. It has not been without some good results. It has led us to more earnest efforts towards self-support, and we need and ought to press that with all our might.

The reference committee which has the disbursement of the funds of the whole mission, has a heart-breaking task. At first it treated all alike, making the same reduction in the appropriations of each missionary. Very earnest protests were made by several whose work is particularly promising and that work is likely to be set back for years if the proposed reduction is made. This protest was seconded by others. It now seems probable that the reduction will be made on what seems to many the less responsive fields.

That makes it seem extremely likely, that among other means of reducing expenses the Burman School in Toungoo will be closed. That will have a most disastrous effect upon the whole Burman work here. (I am in the Karen work, but am greatly concerned over this impending catastrophe.) It is a work of many years, in which Dr. Bixby, Dr. Cushing, Dr. Eveleth and their wives and others less well known have wrought.

The Burman church here is made up of Burmans, Shans, Chins, Chinese and natives of India proper. The headmaster of the school, who has a Chinese father and Burman mother, is an earnest Christian. He visits the pupils in their homes, especially if a pupil is absent. Some of these parents say to him, "We like to have you come to our home, but we do not want the preachers." Christian teachers and Christian doctors can reach people whom the preachers cannot. Pray for them that they may have zeal and wisdom to use their opportunities to the utmost. We need your prayers.

What are the causes of lack of funds in the treasury? Is the fundamentalist controversy one cause? Is dissatisfaction with the way the funds are used another?

A Missionary for Fifty Years

Lacking a few months, I have been a missionary to Burma for fifty years. In the use of money, and perhaps in every other way, I have made many blunders, and I can see mistakes that my fellow missionaries have made. But we are true and loyal servants of Jesus Christ, earnestly striving to do his will, and doubtless the same may be said of the home administration. In spite of very imperfect servants, and their many blunders, the Lord has done a great work through them, and that work, the Lord's work, is now in deadly peril.

We Christians of the Northern Baptist Convention have a great work on our hands. It is a work for which we as a denomination are responsible. We cannot withdraw from it and be guiltless. It is work in which our fathers have wrought. If because we think some of our fellow laborers have strayed from the faith and may teach error, or because we think the money is not used in the best way, we refuse to give to this work, what will the Lord say to us?

When we see mistakes made, the first thing to do is to take it very definitely to the Lord in prayer, and that means of mending matters needs to be kept up very persistently. "More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of," but not half as many as would be wrought if we prayed more and if we prayed right.

This is not in the least an appeal for special help for Toungoo. It is a plea for all the work of the Northern Baptist Convention. This is a day of wonderful opportunity and of awful peril in China. Oh! why are we so slow to come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty?

There are many who are not slow. They make glad the heart of the Lord. May every member of every church of the Northern Baptist Convention join their ranks.

Religious Education

International Sunday School Lesson for January 21

THE PRODIGAL SON

Lesson: Luke 15 Golden Text: Luke 15:10

Introductory

The fifteenth chapter of Luke contains three great parables of the lost—the lost sheep, the lost coin and the wandering son. It is full of the love and forgiveness of God. The parables were related by Jesus some place on his last journey to Jerusalem when "all the publicans and sinners were drawing near unto him for to hear him. And both the Pharisees and the scribes murmured, saying, This man receiveth sinners and eateth with them."

The Lesson

It was in answer to this accusation that Jesus gave the parable of the lost sheep, following it with that of the lost coin, and then, as a climax, the most beautiful parable in the Bible—that of the prodigal son. "This man receiveth sinners," the Pharisees said of Jesus, and so he spoke a parable in which they have no difficulty in applying the lesson to themselves as represented by the calculating and loveless elder brother. The publicans and sinners in their sin and repentance are pictured by the younger brother, and God by the forgiving earthly father. Thousands of younger sons through the years have reenacted the story of the prodigal Jesus pictured: "He gathered all together and took his journey into a far country, and there he wasted his substance in riotous living. And when he had spent all there arose a mighty famine in the land and he began to be in want." In this extremity he hired himself to a man who made him swine-herder, the most despised work that could have been assigned to a Jew. His food was the same as that of the swine, the husks or pods of the carob tree which grows in waste places where other crops will not grow. Alone in the open, living the most elemental sort of life, he "came to himself" and saw himself as he really was, and he also saw his father in his true light. Impelled by this new sanity the boy said, "I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight: I am no more worthy to be called thy son: make me as one of thy hired servants." But when he carried out this plan, he had no opportunity to express the last clause of the sentence, for the father was watching for him, and when he had told of his repentance, the father called the servants to clothe him and put a ring on his hand and kill the fatted calf. Pitted against the great unquestioning forgiveness of the father is the jealousy of the elder brother. "He was angry and would not go in." Did the love of the father fail then with this even more trying elder son? No. He came out "and intreated him and said unto him, Son, thou art ever with me, and all that is mine is thine. But it was meet to make merry and be glad: for thy brother was dead and is alive again."

Leading Thoughts

1. No repentant prodigal lives who can deny that the Father has met him with open arms.
2. There are two sinners pictured in this parable—who shall say that riotous living was worse in the eyes of the father than smugness and jealousy?
3. "No prodigal ever became a saint, who could not have been a better saint had he not been a prodigal."

The Problem of Religious Education

By WILLIAM PIERSON MERRILL

It is absolutely impossible to produce characters fit for citizenship in a democracy unless religion is an element in the training. The vital problem now confronting us is how to hold religion and knowledge together, how to make religion a vital part of the training of the young, and still keep the church and the state separate. It is at this point that the church is rightly and supremely interested. It is one of the most difficult problems now confronting thoughtful people, a tangled mass of issues at which we look almost with despair. There do appear, however, certain outstanding phases of the problem on which we can take hold.

First of all, we people of the churches should watch for and make the most of, any possible opportunities for the bringing of religious training into the lives of the youth of our country. The Protestant teachers of New York City have just sent to the churches a striking appeal. It assures us that the Association of Protestant Teachers of the city of New York "is deeply concerned for the religious education of the young of our land, to the end that truth and justice, religion and piety, may be established among us. For the furtherance of this conviction, they suggest that there be established and maintained throughout the city an adequate number of properly equipped week-day schools for the religious instruction of all children of Protestant parentage. They ask the churches to allow the use of their buildings as meeting-places for such schools, and they pledge themselves, the Protestant teachers in the public schools of New York City, to teach in these schools when organized, and to promote to the best of their ability the efficiency and usefulness of such schools.

Here is an offer that should be eagerly accepted and used by the Protestant churches. More than that, it is a challenge. They ask whether we really mean what we have been saying for so long a time, that religion is an essential element in education, and whether we will do our part, as these teachers offer to do theirs, in making that conviction effective. We should be eager and alert to seize such opportunities, to support with generous gifts of money and time the week-day schools already established in our two affiliated churches and the vacation Bible schools which do valuable work through the summer. Whenever men and women of the churches are asked to help in such work as this, to serve on committees or boards of education or in any way to contribute service or influence to our public schools, they should be quick to recognize such calls as opportunities not to be missed.

A second clear opportunity is that of calling for fuller recognition of religion in the life and work of our colleges and universities. The church of Christ has both the right and the duty to call for such recognition of religion. This is particularly true in the case of the privately endowed institutions which are so powerful here in the eastern part of our country. They are not restricted, as are the state institutions; they are free to develop what they believe to be the proper policy, and they can set the pace and lead the way in this great task of giving religion its proper place in culture.

Much is being done for the religious life of the students in these institutions. Yet there is no accepted standard or policy. It will be difficult to name any college in which religion is given the same frank and full recognition which is given to the scientific principle. We in the church should voice over and over again the demand that in all these private institutions the religious spirit should be recognized as fully as is the scientific spirit, and that for exactly the reason, that it is essential to the production of good citizenship.

It would be quite impossible for a man who lacked respect for the scientific spirit to be made president of any educational institution, or to be honored by being made head of any department of its faculty. It ought to be just as impossible

I DELIGHT to do thy will, O my God! Psalm 40:8.

We need to watch against a "grudging service." The enemy is always trying to get in the word "duty" instead of the word "delight"; he says a stern "You must" instead of the loving "You may."

The Chimney Corner

The Prune and the Editor-in-Brief!

THE manuscript lay on the table between them. Said the author lugubriously: "You sit on the comedy part of it!"

Said the editor tartly: "If there were more point to it I wouldn't want to sit on it!"

"And you scoff at the tragedy side of it."

"Too long, my dear fellow, too long. In this day and age brevity is indeed the soul of it. Make everything snappy and peppy. Get right down to brass tacks. Don't sling so much ink. Prune, sir, prune! Cut out the fluff, stick to essentials. Why engage a sleeper on every train of thought?"

The author clapped on his hat and clasped his rejected manuscript to his bosom: "Thank you, sir, for this eloquent free lecture on the craftsmanship of writing. I will now go home to my garret and practice what you preach."

"Do so!" said the editor cordially, "and let me see the next edition!"

So he proceeded blue-penciling and waste-basketing other manuscripts, while the author returned to his garret. Should you by any chance be expecting him to feast on shoe leather, you have an awful disappointment in store. They may have done that before the war, I don't know. But just now! Just now, no! Our author feasted solely on those excelsiorized breakfast foods guaranteed to produce iron muscles and youthful vigor. Not that they ever accomplished this transformation. But excelsior was cheap and needed no cooking—garrets are not equipped with gas-and-coal ranges. So after munching his hay, he settled down in earnest to the task of making his manuscript snappy and peppy and brief.

What depressing words to apply to the soaring of an inmost soul! To the ineffable glory of a matchless idea! "Peppy" he loathed it. "Snappy"—it made him squirm. "Brief"—well, at least it was decent Anglo-Saxon. He would adopt "brief." He would be it. So he proceeded.

Now as stories go, it was a very nice story.

In Chapter One you meet the hero, six feet, one in his stocking feet. Muscles like iron (I assure you no excelsior fed him) and a square jaw. You must have observed that all heroes today have square jaws. So this Phœbus Apollo, physically perfect, is seen at the very end of Chapter One to be a regular wizard in mining engineering, yet he sits lonely and depressed in his cluttered mountain cabin, feeling that something is not right with him, he knows not what. You know, of course,

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

And the author knows, for in Chapter Two he cleverly introduces HER.

She is really very nice. Ash blonde hair, if you know what I mean. It is very seldom seen on land or sea, but all the best books have heroines so equipped. Therefore our author did his best for her. It was long, luxuriant and naturally wavy. You have of course suspected that she was an heiress. Terribly so. The kind who is the despair of guardians, lawyers and aunts. She would not, no she would not, do what Aunt Elvira wanted. So she slipped on her riding togs, jumped on her full-blooded mare and fared forth into the forest primeval, foolish girl. You are of course ready for coming events to cast their shadows before: Rolling log? Precipice? Rattle snake? Bandits? It is all one to the hero who hears her cry of stark distress. It was for this end alone that six-feet-one-in-his-stocking-feet was created by the author, not to mention those muscles and that jaw.

Therefore Chapter Three brings her into his lonely cabin to dry off and be refreshed with terrible tea brewed in an old cracked crockery cup. But she looks so divinely lovely; it was inevitable for the iron muscles to want to . . .

Therefore orange blossoms in Chapter Four. A gorgeously proper wedding, back East. Everybody there who is anybody.

Reception a perfect crush, my dear, etc., etc. (Well done by author who has a luscious time over the menu. He ices all the cakes for you right in succulent print. He smacks his lips over the salads. You would never dream that excelsior alone was the foundation of such a feast!)

Chapter Six, back to the old cracked crockery cup for the honeymoon. Naturally ash blonde hair and square jaws desire the identical spot and the identical utensils that led to their paradise. And into it stalks the villain. Chapter Seven to Seventeen inclusive all villain this and villain that. He has a nasty shy trick of saying: "Blight me if I won't." etc. The author is pleased to pieces over the villain's villainy. When it comes to pruning the villain he rages in despair: "One word less about the villain, and he won't be villain. Sooner than prune him I will omit him." This is, of course, unthinkable; so he starts to prune the hero.

But who could prune six-feet-one when you are already down to his stocking feet? And those square jaws! Oh no, leave them be! And the muscles he needs in his business. Prune the muscles and he might be any man at all. The author says he'll prune the heroine.

But ash blonde hair? How could he? It would make her any girl. . . .

He was desperate. If he pruned the villain, the point was spoiled. If he pruned the hero, he became no hero at all. If he pruned the heroine, she fell flat. So he ate some excelsior and washed it down with condensed milk. It did all that the box claimed in the way of vigor: he omitted the villain. This simplified the story astonishingly.

Then he remembered that the editor had said it wasn't necessary to engage a sleeper on every train of thought—so why explain the hero so fulsomely? Impressionism was the newest cult. Let one word sum up the hero therefore. He set down that one word:

MAN.

It looked suggestive, gripping, stalwart, catching. Peppy, actually! It pleased him so much that he triumphantly pruned the heroine until she became:

WOMAN.

Taken in conjunction that way the printed words threw him into a veritable rhapsody, for given a man and given a woman how quickly his story progressed to:

MARRIAGE.

It was inevitable. But what next? It was a poser. He debated three tedious anxious days whether it should be "Delight," "Divorce," or "Death." Which? Which? You see, delight would satisfy the mid-Victorian readers but nauseate the modernites; divorce would allure the flappers but alienate the staid-and-sober-readers. Above all he wanted to be a Best Seller (he was so awfully fed up on excelsior and garrets) so he chose death. By that one swift stroke of the pen he skilfully left the man and woman to their maker. Neither grannies nor flappers could grumble.

This settled, he jubilantly copied it and sent off his manuscript post haste, special delivery, insured, typed on one side, double spacing, sufficient margins on both sides as Ye Editor Doth Greatly Appreciate. It was certainly easy to read—suggestive, snappy, peppy, brief:

MAN.

WOMAN.

MARRIAGE:

DEATH.

What a world could be read into it! In one sense, it was all novels. In another sense, it was any novel. In a third sense, it was his alone. For it was pruned.

But the Editor-in-Brief who had inspired this new impressionism unkindly tossed it into the obituary basket (sic cents an agate line, etc.) for he did not recognize it for the Superlative Effort that it was. The hazards of literature, therefore, are exposed. Unless you have a full carton of shredded wheat biscuits do not put pen to paper for gain. Whoever coined the expression "The pen is mightier than the sword" misspelled might. Widows and authors know the proper spelling.

The Young Reserves

The Baby That Cost a Skirt

MA MO looked out the door, and there at the foot of the ladder stood the fat Buddhist priest in his yellow robes and all the little yellow-robed "Ko-yin" boys from the temple, with their begging bowls, come to beg food for the priest.

"I'm sorry," said Ma Mo timidly, "but there isn't any rice for you today, there isn't even any for us!"

The smallest "Ko-yin" poked out his tongue and made the naughtiest face, while an older boy said saucily: "You must be lying, you silly female! Buddha will not soon forget that you kept back rice from his priest for over ten days. Where are your mother and father all this time, anyhow?"

"Father has been away weeks and weeks on an elephant hunt in the jungle, and mother is over in Moulmein at the Christians' hospital. I only hope she will come back soon, for there's no rice or fish for any of us."

"How dare she have anything to do with those Christians," shuddered another "Ko-yin," and even the priest stopped looking bored, although of course Ma Mo could not see his face, as he always kept it carefully hidden behind a fan, lest Buddha's priest should behold anything so unworthy as a mere woman. But to have dealings with Christians struck him as horrible, indeed it seemed that way to Ma Mo herself; and even over in the Christians' hospital at Moulmein, her mother had had moments of doubt about the people who worshipped this unseen God. But that was all before the nice new baby lay in her arms. Now she only wondered how she had ever dreaded people so kind.

"Regretfully I inform you that I can not pay you a single rupee for all this wonderful care and these fine meals," she would keep saying to the doctor, "at least, not until my husband gets back from the jungle with elephant tusks."

"Now that's all right, my dear," said the friendly doctor, "you can pay when you are able; meanwhile, all we want is to see you get strong and able to care for this cute new baby."

"Quite the nicest baby I ever had, too," acknowledged the delighted mother, tickling the tiny chin of the funny little brownie in her arms, and gloating over the way he puckered up his lips to cry.

Yet all the time she kept on worrying about being unable to pay, and the day she got back to her village she was dreadfully disappointed to find that her husband had not returned from the jungle. "What can I give these Christians?" she asked Ma Mo in despair, "now that I find you poor children so starved, what is there for me to give?"

She sat down to think it over, and as she was looking down at the ground her eye caught the glimmer of her pretty red skirt. They call it a "lone-gyee" in Burma. You should have seen her face light up: "Ma Mo," she called, "come you here. my child; run down to the bazar and sell my skirt for a good sum and I can pay the Christians." She untucked the material from around her waist and handed it to Ma Mo. "Remember, a good sum!"

It was such a cheerful-looking lone-gyee that Ma Mo had a number of would-be purchasers very soon. "But it seems to be in good condition, so why should you be selling it?" asked one woman, fingering the bright skirt curiously.

"To pay for our Jesus Christ baby," Ma Mo explained. "You see, my mother went over to the Christians' hospital in Moulmein, and never was there a place so full of love and kindness and skill. Yet they never asked money from her, because they knew she was very poor. But I ask you, would a Buddhist care for a sick person two whole weeks without pay? Would they send story-tellers to pass the time telling wonderful stories of Jesus Christ, so that into your heart creeps peace and happiness? And it's the nicest baby we ever had, too."

"It's a nice skirt, too," said the woman regretfully, "but I don't want my money to go to Christians,—why, they eat our relatives! At any meal they tell me you can see Christians eating beef and pork and chickens, and you know yourself it might be the spirit of your own grandfather which had entered any one of those animals."

Ma Mo looked troubled: "Yes, I know, but the Christians say there is a special Jesus Christ town where the spirits of our relatives sit down in peace forever, instead of entering the bodies of animals to pester us."

"La! La!" babbled the woman, "you are bewitched! I won't have any skirt from you!"

"Oh, then I'll buy it," said a second woman eagerly, "for who cares where one's money goes when once it is gone?" So she clinked down some coins and marched off vain as a peacock, fingering her lovely red skirt.

Ma Mo's next adventure was in a bullock-cart, when a neighbor drove her to Moulmein, where they inquired for the Ellen Mitchell Memorial Hospital. There it stood, a wonderful building to them, where even the smiling nurses seemed like friends.

"Oh, is that little new baby your brother?" one of them asked, "well, be sure you help bring him up right, for a baby born in this hospital belongs to Jesus Christ, and you mustn't let him chew betel nuts, or eat fruit, or smoke cheroots. But what is this money for?"

"To pay for the baby, of course," Ma Mo explained. "Father hasn't come back from the jungle yet, but mother said such goodness as yours should not wait, so she sold her skirt. And you may rest your minds! We'll bring that baby up right!"

From that time on every one was interested in the Baby-That-Cost-a-Skirt, and as he lay in his wicker cradle which swung from the smoky rafters, the neighbors would climb up the ladder to have a look at him.

"Huh!" they said in disgust, "a Jesus Christ baby is no different from any other baby! Tell us why you are so eaten up with pride?"

But the mother said: "Will you wait till the naming-day? Then I will invite the Bible woman to tell you the stories she told me over in that hospital."

So when the new baby was a month old a messenger went around with a cup of pickled tea to invite friends to come to the naming-party. The ones who accepted the invitation ate a pinch of the tea, and later they brought presents of money or jewels and tossed them into a jar of water. There was a feast then, after which the brown baby had a bath in the jar where the presents were lying. Then an old man got up and solemnly repeated a blessing over the astonished baby, asking for one hundred years of happiness. Next they tied a cotton string from the baby's wrist to a dish with money arranged in a circle on top of some rice. And at the very moment when they named the baby "Sweet Spices," the dear old Bible woman climbed the ladder of this little house-on-stilts.

"Am I in time?" she asked.

"There are one hundred years of time," smiled the proud mother. "So I pray you to sit down and begin at the beginning of the story of the first Jesus Christ baby."

Which was the way the dear story of the Babe in a Manger was first heard in that little village. Everybody listened, and wondered, and asked questions, and listened some more, and sighed, and said: "If only we had heard this sooner!" But the Baby-That-Cost-a-Skirt will never have to sigh that way; for, you see, he began life right, and I think he will grow up just as right, don't you?

for any one who does not thoroughly respect the religious spirit to be at the head of a college, or on its faculty. The one demand is no more a limitation of academic freedom than the other. The scientific spirit and the religious spirit are both essential to the right development of youth. They should both receive full recognition in the life of the college and university. Those of us who have influence in such institutions should voice this demand with some insistence, and should count it a privilege to make clear the part these privately endowed institutions have to lead the way in the recognition of religion as a prime factor in education.—From a sermon preached in the Brick Presbyterian Church, New York.

The Southern Convention

Southern Baptists in Education

SOUTHERN BAPTISTS are developing a vitalizing conscience on education. They now rank gifts to education with the percentage for foreign missions. They are unwilling to place a premium upon ignorance.

They have 120 schools under direct control and ownership. These are classified thus: 32 senior colleges; 30 junior colleges; 53 academies; 5 Bible and theological schools. The total property and endowment valuation is $40,794,888.

Three outstanding features distinguish the work in the past year:

1. Standardization.—At the request of the education board, the Southern Baptist Convention in May adopted the national standard of requirements for colleges and created a standardization and promotion commission. The purpose of this commission is to investigate the schools and to pass upon their fitness to meet this standard. The commission is further set to the task of helping all the schools to measure up to this standard. This commission is now assembling the data for its work. This is the most important forward movement that Southern Baptists have made in education in many decades. There is full recognition of the need for Southern Baptist schools to meet the requirements demanded by standardizing agencies accepted by state departments of education and sectional associations. The commission will give large attention not only to the matter of standards but to the securing of funds requisite to the attainment of such standards. The education board, in cooperation with other educational agencies in the denomination, will continue to emphasize Christian education until Southern Baptists shall equip their schools for the highest possible efficiency.

2. New Schools.—Two new schools began their first session September, 1922. Montezuma Baptist College, East Las Vegas, New Mexico, Rev. Layton Maddox, president, received as a gift a valuable hotel property, estimated to be worth $1,000,000. Large sums have been expended in transforming and equipping the building for school purposes. The school will be run as a junior college and has had a splendid opening. It belongs to the New Mexico Baptist State Convention. Bluefield College, Bluefield, W. Va., Dr. R. A. Lansdell, president, is a junior college for boys and is the property of the Virginia Baptist General Association. A number of new buildings have been erected and a gratifying attendance for this first session prophesies a useful future.

3. Supply of Ministers.—There are approximately 28,000 ministerial students this session in Southern Baptist schools. While some denominations deplore the decrease in ministerial supply, Southern Baptists rightly rejoice over the fact that the above number is about 8 per cent increase over the student ministerial supply of the previous session. This means that we are cultivating a larger number of trained leaders. In addition to these who are preparing for the ministry, there are about 2,700 young men and women in our Baptist schools who are preparing for definite Christian service outside of the ministry.

The outstanding need of 1923 is the payment of the Seventy-five Million Campaign pledges so that our schools may have their pro-rata. A companion need is the finding of a few large contributors who will add to the endowment of certain of our strategic institutions.

Our General Societies

The American Baptist Foreign Mission Society

Organized May 21, 1814

The Society held its 108th annual meeting at Indianapolis. Approximately 900 missionaries including nearly 275 under appointment by the Woman's Society are now serving the denomination in the great enterprise of making the gospel known to the ends of the earth. These workers are assisted by more than 7,000 preachers, teachers and other native helpers in the ten fields where work is being carried on.

American Baptist Home Mission Society

Organized April 27, 1832

The Society held its ninetieth annual meeting in Indianapolis. The society carries on its work in cooperation with certain state conventions, city mission societies and the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society. It has been the agent of the denomination in Indian and Negro education. It is carrying on study of social service and rural community work with rural demonstration centers. Our work in Cuba, Porto Rico, Central America and Mexico is under its direction. The department of evangelism, of church architecture, of English speaking missions, of city and foreign speaking missions and the department of education are giving good account of their stewardship.

American Baptist Publication Society

Organized February 25, 1824

The Society held its ninety-eighth annual meeting at Indianapolis. This Society through its publication of Sunday-school and church supplies and religious books is indispensable. It was organized "to promote evangelical religion by means of the Bible, the printing press, colportage, Sunday schools and other appropriate ways." Last year 4,407 Bibles and 6,869 Testaments and Gospels were given away. There were sold 14,886 Bibles, Testaments and Gospels. The department of social education through social studies and literature, field work, boys' training camps is rendering a much needed service. Under its religious department comes the far-reaching work of the state and city directors of religious education.

The Sunday School Board of the Southern Convention and the Year 1922

1. We have made notable increase in our Sunday-school enrolment. The figures compiled last May, based on the association reports of 1921, showed 2,201,345.

The reports that are now coming to us, which cannot be compiled until after Jan. 1, make it certain that we will have another notable increase. It would seem as though during the first three years of our Seventy-five Million Campaign that our Sunday-school enrolment has made a gain of over a half million. We have now the second largest denominational enrolment in America.

2. Our progress in B. Y. P. U. work which work is under the direction of our board on exactly the same status as the Sunday-school work, has been equally promising. We have now 12,318 unions with an enrolment of 406,995. We have successfully inaugurated our movement for grading the B. Y. P. U. Our circulations—230,000 senior B. Y. P. U., 60,000 intermediate and 65,000 junior—show the progress of this grading.

3. We have made the first steps in a new program for book publishing. Our list for this year already includes nineteen books, most of them of permanent value. We have organized a book editing department, which will also include our tract issues. We have also a working arrangement with the George H. Doran Company by which our books of value beyond our own constituency are handled in other parts of the country and in Europe under their imprint.

4. In our teacher training work we have passed the hundred thousand mark in our normal manual diplomas. This is an unsurpassed record. Our organization for Sunday-school extension is a fine one and we have the most sympathetic cooperation of a well-organized Sunday school and B. Y. P. U. department in every state, under the direct control of the state mission board.

5. It would be natural enough to say, after reciting the above facts, that our business has also gone forward showing a great increase. We will probably reach to $1,400,000 this year. We are erecting two new buildings at a cost of over $400,000. One of these will be a six-story building devoted entirely to our mailing and shipping, and the other will be a new printing plant which will be leased to our contract printers for a period of years, after which time we will have the option of taking over the equipment and doing our own printing if this proves to be best. If not, we will continue the contract system which has been so profitable to us in the past.

Foreign Mission Board, Southern Convention

PERHAPS the most notable thing affecting the foreign mission work of Southern Baptists during the year 1922 is the appointment of fifty-three missionaries to the fields on which this board is operating and the enrolment of 969 young men and women in our schools above high-school and academy grades who are volunteers for foreign mission service as soon as they have finished their courses of training. Many of these are seniors in the colleges and universities and some of them are in our seminaries. The Seventy-five Million Campaign effort by Southern Baptists seems to have been attended by an unusual outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon our churches, our schools and our homes. There does not seem to be any plainer sign of the course which our Lord would have us take than the impression which the Holy Spirit has made upon these

Introduction

Kaleidoscopic India has for centuries made a romantic and sympathetic appeal to the world. Her spices, gold, gems and rich fabrics lured the early navigators to brave unknown dangers in their quest. Her vast resources became a reservoir from which the merchants of Europe drew immense wealth.

Yet in the midst of wealth gaunt poverty lurked; famine stalked abroad, destroying hundreds of thousands; ignorance lighted and stunted the lives of millions; superstition terrorized and caste oppressed human beings whom God had made for himself.

To such a country William Carey turned sympathetic eyes and heart and opened the door for the thousands who have followed his lead in carrying the gospel to India's 315 millions.

Saved From Famine

I am an old man. I have seen many changes in my country.

It is of a time in my boyhood that I wish to tell you. You must know that India did not have rains all the year around, but a rainy and a dry season. When the rains fail, nothing grows, and food is so scarce that many go hungry. My family was not of the poorest, but at the end of the first year of famine we were like the rest, depending upon the tiny dole of food that came from the government and missionaries. Then one day a message came to the village. "There is work at digging a great canal. Those who can work are able to earn food."

My father and I and some relatives walked many miles to the place where the work was going on. There we found that Dr. Clough, a missionary from America, had taken a contract to construct several miles of the great canal that the government was building. We found many of the workers were called "Christians," having adopted the religion of the foreigners. All the overseers were "Christian preachers." They directed the work during the day, and at night gathered the workers in groups and told them about the Christian's God.

One day in seven, also, no work was done. It was a day of rest. The Christians, however, gathered together and worshipped their God. It seemed a waste of time, when so much needed to be done.

At first my father and I did not believe the teaching, but we listened out of gratitude for the chance to earn our food and save ourselves from death by starvation. Before long, however, the truth of the teaching was revealed to us. We asked to be baptized. "Not now," the missionary said; "after a while we will decide about that."

My father and I were among the 2,222 who were baptized on that memorable day, July 3, 1878. Since then I have served the Christian's God only, for I know that the millions of gods of the Hindus are powerless, but he is the great God of all.

The Quest for Light

You see in me one who sought long for light. From boyhood I studied the sacred writings. I made many pilgrimages to holy places. I bathed in the sacred waters of the Ganges. But in it all I realized that I had not found light for my soul. I saw the fakirs torturing their bodies, and read in their faces that they had not found light. I watched devotees measure their length in the dust as they made pilgrimage to holy places, but they had not found light.

One day as I traveled toward the holy city of Benares, a stranger who sat beside me in the train spoke to me about the Christian's God. He gave me a book that he called the New Testament and pointed out passages which he desired that I should read. That night I studied the book, fascinated by the story of the life of Jesus.

On my return home I sought out a missionary and asked him many questions, which he answered patiently and fully. Finally I could no longer doubt the truth of him concerning whom the Book said, "This is the true light." I have suffered many things from my family and former friends who endeavored to dissuade me from my purpose. But I am convinced that Jesus is the light of the world, and it is my purpose to help my countrymen to come into his light as I myself have done.

Our Own Folks

Boston Letter

By CHARLES H. WATSON

Social Service

We have a Baptist social service commission in Massachusetts. Professor Rowe, of Newton, is the leading spirit and right-ly is chairman. He prods the commission informingly, and endeavors to bring something to pass. What is sought after is that a Christian's care for community betterment shall get practically into the Christian program. Curiously enough the effort has to meet a suspicion that it has come to supplant individual regeneration, and thus is opposed to the "fundamentals." The old program assumes that regeneration is instantaneous and individualistic, whereas the social endeavor takes for granted that regeneration is continuous and should practically bless the community as it takes care of things. It would get the people to pull together in enforcing law and keeping up the standards. From the community point of view it would tell us what to do for the general betterment. Surely there ought to be a welcome for such Christian service.

Efficiency In Our State Work

Very effective work is going on throughout the state in inspirational and practical lines. All the staff of our convention secretaries are busy in institutes which call together a surprisingly large company of our Baptist workers. Think of a company of 184 at Hyannis, down on the Cape, under Secretaries Peterson, Dolan, and Hartley! It was not a mass meeting but a Christian study class. The main lines traversed in these gatherings are prayer, evangelism, education in mission and Christian stewardship.

The Boston Baptist Workers Union has a well constructed program that covers eight months of the year. Workers who make a specialty of the different phases of practical church and Sunday-school work are in the program. Professor Anderson and Rowe of Newton in about four lectures apiece, help to clarify things and make them solid. The meetings begin with a six o'clock supper—then topical conferences follow and lead up to the final address from 7:45 to 8:30. Professor Anderson gives them constructive study in the New Testament and Professor Rowe shows how Baptist principles have made over history and gives us our growth. These are courses in the real fundamentals.

Overlapping

Pastors frequently complain of the numerous societies and salaried secretaries that are covering virtually the same causes and trying to do the same things. Generally they are non-denominational, and "anti" this and "anti" that. Sometimes they are duplications of what churches are already doing through their association committees. Of course they all try to "work" the ministers, plying them with appeals, and with circulars that test the capacity of the pastor's waste-basket. When the pastor himself embarks in printing he knows the cost thereof. He therefore wonders how all these societies can afford wholesale printing, postage, clerk hire, officers and offices. Is it not high time for our best brains to study economy in promotion and propaganda, and save ministers, churches, and waste-baskets? Extravagance is reaching the point where it is calling attention to itself, and brethren are striking against it.

A Notable Wedding

Now and then we have a wedding that arrests the attention of the wider Baptist family and provokes all sorts of approving sentiments. The recent marriage of Rev. Samuel Macaulay Lindsay, pastor of the Brookline Church, was such a one. Mrs. Gardner V. Brooks, one of Pastor Lindsay's flock is the happy woman who makes even happier a man whose happiness already seems perennial. Mrs. Brooks is the widow of one of the church leaders who passed on several years ago. She is thoroughly enlisted in church activities, and is one of the most intelligently competent of the workers. Everybody regards the alliance as about the wisest imaginable, and congratulations are warmly emphatic.

Between Two "Waves"

That is, the wave of crime, and the wave of court procedure. Long before he became Chief Justice, Ex-president Taft declared that our court procedure was a disgrace to us. Certainly the wave of crime is formidably disgraceful. Meanwhile the machinery of justice in detecting and punishing criminals is slow, unwieldy, and expensive. Often "criminal courts" are well named, and judging by too frequent results, would seem to be set up chiefly for criminals and their lawyers. How often do we have swift justice for a red-handed robber and murderer? We rather expect some clever shyster to work all the tricks that our court procedure makes possible, tire out the judge and the jury, make an appeal if it goes against him, get a retrial, rescue his client so that he may become a client again, and roll up a tremendous bill for the people to pay. Surely for criminals and shysters, this is "the land of the free."

The "Home of the Brave"

After our recent city election you can hardly call Boston the home of the brave. Less than one-third of the voters voted; and the heavy end of that third was the worst end. True, in the exciting election a month earlier, 80 per cent actually girded themselves and voted. They hardly recovered from that heavy strain before the city election was upon them. The day was "lowering," and the "better element" was very tired. But the worst element was as usual very fresh. So the old predatory Tammany game will go on.

This raises an interesting question: How much better are the "good citizens" who are no good, than those citizens who nominate crooks for city officials and elect them? These same good citizens it has often been noted have a great dread of "radicals." They will valiantly fight a radical when they are too tired to fight a thief. But most radicals know what they want and go after it because they are certain that it will better us. True, they may be too sure—often are. But they have the pluck, the purpose and the punch. Let the "good citizens" emulate the radical, to save himself from responsibility for the civic thieves and low demagogues who continue to govern Boston because he is so dainty and so tired.

Also, we were told that equal suffrage, among other delights, would bring us the municipal millennium. How about that, ye valiant suffragettes?

European Relief

By J. H. RUSHBROOKE

A General Statement

We are entering upon the third year of our Baptist relief work on the continent of Europe.

I am happy to report that on the whole there is a definite improvement of conditions in the nine countries in which we originally undertook this relief effort, so that we shall not need to spend in those countries much more than one-third of the amount disbursed in the first year. (This is the case in spite of some set-back in Austria, Hungary and Germany.) But meanwhile, Russia, to which we had no means of access when we began, has opened; and there the needs are so vast and so urgent that all reductions elsewhere are counterbalanced, and we must devote to our total European relief fully as much as in previous years. If we could raise twice or thrice what is proposed, it could all be used in saving lives and mitigating suffering, and still very much would be left undone.

Russia has of course by far the largest Baptist constituency in Europe and the conditions among our brethren are pitiful. Our evangelists and pastors are in many instances half-starved. There are districts where all the members of the churches are destitute both of food and clothing and absolutely dependent upon our help. Take this picture from the pen of Dr. W. O. Lewis, European representative of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, who writing of the village of Novo Vacillovka says:

"The people are living largely on weeds and bread made out of the husks of buckwheat and the husks of sunflower seeds after the oil has been pressed out mixed with grass and occasionally a little rye. It is very bitter and hard."

Here is another description from the same pen:

"At many stations, children and women and in some cases men begged for bread all around the train when it stopped at a station. These are in large part refugees who are leaving the famine areas trying to get to places where they have heard there is a little food to be had. They ride the bumpers and hang on the trains anywhere they can get a foothold. Often it seemed to me that there were more on the outside of the trains than on the inside. In the stations there are great crowds of people lying in rags and dirty and lousy trying to get to some better place. In all the waiting rooms I was in in southern Russia, at night the floors were so nearly completely covered with men, women and children that it was next to impossible to walk."

These words describe conditions as they were last October, after the harvest of 1922 had been gathered.

There are the leading facts as to the general situation in Russia! The harvest of 1922 is not sufficient to feed the people during the next twelvemonth. Within a few weeks men and women will again be dying of hunger. Many thousands are facing the winter's cold without necessary clothing and with no food at all. In some parts of the country the harvest of 1922 failed as completely as that of 1921. The farmers in many parts are without horses, cattle and agricultural implements. They have parted with everything during the famine. We have to set them on their feet and start them afresh so that they may become self-supporting. There are many thousands of hungry students and teachers in the cities and multitudes of orphans and of children whose parents have nothing. We dare not refuse to help these.

While the appeal to human pity would stir us in any case, it is well to bear in mind that Russia is becoming a great Baptist land; very many of these broken, bankrupt, starving and shivering people are linked with us by the ties of a common faith. Surely the generosity of American Baptists will not fail them in this hour.

NEW YORK

THE WORK AT THE BAPTIST TEMPLE, Brooklyn, Dr. E. LeRoy Dakin, pastor, is opening up with great promise for the future. The great Temple choir, under the leadership of Prof. Cornelius Van Rees, has taken on new life and is adding new members every week. During the two months of Dr. Dakin's ministry, more than forty new members have been added, most of these by baptism, and scores of members who have not been active during the past three years are coming again and taking up the work with new vigor. This more than makes up for the thirty-five members who have taken their memberships to other churches. The finances are far ahead of a year ago and a campaign will soon be launched to raise the $19,000 with which to pay off the mortgage so that it can be burned during the one hundredth anniversary celebration which will be held next October. Several subscriptions of $1000 each have already been made, which assures success. This will leave free of debt a property estimated to be worth a half million dollars. Within a month, it is expected, the new illuminated cross will be erected bearing across the arms the inscription "Come." January 3-14 has been set aside as a week of prayer and evangelistic services led by the pastor, a new feature being a noon day prayer meeting, when all are invited for prayer and devotion. Jan. 20 is the W. W. G. banquet of the Long Island Association, and January 22-24 will be the Baptist Training Institute under the auspices of the Publication Society and the religious education committee of the Long Island Extension Society. The month of February is to be known as denominational month, followed by special evangelistic meetings during March, with Easter Sunday as the Pentecost.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

Pittsburgh

EVANGELISM IS BEING stressed this winter in the Pittsburgh Association. A simple form of cooperation was adopted in order that every church might have at least the assistance of a neighboring pastor for revival meetings. All pastors were asked to volunteer for at least two weeks' service on condition that their pulpits would be filled without remuneration while away, with a fixed honorarium for such service. Churches desiring such help and agreeing to pay necessary expenses and take an offering for the helping pastor, were asked to report to the committee. The list of pastors volunteering was then sent to all churches wishing such help. Each church was to make its own selection of pastor-evangelist and its own arrangements. In case the offering did not equal the stipulated honorarium, the committee would make up the difference; in case it was more, the balance was to go to the committee. It becomes feasible therefore for every church to have special evangelistic services. Further, the strongest men can be asked by the weaker churches to help, as the honorarium is the same in every case.

IN SEPTEMBER A LAYMEN'S RETREAT lasting two days was held at the Sewickley Camp Grounds. Successful personal workers were brought to meet representatives from our churches and relate their experience. There was much prayer throughout the sessions. The conference proved to be a deep spiritual experience for those present and gave all a vision of the possibilities of personal work. The committee has furnished speakers on personal work for several of our churches and many men have volunteered as personal workers. A list of responsible evangelists as they are recommended to the committee is kept on file, and assistance is given any church desiring to learn about an evangelist. Many of our churches already have held special meetings or have made plans for some time before Easter.

A LUNCHEON WAS GIVEN BY THE ministers' conference, Monday, Dec. 18, in honor of Rev. C. A. Decker, who leaves January first to begin his pastorate with the First Church, Bridgeport, Conn., and Rev. M. C. J. Westphal who becomes pastor of the Lansdowne church, Philadelphia, January first. Both are among our strongest and most successful pastors and their departure is greatly regretted. Dr. C. W. Petty, Rev. F. W. Stanton, Dr. J. E. Darby and W. C. Chappell were the speakers who voiced the friendship and good wishes of Pittsburgh Baptists for these brethren.

FIRST CHURCH, OTTAWA, has just closed revival meetings lasting three weeks. The pastor had the assistance of Rev. W. O. Shank of Atchison who proved himself an efficient evangelistic helper. The meetings resulted in something like 120 decisions. About seventy-five have already been received into the membership of the church, fifty coming by baptism. The pastor is closing his sixteenth year with the church and the last is the best in many respects. During the sixteen years of his pastorate he has had the joy of receiving almost 1500 persons into church membership. The notable thing of the year has been our All Church Night at which time there have been carried on for ten weeks four study groups, with an average of 160 people present. Our prayer meetings have averaged over that number, running as high as 212 present. Drs. Price and Behan and Prof. Lunsford of the department of education of O. U. and Prof. Smith Haworth of the high school have been leaders of the groups. A second series of ten weeks will be put on after the New Year. The church and college work together in fullest cooperation.

ON DEC. 20 THE Cumberland Church called for representatives of the Creston Association to consider the ordination of its pastor, Mr. C. C. Boyd. Rev. J. Hamilton Woodsum was elected moderator and L. W. Ross clerk of the council. The sermon was preached by Rev. Duncan McPherson.

REV. H. B. COX, OF HANNIBAL, MO., commenced his pastorate of Calvary Church, Davenport, the first Sunday in November. New Year Eve there will be baptismal service. The first of the year plans for the ingathering of souls by Easter will be launched. Every organization of the church will be called in to the soul-winning campaign. The Sunday evening service is evangelistic. The mid-week service during January will be doctrinal. A re-

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A SPLENDID SPIRIT is prevailing in all the activities of First Church of Oakland. Large and increasing crowds assemble on Sundays. The pastor gave the hand of fellowship to thirteen at the December communion service. The church has accepted a challenge of the Bay Cities Baptist Union to erect a building for its mission Sunday school on a lot to be purchased by the union in the Columbian Park district, a rapidly growing section of Oakland, where the flourishing Bible school is now being conducted under the superintendency of A. C. Christman. On Wednesday night, Dec. 13, under the direction of the Women's Auxiliary a surprise birthday party was given Dr. Snape at the close of prayer meeting, at which time he was presented with a birthday cake and a basket of rosebuds. The Agoga class of the Bible school has the distinction of being the largest high-school Bible class in the city of Oakland and its aim is to make it the largest and best class in the state. It publishes a monthly paper called the Pick and Shovel. The Agogas are very proud of an autographed photograph of President Harding which he himself sent to the boys at the request of the teacher, Mr. Milton Meacham. The aggressive Amoma Class consisting of senior high-school and college girls presented "The Pill Bottle" twice in December and as a result, two of their own number decided to give themselves for definite life work.

of giving. It must be so in our efforts to serve mankind by giving it a better apprehension of truth. Our service must be obviously disinterested. The hour is strategic for those who would serve, "even as the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." It is useless for America to speak of moral leadership except as America can and will think of responsibility for all who need her help. It is useless for any denomination to think of leadership except as it catches the spirit of him who said, "I have been in the midst of you as one who served." The moral leadership of the world will rest with the nation or the denomination which will serve sacrificially. The world awaits the leadership of such a people. Are we prepared for the strategic service?

young people that they ought to serve Christ on the foreign fields.

We have strengthened several of our educational institutions on the foreign fields during the year, adding to the faculties and some better equipment. Our girls' school at Temuco, Chile, has entered the new building erected for it during the year and is already winning favor among those who are able to pay for the schooling of their children.

The year has been the most fruitful in the seventy-eight years of this board's history in soul-winning. There seems to be an unusual spiritual awakening in Asia and South America as well as in Europe.

We are not, however, without our embarrassments. Our receipts have fallen off for two years and this together with our greatly enlarged program has given those who are charged with the work the keenest anxiety. We are at this time putting on what we are calling a "Re-enforcement Campaign" with promise of some relief from the shortage in resources.

Outstanding Achievements

a. The findings of the great National Christian Conference, held at Shanghai, attended by 1189 delegates representing all denominations (I believe there are 130 different sects operating in China) and from many provinces, nearly half of whom were Chinese, affecting vitally the life of the churches.

b. The real desire on the part of the three Baptist missions to get together in an inter-mission Baptist council. The suggested constitution will come before the several annual meetings.

c. The reorganization of a council of the churches to be called the Szechuen Christian Council.

d. Conspicuous services rendered along social service lines, and especially by missionaries and Chinese helpers in the serious famine situation in the Yachow district.

e. The healthy condition of our boys' and girls' schools; the continued success of our medical institutions and the normal number of additions by baptism to our churches.

Outlook

a. Doors are open wide everywhere. The political unrest and a good deal of poverty, added to a much more general knowledge of the aims and teaching of the Christian church, create an atmosphere favorable to the reception of our message.

b. With an emerging efficient Chinese leadership there would seem to be no limit to the possibilities of success among the great unreached masses.

Most Pressing Needs

a. Capital. To have the working capital of a going concern cut 25 per cent would of necessity reduce output. Work appropriations should be restored to former level; further cuts will jeopardize the whole work. Send fewer missionaries and reduce the expenses at the home base.

b. A larger number of well-trained, ordained Chinese pastors and leaders.

c. We are fortunate in the coming of Mr. Donald Fay, a product of our schools and graduate of Rochester Theological Seminary, just as the year draws to a close.

H. J. OPENSHAW.

The Assam Mission

THE outstanding signs of progress in the Assam Mission during 1922 are as follows: An unusually large number of conversions in both hills and plains. Already (in October) two stations have passed their high-water mark. A number of these new Christians were Brahmins, and more are to follow. This is highly significant.

The work at Sadiya has been re-established, and the former hostile attitude of the Abors has given way to one of friendliness.

The three annual Bible schools and conferences for workers had their most successful sessions, with large enrolment, a higher grade of students and a splendid spirit of high purpose, which already is making itself felt on home fields.

Larger numbers of boys and girls are taking higher studies. The teaching is improving. In places there is more support of pupils by their parents. One Christian girl and several young men are in college. The efficiency of the Jorhat Christian Schools is increased by the completion of the administration and industrial buildings.

A relatively and gratifyingly large quantity of literature, both distinctively Christian and along social and moral lines, such as pamphlets on alcohol and tobacco, has been published or is ready for publication.

At the Lewis Memorial Hostel, in Gauhati, Hindu, Mohammedan and Christian college students, by their own will and suggestion, are eating together at the same table. The food is cooked by a Mohammedan and is served by one set of servants. A few years ago this was unthought of.

The outlook for the coming year is excellent despite the cut in appropriations, which must have serious consequences. Inability to pay workers must reduce work. Many opportunities will be lost through lack of funds. But the number of returned and new missionaries gives the work great impetus. Perhaps the most hopeful sign of all is the spirit of inquiry on all hands. People are questioning and listening as never before. Some preparations are being made to increase the work among the Assamese people. This, the spirit of inquiry and the increased effectiveness of Indian workers, gives good reason for expecting 1923 to be a year of great ingathering.

We need: A physician, Jorhat hospital; woman physician, Gauhati hospital; missionary to Mikirs and other men for the plains. A high school building, Jorhat; completion of Bible school building, Jorhat; bungalow for Jorhat hospital; bungalow for mission builder; the improvement of our girls' school plants; Rs. 10,000 for Jorhat hospital land; and much other equipment. Your prayers for strength to live up to our high calling.

Cecil G. Fielder.

Gauhati, Assam, India.

The Telugu Mission

THE outstanding achievements of the past year are: (1) The survival of the mission and most of its work in spite of a greatly depleted force of missionaries and a drastic reduction in funds from America. With a number of mission stations having no resident missionary to tour and look after the field, and with an income reduced by 20 per cent for the last eight months of 1922, it is a wonder that so little damage has come to the work and the mission as a whole. The saving factor has been the way in which our Telugu brethren have rallied and responded to the need, increasing their gifts and bearing greater responsibilities in every way.

(2) The growth of strength on the part of the Christian community. Numerous ingatherings have taken place, notably on the Nellore, Ongole, Kanigiri and Decan fields. The work on the Kandukur field, carried on by the Telugu Baptist Convention, is both fruitful and prosperous, and growing in the affections and support of the people. The convention has recently held one of the best sessions of its existence.

(3) The growth and consolidation of the educational work of the mission, both in its literary and industrial forms. The day and boarding schools, the middle schools and high schools have all done good constructive work and have had an increased fee income; the theological seminary at Ramapatnam, in which Canadian and American Baptists unite, has had a very successful and harmonious year; and the Women's Bible Training School at Nellore is rejoicing in the construction of a new building for its permanent home.

(4) Medical work in hospitals, dispensaries and over the field increases in popularity; plans for constructing the new hospital at Mahbubnagar, the gift of the Baptist women of New England, are well under way and it is hoped that the work will be begun by the time these lines see print.

The needs of the mission are many. These are some of them: (1) More of

BAPTIST DEACON BURIES 153 PEOPLE

Here is real tragedy! Dr. W. O. Lewis, a representative of the Foreign Mission Society who visited Russia in October, reports:

A village near Melitopol had 6,000 inhabitants a year ago. At least 1,500 starved to death. A deacon in this village carried on his own shoulders and buried 153 people who were either members of the Baptist church in the village or members of Baptist families. All the dogs and cats in the village have been eaten. Only ten families in this place have anything for the coming winter. They are living largely on weeds and bread made out of the hulls of buckwheat and the hulls of sunflower seeds after the oil has been pressed out mixed with grass and occasionally a little rye.

To help as many destitute sufferers as possible in Russia and other countries of Europe is part of the program of the Foreign Mission Society for relief work in Europe during the present winter and next spring.

An opportunity will be given to every Baptist church and Sunday school to take a special offering on Sunday, January 21, 1923.

According to an agreement with the Near East Relief, this offering, unless specifically designated otherwise, will be divided between European Relief and Near East Relief.

Japan Mission

LAST year was the concluding year of our Japan five-year program. We called it the Forward Movement in Japan. And such it proved to be. We set out to double the contributions of our churches; we more than trebled them in four years. Figures for 1922 are not yet available. We aimed to double the number of self-supporting churches; this object also has been attained. Our desire to double our membership has not been realized, but 1922 was the most successful year for evangelistic effort we have known in Japan for a long time. The climax of the movement came at a big Baptist rally in May at Arima, a mountain retreat near Kobe. This was at once the most representative and the most forward-looking gathering of Baptists we have had in Japan up to date.

Plans for 1923 include a suitable celebration of the semi-centennial of our mission. The initiative in this has been taken by Japanese leaders. A Baptist week, given over to thanksgiving for the past and planning for the future, is a prominent feature of the celebration. This week of special services is to be followed by an intensive, nation-wide evangelistic effort. So, in spite of reduced budgets and disappointed hopes, 1923 promises well.

Our chief needs are those the Baptists of America set out to meet in the New World Movement. Some of our outstanding needs have already been met. For these things we are deeply grateful. They in part help to account for the good report we are able to make now. But many important items included in the Survey adopted at Denver we still wait for. God grant we do not wait in vain.

Congo Mission, Congo Belge, Africa

CONGO is now touched by world currents. So far, America, apart from missions, has not played a large part in these influences. African fashions—kneeshowing skirts, bobbed hair, and zoo dances—seem to be more in evidence in America than American fashions here. The Singer sewing machine and the Standard Oil kerosene tin have invaded far into the interior, and now the honk of Henry is heard in the land.

I want to talk of other influences, some of which may have originated in America. The aftermath of the war did not seem to affect our native population seriously, but now, like other parts of the world, the widening circles of influence have touched Central Africa. The unrest which has been manifest in certain areas here has had a spiritual basis, and it has been the extravagances connected with the movement that have been marked by certain phases of Garveyism. It was necessary for the government to suppress anti-white propaganda, and to set to work the people who were waiting for the coming of Christ; but that there has been a real spiritual awakening in the hearts of multitudes is apparent to any one who has been amongst the people. Banza Manketa and Sona Bata, because of their nearness to the sources of the movement, have been more powerfully affected than our other fields. Thousands have been added to church membership. The remarkable thing is to see the hundreds of old men and women who have thrown away their fetiches and are eager to learn Scripture and sing the gospel.

It does not look as if the revival were at an end and we are hoping to see all its better influences sweep as far as our Ntondo and Vanga fields. The demand for Bibles, hymn-books, and almost anything readable has been enormous. A thousand catechisms were received at one station and in two months the supply was exhausted. The coming year will bring still larger opportunities for the spread of Christian literature.

What about the training of native leadership? As one thinks of the need and the inadequate forces to do this work he is driven to the feet of the Great Leader and Teacher of men.

What of needs? Only TWO!! We need God. The God Emmanuel: God with us. The God Jesus: God within us, cleansing from sin and then making us interpreters of himself.

The other need is MEN and WOMEN! Two stations without our missionaries; another to be left alone in a few months; several missionaries, because of health and other reasons, not likely to return. Like Shylock of old, but for a different reason, our cry is for flesh and blood: for men and women that God has been training for such a work as this.

We are going to leave the worry about funds largely to you folks at home. Let our Baptist young manhood and womanhood who are prepared, or have the mission field in view, stand on the platform of the next Northern Baptist Convention and if the needed funds are not laid on God's altar the surprise will reach to Central Africa.

The Philippine Islands

THE Philippine mission has experienced the blessings of the Lord in the continued progress towards the establishment of the kingdom. Educational work and the medical service, in cooperation with evangelism, have served as means to the great end of salvation of souls. The churches have contributed more than ever before for the support of the work. The extensive sale of Bibles and Testaments expresses ardent desire to study the Holy Word. The increase in the organization of Christian Endeavor societies, the well-attended Sunday schools, chapel construction, the opening of new work on Mindoro, and, above all, the greater number of additions to the churches, denote the conquering Christ. Capiz province has had more baptisms than in any one of the past five years. The student work at our dormitories, especially at the community center at La Paz, also at other high school centers, is especially effective and productive of desired results. The fanatical opposition is setting forth all

New Blood in the Choir

The real burden of the new year's choir-work will again have to be borne by those who, for the most part, have had many a year in this noble service. They bring to their work so much that is of inestimable value, they are the seasoned veterans, and to them we look for example and leadership.

But in the year that has gone by since the last opening of the fall work, many new talents should have ripened into maturity sufficiently to be drawn into the choir as new members. They may not as yet be able to strengthen the choir really by their presence in it. But they will be getting valuable experience and will gradually round into shape for efficient service.

Some of the most useful choir members of future years will serve their "rookie" term this year. Do not overlook the great possibilities in available new choir members when getting ready for the new year's work.

Undesirables in the Choir

How to get rid of the undesirables in choir is one of the very real problems of many a director. The reason for the undesirability of certain people may be some kink in their character. Now and then a tactful or resourceful director can eliminate the situation sufficiently to keep peace in the family. But in too many cases the kinky one can make it mighty pleasant for everybody and practically impossible for the choir to do successful work. Now we all dread drastic operations, yet they are often absolutely necessary to save life and happiness. Of course we want to save the offending member if possible. But if it really is not possible, then let us have the operation; only let us have it as painless as it can be made. Some people have the gift of administering anesthetics very tactfully so that no unpleasant memories remain when it is all over. Blessed are such peacemakers in a choir.

Sometimes the undesirable ones are such because of their voices, or the lack of them. It often happens that these people are the loveliest people in the world, whom no one would have the heart to offend; and they are often the most faithful and most enthusiastic members of the choir. If they could only sing! And since they cannot, if they would only soft-pedal it a little more! But they are blissfully ignorant of the situation, and so their voices stand out in painful prominence. If they are young and teachable, a little private coaching will often solve the problem. Now and then directors have tried the experiment of shifting an offending soprano into the alto part, or a tenor into the bass, where they can do very little singing and correspondingly little harm. What, however, will you do with those who are neither young and teachable, who will not permit themselves to be switched into other voice regions? It really is too bad that Solomon isn't living so that we could ask him up in this connection. As things stand, it will probably have to be left to each individual choir concerned to get out of a bad situation as best it can.

Entry of Choir

In some churches the entry of the choir is made a very impressive part of the church service. The great majority of them have no formal processional. The choirs should always get together in some room before the beginning of the service with all members present, for possible final instructions, so that no annoying whispered directions or the passing of notes in full view of the audience will be necessary later on. At the proper time, the choir should file into the church and each member remain standing until, at a sign from the director, all sit down together. It need hardly be said that the rising for singing and the resuming of the seats at the close of it must also always be done simultaneously by all the members of the choir, when the proper sign is given, and never in haphazard fashion. Where there is no director, some one in the choir should be agreed upon as leader in this respect, everybody rising and sitting down when the leader does. These axioms of choir behavior are quite generally observed, and should be observed by even the smallest choir. They are little things, but everything worth while in this world is a combination of just such little things.

MUSIC REVIEW

From The White-Smith Co., Boston

Upon the first day of the week.....Calver
Somewhat premature, but none the less of interest, is this excellent Easter anthem put out by this progressive Boston publishing house. Set to biblical text with the addition of stanzas of hymn by Bishop Wordsworth, it is especially appropriate to Easter, but may be used any time a brilliant praise-anthem is desired. The part-writing of the music is praiseworthy, the melodic ideas are individual and gratifying, and the organ accompaniment is well set for the instrument—a feature too often neglected in anthems!

From the Boston Music Co., Boston, Mass.

O Lord, My God.....Davis
Lead, Kindly Light.....Lang
Come Unto Me.....Grossmann

Two service anthems and a response make up the subjects listed above for review. The Davis number is a broadly-conceived anthem in the English style of Gadsby, Stainer, Goss, et al, without solos, contrapuntal in mode, with effective climax and much harmonic interest. A fine chorus in conception, in construction and in mood.

Somewhat less churchly in style is the Lang anthem; it lacks the fine discrimination and the finesse of the Davis chorus. The harmonic scheme is much more chromatic in nature, and the part-writing is more involved—which is largely a matter of the degree of contrapuntal technique acquired by the composer. Which is not saying that this Lang number is to be slighted—it is much superior to the general run of church music issued in this country; it is rather unfortunate that it should be coupled with such an outstanding number as the Davis piece listed above! The Grossmann title is a short two-page choral effort listed as a response; it is long enough, and of sufficient weight to render it available for use as a short anthem. It is grateful, musically and valid, devotionally.

possible means to retain the Filipinos in superstitious ignorance, but the truth shall be the victor. The young people testify their possession of Christ on the decision days in our various centers, in spite of threatened exclusion from family ties. The training schools, whether missionary or nursing, are putting forth eager personal workers for the Lord. Jaro has its Biblical training department, the foundation of a seminary in the coming Central Philippine College. The Philippines are awakened to the need of the personal Saviour.

Thus the review of the past year anticipates a bright outlook for 1923. However, I must not fail to emphasize the great need of an educated ministry to win the educated young people. Let us strengthen and finance the Jaro Industrial School in its coming change to collegiate standing. Our lethargic churches must be aroused to assume greater responsibility. We must have a dormitory in Manila with a missionary in charge. We are losing our best boys to other activities in the metropolis. We have the greater vision, we pray for the renewed consecration to extend the message of evangelism. Negros, Iloilo, Capiz, all our islands, call for your prayers. Your subscriptions to the Pearl of the Orient will bring detailed accounts of the work and needs in each field, so that you may follow the progress of the cause of Christ in these islands.

Polish Baptists in America

POLISH people have been more devoted to the Roman church than to their own country. Today there are two questions to be answered: Shall Poland be controlled by the nationalist party and be ruled by Rome, or shall it be independent and have religious liberty? This struggle for freedom was a cause for the assassination recently of the newly elected president of Poland. This same atmosphere that prevails in Poland today dominates our people here and has handicapped Protestant work. By the vigorous efforts of our Baptist leaders and the cooperation of the Polish press a remarkable change has been evident of late. Religious subjects are discussed more freely than before and the Baptists have better access to the people as a result. Many Polish people are looking to Baptists for religious leadership. Twenty-five years ago there were only two Polish Baptist missions in America with two workers. Today we have twenty missions and churches organized into the Polish Baptist Conference, representing 1,200 members and at least double that number of adherents. The report of the last conference showed an increase of 183 members by baptism. The conference voted $3,000 to be used for missionary purposes in Poland, and expects in the near future with the assistance of the Foreign Mission Society to send workers abroad. There are 4,000 Poles in America and at every point where our work has been established and is conducted under trained leadership, the meetings are well attended.

All Christians Driven Out

Two and a half million Christians are involved in the catastrophe that drives them out of Asia Minor and Thrace in wholesale exodus. Great multitudes of Christians are fleeing in terror. Their misery is beyond words. They are women, children, and aged people, the men of military age being missing.

If they are later allowed to return, our need for funds will be multiplied.

The children in orphanages in the interior are being moved to places of safety in the coast cities.

What Will You Do About It?

You have the power of life and death.

The number of orphans and refugees saved depends directly on the generosity of American givers; to no other source can they look for aid.

A large increase in gifts is necessary to move the orphans, to assist refugees, and pay the higher costs in the coast cities.

The ARMENIAN CHRISTMAS SUNDAY, January 21st, is recommended by the Baptist Advisory Committee on Near East Relief as a Field Day on which this worthy cause may be presented, and offerings received in our churches and Sunday schools. This date is for those who are not cooperating in a Community Campaign on another date.

This appeal is being combined with our appeal for European Relief. Offerings will be divided between the two causes.

The Northern Baptist Convention, Foreign Mission Society, and the American Baptist Publication Society, all heartily endorse the Near East Relief.

The Need of Spiritual Leadership

THE thing that appals us on an occasion like this when we try to look through the eyes of Christ, is that in the hour of our present distress, peril and opportunity, we seem to be having a famine in prophets. A banker in New York recently said to me: "Experts in education, industry, banking and governments cannot save America or the world. Only the preachers with the gospel of Jesus Christ can save it. If they fail, I see only chaos ahead."

We are not to zigzag with Christ; he does not walk that way. With him we must go straight ahead. If a mountain is in the way, we must tunnel it by our industry or we must remove it by our faith. If we are with Christ we are not with certain others. We must not be led away from the path by the secondary fascinations of life.

As we go forward with Christ we must seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, remembering that if we do, all other things shall be added unto us. Our Lord had been urging his disciples not to be anxious concerning their daily food or clothing. Suddenly it occurred to him that they might be concerned about the near and the long future and he concluded his words by saying: "Take no thought for the morrow. . . . Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." The long future will have its evil, its darkness, perhaps its despair, but through all this the Christian will walk calmly; whatever the upheavals in local, national, or international relations, he is simply to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and everything else that is needed will be supplied by the divine Companion with whom the journey forward is made.

Fresh from the Field

A council was called at Centerville, Pa., Nov. 13, to consider the ordination of E. L. Porterfield. Rev. S. J. Arthur of Erie was moderator and Rev. D. L. Woods of Kane, clerk. Rev. B. C. Barrett of Oil City, preached the ordination sermon.

The Sunday School of the First Church, Watertown, N. Y., has closed a three months' contest with the Sunday school of the leading Methodist church of the city, in which the former won. The attendance passed beyond the 500 mark.

A council was called by the church at New Richmond, Ohio, Dec. 19, to consider the ordination of Dr. Wilson A. Smith. Rev. C. W. Atwater of the Lincoln Park Church, Cincinnati, acted as moderator and Wm. C. Coombs as clerk. The charge to the candidate was delivered by Rev. C. W. Atwater. Dr. Smith is a retired physician.

During the past six months, the First Church, Brookville, Pa., has given more money to missions than in any former year. Seventy-two have been added to the church membership in the last year. The church has an evangelistic team comprised of young people which goes out every Sunday evening preaching the gospel to outstations. Rev. John J. Van Gorder is pastor.

The First Church of Pasadena, Calif. recently welcomed Rev. Herbert Handel, formerly of Tremont Temple, Boston, as its new associate minister. Dr. O. T. Gifford spoke at the first anniversary reception which was given to Dr. and Mrs. John Marvin Dean and Mr. Handel. The church is planning to erect a new structure consisting of three units, at a total cost of approximately $400,000, exclusive of the ground upon which the building is to stand.

The First Church of Sheboygan Falls, Wis., for the first time in fourteen years is free from debt. Mr. William Jones, a member of another church in the community celebrated his ninety-seventh birthday by presenting the church with the sum of $1000, one-half to be used for missions and the remainder for local expenses. The church is in excellent financial condition for the new year.

Ten thousand clergyman, representing almost every denomination, preached Christmas sermons in which international cooperation and good-will was the chief topic. The World Alliance headquarters reports that never since the organization was founded in 1914, have the clergymen of the country shown so much interest in international subjects.

The Yale Divinity School has just celebrated its centennial. During the hundred years of its history it has trained students from all branches of the Protestant church and from all parts of the world. It has enrolled over 3600 students, and from this number pastors have gone forth to every state in the union, 250 missionaries have gone to the foreign field, 112 graduates have become college or university presidents and more than 600 have served as college professors. In connection with the celebration the faculty has published a centennial volume on "Education for Christian Service."

Rev. Charles A. McAlpin, at one time pastor in Rochester and later associate secretary of the New York State Convention, recently addressed the Federation of Churches of Rochester, N. Y., on "Church Publicity." Mr. McAlpin showed how far the churches are behind in modern publicity principles and methods. He showed the churches what wonderful possibilities they had of preaching the gospel through the printed page and the eye, and how lamentably the church has failed to use this avenue of approach to the people outside the churches. He took the position that we should advertise the message of the gospel rather than the name of the preacher and the church.

The "Baptist Times and Freeman" of London says: "Dr. Antonio Mangano, of New York, is spending part of a Sabbatic year at Oxford, and has been lecturing and preaching at Newroad. Dr. Mangano is in charge of the Italian department of Colgate Theological Seminary, which has its school at Hamilton, N. Y. Here promising Italian students are given a preparatory training before being sent to the larger course at Colgate University. Dr. Mangano hopes to visit Italy before his return to the states to obtain some first-hand knowledge of the fascist movement. Speaking of the immigration problem in the states, he says 'America stands or falls by its treatment of the foreigner.'"

The Village Church at Clipston, England is being repaired. Our interest in this old building is due to the fact that it was here that the Baptist Mission Society was conceived. A group of godmen spent a whole night in deliberation and prayer and the outcome was the meeting in Widow Beeby's house at Kettering where the society was launched. The pastor at Clipston, a Mr. Morris, was one of Carey's warmest friends, and to him many of Carey's most intimate letters from India were written. The village population has greatly decreased since that time.

Dr. George R. Stair, until recently pastor of the Englewood Church, Chicago has been engaged during the fall and early winter in evangelistic meetings in the churches of the Chicago Association. He is at present with the First Church, Elgin.

As a feature, and an impressive one, of the recent "Safety Week" parade in Washington, D. C., a conspicuous tablet was placed at the entrance of the District of Columbia building, bearing the following:

The Joint Campaign

December was not an ideal month for a subscription campaign. With Christmas and the holidays in the forefront we can report results which are worth while. The receipts for subscriptions for the month amounted to $5,673.84. Missions sent in $618.30 up until Jan. 6. The best part of the whole plan is that it started subscription plans in the churches just about a month earlier than usual. Watch January. The first five days brought $2,046.01.

Samples of January Remittances

They are simply a report of progress. The same churches have sent in and will send in the new subscriptions as fast as they secure them. It is a good work. These good folks and hundreds like them will make a new subscription record for the month of January.

"Are You Holding Up?"

A friend who is greatly interested in THE BAPTIST wants to know "if we are holding up." He means are you still able to pay your way without receiving money from the denomination in the form of a budget allowance or subsidy. We are. Not a dollar has been received upon the budget allowance granted at Indianapolis. We are living upon our own legitimate income from subscriptions and advertising. Eight months of the fiscal year have passed and we expect to go to Washington without having used a single dollar of the denomination's money. The situation of the paper is not ideal. What denominational situation is? We have felt that in view of the necessity of retrenchment all along the line that THE BAPTIST should set an example of the strictest economy to the point of sacrifice. We feel that to save this modest budget allowance of $15,000 is for THE BAPTIST to contribute that amount to the common weal.

Ages of Children Killed, Under 5 years of age, 42; 5-9 years of age, 23; 10-19 years of age, 32. Each citizen should pledge himself to do everything in his power to make impossible such a sacrifice in the future."

Pastor William E. LaRue of the Takoma Park Church, Washington, D. C., is preaching a series of sermons upon the theme, "People Whom Jesus Commended." They are identified as a good listener, a humble petitioner, a worthy neighbor, an implicit believer, a man of character, an efficient business man, a devoted friend and a responsive inquirer.

The "Evangelism of Youth" by Albert H. Gage, published by our Publication Society is meeting with a splendid reception. In this book he shows that there are seasons in nature which men are wise to use for seed sowing and harvesting. Similarly there are seasons in child life and development which present peculiar opportunities for the sowing and fruiting of the knowledge of God. Mr. Gage is director of religious education of the Baptist Executive Council of Chicago.

In the calendar of the Euclid Avenue Church, Cleveland, the pastor, W. W. Bustard, gives a minister's resolutions for his church: "Many a church fails to reach its highest goal because of the lack of definite aims. These are very suggestive: 1. A new prayer spirit in our church. The strong Christian is the praying Christian. The strong church is always the praying church. This year cultivate the proper spirit in the heart, home and the church. As we come to be a praying church, it will come to be a powerful church. 2. A new interest in Bible study. The strong man has a well nourished body. He wants his regular meals. Many a Christian is weak because there is for him so little of spiritual food. As we feed upon God's Word, we will become strong. A Bible-reading, Bible-loving church is sure to be an efficient church. 3. A new interest in missions. The Bible is the greatest missionary book the world has ever seen. The praying, Bible-reading church is ever a missionary church. Let the aim of our church be, 'To make this church a gospel center, a light in the community, and unto the ends of the earth.' Only the world is our parish. 4. A new interest in boys and girls, men and women. This includes both those of our own household of faith and also of the entire community. Reach the lowest one in the place and we will have taken a long step toward reaching and helping every other person within the radius of our influence."

Social Service Committee Clears for Action

By U. M. McGUIRE

POST-WAR psychology and the conditions of perplexity in the Northern Baptist Convention have seriously hindered the social service committee of the convention from functioning vigorously and with a clearly defined program during the last two or three years. But in a meeting of the committee held in New York, Dec. 27, there were all indications of a new awakening.

Members present were Samuel Z. Batten; Prof. H. K. Rowe of Newton Theological Institution; Prof. J. W. Nixon, of Rochester Theological Seminary; Prof.

J. L. Dealey, of Brown University; President Clifton D. Gray, of Bates College; U. M. McGuire, of Greencastle, Ind., and Chas. A. Brooks, substitute for Mrs. W. A. Montgomery, who was unable to attend. J. Foster Wilcox, and Lemuel C. Barnes were welcomed as advisory members, representing related denominational organizations. Prof. Albion W. Small, of Chicago University, Mrs. I. H. O'Harra, of Philadelphia, Rev. W. E. Raffety of Philadelphia and Mr. C. C. Stillman of Grand Rapids, were not able to be present. Dr. Batten is chairman ex-officio, and U. M. McGuire was elected secretary.

Several reports, written or oral, were presented on specific phases of social service, but the main interest lay in a careful and earnest discussion of the whole subject of an efficient functioning of the committee. As a result of this discussion a statement, prepared by Profs. Rowe and Nixon as a special committee, was adopted, defining in clear and comprehensive terms the scope and character of the work to be undertaken by the committee. Several sub-committees were appointed to carry forward the work thus outlined. Three of those sub-committees are to function as committees of review and cooperation with the American Baptist Home Mission Society and the American Baptist Publication Society, namely:

a—Rural Life—Messrs. Rowe and Coe.
b—Immigration, Americanization, Christian Centers and Community Problems—Prof. Nixon, Mrs. I. H. O'Harra and Mr. Stillman.

c—Social Education—Mrs. O'Harra and Messrs. Brooks and Gray.

Five of these sub-committees are charged with the investigation, assembling and dissemination of educational material, as follows:

a—International Relations—Messrs. Gray and Batten.

b—Industrial Relations—Mr. McGuire and Prof. Small.

c—The Family and Child Welfare—Messrs. Dealey and Raffety.

d—Social Training in Educational Institutions—Messrs. Raffety, Stillman and Brooks.

e—Law Observance—Messrs. Coe and Nixon.

A comprehensive program of cooperation with other organizations in the field of social service, whether denominational or interdenominational, was adopted.

Dr. Gray gave a highly hopeful view of the conditions in Russia, derived from a recent interview with a prominent American observer who has just returned from that country. He said that the soviet government has come to stay, that prohibition is strictly enforced in Russia, that religious liberty is fairly protected, and that one good crop will go far towards bringing normal conditions there.

There was a strong sentiment in favor of some positive action in the interest of a definite participation of the United States in international affairs: but on private information (since made public) that the government is taking some definite and careful steps in that direction, no formal action was taken.

Law enforcement also evoked great interest; and a resolution was adopted proposing a conference in which all denominations shall be invited to participate be held to consider this subject with a view to concert of action.

The Coming Generation and Religious Training

The pressure of responsibility upon Baptists for religious training of the coming generation led to the organization of the American Baptist Publication Society almost a century ago. An important service amplifies the helpfulness of its Sunday School publications by trained field workers.

In cooperation with State Conventions and City Mission Societies, the Publication Society maintains Directors of Religious Education and Elementary Directors. This field force trains Sunday School teachers and workers, leads to the Bigger and Better Baptist Church School Campaign, organizes Church Vacation Schools and Summer Assemblies, enrolling ten thousand young people.

The Publication Society needs more generous support in order to give Sunday School leadership to foreign-speaking and Negro churches, equip Baptist Summer Assemblies and extend Week-Day Religious Education.

THE GENERAL BOARD OF PROMOTION OF THE NORTHERN BAPTIST CONVENTION

The Baptist

Consider the Local Baptist Church

AFTER all, the testing point of a denomination's success, the true index of what it is accomplishing, is to be found not from its great annual convention, nor from its general program of denominational achievement, nor from that apotheosis of sounding brass and tinkling cymbal, the report of the committee on resolutions, but from an inspection of the functioning of its local churches. What is the method of their activity? What are they attempting week by week, and what are they actually accomplishing? What adaptations are they making to present needs of American life? How does the local church compare in efficiency with that before the world war? With that of twenty years—of fifty years ago? Is the denominational church breaking down, as a modern Juniper Tree prophet asserts in a recent issue of a religious weekly published in Chicago?

An answer to questions like these is needed to supplement the splendid general view found in the World Survey which THE BAPTIST has just now been presenting. Fortunately our editorial office receives many weekly bulletins published by our churches, and from this and other sources of information we are able to give something of a cross-sectional view of the American Baptist local church, by no means a complete one yet one affording most valuable data toward the answering of these all-important queries. We have the weekly programs and announcements of things done and to be done by many local churches from New England to the Pacific coast and all the way between. The field is too vast for frequent mention of individual churches from the main office; we must rely on our regional correspondents for that. But when we wish to answer exigent questions like those mentioned, it is worth much to have first-hand data at our command from all parts of our great field, from which we may draw definite and reliable conclusions. We would be glad if many more of our churches would put this office on their regular mailing list. We are hoping at some time to be able to present more detailed results of an examination of the local church situation. For this time only certain points, yet most important points, can be touched.

Few persons save our general denominational officers of longest and widest field experience can realize what a thrill would be given to our constituency if they could see in a volume or on the screen the pictures of a thousand representative Baptist church edifices of today. They would be amazed to find what splendid, ample, thoroughly equipped structures were the habitations of our Baptist churches not only in our large eastern cities, but even more in the newer regions of the country, where rapid growth of population and wealth have enabled many of our newer cities to surpass the older ones where the churches were built a generation or more ago and are too good to scrap yet not fully adequate to the needs of the developing church work of today. There are country churches, too, with facilities and conveniences which city churches did not possess a generation ago. They have their own electric plant for lighting and power, modern plumbing, telephone, and rooms for Sunday-school departments and social purposes, perhaps even a gymnasium, instead of the single boxlike room for all purposes which constituted the sole equipment of country and small-town churches a generation ago, unless there were a basement, half-underground, adapted for a morgue but used for the primary department. Northern Baptist churches today have $125,000,000 of property.

And the conception of church activity is startlingly different from that of a few years ago. Here is a western church with at least eight persons giving full-time service and hundreds giving voluntary service, with twenty-three different services on Sunday and as many more scattered through the week. Here is a church in a city of 60,000 in Michigan which contributed $112,000 to the work of the kingdom in the last three years; which has two branches, each with an ordained pastor; which has added 311 members in the three years; and whose pastor averages a speaking engagement of some sort for every day in the week. Here is a church in a small city of Pennsylvania which has a week-day Bible school for grade scholars every Friday at four o'clock, a high school girls' Bible class of forty-five with lunch brought by the girls at noon of one day, and a business girls' Bible class at another noonday. The bulletin calmly announces a loan library and a junior loan library with a boxful of fine books and adds, "No records; no cards. Help yourself." The modern church is an optimistic church.

A church in Cleveland has a separate calendar for its junior congregation, with juniors conducting a part of the services. This church had more than 1000 in its Sunday school, and with holy optimism it called for 100 new church members on Christmas day. It is accustomed to have hundreds of additions every year. Another church on the Pacific coast announces a junior church to start January 14, 1923, and a church in a town of 5,000 in Iowa has its junior and senior sermons, with almost as much pains, though shorter time, given to the former as to the latter. The pastor of this church is one of a number in our denomination who gives an occasional drama-sermon with telling effect.

Here is an upstate church of New York, which supports seven foreign missionaries and about the same number of full-time workers in the home church, which has furnished two presidents to the Northern Baptist Convention, where the pastor has as his associate his own ministerial father; a church which is a humming hive in every department of a church's proper activity, which has built the finest and best-equipped Sunday-school building in the world, and has its school organized thoroughly on the model of the public schools, with a grade department, grammar department, junior high school and other departments, all conducted as seriously as any day school.

Another bulletin announces office hours at the church for the pastor and his associate pastor from 9 to 12:15 and from 1 to 4:30 daily, with the deprecatory remark that the senior pastor usually is out part of each afternoon and all of Tuesday. Surely some pastors are budgeting their time.

These statements are the result only of what the statisticians would call a random sampling of the whole mass, but we believe they are fairly indicative of what many hundreds or even thousands of our churches are setting before themselves as their task, though with unequal resources and achievement. It is in the smaller communities and cities of moderate size that the situation is most cheering. In our large cities, though here are some of the greatest achievements of the local church and of our city mission societies, the general outlook is somewhat depressing. The strength of our churches has largely been transferred to the suburban Edens, while Sodom and Gomorrah are left to the world, the flesh and the politicians. One New York City church reports a resident membership of 400 and a non-resident list of 371. Yet in the country as a whole the outlook for the local Baptist church is immensely cheering in such a time of general unrest and readjustment as this. We may thank God and take courage.

The New State Convention

IN THIS number are brief survey reports of the state conventions. Within the past few years rapid and revolutionary changes have taken place in these organizations. In days not long gone the state convention was primarily and almost solely a state mission enterprise. Its executive was usually chosen because of strong missionary and evangelistic gifts. The planting of new churches, the oversight and assistance of weak causes and the collection of state mission funds were major duties. No one even seemed to think that it was the work of the state convention to foster and promote every phase of the denomination's varied activities.

The several societies and boards had their general secretaries and in addition their district secretaries each of whom was charged with the securing of funds for his own organization and there were rivalries in those days of which we are now ashamed. Make a study of the old annuals. In the columns opposite the names of the churches one finds a distressing number of blanks showing that the causes indicated were entirely overlooked that year. In other columns there were recorded generous gifts. There seemed to be no rule governing the matter. There was however a powerful force at work. The secretary or missionary who could make the most powerful address carried away the biggest collection. There are whole chapters in personal experience which even to this day no one dare tell from the house-tops. Those days, we trust, are gone forever.

Somewhere about a decade and a half ago reckless souls in a few states dared call in question the divine right of secretaries and the "single collection agency" and the so-called "Michigan Plan" were evidences of growing pains in the state conventions. Modifications of the plans have now been adopted by all the states.

No state convention can now think of its work in the terms of the state. It is dedicated instead to a world task. Its functions are enlarged. Its influence extended. Its responsibility increased. Its secretary is a "joint secretary" representing every cause in which Baptists are interested. This movement has multiplied the power and influence of the conventions themselves. Not a few denominational leaders have looked with alarm upon the powerful state secretarial bloc. These state men are no longer second in influence to the secretaries of the general societies and boards. They outnumber the latter and their interests are so identical that they present a solid front in behalf of any cause which they feel called upon to champion. Certain inequalities in the distribution of funds in the early days of the New World Movement can be traced to the fact that the state convention secretaries joined hands in a common cause. Changes which have been made to equalize the distribution can be traced to the readiness of these men to do justice to the wider interests of the denomination.

The state convention secretaries today face tasks which make even strong men tremble. Their position has become more difficult every year. With the extension of the functions of the convention a new draught is made upon their strength. Next to the pastors in the local churches no men carry heavier responsibility for the success of the New World Movement than the men who head up our Baptist program in the state conventions.

Brethren, pray for your state director. Pray that in these trying days he may be a man as big as the job to which he is called. The responsibility of the new state convention is as wide as the world. The men who lead the churches must be men with a world outlook. They cannot afford to be short-sighted and see too clearly the pressing needs at home. They should not be far-sighted, seeing alone those needs afar off. With them rest the issues of the whole gigantic enterprise to which Baptists have set their hands. Pray that they may challenge all of our churches to the whole of our task.

Why Not?

THE Sunday School Times is greatly agitated over the proposal of the Christian Fundamentals Association to provide its own Bible lessons and lesson helps. In October, a committee met in Minneapolis to consider this new departure. At Los Angeles in June a resolution declaring the purpose "to create our Sunday school Bible course by January 1, 1923" was passed. In the new course it is proposed to create a series that shall in due time cover the entire Bible from Genesis to Revelation. We confess that we can see no good reason why the fundamentalists should not study the Bible according to any plan they may desire to follow. Of course, it will throw into confusion the plans of the Sunday School Times and make it impractical for use in the churches which adopt the new series. The Times has been the ardent advocate of the fundamentalist positions and it should not be seriously disturbed by actions which normally grow out of the positions taken. We recognize that there are advantages in the uniform lessons; we also recognize the right of any group of people to study the Bible in their own way.

Violence Against Violence

SPEAKING in Benton Harbor, Mich., Rev. Charles N. Lathrop, executive secretary of the department of Christian social service of the Protestant Episcopal church, deplored the tendency to deny radicals and alleged radicals justice before the courts and to enact ill-considered legislation for dealing with them. Dean Lathrop's remarks were criticized in the columns of a local newspaper, and to make his position clear, he sent a statement to the newspaper from which the following is taken: "My first point was that the backbone of the I. W. W. and communist movement is the part of our community who make up casual labor. Casual labor means laborers who are drawn into employment when times are good and factories are busy. The minute the demand falls off and the factories are less busy these are the men who are out of work. Seasonal labor in the harvest periods contributes another quota to casual labor. . . . Casual laborers have to move from place to place. They have no opportunity to establish a home or to anchor themselves in any normal, human life. They tend to become the tramps and 'vagrants.' No one can say that they get a really square deal. As a consequence of their hard experience, these men are easily persuaded that the industrial system which produces these conditions is wrong, and they are ready to follow those who demand that it be changed. "I made the statement that this whole situation ought to be studied and that these men should be dealt with sympathetically. Instead of that, they are harassed and hounded and their bitterness grows deeper.

"It is a fundamental ideal of our democracy that violence, which has accompanied revolution in autocratically governed nations, can no longer be justified as a necessary method of defending human rights. . . . Suppression of freedom of speech is an offense against this fundamental feature of democracy. Without freedom of speech, history shows that men regard violence as the only means of protest against social injustice. It is to prevent violence that I am speaking with all the vigor that I can command for the protection of the right of free speech and free assemblage. It is for this reason that I object to syndicalist laws, whereby men are jailed not because they have wronged the community or their fellow-citizens, but because they are members of organizations which are protesting against what they consider to be injustice. This country would be in no danger of violence if we maintained our original ideal of civil liberties."

Par Presbyterianism

THE central idea of the national laymen's Presbyterian conference which was held early in December at Kansas City was "Par Presbyterianism." The Presbyterian Magazine deals editorially with the subject:

"What is this new term that has recently come into our Presbyterian speech and life? Par means equality. In finances it means that bonds have a market price equal to their face value; in health it means that a man is 100 per cent in physical condition; on the golf course it means that a man plays a perfect game. Everywhere it means that practice is equal to profession.

"There is such a thing as Par Presbyterianism. Presbyterianism has a face value of profession in doctrine and work and life: does it live up to its profession and reach 100 per cent in performance? The world credits Presbyterianism with certain assets and possibilities: does it hold its assets so that they are liquid and realizable in the market? Does it turn its possibilities into 100 per cent of actualities? Or is Presbyterianism below par in the market of the world so that its professions cannot pass at their face value? There is such a thing as Par Presbyterianism, and it ought to be realized. This was the idea that dominated the program from start to finish. At the opening the general scope of Par Presbyterianism was outlined, and on successive days there were discussed Par Presbyterian education, organization, leadership, finance and missions, all culminating in Par Presbyterian power and prayer; and this program was then handed on to our 10,000 churches to be put into 100 per cent performance."

The Parish House

IF WE were to judge the ideals of our churches by their material equipment, some striking conclusions would be reached. In many, if not most, church buildings erected twenty-five years or more ago ample place has been made for preaching and altogether inadequate provision for the teaching and social ministry of the church. One of the marked developments in our more modern buildings is the equipment for religious education, social gatherings, physical and athletic work. In the church program of today it is necessary to exercise great care in order to preserve the proper balance in the varied activities. In the calendar of the Mount Morris Church, New York, for Dec. 31, Rev. H. G. Weston Smith makes this comment on the above subject:

"The Christian church in the past, and for that matter in the present as well, has been guilty of two sins with respect to its attitude toward the younger generation: On the one hand it has wholly failed to regard the point of view of its young people, and has neglected to furnish them that sort of recreation and sociability that is as much a part of life as is breathing. On the other hand it has seen this first sin and it has gone to another extreme which has involved as great a sin; for it has sometimes chosen to throw open the doors of the pulpit and the parish house alike to a policy of 'giving the people what they want.' In this latter case the result has been that the whole work has lost sight of what it was really after; and there has been a good deal of striking in the dark. And 'the people' have many of them wondered if the church knew what it was doing. God grant that our work may not 'lose the way.' There is a wise middle ground that some few choice leaders succeed in finding. This is what we wish to find. The instincts must be used as a means to the building of character—not regarded as a problem that continually irritates."

The Task of Theology

A discussion of the present situation may be valuable as it may serve to crystallize some of the thoughts which for the most part we have been thinking unconsciously

By JAMES SHEPPARD

TO CHARACTERISE the present situation in theology as critically acute is but to give expression to a matter of knowledge so common that it is manifest to the ordinary layman as well as to the minister. Yet a discussion of the present situation may be valuable, as it may serve to crystallize some of the thoughts which for the most part we have been thinking unconsciously. In addition it may serve to indicate the direction which our efforts should take.

Christianity can have no practical validity unless it has a sound theoretical basis. For this basis it is dependent upon its theology. A sound theory cannot help but be widely influential and produce far-reaching results. The history of the Christian church is ample evidence of the general utility of this viewpoint. Not alone is it important to those who give themselves to the teaching function, to those who class themselves as theologians, but it is also vitally important to the minister and to the layman. As William James so poignantly said that no man exists who does not have a philosophy of life, so it is also true that every man has a theology. The difference may be between that which is a fact and that which is the theory of a fact. Thus the fact of the death of Jesus may be interpreted by the theological doctrine of the atonement.

Sound Theological Leadership Important

And there is not a man who has not some view on this one fact. Inasmuch as he is going to have a theology concerning such things, it is important that there be a sound theological leadership which will not only avoid certain errors of the past, but also will indicate certain methods for the future. Not only must the inquiring nature of man in these regards be furnished with stimulating food, but it also must be intelligently directed.

For the greater part this task falls upon the Christian minister. It is not to be escaped. Bishop Brent, of the Episcopal diocese of western New York, recently said, "I always try to sound the theological note in my preaching. I find men always interested in the theological aspect of religious truth. After preaching sermons of such character men often thank me for treating of such a subject rather than preaching a sermon on obvious ethics." Now theology may be defined as the reflection and reasonable understanding and interpretation of the principles of Christian experience. If the Christian ministry does not assume its rightful task men who are not conversant with the great and fundamental verities of our religion will certainly give the wrong interpretation of the facts of Christian experience.

Much has been said in recent years concerning the decline of theology. Yet there is a certain element of mankind which always seems to sound the note of pessimism in religion. Even Bishop Butler believed that there was never such a time for religious indifference as was the age in which he lived. This note of pessimism may be well-grounded. On the one hand, men who have a right conception of a great task are confronted with the realization of the difficulty of its achievement with the realization that man does not gradually achieve progress by his own natural bent, but that there must be a definite, concentrated effort. On the other hand, in clearing way for the achievement of a great task, men are confronted with the situation that there are some things which are not useful; the forests must be cleared before buildings can be erected. So they may see that there is a decline in some ways of thinking.

An Argument Silenced

There is no decline in the popularity of religion. Such an argument was silenced once and for all by the recent figures of the survey of religious bodies in the United States. Nevertheless, one who faces the facts must realize that what was at present term theology is regarded as valueless not only by many thinking leaders, but also by many ordinary laymen. It is this attitude that has developed the demand for practical theology. The basis for the demand is seen in the desire to realize certain practical aims. There is the industrial situation which is demanding a great share of the attention of the church. There is the social situation which demands a tremendous energy in necessary social service. And in the desire to alleviate these conditions, the process of theological thinking has not been considered. Men have had no time for it. They have had a desire only for immediacy and practicality. But the fallacy of such a procedure is evident in the light of the fact that the so-called social gospel when considered by itself as so many of its adherents do consider it, is broad but it has no depth to cause it to survive. It is evidently a half-truth when one of its leading theoretical schools seeks to interpret God as being merely tribal.

The attitude of science and its universal use, both in fact and in method, has also had its effect on the decline of theology. Science has sought to study phenomena rather than any aim or purpose of life. And its feeling that there is no knowledge of the ultimate realities has had an added effect.

The Guiding Star

"I am come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on me may not abide in the darkness."

If some being from another planet could visit our earth, behold its untimely graves, look into the blanched faces of men, the tear-stained faces of women, the pinched faces of children, would he not be constrained to say: "Having been through many worlds and seen many kinds of life, I have seen nothing to equal the sorrow and gloom of the earth." Yet in the midst of history's bloodiest war and its aftermath we are not in despair. This is in itself a miracle of faith and hope. Look about you and consider if there be anything more wonderful than this: Fallen among his own ruins, crushed beneath the weight of desolation he has pulled down upon himself, man still dreams of better times, of higher national aims, of a coming age of brotherhood, of a warless, emperorless, kingless, kaiserless world. Froude says that in the middle of the nineteenth century "the compasses were all awry, the lights all drifting, and nothing left to steer by except the stars." But inasmuch as the stars are fixed, though compasses do go wrong and lights do drift, the situation is not entirely hopeless. Moreover, we may learn at last that our only hope as a race is to steer by the star of Bethlehem.—From a sermon by Dr. Frederick E. Shannon.

Certain methods of defective theological thinking have also effected a decline in theology. Cardinal Newman's predicament was brought about through the fact that he demanded an immediate infallible certainty. He was unwilling to give himself up wholeheartedly to the search for truth, and to become one of the glorious adventurers of faith. Theology has too often followed his method when it has desired infallibility and dogmatism rather than the truth. Too often the facts have been made to suit the Scriptures, rather than the opposite. Too often there has been no sifting process. The chaff has been handed down with the wheat and men have had to learn by experience that the chaff was intellectually and spiritually indigestible. Too often there has been demanded a dogmatic certainty on non-essentials. The wisdom of the great Baptist communion in refusing to allow itself to be dominated by non-essentials, and interpreting religion as a life, rather than a creed, cannot be doubted. Such an action is only to be applauded. All of these things, coupled with the fact that an abstruse way of dealing with the facts resulted in the situation that there was no possibility of an interpretation according to every-day facts of experience, and theology lost its vital contact with men.

Not a Hopeless Situation

But although there has been a decline, the situation is by no means hopeless. On the contrary there is every reason to believe that there is improvement, and that such an improvement is essentially progressive. A great deal of the work in the past has consisted of questions of mere historical value. Now that these are being cleared away there is a possibility for work that is really definitely constructive. Thus we have come to see that much of the supposed investigations of primitive religions is really nothing but the imagination of the man of the twentieth century. The Christian experience of today is the norm by which we are to judge that of the past. When such a fact has been realised, there is a great possibility for really constructive work to be done.

Men Are Thinking Theologically

And so a new impetus is being given to theology. The old questions of the fundamental verities of life will not down. Men are thinking of these things. In so doing they are thinking of them theologically. They cannot help but do so, for they are thinking in terms of reality which is ultimate. The old materialistic interpretations are seen to be valueless in the light of a higher experience that is more fundamental. This dialectic has changed such mathematical philosophers as Russell and Whitehead into fields of philosophy and theology. It has resulted in similar investigations by such men as William James, who left the field of descriptive psychology for those dealing with philosophy, and also in the lives of Lodge and Haldane. The great schools of philosophy (save the instrumentalists headed by John Dewey) are finding that their contemporary leaders are thinking theologically. Thus Hocking, Pringle-Pattison, Sorrel, and Eucken are all endeavoring to give their systems of thought a theological basis. The task then of theology is to give a reasoned hope for the faith that man has within him really to interpret the realities of Christian experience in terms of life. Even though the minister does not need to preach on questions of theological disputations, he must be rooted and grounded in his theology in order that he may build up the lives of those with whom he comes into contact; he must make men feel that he knows whereof he speaks. The facts of Christian experience need to be shown to be as valid for the reason as they are for the heart. And what greater task can come to a man than to interpret life in the terms of Christian experience? And above all the task is to engage the mind of the age. This must be done, for the doubts of thinking men of today become the doubts and the thoughts of the masses tomorrow. And above all, the task that presents itself is for the church to retain its intellectual leadership in faith and in morals.

These are all elements of a great task. A task which is all-demanding. And Christianity needs a great task, for it has a great message.

The Streaming Hordes

By RALPH WELLES KEELER

*STILL do the streaming hordes sweep in Thro' open gates, on shores still wet
With crying blood of brother's wrongs,
Where every evening sun doth set
On discontent and growing need,
On cheerless homes, on bitter strife—
The huddled, crowded, cheerless mass,—
The empty, hopeless, sordid life.*

*The widening stream spreads on and out
Thro' village road, thro' city street,
Far o'er the undulating plains
Where distant sky and mountains meet.
Each day the currents stronger sweep
Across the hopes that life holds dear:
Must duty challenge to the task
Which Christ himself in love makes clear?*

*Shall this stream choke our nation's life
And hopes and ideals droop and die?
Shall freedom's song our fathers knew
Be but an echo to the sky?*

*Still do the streaming hordes sweep in Thro' open gates—an eager throng—
God, give us strength to make them thine
And teach them brotherhood's own song!*

*Thy grace, O God, impart that we
In love to alien folk may show
A brotherhood that knows no bounds.
Thy Kingdom here below.*

The New World Movement from a Missionary's Point of View

By JOSEPH TAYLOR

FROM its inception, the New World Movement caught the imagination of the missionary. It appealed to him as something worth while, and of great import to the work of the denomination both at home and abroad. It served to measure the possibilities of the Baptists of the North. They had grown from groups of churches along the Atlantic seaboard to a great denomination reaching across the country from East to West. They had been one of the pioneering churches that followed the progress of the republic to the shores of the Pacific. They had followed the call of God to Asia, Africa, Europe and the islands of the sea. Now they stood confronting even greater opportunities than those revealed by Judson and his colleagues. The question that arose in the mind of the missionary was: Would the denomination be once again equal to the task before it? The missionary refused to believe in failure and resolved to work for success.

The first place where the missionary could help was in securing facts regarding the work of the denomination in foreign lands. This was undertaken in the midst of pressing duties that came as regularly as his meals—very often more regularly. A survey was made of the field and facts about the population, the area, and the needs in men and means were marshalled. The whole mission got busy on this work. Each station made an intensive study of its progress and of what still remained to be done.

Statistics and Ideals

These facts were sent to a central office where the final tabulations were made and then sent off to America. More than the statistics were sent, for the ideals which these facts represented went along with them: the heartache and the unuttered prayer were crammed into the big envelope, and then the missionary went about his "ordinary work" and waited for the result. He felt sure that the New World Movement could not fail, but he wondered if it would succeed 100 per cent.

Well, up to date it has not succeeded completely, but the results thus far attained have brought the denomination farther up the hill of achievement, and the missionary refuses to believe that it will ever again drop back to the level of faith and works which were thought sufficient before the movement started. The Baptist denomination is a bigger concern in spiritual experience, in length and breadth of vision and in deeper devotion than it was in the days before the New World Movement had its birth.

One of the best results that have come to the West China Mission from the movement is the increased number of recruits sent out. This was, perhaps, our greatest need; for the years of the war had robbed us of new workers and the strain upon those "at the front" was so severe that there was a grave danger of our having to shorten our line at a time when there was a clear call for an advance. The board of our society has sent out to our field thirteen new workers, while the board of the woman's society has added seven to its forces.

These do not constitute a clear gain for death has taken two veterans from our ranks and at least one family has withdrawn from the field. But we have had a great increase; for one of our Chinese students has been to America and returned this year after three years of study at Rochester Theological Seminary and the University of Chicago. We have also received increased appropriations for the work and because of that have been able to push our campaign for trained Chinese leaders by keeping our students in school and college. A number of these young men have now finished their course in the university and are already at work by the side of the missionaries in the different districts.

In one section of our campaign we have not succeeded in making much advance—the matter of purchasing property and the erection of better buildings and the securing of more adequate equipment. Before the New World Movement began, a "Friend" very generously gave to the mission a large gift which enabled us to put up several new houses and some of our much needed school buildings; we were also able to make very helpful alterations in one of our hospitals. We are now beginning work on a fine new hospital in Suifu made possible through the same gift.

But a growing and progressive mission calls for a growing budget. There is need of more land; our schools are outgrowing their present quarters and our hospitals are but meagerly equipped. We need two up-to-date church plants very badly. Our five-year program calls for $436,000 Mex. from the general board, and $211,350 Mex. from the woman's board. This amount is the result of some rather severe whittling down. The total asked for from the two boards is $647,350 Mex., or, at an exchange of two to one, $323,675 in U. S. gold. This year the mission has been obliged to accept a cut in the annual budget of 25 per cent. No appropriation is possible for land or buildings. Our share in the budget of the West China Union University could not be increased, although the university has reached a place in its development where a much larger budget is necessary if further progress is to be registered.

From what has been stated above it can be readily seen that the New World Movement has even more significance to the missionary at the present time than it had when it was first started. The high hopes built upon the birth of the movement are in danger of toppling over. The program which it called into being is in danger of being starved. The advance which was planned seems to be taking a backward direction. The workers on the field are in danger of losing their faith in the denomination which pledged itself to back them up. The new courage of the Chinese church, so splendidly expressed in the National Christian Conference of last May, may be sapped by the failure of the New World Movement. Indeed, we ought not to fail. We have ceased to be a denomination whose boundaries are defined by the confine of the northern states. We have reached out unto the ends of the earth and by so doing have made ourselves morally and spiritually responsible for the religious welfare of tens of thousands of our fellow Christians. We cannot afford to retreat we dare not stand still.

There remains but one thing left for us to do, if we would be able to look into the face of Christ without flinching—this is to GO FORWARD, and going forward for the churches of the Northern Baptist Convention, in this year of our Lord means paying up the pledges already made, and then before God and our brethren in other lands, who look to us for aid, to determine that what we proposed to do when we began the New World Movement, we will finish. We will deepen our faith in the value of the work we are doing; we will renew our devotion to our God; we will build up our churches in faith and good works; we will regard all our possessions as a loan from the Almighty, and we will keep our plighted troth with those men and women on the firing line and with those new Christians whom we have been permitted, through the mercy and goodness of God, to bring into the light of the gospel of his Son.

Meditation of a Rural Pastor

By CLARK H. BANCROFT

I AM pastor of a church in a small town. I know that some of my classmates, now pastors of city churches, look upon me as having taken a siding off the line of progress and achievement but I am not wasting any time pitying myself. The Book, whose message I am commissioned to teach and proclaim, bids not to "despise the day of small things." The greater portion of the contents of this Book was first addressed to people living in rural conditions and can best be understood by people living a life out-of-doors. My Master saw fit to spend most of his thirty-three years upon earth in a despised village and uttered most of his teachings in the open country or by the seashore.

I am commissioned as a winner of souls and desire a fruitful field in which to labor. Statistics show that whereas in the average city church there is the addition of one convert on profession of faith to nineteen accessions by letter, in the town and country churches the ratio is almost exactly reversed. Unless our smaller rural churches are kept active our city churches cannot long endure. Our church and others like it stand at the source of supply of our denominational life both for converts and trained workers ministerial and lay. At least 85 per cent of our ministers and missionaries and almost, if not quite, as large a proportion of those recognized as leaders or burden-bearers in the city churches received their early training in some town or country church.

A Survey of Baptist Work for 1922

Part II

Not a message that does not tell of some achievement; in the main the note is one of optimism for the coming year; and every department has its needs

The State Conventions

Arizona

THE outstanding achievements of the past year include a 49 per cent increase in the number of baptisms over the preceding year, the completion of a chapel for our Mexican people in Yuma and the erection of a church for our people in Winslow. One of the splendid accomplishments was the organization of a Mexican church in Phoenix with about 150 charter members. This is the result of two years' work among that people.

The first annual summer assembly of the Baptists of our state was held at Prescott this past year with an enrolment of over 100. This marks a new era in the educational work of the state.

The outlook for 1923 is hopeful. Our churches are beginning to send in the number of members of the stewardship leagues with the beginning of tithing and are heartily cooperating with the denominational program.

The financial returns are not as promising as we should like, but the courageous facing of the task under tremendous financial strain is proving the loyalty and sincerity of our people.

Our pressing needs are numerous: More money to operate our mission points up to capacity, capable men to fill vacant pastorates—men who are willing to face difficult tasks and stay long enough to bring the churches to permanency on a higher basis than hitherto. We need church buildings during the year—one for the Mexican people at Glendale, two for the English-speaking, Prescott and Buckeye. We also need at least three colporteur-missionaries for the Mexican people who are responding to the Gospel as perhaps no other people of our state. We also need a director of religious education, giving his whole time to the work within the state. These, as it seems to me, are our most pressing needs, and these the acts concerning the work in our state.

Northern California

Achievements

SUCCESSFUL evangelistic campaign resulting in large accessions to our churches.

An unusual number of first-class men titled as pastors.

Greatly increased giving to missions compared with former years. Since the New World Movement opened the increase has been 284 per cent over a corresponding period preceding the New World Movement.

The opening up of a successful mission among the Japanese, strengthening and enlarging of the work among the Indians and Mexicans, and the building of a Chinese Christian Center at Locke, costing $6,000.

Outlook for 1923

Opposition to New World Movement is waning. Better morale among our churches developing.

Larger opportunities for most of our churches for an intensive Americanization program. Our people are beginning to realize their responsibilities and enlisting in volunteer work.

Decided increase in the efficiency of our Sunday-school and young people's work.

Pressing Needs

Automobiles for missionaries in order that they can reach a larger constituency. California has built splendid roads and automobiles can be used to great advantage.

Large section of California, embracing seven counties, including hundreds of communities where very little religious work has been done, needs half a dozen colporters to go from house to house and from community to community.

Several tribes of Indians destitute of the gospel have been assigned to the Baptists by the Federal Council of Churches, and the needs are pressing for money with which to open up this work.

Rapidly developing communities in the irrigated sections of California confront us with the necessity of making appropriations to help finance church projects in new communities until orchards begin producing.

The increasing number of foreigners in California necessitates the opening of work among new nationalities.

C. W. BRINSTAD,

San Francisco.

Southern California

THE Baptists of Southern California have rounded out a year of intense activity and of delightful harmony. Marked progress is evident in almost every department of endeavor.

The meeting of the convention at Santa Barbara in May reached the high-water mark of enthusiasm and attendance. The associations, held in the fall, recorded a like degree of spiritual power and achievement.

The ministers' retreat and prayer conference in September was attended by 90 per cent of our active pastors and general workers. Through this conference an earnest prayer spirit was projected into the churches. The number of baptisms has been surpassed but once since the organization of the convention, and that was in 1921.

Stewardship and evangelism have been treated together with fine results. Offerings for beneficence have exceeded those for current expenses, not counting expenditures for church buildings.

The church has burdens just as individuals have, and someone must carry them. If the spirit of fair play prevailed, every individual today would be a bearer in part of the church's burden.—Minneapolis Journal.

There has been an increasing interest in all forms of Christian education. Church schools, schools of missions and vacation Bible schools have been largely attended. The University of Redlands has a greater attendance than ever before, rendering the erection of new buildings a pressing necessity. Several additional professors have been added to the faculty, among them Dr. Seldon W. Cummings, who has been called to the chair of the English Bible and missions. Special attention and emphasis are given to these subjects.

The outlook for the year 1923 is encouraging and hopeful. Our pressing needs are principally caused by the influx into Southern California from all parts of the world. Practically every nation is represented. This continues to intensify the problem of our New Americans. The Negroes have come in upon us like a flood. Unless evangelized, they form a menace.

Our cities are growing at an unheard of rate and our country places are filling up almost as rapidly. So far it has been quite impossible to keep pace with these developments by the establishment of missions, schools and churches.

The unusual present opportunity of laying adequate foundations will speedily pass. As conditions become more static, what larger resources would render possible today will be impossible tomorrow. Our Baptist church builders are convinced that if Southern California fails in foundation work today, the entire denomination will feel the loss tomorrow.

W. F. HARPER,

Los Angeles.

Colorado

AMONG the outstanding achievements of the past year, we might emphasize the following:

Three thousand new members received into Baptist churches, which number is larger than the entire membership of churches in the state for the first ten years of Baptist activities in Colorado.

The organization of about sixteen new churches and twenty Sunday schools.

Our greatest single achievement was the getting together of all the various groups within the denomination during the annual meeting of the state convention at Colorado Springs in October, when a statement on belief was drawn up and unanimously passed. This gives us a unified front in the unity of endeavor and our people are closer together than ever before.

We had something like $300,000 underwritten during the year for new church buildings.

The outlook for 1923 is most encouraging. Our people have paid in the New World Movement pledges an amount equivalent to a like period last year, and we have every reason to hope for the best year of the five-year period so far in the matter of payments on pledges.

Present indications point to the largest ingathering of new converts in the history of our work in the state.

We are to publish the history of the first fifty years of Baptist work in Colorado.

Our most pressing needs are for parsonages and church edifices. The completion of our campaign for stewardship of life and possessions. To get back of Colorado Woman's College with all the man power and resources within the denomination.

F. R. PALMER.

Connecticut

IT'S a good deal of an achievement for a state convention to get along and keep its work going just now. We have been determined not to drop any of our missionary operations among the New Americans or our aid to the feeble churches; but it means an accumulation of debts that is becoming increasingly hard to carry.

Perhaps the event which means most to us in the state is the launching of a new state paper, the Connecticut Baptist. Our aim will be to reach every family in the state with its messages of instruction and inspiration. Of course, we are not trying to take the place of THE BAPTIST, but to supplement the work THE BAPTIST is doing in our families.

A. B. COATS.

Hartford.

Delaware

DURING the past year the activities of the churches in Delaware have not been very great. Nor has a great deal of advancement been made. The churches are going along in a slow, steady way, some additions having been added to our rolls.

The outlook for 1923 is very bright. Two good ministers have been added to our ranks. Rev. A. F. Williamson is now pastor of the Bethany Church of Wilmington. Dr. Williamson is well known having been in evangelistic work for the past five years. His greatest work was when he was pastor of the Belmont Avenue Church, Philadelphia, where he served for twenty years, building the present church edifice. Dr. Williamson is using his evangelistic experience in the building up of Bethany Church which is located in a foreign settlement of the city. Rev. Charles A. Walker has accepted the pastorate at Dover. Dr. Walker is well known to the Baptists of the United States, having been secretary of the Pennsylvania State Convention for many years and also secretary of the Northern Baptist Convention. With these pastors on the field all the churches of our state are supplied and our outlook this year is very bright. The greatest need of our state seems to be and should be along evangelistic lines in the saving of souls. The second annual institute of the Baptist churches of Delaware was held Dec. 10-13. The institute is a great help to the Baptists of Delaware, bringing us in closer touch with each other. In all we are looking for a great year.

GEO. F. IRWIN.

Wilmington.

District of Columbia

DISTRICT of Columbia Baptists have taken a step forward this past year in the establishment of headquarters for all the denominational interests. Dr. W. H. O. Millington, formerly of Brookland Church, this city, has been installed as executive secretary.

The outlook for 1923 is most encouraging. All of the twenty-three churches have pastors. There is the utmost harmony prevailing and an earnest desire on the part of pastors and people alike to make the year count for the very most. The coming year will probably see the completion of the commanding new edifice that will be the National Baptist Memorial, where Pastor G. G. Johnson and Immanuel Church worship. Calvary Church expects to begin the erection of its new building this year.

Doubtless many District Baptists would say that the most pressing need is to regain control of George Washington University and make of it a great Baptist university. There is an ardent hope that this may be accomplished. Other religious bodies, notably the Catholics and Episcopalians, are centering their efforts here in Washington in the endeavor to establish enduring institutions. Baptists cannot afford to lag.

W. S. ABERNETHY.

Washington.

Idaho

THE greatest achievement of the past year has been the putting on of a stewardship campaign in practically every church in the state. This campaign is being followed by the organization of tithers' leagues in the churches. The Shoshone Church has signed up 91 per cent of its members as tithers, the Buhl Church 76 per cent and the Knull Church 53 per cent. In many of the other churches the number of tithers ranges from 25 to 50 per cent of the membership.

An every member canvass for New World Movement funds, conducted recently, showed that Idaho Baptists are going to back up the New World Movement to the full extent of their ability. There has been a marked improvement in New World Movement receipts since the canvass.

Results of evangelistic efforts, although not as large as a year ago, are very encouraging. Many of our churches have been pastorless for several months and such fields are not ready for a time of harvest.

The National Convention

THE National Baptist Convention of America, representing 3,116,325 members of Negro Baptist churches of America met in St. Louis, Mo., Dec. 6-11, 1922.

1945 messengers were present. The convention elected Dr. L. K. Williams, pastor of Olivet Baptist Church, Chicago, president of the convention to succeed Dr. E. C. Morris who died last September. Dr. Morris had served the convention as president for twenty-eight years. Dr. W. M. Taylor of Louisiana was elected vice-president-at-large. All other officers were re-elected. The next session of the convention goes to Los Angeles, Calif., next September.

MRS. E. B. BOHANNON.

Chicago.

Our summer assembly proved to be the best yet held in this state.

The outlook for 1923 is encouraging. Adjustments in our budget will enable us to care for all of our work in a fairly satisfactory manner. Plans already in operation will insure a healthy development in every department of our work.

We need men and money. Several good pastors who are not afraid of hard work are needed at once. $25,000 is needed to aid churches in erecting adequate buildings. There should be a 25 per cent increase in our budget to enable us to care for our present work more efficiently and to make it possible for us to enter new fields.

W. A. SHANKS.

Illinois

NEW church edifice enterprises mark the outstanding achievement of the past year. During the year there have been twenty buildings either dedicated or which are now in the process of construction, or for which canvasses for funds for erection have been completed. The combined value of these improvements is estimated at $1,730,000. Of these twenty churches only eight have received any assistance from any society in the way of a gift or loan. Several of these structures are special educational plants, and in every case provision for this phase of religious activity has been made in a marked degree. It is commonly recognized that the two potent forces which have contributed to this great achievement are the New World Movement and the ever-growing recognition of the importance of religious education. Out of these churches sixteen are located in the Chicago Association.

Gifts for the New World Movement, while less than a year ago, were two and one-half times as great as for 1920. Contributions for current expenses were $1,218,038 as against $1,281,203 in 1921 and $990,859 in 1920. Baptisms reported during the past year number 4,647 as against 4,789 in 1921, and 3948 in 1920. It will therefore be seen that the lines showing gifts for the New World Movement, current expenses and baptisms follow exactly the same curves. The above statistics refer only to the English-speaking Baptist churches in Illinois affiliated with the state convention.

Prospects are bright for 1923. Obstacles there are, but only enough to challenge and not enough to discourage.

The great need is a clear vision so that hundreds of churches that now are content with the mediocre might become conscious of their own powers and consequent responsibility to the work in their own fields as well as wider fields of Christian endeavor.

A. E. PETERSON.

Chicago.

Indiana

FROM the material point of view the most outstanding achievement of the past year was the erection and dedication of twelve new Baptist church buildings. Perhaps more important than this has been the maintenance of the spirit of co-operation and fine fellowship throughout our entire state.

The outlook for the new year is the best I have ever known it. At least ten other new buildings will be dedicated this coming year. More attention is being given to evangelism than ever before. Our people are responding to the challenge of stewardship in a remarkable manner.

There are strong indications that some good gifts are going to come to our state convention before very long.

What do we need? There are two unusual openings for a Baptist hospital in our state. We need both of them. Then we are about ready for a Baptist office building in Indianapolis for our headquarters. This will come one of these days. Our most pressing need is for a better educational campaign that will enlist the entire membership of every church. This cannot be done in a hurry nor by district conferences. Then next to this we need a better trained ministry. Without competent leadership we cannot go forward as we might.

CARLOS M. DINSMORE.

Iowa

AMONG the outstanding achievements of 1922 may be mentioned the completion and the dedication of the first unit of a splendid church plant in the city of Dubuque; the completion and dedication of a magnificent student center at Iowa City.

What is the outlook for 1923? I wish to say that the sky is a bit cloudy. The sun does break through occasionally. On the whole, however, the outlook is encouraging.

What are the most pressing needs? This I may answer in one word, namely—MONEY.

G. P. MITCHELL.

Des Moines.

Kansas

THE year has been one of steady general advance in Baptist affairs. The three outstanding achievements may be mentioned as follows: First, the missionary work of the state convention resulted in baptisms and additions at least 20 per cent greater than any preceding year in our history; second, the Kansas City Baptist Theological Seminary purchased a new and attractive site in a more suitable section of the city; third, the Jubilee campaign for Ottawa University, started before the New World Movement was launched, matured September 30, 1922, bringing all told nearly one-half million to the endowment and equipment.

The outlook for 1923 is hopeful. A growing spirit of harmony has been manifest during past months and we anticipate enlargement of united efforts for the future.

Our more pressing needs may be expressed as follows: A spiritual revival, bringing us to higher standards of Christian living; a better stewardship of money with its increased investments for local tasks and world missions; an era of building, that will provide adequate equipment for at least 100 of our churches.

J. T. CRAWFORD.

Topeka.

Maine

OF OUR 400 churches 200 win a real victory when they "hold the fort," for here is a background of diminishing industrial prosperity in rural communities and a consequent lessening of population.

As signs of progress during the past year we note, (a) 1252 additions by baptism; (b) net gain in church membership, 74; (c) marked increase in Sunday-school efficiency with a gain in membership of nearly 2,000; (d) definite gains in French and Russian work; (e) a community church house erected and dedicated at Glenwood Square, a suburb of Portland and a Sunday school of 100 gathered; (f) promotional meetings held in nearly all associations and a large number of local churches, including some of the smaller churches. These meetings have been of great significance. (g) There has been a fine spirit of "team work" on the part of pastors and convention workers.

The outlook for 1923 is much the same as in previous years. Maine continues to be a seed plot and our primary task is to cultivate it in evangelistic, educational and missionary ways. The financial outlook is not as bright as we could wish.

Our greatest need is that of men well-equipped in body, mind and heart, with an appreciation of rural life and a passion for service in rural communities, with enough heroism in their bones to endure hardness as good soldiers, and incidentally enjoy the fat of the land.

IRVING B. MOWER.

Waterville.

Massachusetts

AMONG our achievements are: The merger of an English-speaking and a Swedish-speaking church in Quincy, our first bi-lingual church in the state. Harmonious arrangements have been made by which some services will be conducted in Swedish and some in English.

Rapid growth in numbers and influence of several of our suburban churches.

A large number of baptisms in the French, Italian, Portuguese, Russian and other missions to the New Americans.

A notable increase in the number of daily vacation Bible schools. A larger attendance and increased efficiency in all State anniversaries marked by record attendance and unprecedented interest.

Great advance in religious education and missionary education. An enrolment of 848 at Ocean Park School of Methods.

The outlook was never so bright. Personal service is increasingly in evidence. Religious education, missionary education, evangelism and all-around stewardship are making forward strides in a big unified state-wide program.

Many rural churches are putting on a larger program of activities. Missions to the New Americans are coming to a larger measure of self-support.

Our needs are: Buildings for several rapidly growing suburban churches in order that they may adequately serve the new communities.

Suitable housing and equipment for three Italian missions and enlargement of one Portuguese chapel.

A trained Italian woman missionary to serve in several fields. Three colporters for work among the French, Italian and Portuguese people.

Three automobiles for widely scattered but combined rural parishes.

HUGH A. HEATH.

REVITALIZATION of long decadent fields in several instances; the purchase or building of parsonages on a large number of fields thus assuring the services of a minister; the construction of several fine houses of worship in our cities, Fountain Street, Grand Rapids, being the largest and most complete—these are the outstanding achievements of the past year.

Also the adoption of a definite program of organization and training in the field of religious education.

The marvelous growth of foreign-speaking work under the work of the Detroit Baptist Union.

Unless there can come a greater spirit of Christian tolerance in minor matters there will be a further lack of cooperation and the kingdom of God will suffer greatly in 1923. Our outlook, however, is bright because of the vision of the growing leadership among our youth.

Our greatest need is more trained leadership—and when trained, a spirit of service that counts not the cost. Give us a Baptist Bible school that takes the place of our Christian alliance and dispensational institutions now flooding our smaller fields with inadequate leadership out of touch with Baptist thought.

GRANT M. HUDSON.

Minnesota

AMONG the outstanding achievements during the past year, may be mentioned the state-wide cooperation which has carried the work of all departments on without serious interruption in spite of the unexpected death, Aug. 17, of Dr. E. R. Pope, who for twenty-nine years had been our executive secretary and leader; the practical completion of the splendid addition to the great First Church building, Minneapolis; the dedication without debt of the fine new $85,000 home of the Fourth Church, Minneapolis; the opening of the wonderfully equipped University Church Building, Minneapolis, for student and community work; new building on the Assembly grounds and at Littlefork; the state-wide organization of young people as a department of the state convention; the enlistment of an increased number of lay members in the active work of the convention; an unusually large and helpful annual meeting; the doubling of our State Life Service League; organization of the Northwestern Baptist Hospital Association; notable advance by the St. Paul and Minneapolis Baptist Unions and progress by Swedish and Dane-Norwegian Conferences; organization of several new churches; and best of all, a larger number of decisions for Christ throughout the state than for several years past.

The outlook for 1923 is hopeful. The better understanding of Christian stewardship, the larger vision of our opportunities, the increasing consecration of our people we believe will enable Minnesota to do her part for state and world-wide missions, in spite of the financial depression which is felt particularly in the rural sections. The new interest in disciple winning which is manifested gives promise of larger evangelistic victories. The increasing concern occasioned by the critical condition our missionary organizations, national and state, are facing will, without question, result in a more earnest and general support of our denominational missionary and benevolence program.

Our most pressing needs are: 1. A re-baptism with the Spirit of God that shall endue us with power and send us unitedly forth to overcome the greatest obstacles Minnesota Baptists have ever had the opportunity of facing.

2. A large number of volunteer laymen and ministers whose own hearts have been fired to carry the new enthusiasm to the last member of the last Baptist church in our state.

3. Consecrated money which will enable us to employ more field workers, pay our large convention debts, strengthen weak churches, reopen Baptist work at Northfield, purchase a building for the Bohemian mission and finish the building at Laporte, proceed with the summer assembly improvements, and, above all, raise our quota for the world-wide task.

E. H. RASMUSSEN.

Minneapolis.

Montana

THE greatest achievements of the year were: (1) The successful launching of a summer assembly with 128 registered for attendance. The first 100 registered traveled 25,000 miles to be present. There were thirty volunteers present for life service. The assembly was financially self-sustaining; (2) the erection at Billings of the first unit of a new church which when completed will be the largest and best-equipped plant in the state of any denomination for religious and social activities; (3) organizing of a Crow Indian Baptist Association composed wholly of Indian churches; and (4) the work of our district missionaries and colporters on the most isolated frontier fields.

The outlook for 1923 is not one to create easy-going optimism. Montana has not recovered from the economic disasters of the recent years. Nothing short of absolute devotion by our workers and people can bring large harvests to the Master. Yet our leaders believe 1923 will witness an increase in our population as a state and increased and bettered business conditions.

Our most pressing needs from a material view are: (1) Means to secure equipment in edifices and parsonages for our churches not now adequately supplied; (2) permanent grounds and equipment for the summer assembly; and (3) adequate aid from the state and national agencies to maintain and increase our missionary force. We also need, from a spiritual view, two student pastors for two state university cities; and some method and means of getting Baptist young people out of our state to Baptist schools for training.

G. CLIFFORD CRESS.

Lewistown.

Nebraska

NO STATE has felt the post-war readjustment more than Nebraska, being an agricultural state. Yet Baptists have made good progress.

Nebraska has been in the first rank in payments to the New World Movement. A state-wide church building program is under way, for which there is great need, as many churches still use the buildings of pioneer days. Arnold is completing the best rural work plant in the state. Wilsonville is building a gymnasium and community house. Rev. F. W. Benjamin is the leader in this rural work. In Omaha seven of the ten white churches, and six of the eight Negro churches are either building or enlarging, with a total budget of $600,000.

Grand Island College, John Mason Wells, president, has had a good increase in students, has improved the plant, and is in better financial condition.

The first summer assembly, at Grand Island under the leadership of Rev. J. D. Collins, was a great success, 200 registering, and many more attending.

Work among state university students, under Dr. C. J. Pope, university pastor, grows in effectiveness. We now have a fine plant, the best in the city.

The outlook is most hopeful.

Our first need is a state secretary able to carry on the remarkable work of Dr. W. I. Fowle, now leaving us. We need more up-to-date church plants; more

My Prayer

By CAROLINE GRAYSON

MAY our hearts be filled, our Father,
With the power of love divine;
May the sunshine of thy presence
Flood our souls with joy sublime.
May we show to those about us
All the richness of thy grace,
May we point them to our Master,
Reveal the beauty of his face.
May they see the gentle patience,
Sympathy and tenderest love;
As they feel thy gracious sweetness,
At thy bidding may they move.
Fill us, O our Father, fill us
With the fulness of thy love,
Till we must show forth the spirit
Of our Saviour from above.
May there be no thought, our Father,
But to do our Master's will;
May we daily grow in likeness,
All his purposes fulfill.
Oh our Father, draw us closer,
Closer to thy loving heart;
For we would not, heavenly Father,
From thy ways e're more depart.

Nevada-Sierra Convention

WE HAVE had a greater number of baptisms the past year than ever before and more pastors have stayed on the field. It certainly is a continued service that spells success. More plans for advanced work are partly realized already. The young people sent a delegate to St. Paul; for the first time we have had a representative at our national meeting. An association has been lately organized to be known as Modoc-Lassen Association of the Nevada-Sierra Baptist Convention. Its purpose is to put a district missionary in that part of the field and the work seems to be more of a constructive nature than ever before.

We are an optimistic people. When folks laugh at us living in a desert and a place of barren sunshine we cannot always see a way out but can always see the way up. When a boy I thought Kansas was about the worst place in all the United States and today we are going through that stage. Our convention field has lots of good land and plenty of water for it but it takes money for development which is sure to come. Some districts are already blooming like a rose and surveys are made and ditches dug for new projects. Reservoirs are planned and the coming year is to be a busy one for us if we keep up with the march. We are determined to do it, and the pastors are cooperating in reaching new districts.

We have a few strategic points that are imperative for work to be done, aside from the many smaller places where is a crying need. I think I can say without any contradiction that we have no overlapping; in fact the whole of our field is underchurched—towns of 2500 with one small Protestant work and others with as many as 600 with no work of any kind. I have farming districts wanting me to come and hold meetings. In one place, such as I referred to, I persuaded a good brother to go and hold a few meetings and on the third night it stormed and he closed. A number of men not professing our Lord came up and with tears in their eyes begged him to continue. Another good brother wrote me asking that something be done, for, he said, "Not many boys and girls here ever saw a preacher and we are hungry for the gospel ourselves as we have been here for about a year and have not had a religious service." To name THE pressing need is indeed difficult as it comes in on every side from the Indian as well as from the white man. "Surely, the harvest is great, pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest to send laborers."

1. Outstanding achievements: Largest number of baptisms reported, with one exception, since 1876. A remarkable response, all things considered, to the New World Movement pledges.

2. The outlook is as good as for any of the recent years.

3. Our greatest need: (a) Pastors for the rural churches. (b) More money to employ convention missionary workers.

New Jersey

NINETEEN TWENTY-TWO has been one of the most critical and eventful years in the annals of the New Jersey Convention. The death of Executive Secretary Thomas P. Holloway on March 20 was a great loss. In October Rev. J. Earle Edwards, our superintendent of promotion, resigned, having accepted the pastorate of the Winthrop Street Church of Taunton, Mass.

We have been able to keep up all general lines of work and to report progress in every department, but these changes in personnel have stood in the way of any outstanding advance work in 1922.

On Oct. 25, Rev. Chas. E. Goodall, pastor of the First Church, Roselle, N. J., was elected as executive secretary and under his leadership plans are already being matured which make the outlook for 1923 very hopeful. The time has been too brief for him to formulate any plans for publication. In the department of religious education mention should be made of the major institute planned for Newark and vicinity Jan. 28—Feb. 2; of the new summer assembly for Negroes to be held at Northern University, Rahway, and of a like assembly for the foreign-speaking pastors at the International Baptist Seminary in East Orange to be held during the coming summer as well as a number of Interdenominational major institutes in cooperation with the New Jersey Sunday School Association in various parts of the state.

Our most pressing need is the financial support necessary to carry on the work already established and to enter strategic fields now open.

CHAS. E. GOODALL.

OUR achievements: 95 per cent of churches contributing, representing in these churches 98 per cent of the state membership.

182 churches over the top; fifty-three of these paying 100 per cent on their pledges.

130 churches remitting to the director every month of the year.

Bengal-Orissa Mission

Backward Look—Achievements

1. An increase in the number of baptisms.
2. Intensive efforts in the Balasore church resulted in a substantial number of young people, several of whom were born in Hinduism, being united to the church. Among them were one Hindu boy from the Boys' Industrial School, Balasore, and one Hindu teacher in a village where there are only three Christian families. One mature Hindu man from Balasore town gave great encouragement. The increased spirit of inquiry is evidence of the weakening of belief in the gods and of the desire to find the one true God.
3. Baptisms have been frequent in the Contal field.
4. Indigenous effort. (a) The Home Mission Society of the Indian Church has organized a vigorous church at Dampara. (b) The Kharagpur Indian church has increased its expenditures and decided to become self-supporting. (c) The Indian Christian community at Jamshedpur has organized a church and is paying two-thirds of its pastor's salary. The pastor's son is in Serampore College preparing to enter the Christian ministry. The Europeans and Americans in the English church are giving enough money to support the missionary.
5. By continued personal work, Mr. Long at Midnapore, has won to Christ a high caste young man with medical training. Because of determined and subtle opposition from his own and his wife's families, the young man has not yet been baptized. He declares "Jesus is my Savior. I shall never leave him."
6. Our only outstanding achievement has been the acceptance of the 25 per cent cut in men and money without losing faith.

Forward Look—Prospect

1. Only one furlough is due.
2. With all his first year's and part of his second year's language study completed, Mr. Dunn is free to give more time to the Balasore High School.
3. With all his time free for the Boys' Industrial School, Mr. Krause will make that institution self-supporting.
4. With three families and one woman missionary at Bhimpore for our promising Santal work, the jungle is fast being cleared for a steady and far-reaching advance among this responsive primitive people.
5. With the coming of one new missionary family and one new woman missionary, the gaps can be filled and advances will be attempted.

Inward Look—Needs

1. Buildings.
 - a. $5000 for boys' hostel at Balasore high school. The health of the boys has been actually undermined by the lack of this hostel. One has died.
 - b. $15,000 for school buildings at Bhimpore. No school can thrive when classes have to meet on verandas, in sheds and under trees and the teachers have to live in stables.

c. $12,500 for workingmen's hostel at Khargpur. Young men cannot shift for themselves in this crowded industrial center without shifting away from God and into sin.

d. $12,500 for workingmen's hostel at Jamshedpur. The young men in this thriving steel center are seeking to take care of themselves. They have organized a Y. M. C. A. and conduct two Bible classes in different sections of the city. This effort to organize and grow, must be housed or it will forever be handicapped. We must care for these fine young fellows or lose them.

2. Men.

a. One man for the south end of the Balasore field, where there are three outstations very far apart and only one church for 600,000 people.

b. One man for intensive, constructive evangelistic work among the 35,000 Indians at Kharagpur.

c. One man for evangelistic work among 33,000 people in Midnapore including 800 students, and among the 1,000,000 people in the surrounding districts. We must either capture or abandon this sector of the firing line.

d. With the coming in of new men to operate the Tata Company's Greater Extension Plant, with seventy Welchmen arrived and arriving to open up the new Tin Plate Mill, one of the subsidiaries, and with the Bengal-Nagpur Railway planning to bring to this center seventy engineers, seventy firemen, seventy brakemen to care for the increased freight traffic, nothing is sufficient to find out what the need here is save a mind that is turned toward God and that is willing to be guided by his spirit.

Bengal-Orissa has yet to see what God can do with a life completely consecrated and yielded to his service. Pray that this year may bring us our Judson, not from America but from the ranks of our Indian people.

Telugu Mission, South India

AMONG the greatest blessings that came to our mission during last year one came through what seemed would be the greatest disaster. When the news came that, on account of lack of funds, a cut of 20 per cent in expenditures for mission work was necessary, it spread consternation throughout our fields. Nearly all the missionaries were working on close margins. Where should they reduce expenditure? Should preachers, teachers or school children be dismissed? Must repairs be left undone, or touring be stopped? Should the reduction be made in all departments or should some department be abandoned? The crisis soon became known to all of the mission workers. A few began to seek employment in other missions or in the government. A few came forward and volunteered to take smaller salaries. The great majority, however, waited stoically for the missionary to decide their financial fate. Puzzled to know what to do, the missionary, in many places, called together his fellow-workers among the Telugus and asked their counsel. Their suggestions showed the spirit of self-sacrifice and faith. The account of the meetings in Kanigiri and Nalgonda made one think a revival had come. Mission workers agreed to relinquish certain items of mission aid and lay more on their fellow countrymen. Parents agreed to pay more for the education of their children. Medicines, instead of being given for little or nothing, were to be paid for. Churches which had been subsidized agreed to drop the subsidy and entirely support their pastors. With less effort than any of us thought possible, provisions were made in several fields to meet all or nearly all of the cut in funds. In some schools, notwithstanding enhanced fees, more students came than before. In mission boarding schools backward pupils were weeded out. This wakened some of the lazy bright ones and the energetic dull ones. The net result was improved schools.

The increase in the number of baptisms reported from many fields leads us to hope that, when all reports are in, this will be one of our best years. Probably much of this is due, directly or indirectly, to the special evangelistic campaigns carried out for about two weeks of each year in nearly all of the fields. This has come to be a feature of our mission. While the foreign missionary does not join in these campaigns, and does not pay their expenses, he usually instructs the leaders and helps them plan the campaign. Village Christians are led to join in the campaign and give their testimony as to the change God has wrought in their lives. This year, as last year, Narsaravupet and Nalgonda lead all others in the reported results.

More and Better Students

In the Theological Seminary at Ramapatnam and in the Women's Bible School in Nellore there are more and better students than for some time. In the face of probable further reduction in foreign support and the consequent need of more self-support, this increase is very encouraging. The increase in secular schools might be accounted for by the enticing offers in government service and the fact that Christians are given more chances than formerly. While we wish more of our better educated men and women would enter religious service, we are gratified that some of them who go into government or other secular service are bearing excellent testimony for their Master. Recently one of our Christian young men who held a good position as teacher in a government school was asked by the chief government officers in his own taluq (county) to become private tutor for their children. He is a convert from the outcastes and most of those officers are Brahmins. They know he is clean, upright and moral, a consistent Christian, so they preferred him to one of their own caste.

None must get the impression that all of our Telugu Christians are ideal. While the past year has brought more than usual fruit in souls saved and others developed, there has been an unusual number of our leaders who have fallen into one sin or another and have been dismissed from the church and the mission service. Some of these have held the highest positions for many years. If we had not learned it before, we now know that a good education is not sufficient to keep one pure and upright. We are glad though to see signs of higher standards being held by our Telugu churches. Still we are far from our goal.

Special gifts from individual friends have made possible the building of a student's hostel in Madras and the much needed Women's Bible School in Nellore. These will probably be finished within the next few months. Similar gifts have made funds available for building the hospital in Mahabubnagar, the training institute in Hanumakonda and a few other smaller structures, but various difficulties have prevented erecting them. In quite a number of stations there is need of further equipment of many kinds, but the funds are not forthcoming. The missionaries of those stations either cannot or will not appeal to their friends for special gifts. Perhaps, though, these needs are intended to drive us to seek more earnestly the Lord's sanction. He has funds available for all he approves. The $100,000 (this does not include the removal of the Theological Seminary to Begwada, which some of our missionaries disapprove and which the last Telugu Baptist convention voted against) needed to meet all of the listed property plans of our Telugu missionaries, he can easily find.

Old missionaries, experienced in the work and knowing the language, and a few new missionaries have come to us during the year. These have taken charge of some of the vacant stations. But there are still several to be filled. W. S. Davis, F. W. Stait, T. V. Witter and C. R. Marsh each have charge of two fields and E. E. Sillemen has charge of three. The total population in the eleven fields held by these men is 2,301,000 (two million, three hundred and one thousand)! Next year Nalgonda, Suriapet and Sattenapalle missionaries are due to go on furlough. Who will take their places? If new missionaries are given charge before they get a good start in the language, it usually results in their never getting it. We hope that all of our missionaries on furlough who know the language and have the necessary health may be returned as quickly as possible after their furlough.

The Telugu Baptist Home Mission Society last year placed Rev. P. Abraham in Kandukuru as resident missionary. He reports the best year yet in baptisms, contributions and schools. The criticism most often heard is the same as that heard against us foreign missionaries—that the work is supported almost entirely by funds from outside and the local Christians do little. We are hoping that Brother Abraham, as he lives among them will be able to bring about the development of the local field. He is loved and trusted by those who know him.

A large and undeveloped part of the Deccan which has been within our borders for a long time, was given to the American Menonite Brethren Mission during the past year. Unless we can send worthy forces into other sections which have been left for our mission to evangelize, we ought to give them also either to this Menonite mission or to some other mission which will work with us in as close fellowship in doctrine and practice.

Above all other needs mentioned in letters from the missionaries, is the need of the Holy Spirit to fill and empower missionaries and Telugu Christians to bear testimony of the Saviour to every individual in this land. No amount of money or equipment can take the place of this great essential. God forbid that we trust in less than him!

East China

THE outstanding advance in the mission is the taking over of responsibility of one of our main stations, Kinkwa, by the Chinese. Kinkwa is the best manned station, as far as well qualified and well trained Chinese are concerned, in the mission and we have no doubt but that they are making a success of this work. This of course is the beginning of their taking over all the work. It may be another generation before they will do it and it may be two generations before they will be able to assume the whole financial support, but it is surely coming and that is one of the reasons that we came to China—to raise up a Christian church that could manage its own affairs and finance them as well.

The Time to Act

O GOD, when the heart is warmest,
And the head is clearest,
Give me to act,
To turn the purposes thou formest
Into fact.
O God, when what is dearest
Seems most dear,
And the path before lies straight,
With neither Chance nor Fate
In my career—
Then let me act. The wicket gate
In sight, let me not wait, not wait!
—John Jay Chapman.

In Shanghai College a Chinese, Mr. Z. Y. Loh, has become principal of the academy attached to the college. Mr. Vaen was also acting principal of the Ningpo Academy. The graduates of Shanghai College are assuming greater responsibilities for Christian work in South China, East China and other parts of the field.

The outlook for 1923 at the college is far beyond our fondest hopes of a few years ago. After not quite four years of our five-year program we have already passed the whole five-year program in many ways. We now have for this year 130 freshmen with 260 college students and a total of 560 students in the whole institution. The college has eight large buildings either finished or under construction.

The spiritual outlook for 1923 is better than it has ever been in the history of the college. There is a larger proportion of Christian students and a greater determination on the part of the faculty and students, with God's help, to make this year the best in the real work of the institution: the spiritual work, bringing souls to Christ and training those who are already Christians.

The chief needs both in the mission and at the college are for funds to employ well-qualified Chinese whom we have already trained. As far as plant is concerned, the chief need in the college is for an adequate chapel and a library. Our chapel seats 400 and our student body numbers 560. We need a chapel that will seat 1500. When we secure a chapel and a library building we shall have a fairly complete plant except that we shall need more dormitories to take care of future growth. A new academy dormitory which is just being built will be overflowing as soon as it is opened. The fact is that we have more students now than we can accommodate with the new building. We ought to have another college dormitory at once.

South China Mission

THERE can be no question that the National Christian Conference held in Shanghai May 2-11 constitutes the greatest event of 1922. This conference, for good or ill, affects the whole Christian movement in China. Although comparatively few Chinese went from Swatow, the few who went were greatly impressed and from newspaper and other reports the multitudes are getting new ideas regarding Chinese responsibility and an indigenous church.

Achievements on our immediate field are the large amounts given to Christian education by non-Christian men, making possible the new administration building for the Swatow Academy, and the enlargement of school grounds at Chaoyang. Also, at Ungkung an addition costing $1300 has been made to the hospital plant, and funds for this came entirely from Chinese sources. At Chaoyang, $8500 was given for school and hospital, and only the typhoon prevented the completion of the dispensary during the year.

We are still looking into the future over and through the ruin wrought by the typhoon and tidal wave of August 2. Almost in a single hour of the night 50,000 souls perished! Whole villages were left without a single house standing. The water went over the tops of the houses and had these not crumbled before the onslaught, thousands of those who escaped on broken pieces of houses would have been drowned. Whole families were wiped out! Chapels and school buildings are down. Many of our Christians were drowned or crushed and many more are ruined financially! Practically all the members of one church were drowned and their building lies a heap of ruins! What was the work of years, in some cases, seems to have been wiped out almost in a moment!

God reigns and our hope is in him. Utterly dazed for a time, missionaries and their converts could think of little except the catastrophe that had overtaken them, but courage and hope have returned. Chapels are being repaired and rebuilt. Losses are being accepted as a part of the game to be borne without dismay when they come. A great wave of brotherly kindness has swept over the land and relief has poured in from every quarter. Missionaries have the opportunity of a lifetime really to serve the people. The outlook for 1923 is really brightened by our disaster.

Spiritual power is the great need. Men, money and equipment even if unlimited could never make an opportunity or meet it when it comes. God's power is fundamental and never more needed than now. More missionaries and more Chinese leaders needed? Yes, but even more there is needed the endowment with power of those whom God has already called to service.

European Countries

Esthonia

THE past year will be one that will shine out through the coming years in the Esthonian Baptist history as such as we have not seen before. The church of God passed through the awful world war, in which the Greek Orthodox Church showed the last diabolical power, banishing our pastors to Siberia or other isolated places, shutting up our churches, changing them into barracks where the soldiers lodged. My own was for some time a barracks, then it was turned into a Russian Orthodox Church. Then came the bolshevik terrorizing rule and German invasion with its ironic laws and fine robbery. When all this was over we were poor in every respect. Then came your help and that of the English Baptist brethren. This gave us a fresh start and courage. Our brethren worked with great energy. During the week of prayer the Lord gave us a revival such as we had not seen for a long time. On the other hand the Lutheran pastors in their congress in Dorpat (university town) denied the divinity of Christ and his resurrection. The people became dissatisfied with simply words and filled our churches and sent their children to our Sunday school begging us to take and teach them.

Full Religious Freedom

Our government granted us full religious freedom and distribution of Christian literature such as our land had not seen before. Through such privileges we preached the gospel and many souls have been saved and some 1,000 have been baptized. Prison doors are opened and I go whenever I can with singing choirs and preach the gospel, and souls are saved in prisons.

Sunday schools have increased in number and so have the Sunday-school children. Sinners seek salvation and saints are refreshed.

Our outlook for 1923 is to use the opportunity that God has given and we will use all our time, strength and talents to bring the great salvation to those far and near, rich and poor. The Baptists in Esthonia are very earnest. We have none as far as I know who is a Bible critic, but we all are criticized by the Good Book. Not one of our church members drinks or smokes. We have not asked any one not to do so, but they don't do it.

Our chief needs are: Your prayers for us and for you to continue in the relief work as you have done these two years. The Lord bless you and the English brethren! We have so many poor pastors that need help. So many churches are in the process of building and there is no money to bring them to completion. In Ival, our capital town, we need a church where larger meetings could be held. The brethren took a collection and we got 70,000 Esthonian marks. We have a suitable place to erect the house but we need at least $3,000. Several churches are in debt and cannot pay. The Germans who were once, and not long ago, proud and careless about God as were the Russians, are now seeking after God. But we have none who could give his time or this work. As they are now seeking after God, fugitives come from Russia like skeletons and all turn to us, as they now Baptists have a heart for each one in need. How often we have to send them away with a gift that does not satisfy even the giver, far less the poor creature.

We need a printing machine to print our own literature as we have none.

Our greatest need is at present a high school near our seminary as our schools are all without God and his precious Word. In one sense it is good that the Lutherans gave religious lessons to the children in gymnasiums, but their teaching was the denial of the divinity of Christ. If we could erect a house, the government would pay for our own teachers and the pupils would help to keep the house going, but we have not the money.

So these are our needs and they are only a few that I have mentioned. I could exclaim with the preacher "that which is wanting cannot be numbered" (Eccl. 1:15). But our Saviour knows our needs and perhaps he will still use some of our brethren to help their younger brethren to stand on their feet and walk.

Many, many thanks for THE BAPTIST which we receive so regularly. Many thanks for the help you have given us before.

Kegel, Esthonia.

ADAM PODIN.

Denmark

A ONE hundred thousand kronen campaign, begun late in 1921 for a new Baptist academy, was completed early in the year. The result was 114,000 kronen. Our training school for preachers, which four years ago was reestablished, turned out this fall its first graduates, five young brethren who have been added to our working force. Statistics, I cannot give now, but I know the good tidings have been freely preached and a goodly number, especially of young converts, have been baptized and added to the churches.

Financially conditions will no doubt be difficult in the coming year, but on the spiritual side the outlook is certainly promising.

There are several chief needs, but I almost think they might be summed up in one: More Baptists, at least another 5,000 Danish Baptists added to the present 5,000! That would mean everything for our literary work, much for our educational work, and it would lessen some people's prejudice against us.

Baptist Work In Poland

Achievement of the Past Year

UP TO the great war in Poland neither in Russia or in Germany has there been a single Polish Baptist church. The Poles, when some of them were converted, were permitted to unite with German Baptist churches; except the state churches, Roman Catholic, Lutheran and Reformed, no other church organization was permitted for the Poles.

After the fall of Russia and Germany together with the freedom of the Polish nation, native Poles connected with the German Baptist churches began to move for their own organization. The past year was a history-making year for us. Division between the Polish and the German work was made. Organization of the work, which we began to plan for in 1921, was in 1922 satisfactorily accomplished for both the German speaking and the native Baptists. A Polish conference was organized embracing fourteen churches and ninety-seven preaching stations. Sixteen ordained ministers and thirty-eight unordained workers are preaching the gospel. There are 1476 members in this conference of whom 487 were baptized in 1922.

Besides the Polish conference, which is entirely under Baptist leadership, there are other two Slavic factions, Baptist in principle—those under the command of Pastor Fetler, and Evangelical Christian. Both of these bodies are mostly Russians. I was not able to get statistics from these, but I know that they have baptized over 500 converts in the past year. A committee has been chosen by the interested parties to make plans for uniting the brethren into one organization.

Up to the present time the Baptists here have been without the right of corporation. We organized the Baptist Union of Poland, and we are waiting that the approval of the corporation right will be granted to us very soon.

The German speaking Baptists in Poland have reported this year thirty-one organized churches, 130 preaching stations, 106 unordained workers and 680 baptisms.

Organized Bible Classes

During the summer we have organized Bible courses for untrained preachers and colporter missionaries. Eighteen missionaries were instructed for four months in the wisdom of how to lead their fellowmen to Christ. We are indebted to the A. B. F. M. S. for making it financially possible to institute this needed training.

The most promising Baptist institution in Poland at present is the Baptist publication house, incorporated as a private corporation, but the agreement of the shareholders excludes all private interest. All the income is going to missionary enterprises. We have enlisted in this work very able, well-to-do business men. The property which has been secured and money invested in machinery, and the success of past years give us confidence that our publication house will be a worthy instrument in our Master's work. By the aid of A. B. F. M. S. we have been able to publish a number of tracts, and four periodicals in three languages.

The past two years the Baptist World Alliance has helped the war victims of Poland. In the year before us the work will be continued in the regions where the country is not yet rebuilt. But at the same time we look for some financial self-supporting plan, which should be set to work in 1923, instructing the people how to give systematically.

The Baptist nurses (Tabitha Organization) have done acceptable work for the poor sick. The W. A. B. F. M. S. is helping in this work. We hope to secure a hospital with all surgical equipment. We believe the American women will share in this work. Our nurses must have their own hospital to be able to get good training for the twofold service, healing of body and winning the soul for Christ. The center of this work of mercy must be Lodz. It is the second large city in Poland, the largest textile industry center in eastern Europe and a strong Baptist center.

The needs among our people have begun to disappear. The appeal for help to the starving in Russia has already moved the Polish churches, who received help to generous offering, and over eight million Polish marks (averaging about 6,000 to one dollar) have been collected by the Polish believers for the starving brothers.

The generous help which we received from America is giving us an objective for instructing the people how to give, and how to be the sowers of heavenly blessings. There are yet in Poland many thousand families with little ones living in caves. We must help them to get out from the ground, but in the same time we expect them to grow stronger spiritually and financially more independent and also interested in the needs of others.

We have nearly all our organizations without homes. From our fourteen Polish organized churches only four country churches, which existed before the war, have their own buildings. Of the ten organizations, which have sprung up since 1900, only three have succeeded in renting permanent rooms for meetings. Seven of the churches gather in rooms occupied by other organizations without the privilege of choosing the time for meeting.

Our chief needs are: Homes for homeless churches. More workers—we need missionaries in many places, where work is demanded by the people. A training school for missionaries must be established. Our publication society must secure some publishing funds and we must employ all our intelligence in trying to unite the believers, who are one in principles, into one strong organization, which will help us to stand against the state churches as one army, when it comes to defending the principles of freedom.

Germany

ONCE a mighty, free and flourishing country, with enormous powers of development, with ever-growing wealth and world-wide influence, Germany is now a broken wreck, a chained giant, a sick man, a burdened, panting load-bearer. Driven with heavy and cruel blows, it looks around in scarcely restrained fury and laughs bitterly at the empty phrases about humanity, freedom and right that issue from the mouths of its pitiless oppressors. The unhappy nation is long ago convinced that a "peace" can be more cruel and miserable than war, as much worse as it is to die of hunger rather than to be shot.

The last year was a year of humbling, anguish of soul and of death. Only few are the hearts that grow softer under such cruel blows; the most become hard, hard as stone. With a sneer the devil seems to be watching this process which is favored by cultured people. He knows: hungry and down-trodden men can be turned into beasts. Only a short time longer, and the Treaty of Versailles will have turned Europe into one vast desert.

We Baptists have sought, with hands uplifted in prayer and with diligent preaching of the gospel of Christ, to build up a barrier against the floods of despair. This has been hard work, but God has blessed it. We have tried to show the furious men, the weeping women and the frightened, timid children, the tender and loving face of Christ and to teach them to take punishment and hope from his hand. We illustrated our message with a reference to the sacrifice and deeds of our fellow believers in other lands. We distributed the gifts which were sent to relieve the need caused by the terrible state of our Valuta. This Christian love has made an impression. Even bitter and hard men learn to see and know the love of Christ, behind the real practical love

Porto Rico

BAPTIST work in Porto Rico was begun in November, 1898, by Rev. H. C. McCormack, who was at the same time the first evangelical to establish regular work in the island. The work was started in San Juan and Rio Piedras. Mr. McCormack met incoming missionaries of other denominations and urged from the start a division of territory, so as to avoid duplication of work and possible neglect of parts of the field. This plan of procedure early became a rule mutually agreed to by all denominations. In January, 1899, Rev. A. B. Rudd began work in Ponce. Our field developed in a general way along the military road from San Juan to Ponce; and thus this became the Baptist field of operations.

Our first church was organized in Rio Piedras in July 1899, with fifteen members, and in December of the same year the church at Ponce was organized with eighteen members. At present, September 1922, we have forty-nine organized churches with 3297 communicant members; and on the same date we have an average attendance in our Bible Schools of 4530.

We began with the street for a hall and a box for a pulpit. We now have forty-three chapels, twelve residences, and two fine school buildings, total value, $371,650. We began work counting on the churches in the homeland for its full support. At the present time three-fifths of the total for salaries for native pastors is paid by the native churches; and two churches, one city and the other country, are paying the entire salaries of their pastors. Seven country chapels were built with money raised on the field and substantial financial help was supplied by the native churches towards the construction of a number of the others. From thirteen to fifteen thousand dollars per year are contributed by the native churches for the propagation of the gospel.

In the beginning all pastors were from the homeland; now the aim is to have all churches ministered to by native pastors. We now have four men from the states in executive and educational work; and six women workers in missionary and educational work. At the same time we have twenty-four native men and six native women workers. The former are pastors, and the latter missionaries, teachers and industrial workers.

In the beginning we had no school work, and no system of training for native workers. Now we have a splendid theological seminary, well-equipped, with building facing the campus of the University of Porto Rico, for the training of our pastors. Nearly the woman's society has a beautiful building, with competent and consecrated workers, where native women workers are being trained. Besides this work we have first-grade work in several centers where the lack of school facilities is most felt; also kindergarten and industrial work in one or two of the more needy centers and one splendid day nursery. In no case is the school or industrial work an end in itself, but in every case it is simply one means to the definite end of giving the gospel to the largest possible number.

In the beginning we had no literature for the propagation of the message, except a rather small variety of tracts, not always well adapted to local needs. Now we have an evangelical paper in which some seven denominations are cooperating; but which has had a Baptist editor the greater part of its history, which twice a month reaches more than 3000 homes. This, with a fine variety of tracts furnished freely from the Bible House of Los Angeles, and such tracts in Spanish as our own Baptist Publication Society has been able to put out, enables us to reach multitudes with the printed page whom we otherwise would not be able to reach.

From small beginnings on solid foundations the work has gradually but constantly grown. There has never been deeper spirituality, a wider outlook, a greater sense of responsibility on the part of the members, or more crowded buildings, than at the present time. We have churches established in twenty-four cities and towns of the island, and twenty-five in country fields. In about one-third of these the buildings, erected a few years ago as fully adequate, are now entirely too small to accommodate the numbers who desire to attend. We ought to have at least $100,000 at once for enlargement of buildings, including one new plant where the old does not even furnish a basis for an addition. This would simply meet urgent needs of the present. In the very important university town of Rio Piedras, where we are entirely responsible for the whole evangelical work, we have a rather beautiful but entirely inadequate building. It is little better than a four-wall box; and even at that not much more than half large enough. Here we should not only furnish a good example of fully organized work to our theological students, but if we really have any care for the future of the island, if we really wish to have a self-supporting work and self-directed work we should reach the university students for Christ. We should have men and women who are trained for life's duties, trained to earn adequate salaries, brought under the influence of the gospel. We are doing well with an inadequate equipment, but $3,000 to $5,000 put into a suitable addition would give us the material equipment to organize and attract. We are getting teachers and students into the church; but if we would touch the whole island we MUST HAVE a place to invite the students where they can be taught adequately by available competent teachers. Then we crave your prayers that the right man be raised up to care for this most important field of the island.

Baptists in Brazil

SURELY Brazil must be acclaimed as a miracle of modern missions, for those who have made a survey of the fields of the world have no hesitation in giving Brazil first place as the most progressive, promising and prosperous of all. Southern Baptists made a beginning here just forty years ago, and for ten years the work was carried on by two missionary couples, who, during this period, met with small encouragement. For the past thirty years the tide of prosperity has been increasing, and has now become on-rushing. In thirty years the number of churches has gone from three to 300, besides some 800 preaching stations. In the same period the total membership has grown from 150 to 25,000, which does not include 7,000 German Baptists in the states of Rio Grande and

The Ship That Was Rushed to Russia

By WILLIAM B. LIPPARD

THE response of the denomination to the appeal to send another "Ship of Fellowship" to Europe was exceedingly gratifying. Indeed, in view of the limited time available, the response was beyond anything that had been anticipated. Had our churches contributed only one-half of what they gave in the fall of 1921 for the first "Ship of Fellowship," we would have considered the contribution unusually generous. It is, therefore, with a gratifying satisfaction that we are able to report that the total shipment for Russia amounted to 1,092 bales of miscellaneous clothing, eight bales of children's supplies and twenty-six huge cases of soap and shoes, thus making a total of 1,126. This is approximately two-thirds of what was sent a year ago.

The contents of these bales represented nearly 7,000 different packages that had come from all sections of our constituency. Every day during the period of assembling, the express wagons, trucks and mailing wagons stopped in front of the warehouse in Brooklyn and delivered a large assortment of barrels, cases, crates, boxes, bags, sacks and packages. The largest number received in one day came on Wednesday, Nov. 15, when 1,531 different pieces were delivered at the warehouse. This meant many busy days of sorting and packing, and the vast floor in the warehouse became an area of mountain peaks of bundles.

Through the courtesy of the Luckenbach Steamship Company, which graciously donated all transportation charges, the contributions from the Baptists of Southern California were transported through the Panama Canal to New York. These Baptists shipped nearly eight tons of goods with a value of more than $12,000. In response to the courtesy of the company, the Foreign Mission Board sent a special letter of appreciation. In writing of this achievement on the part of Southern California Baptists, Dr. Frederick G. Davies says, "Considering that we had only thirteen days from the time your communication reached us until our supplies were to be on the steamship dock, it is a marvel to me the way our churches have responded. I do not think I have ever known of anything being so well done in so short a time."

The contents of the thousands of packages proved to be extraordinarily interesting. There were vast quantities of garments for women, the different styles furnishing abundant evidence of changing fashions during the years. There were many excellent suits for men, hundreds of sweaters, fine silk lined cloaks, several handsome fur coats and the usual varieties of stockings, underwear and other

As these lines are being read, the relief ship "Manitowoc" is nearing her destination at Odessa, in Southern Russia. The representative of the Foreign Mission Society in Europe, Dr. W. O. Lewis, boarded the ship at Pireus and is accompanying its cargo to Russia, where, garments. There were many articles of wearing apparel which had long been out of fashion in America, such as leggings and wristlets, yet these will be of good service during the winter months in Russia.

For some reason our preachers had sent a large number of frock coats. Perhaps these may be going out of style! One of the leading preachers in the denomination, whose name is known to every reader of this paper, told the writer that his tailor had supplied him with a new cut-away suit, which he now wore in his pulpit. He had therefore sent to our warehouse his Prince Albert frock coat for use in Russia. Possibly this will be worn by in cooperation with the American Relief Administration and Baptist Relief Committees, he will arrange for the distribution. Soon there will be multitudes of men walking the streets in Russia clad in coats and overcoats from America. Multitudes of Russian children will play in the snow, dressed in the sweaters, the leggings and the stockings that were outgrown by the Baptist children in America. Thousands of infants will arrive during these winter weeks and instead of facing an existence amid dirty rags and lousy beds of straw, they will be snugly tucked away in warm blankets from America. The people of Russia, like those of the other countries who were helped a year ago, will look with gratitude and appreciation toward the Baptists of America as their friends who came in their hour of distress and brought this helpful service of relief.

Our denomination again set itself to accomplish a superb task and achieved it successfully. To all who had a part in this response to an appeal for help, the Foreign Mission Society and the Woman's Foreign Mission Society express deep gratitude for loyal cooperation and effective assistance.

In a letter recently received from Miss Marie Dowling of Shaosing, China, she speaks of the farewell reception given to Gen. Feng's Christian soldiers, who were leaving for Tsingtao. The Chinese non-Christian community presented them with a silk banner bearing the four characters, "Che Tou Ching Bing," meaning soldiers of Christ. She says that this recognition of their orderly and restrained conduct was a remarkable tribute giving by the non-Christian.

The Chimney Corner

Electrified India

WILLARD PRICE, in "New Worlds For Old" gives some illuminating facts about electrified India which will prove fascinating telling for the Chimney Corner readers who will soon be conducting meetings on India, this year's mission study topic. For example:

Praying by Electricity!

In regard to this Mr. Price says: "Motor-driven prayers are today a feature of Simla, the summer capital. This came to pass when engineers wanted to harness the mountain streams up to dynamos to supply light and power for Simla. The Buddhist priests objected. It seems that for centuries they had repeated their endless prayers until they grew weary, and one ingenious worshipper invented wheels on which were tacked pieces of paper with prayers written on them. If these wheels were kept continually in motion the prayers were just as effective, argued the lazy priests, as if they were verbally repeated.

"The power for these prayer mills was obtained from the mountain streams. And now unbelieving foreigners proposed to divert that water power for commercial purposes. The priests incited the people against the engineers and for a time it looked as if the project to provide Simla with electricity must be given up.

"Then the tactful but firm British government took action. The power companies were given authority to proceed. They must agree, however, to supply all the prayer wheels with electric motors. Simla now prays by electric power."

It Pays to Advertise!

"The American business pioneer meets peculiar difficulties in India. He runs up against a superstition or a tradition at every turn.

"A grease manufacturer sent a commercial traveler around the world to India at great expense. And when the man got there he found he could do nothing. India would not buy grease. Why? Because the Hindu religion regards the cow as a sacred animal. It is considered sacrilege to kill a cow, and good Hindus under no circumstances will touch the meat, tallow, hides, or similar articles in trade. The objection of some native regiments to using cartridges which had been greased with tallow is said to have precipitated the great meeting of 1857.

"A canning manufacturer of food products had a special label pasted on all packages for India: 'This food contains no cow.'

"Since the members of some castes are not permitted even to touch an object which has been touched by a foreigner or one of lower caste, the product made entirely by machine has a great advantage. The high-caste Hindu will pick out every time the product labelled: 'Untouched by human hands.' He will, if he can read the label. If it is a high-grade expensive product, the buyer of such a product is probably educated, at least enough to be able to read. But if it is a cheap article designed for the common people, what then? The Yankee trader has a new difficulty to reckon with when he remembers that 89 per cent of the men of India and 99 per cent of the women can neither read nor write. How can he advertise his article among people unable to read?

"Pictures are the answer. It will be remembered that in Old England before education was common, a tavern or shop would hang out a sign on which would be painted no lettering whatever, but simply a picture, perhaps of a boar's head, or a crowing cock. Any one can read a picture, and the place promptly became known as the Boar's Head or the Crowing Cock.

"The same ancient principle is employed in India today. The outside of a package will bear the life-size portrait of a cracker, with a tiger curled beside it. The Hindu will ask for the Tiger Cracker. Two different brands of American kerosene are known in India as the Elephant brand and the Monkey brand. Indian deities are frequently used as trademarks.

"Often it is the attractiveness of the picture which sells the goods rather than the quality of the article. Manufacturers vie with each other in getting out trademarks which will be not only attractive and brilliantly colored, but of such subjects as will make a strong impression on the memory. Such trademark pictures, after being taken off the package are seldom thrown away, but are usually pasted on the walls of native shops or houses, where they serve as a permanent decoration; also as an advertisement of the article to which they are attached."

"Home, James!"

"The gorgeously caparisoned elephant with a miniature house full of gaily dressed people on his mountainous back is also disappearing. His place is being taken by the automobile. The native nobility and princes of India are large purchasers of motor cars, sometimes owning dozens of them. . . .

"How jealously the Hindu clings to fast fading glories is shown in the extreme ornateness of some of these cars. For example, the favorite car of a certain native ruler is painted a rich canary yellow with gold mountings, the upholstery being in old-gold silk brocade, with silk laces to match; also silk curtains in old-gold are fitted on either side of the Nizam's seat, which is a luxurious arm-chair raised slightly higher than the other seats in the car as befits the dignity of his highness. The roof is domed with silver and the Nizam's coat of arms is painted on the panels.

"Her highness the Begum of Bhopal has an equally gorgeous equipage with one added feature—a rich curtain of violet silk which may be drawn to secure privacy. For it is most important that cars to be used by Mohammedan or high-caste Hindu ladies should be readily closed in by curtains to protect the fair occupants from the eyes of men and the touch of outcasts."

A Hindu Boy's Composition on "The Horse"

IN SHERWOOD EDDY'S book "India Awakening" the following composition written by a Bombay high-school student is given. Beginners in English naturally make quite as delightful blunders as our missionaries made in their first years of conversing in unknown tongues!

"The horse is a very noble quadruped, but when he is angry he will not do so. He is ridden on the spinal cord by the bridle, and sadly the driver places his foots on the stirrups and divides his lower limbs across the saddle, and drives his animal to the meadow. He has a long mouth, and his head is attached to the trunk by a long protuberance called the neck. He has four legs; two are in the front side, and two are afterwards. These are the weapons on which he runs and also defends himself by extending those in the rear in a parallel direction toward his foe. But this he does only when in a vexatious mood. His fooding is gen-

The Young Reserves

Shall We Change Our Name?

THE strangest thing has been happening the last year—a number of different persons have written me to ask why we were called "Young Reserves," and some of them have suggested other names that they liked better.

As a matter of fact, I do not know exactly why we were named "Reserves," but as THE BAPTIST was started during the war (or just after) I think the name suggested itself because reserves were every bit as important in the army and navy as regulars; and in the same way Young Reserves are of tremendous importance to the Baptist denomination, because in just a few years we will BE the denomination!! So while we have a very nice name, perhaps there really is an even better one, as some of these letter-friends have suggested. What do you think about it? Do you like "Young Reserves" the very best of all? Or can you think of a far better title?

Names are very solemn things! How parents must wonder and wonder and wonder whether "Susan" is really going to be the best name for the brand new girl baby and "William" for the boy twin. And how a lady who is going to be married must wonder whether she is going to like having her new name forever and ever! So in thinking about our new name please, oh please! don't be hasty or rash; but begin right away to jot down all the thoughts that occur to you, look over your books and see if their titles suggest any ideas, ask your parents at supper tonight—think! think! think! and then sit down and write your best thoughts. You may have until Jan. 21 to mail them to: Miss Margaret Applegarth, 94 Brunswick St., Rochester, N. Y.

Of course if you like "Young Reserves" the very best, then tell me that; for I want to hear from every single one of you—big, little and in-between! A committee will be appointed of course to judge of such an important step, and a prize will be offered for the best name selected.

Who will be the fairy godmother or godfather to Our Page? You, of course! For I see you dashing madly toward the ink-bottle and paper this very minute.

The Boy On My Street

HAVEN'T you often thought that you would like to write a story? And haven't you often meant to do it without quite "getting around to it"? There is a Boy-On-My-Street who really has gotten around to it, and only yesterday he brought me this story on India which he had written. He has read a great deal about India, of course, so that helped him to find facts.

He has read "Jungle Tales" by Mr. Musser, "India Inklings" and many short stories in the magazine Everyland; and he is going to read Missions, too, and "The Wonderland of India" before he writes us another chapter about little Miss Missionary. Do you think that you could write us a story on India? We will print it on Our Page if you send it! The Boy-On-My-Street is eleven or twelve, I forget which. Here is his story:

The Exploits of Little Miss Missionary

By MALCOM MACQUEEN

CHAPTER I. THE SNAKE AND THE BOTTLE.

Little Miss Missionary was very tired, so tired that she wanted to give up and go home to America. She had been in India just one week. And she felt that that week had been so busy that she needed a furlough already. You see, Little Miss Missionary wasn't like the other missionaries. She was young and had had no experience.

While she was sitting there a little dark Hindu boy darted into her room. "Mem Sahib! Mem Sahib! A man has just been bitten by a snake. Come quickly." Little Miss Missionary seized her medicine case and ran after the Hindu boy. When she got there she found the man writhing in agony, and the aunts and grandmother and the mother-in-law and grandfather wailing and pulling their hair in the most foolish fashion. (Of course they don't know any better.) Little Miss Missionary cauterized the bite and gave the man some powders and pills. In a little while he stopped writhing and began to slumber. She handed a small bottle of pills to the grandfather and said, "Give him one of these every hour" and then went back to her hut. She began making a report for the mission board (dear me, those reports are terribly bothersome for the missionaries) and about an hour went by.

All at once the same little boy came running in: "Mem Sahib, we can't get him to take the pills." The missionary followed him to the hut again, and there was the grandfather trying to force the little glass pill bottle down the sick man's throat.

The missionary ran forward and explained to the old grandfather that the man should be given just one pill at a time and that the bottle should be thrown away because only the pills were good, and now, if you will look sharply in the Young Reserves Corner some of these times you may find some more exploits of Little Miss Missionary.

The apostle Paul gives us his method as "Becoming all things to all men if by any means he might win some." I believe a pastor on a rural field has opportunity to touch the lives of the people of his parish at more points than does a city pastor and should follow up his advantage. I am not blind to the fact that many of my people lead a very narrow and circumscribed life, having very little vision either for themselves or the church. This tests my grit and patience but challenges my leadership and ministry. It is an axiom of human relationships that interest begets interest. I believe that as I show my interest in the daily problems of the people of my community they will respond by showing interest in the work in which I am leading and seeking co-operation.

I am determined to cultivate the grace of patience and perseverance. While it is true that "one soweth and another reapeth," I believe a fruitful ministry depends upon taking time to "break up fallow ground," sowing, watering, cultivating, and pruning before the harvest can be expected. By the grace of God I desire to stay on one field long enough to know the people and conditions of the community better than the secretary of the chamber of commerce or the superintendent of schools. My message and work is spiritual while theirs is material or intellectual, but I need to know as much about the folks. My field is not bounded by the membership roll of my church or the corporate limits of the town where I live but is at least as large as the trading district served by the business houses of the community.

He strongly favored the prohibition amendment and was delivering a lecture at a temperance meeting. "If there is any man here," he shouted, "who can name any honest business that has been helped by the saloon I will give half my wealth to defeat prohibition." His challenge was met with absolute silence for a moment; then a man in the audience arose and said: "I consider my business an honest one and strictly necessary, and it has undoubtedly been helped by the saloon." "What is your business?" stormed the orator. "I, sir, am an undertaker," replied the other.

Young People's Work

Topic for January 28

WHAT ARE THE RIGHTFUL CLAIMS OF OUR CHURCH UPON US?

Heb. 10:19-25.

Denominational Young People's Day

Baptist Young People's Day for 1922 was observed by many young people's organizations in the United States and Canada. A large number of our Baptist seminaries, academics, colleges and universities joined in the discussion of the topic "Baptist Young People and World Fellowships."

Whatever may be the topic for Jan. 28, 1923, young people's organizations everywhere are invited to join in the observance of Baptist Young People's Denominational Day for 1923. Baptists believe in religious liberty for all, and this will be the topic for January 28.

Special Notice

The address of the Hon. Charles E. Hughes on "Religious Liberty," delivered at the laying of the corner-stone of the National Baptist Memorial to Religious Liberty, has been printed in pamphlet form for use on January 28. If the entire time cannot be given to a discussion of this subject, it is hoped that the pamphlet will be read before the young people's society.

Copies of the pamphlet have been mailed to all directors of religious education who have sent in requests for them for distribution to locals. If the young people's society of your church has not received a copy, send for enough copies to supply one for each group captain. Address

James Asa White, General Secretary,
125 North Wabash Ave.
Chicago, Ill.

Special Request to Pastors

Thousands of short talks and addresses will be given on the subject of "Religious Liberty" on January 28, Young People's Denominational Day. Pastors everywhere are requested to give wide publicity to the day, and, if the local program permits, invite the young people to sit together at the morning or evening service to hear a special sermon by the pastor to and for the young people of the church.

Here and There

LORRAINE (OHIO) ASSOCIATIONAL B. Y. P. U. held its first rally at Oberlin, Ohio, Dec. 9-10. The state young people's director, W. A. Holmes, conducted conferences and delivered addresses. Other speakers were Miss Dunham, children's worker, Rev. A. M. McDonald and Rev. C. M. Edly of Denison University.

OREGON YOUNG PEOPLE have conducted a series of rallies, with great results, at Ashland, Roseburg, Eugene, McMinnville, Milton-Freewater, Baker, Hood River, Lebanon, Redmond, Ontario and Portland.

THE "B. Y. P. U. WOODLAWNITE" (Chicago) says: "The intermediates are starting off fine on their new plan. They have begun taking complete charge of their entire meetings. The only older people attending are there as ornaments, not to help talk." Doesn't that sound fine?

THE "B. Y. P. U. ASSEMBLY," the official organ of the Miami (Ohio) Association, edited by Will Schwemlein is a very attractive news sheet. Copies of the paper may be secured from the editor at 5337 Globe Ave., Norwood, Ohio.

THE "B. Y. P. U. BULLETIN" published by Pittsburgh young people makes the following statement: "Never be party to the conduct of a dismal meeting. A meeting which breeds discouragement is worse than none. It is dishonoring to the Master, injurious to the participants and contemptible in the eyes of unbelievers. Where meetings have reached this stage they should be discontinued, if necessary, until the leaders have taken counsel together and are prepared to transform the situation. If the meetings are allowed progressively to decline, the society will eventually become defunct and perhaps be beyond resuscitation. This must not be allowed to happen. Radical measures should be applied in time. A B. Y. P. U. has no more right to go out of business than has a church. It is indeed part of the church, and a vital part."

THE SECOND QUARTERLY RALLY of Brooklyn young people was held at Bay Ridge Swedish Church, Nov. 16. The Brooklyn Union is planning a series of convention and training conferences, Jan. 22-24 for the young Baptists of Brooklyn and Long Island. The meetings will be held in the Baptist Temple, Brooklyn, under the leadership of Mr. Stanley Hazzard and Mr. Milton M. McGorrill.

THE MARITIME BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE are going ahead under the leadership of Rev. Waldo C. Machum. The Maritime Provinces hope to have a good delegation at the Boston Convention.

The Boston Convention

Dr. F. F. Peterson, director of religious education for Massachusetts writes:

"I wish to thank you for your kind remembrance of Christmas, and also to say that we had our preliminary meeting a week ago last Monday night, at which time the representatives of the young people's societies present set their goal for 4000 delegates for Massachusetts.

"The State Christian Endeavor Union has voted to cooperate, and lend us their field manager if necessary for the promotion of the Convention.

"I confidently believe a goal of 5500 for New England can be achieved."

A Young People's Department

The First Baptist Church, Melrose, Mass., P. H. McDowell, pastor, has organized a young people's department comprising the ages 18 to 25 approximately. The ideals are set forth as follows:

I. The Conviction

1. Jesus Christ needs the young people and the young people need Jesus Christ.
2. The church needs the young people and the young people need the church.

II. The Purpose

1. That the church may put the work for young people into her bylaws and budget so that the church herself shall minister to the whole round of the life of young people with a week-day program as well as a Sunday plan.

2. That the young people may accept Jesus Christ as Saviour and Master, that they may set the church on high by growing from mere membership to place of responsibility and leadership, and that they may be trained to incarnate Christian ideals and so to act Christ in all relationships of life from every-day duty to world-wide obligation.

III. The Method

1. The plan is for the Young People's Council, the executive head of the department of the young people of the church, to correlate and to unify the activities of the now splendid organizations and organized classes for young people in both the church and church school (namely, The B. Y. P. U., the World Wide Guild, the Jepson, Tri-Mu and Progress classes and others that may come into being), and to initiate work, from time to time, as shall best serve the declared "Conviction" and "Purpose" as above stated.

Please Refer to Sept. 30th Issue of THE BAPTIST

(Young People's Pages)

The discount on titling literature was stated as 4 per cent. It should have been 40 per cent. We sincerely hope a large number of churches and young people's societies will take advantage of this opportunity to secure this valuable material.

2. The council shall consist of the following officers of the department elected by the department: A president, a vice-president, a secretary and a treasurer, and of one representative from each co-operating organization and class elected by the respective organizations and classes, and of a counselor to be elected by the committee on religious education. The pastor and pastor's assistant are, by virtue of office, members ex-officio. The members of the council shall hold office for one year or until their successors are elected.

3. The council shall appoint the following committees, the chairman of the respective committees to be appointed from members of the council: (1) Enlistment, or membership; (2) spiritual life; (3) instruction and missions; (4) recreation and good times. The council has the power to appoint new and special committees as need arises.

4. The council shall keep in close touch with the department, shall carry out the will of the department, and shall report to the department and to the church.

From Bohemia

4th December, 1922.

My dear Brother White:

I thank you very much for your kind letter of Oct. 23 as well as the "Young People's Service" and I am ordered by the committee for our young people to transmit you the best greetings. God willing I shall travel next year to Stockholm as delegate for our Czecho-Slovakian Union together with other brethren. Already now I should like to write you our desire if it will not be possible to join closely all Young People's unions in the whole world. According to my opinion this close joining of all young people in the world will be of great use to all and will serve the interests of our Lord's kingdom.

As we are nearly without any literature for our young people's service, I should appreciate it a favor if you are in a position to send me some books with regard to the movement of the work amongst the young people in the world, questions regarding the young people's work, and evangelization questions.

As soon as possible I shall again refer in detail to your above mentioned favor of Oct. 23.

Hoping to receive soon a favorable reply I beg to remain with kind regards and best wishes for a blessed Christmas,

Very sincerely your brother in Jesus Christ,

(Signed) WALTER HOFFMAN.

From England

8th December, 1922.

Dear Dr. White:

I have now had a long consultation with Dr. Shakespeare with regard to the young people's part of the program of the congress to be held in Stockholm next July. You will hear from him officially as secretary of the Baptist World Alliance with regard to the speakers who, we hope, will be sent as representing your Young People's Union of America.

Meanwhile let me say again that I hope very much that you may find it convenient yourself to attend the congress and that I shall then have the pleasure of meeting you personally.

I hope, as I have said in a previous letter, that your Young People's Union will appoint at least two representatives upon the provisional World Young Baptist Committee to meet at Stockholm, and I should be very glad if you could, as you suggest in your last letter, summon such representatives of other young people's organizations in your country as you think should be represented upon this committee.

We are hoping to have an important conference on the Tuesday afternoon as you will hear from Dr. Shakespeare, to be attended by members of committees of young people's organizations, on the subject of "The Formation, Organization and Work of a World Young Baptist Fellowship or Federation." At another session, probably the Thursday morning, which will be a full session of the congress, the question of the work amongst young men and women and the adolescents will be further discussed, when we hope there will be at least one American speaker.

I shall be glad to hear from you again when you have received Dr. Shakespeare's communication, in answer to this letter, so that we may get in close touch with regard to this coming important congress.

With best wishes for all your work,

Yours most sincerely,

(Signed) EDWARD E. HAYWARD.

Religious Education

Christian Education Week

By ELMER T. CLARK

If the welfare of the world depends upon Christian leaders, there must be a system of Christian education to produce such leaders. Men are made by their training. Leaders come from the college. It is impossible to escape the conclusion that the Christian college is a fundamental institution. We cannot get on without it.

In Chicago there convenes a series of gatherings which possess great significance. The Council of Church Boards of Education, made up of the educational executives of practically all the great Protestant denominations in America; the church workers in universities, those men and women who are laboring at the mighty task of caring for the religious life and Christian training of students in the great secular universities from which the Christian element in education is so often wholly absent; the Association of American Colleges, the organization representing the Christian institutions themselves; conventions or meetings of nine great boards of education representing that many denominations—these organizations meeting simultaneously from January 8-13 stage a "Christian Education Week" in Chicago, which should profoundly influence the life and thought of our country.

Nothing is more urgently demanded. It is not necessary to be a reactionary alarmist to understand that the Christian element is departing from American education. When it is no longer in education it will no longer be in the hearts of our leaders. And then the world will certainly go wrong.

Many voices call to the church member of today, and many interests demand his attention, money and sympathy. But none of them is more important than Christian education. Indeed, we may well say that Christian education is more important than any, for it is the support and preliminary requisite of them all, since it provides them their leaders and workers.

Surely the time has come when the church should take with overweening seriousness the supreme task of Christianizing our education.

International Sunday School Lesson for January 28

THE RICH MAN AND LAZARUS

Lesson: Luke 16. Golden Text: 1 Tim. 6:17.

Introductory

The place is Perea; the time, 30 A. D. Following the parable of the prodigal son, Jesus relates the parable of the unjust steward to his disciples. Pharisees, who were lovers of money, heard and scoffed at him. He speaks plainly of their secret sins and then returns to his teaching about the uses made of riches by relating the story of the rich man and Lazarus.

The Lesson

Purple and fine linen and sumptuous living mark the Dives (rich man) of the lesson; in contrast—a beggar at the gate, covered with sores which the dogs came to lick, desiring to eat the crumbs which fell from the table of Dives. Both men died, the beggar to be carried away by angels into Abraham's bosom; the rich man to go to Hades, from where in his torment he saw the former beggar from afar. Jesus is relating this story to Jews whose highest conception of happiness was to be with Abraham. Now Dives had become the supplicant: "Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water and cool my tongue." A small thing to ask—a drop of water, even as upon earth Lazarus had begged for only crumbs of bread. But Abraham reminds that in life Dives had the good things while Lazarus went without—now Lazarus was being comforted and Dives being punished. But above all, an impassable gulf lay between the man in torment and the man in happiness. Then comes perhaps his first thought for others. If he could not be helped, at least let not others come to such a pass. There were his five brothers, and Dives begs that warning be sent to them; for "if one go from the dead, they will repent." But said Abraham, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded if one rise from the dead." rise from the dead."

Leading Thoughts

1. Much is required of him to whom much is given. 2. The sin of Dives lay not in having riches, but in not using what he had to relieve the suffering of mankind. 3. It is the money a man hoards that impoverishes him.

"The money you give away—it blesses old age like the cool shade of a tree. I can get a thrill of delight at any time by calling up the memory of nearly five thousand men whose college training my lectures have helped to provide. That's the kind of a fortune for a man to lay up if he wants a delightful and exciting old age. A fortune in folks; money in men."—Dr. Russell H. Conwell.

"Bigger and Better Sunday School Cooperative Advance"

By E. M. STEPHENSON

We are glad to see this old slogan on the ensign of the present advance movement. Sectionally and locally we have many times marched to victory under it, and this from "sea to sea" campaign is already assured of success unless all signs fail.

Never before in Baptist history has there been an interest so extensive as this one, touching so many varied Sunday-school activities at the same time. Fully one-third of our schools are engaged in some sort of campaign for enlargement, while more than one-fifth of the schools are already registered for the Advance.

It has come to be in fact what its name calls for—a "cooperative advance." Of the thousands of letters which it has brought to headquarters only one solitary letter sounds a note of dissent. It comes from the superintendent of a Union Sabbath School. A quotation or two will show its animus:

"We have an antipathy to the caption of your movement, 'bigger and better schools.'"

"We do not rely on human accessories. We have no time for this secular matter."

"We never expect to add any new members to our Bible school."

"The Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved."

We believe in all the human accessories of the true sort that we can get to come our way. Jesus did, and said, "Go into the highways and compel them to come in." "Ye shall be fishers of men."

Some of us have learned that children and young people are more at home in a growing school than a declining one. Growing people like growing things. This is true because the law of life is growth. Living things must grow or die. One of the best ways to improve a school is to enlarge it. We must have better schools if we would make the most of the increase, for the law of growth is development. When development is retarded growth is hindered and functioning is abnormal. The goal in this campaign is for normal growth and for symmetrical development.

The annual founder's week conference of the Moody Bible Institute will be held Feb. 5-9 in the institute auditorium, Chicago. The list of speakers includes Rev. R. A. Torrey, dean of Los Angeles Bible Institute; Dr. J. Gresham Machen of Princeton Theological Seminary; Dr. Leander S. Keyser of Hamma Divinity School, Springfield, O.; Dr. Donald McTavish of Toronto; Rev. W. S. Gottshall, Bluffton, O.; Dr. Gordon Watt and Mrs. Watt, Glasgow, Scotland; Rev. Charles W. Abel of the London Missionary Society, for thirty-two years a missionary in New Guinea; Dr. Maurice Frater, who in 1900 went to the New Hebrides to evangelize two savage islands. Mr. C. S. Bishop, veteran secretary of the Y. M. C. A., Kansas City, Mo., who directed Mr. Moody's great evangelistic campaign there, the last of his career, is also expected.

Our Own Folks

Nebraska Letter

By R. R. COON

Some recent pastoral settlements in the state help to overcome the removals and resignations. Rev. Isaac M. Morgan, of Indianapolis, has just come to Sumner as pastor—a field with good opportunities for usefulness after the long pastorate of Rev. Harry Wolcott. Evangelist George Greenhill under convention direction is working at Horace where Rev. H. H. Berry labored so faithfully in securing a house of worship for the young church. Earnest personal work will retain this as a Baptist field. After several years of labor in Iowa and St. Louis, Rev. W. A. Darrow returns to the state, becoming pastor at Ansley. Here also a pastor falls heir to the work and influence of a former leader. Rev. R. Richards added much to the strength of this church and cultivated well the country around.

Revival Work

is going on in several churches. The new Parkside Church, Omaha, has had a two weeks' meeting led by Rev. G. W. Duncan, of Arkansas, in which eleven united with the church. At the Trinity Church, also Omaha, the pastor, Rev. C. F. Holler, has been assisted by Evangelist Lewis. Between three and four hundred professed conversion, a goodly number joining Trinity Church. Evangelist Lewis also conducted a series of meetings at Polk, Rev. C. L. Neal, pastor. Dr. Wilson Mills gave two weeks of evangelism to the church in Columbus. Dr. Mills always works for permanent results. Columbus is one of the important points in Nebraska. We hope Pastor T. M. Pyle can remain a builder there for five or ten years and see a large and strong church. Chaplain E. W. White has conducted revival work at Ragan. Though several were converted perhaps the greatest service was in the church, helping the members into a spirit of unity and fellowship and preparing them for active Christian service. Dr. White went from Ragan to the Bainbridge Church. His permanent address is 904 S. Thirty-third St., Omaha. Rev. R. Richards, former state evangelist, has accepted a similar position in South Dakota. He held a successful meeting in Canton, S. D. followed by services in Beresford. After the holiday season he will assist Dr. E. F. Jorden for four weeks at Parker.

Three Prominent Visitors have recently favored Grand Island. Dr. J. W. Padelford made a short official call in the college. In a pointed chapel address mentioned three aims that should influence college youth: the aristocracy of intelligence, the aristocracy of purpose and the aristocracy of character, three prime suggestions. Dr. L. C. Barnes topped a day to confer with Director J. W. Benjamin. He was the preacher at the Baptist Church Sunday morning. He has the eloquent fire that moved men thirty years ago when we heard him in St. Paul. He is young at seventy. Rev. John L. Barton, of Emmanuel Church, Omaha, was here three days. The occasional was a B. Y. P. U. rally, but all classes were reached. Two college chapel talks and conferences with students, addresses at the high school and before 450 business college students and three sermons at the church, two drama sermons—all made full and very profitable his three days' stay.

The Rural Parish

or community church is receiving special notice in Nebraska. The Maxwell Parish, Rev. W. C. Miller, pastor, includes the churches of Maxwell, McPherson and Bignell. Country neighborhoods beyond the limits of these fields are organizing Sunday schools. Such a plan with one pastor looking after two or three nearby churches will help to solve the problem of pastorless churches. Rev. P. O. Silvara, at Arnold, home on furlough, has undertaken a heroic task and seems to be having worthy success. He is showing "what a small church can do in service to God and his community, with an up-to-date community program and equipment." The parish has a radius of fifteen miles from Arnold as a center. In all this territory are Sunday schools and preaching stations. What is being accomplished in that neighborhood may be done in many a rural church field.

On other fields some such combination is planned by Rev. F. W. Benjamin, director of rural work, who is also acting state secretary.

Corner-Stone Laying at Rankin

By W. C. CHAPPELL

In 1905 the church at Rankin was turned over to the Pittsburgh Association because the community was becoming so largely foreign-speaking as to make it distinctively a missionary field. For eighteen years the little chapel was a center of activity under a succession of mission workers, Mrs. Paulin, Miss Jenkins, Miss Stewart and Miss Luella Adams. Out of the first class built up in the Bible school, consisting of eleven nationalities, eight were baptized and joined the Baptist church. One is now an attorney in Pittsburgh, one returned to Europe where, under her influence, all of her family were converted, and one is now a volunteer worker in the mission. That is typical of the work done year after year. The mission has been the only aggressive Protestant Christian force in the life of the white members of the community which numbers 9,000.

The housing conditions in Rankin have been bad. According to the survey made in 1920, fifty-eight houses contained three or more families. In one house forty-four people were found, in another thirty-six, in another twenty-five. In one place a man and wife and twelve boarders lived in four rooms. In another thirty-four were living in four rooms. The beds were used both night and day. A woman and two children were found living in a damp cellar. Fifty-six families had only two rooms each.

The percentage of infectious diseases is large. In one block twenty-five people died of the influenza in the epidemic of 1918. In 1919 seven infantile deaths occurred in one congested block and six in another.

The public schools are good. But our workers reported a regrettable condition two years ago when it was found that certain Roman Catholic teachers were whipping, threatening and otherwise punishing in the public school during school hours, some of the children from Catholic homes because they had not attended the Catholic Sunday school on Sundays and other children because they had attended some of the classes at the Baptist mission.

Until the summer of 1920, "Not a single park, playground or even ball field has been maintained and, in the way of commercial recreation, there has been but one ill-equipped moving-picture hall, and a half dozen very questionable pool rooms." Delinquency has been frequent. Gambling is common.

Recently a tract has been given the borough for a playground which will contain a swimming-pool. The public school has cooperated with our mission by granting the use of the gymnasium for the Boy Scouts.

Rankin offered an unusual opportunity for Christian work. This was especially evident to the Baptists who had observed the needs so closely and had seen such marked results from the pitifully inadequate equipment in the little chapel.

Upon application by the association, the county commission of the Council of Churches allocated responsibility for Protestant work in Rankin to the Baptists. With this assurance, our experience on the field for twenty-five years and the facts and recommendations of the thorough survey made and published in book form by the Council of Churches in 1920, the board of directors undertook the erection of a Christian center which should meet the needs of the field. The two home mission societies joined whole-heartedly in the project, after representatives of both had visited Rankin and studied the situation from every point of view.

Our mission was built on a double lot, located by the public school in the very center of the borough. The lot adjoining, with two houses upon it, was bought for $7,500 in order that there would be sufficient space for the kind of a building demanded.

Plans were drawn by Mr. G. A. Merrill, secretary of the architectural department of the Home Mission Society, which embody all the features which had proved successful in other centers. The lowest bid for the construction was by S. A. Hamel & Son, of Pittsburgh, who had designed and constructed several Baptist churches in this district. Mr. Hamel is a member of Temple Church, Pittsburgh. The contract was let for $75,000 and the building will be ready for occupancy next September.

District of Columbia Baptist Association

By M. W. MILLER

The forty-fifth annual meeting of the Columbia Association of Baptist Churches was held with Temple Church, Nov.

20-23, with the moderator, Rev. E. Hilton Jackson, presiding. After the usual opening service of the first session Monday evening, Mr. Jackson reviewed the progress of the association during the years of its history. He called attention to the fact that the first annual meeting of the association was held in Temple Church in 1878. He also stated, that it was in this same church that the organization of the Home for the Aged was brought about. In speaking of the progress of the work of the association, Mr. Jackson said that during its first year the churches then affiliated contributed to the cause of benevolence and world-wide missions the sum of $500, whereas the report of the treasurer today will show contributions to these same interests, a grand total of $143,967.18.

The association is affiliated with both the Southern and Northern Baptist Conventions.

The annual sermon was preached on Monday evening by Rev. W. S. Abernethy, pastor of Calvary Baptist Church. Tuesday morning the letters from the churches were read. The general tone of the letters was one of thankfulness for the progress made during the year, and of hopefulness for the future. Most of the churches report a goodly accession of members, and larger contributions for both local expenses, and missions than ever before. Tuesday afternoon was given over to hearing the reports of the executive board of the association, and from the officers of the two local interests dear to the Baptists of the District, the Baptist Home for Children, and the Baptist Home for the Aged. The executive board recommended that the missionary budget for 1923 be fixed at $111,000 for all interests, both of the Southern and Northern Conventions, and for the work in the district. The report stated that during the year headquarters for the District Association had been established, and an executive secretary appointed. Rev. W. O. Millington, D.D. has been called to this important office, and is already at work. The report suggests that each of the two national conventions join with the District Association in maintaining this general headquarters in Washington City.

The report of the treasurer showed receipts from all sources including all available funds of $132,282.53, and disbursements of $123,641.18.

Rev. W. O. Millington, presented the report of the Board of Trustees, and Mrs. Mason the report of the Board of Lady Managers of the Baptist Home for Children. These reports showed the home to be in a prosperous condition. The report of the treasurer showed receipts during the year of $55,184.31, while the report of the Board of Lady Managers showed additional receipts of $9,424.51. The report of the Board of Trustees of the Baptist Home for the Aged, was presented by the president of the board, Mr. C. I. Corby. The report with that of the treasurer, showed assets on hand amounting to $68,525.17, with receipts for the year including cash on hand of $8,451.04. There is on hand in the endowment fund, $34,764.90. A suggestion was made that the Baptists of the District should in the near future, secure a tract of land within the District limits, if possible, sufficiently large to accommodate both of these homes, and also a Baptist hospital. While no definite action was taken upon the suggestion, it was well received.

The session of Wednesday morning was devoted to the interest of the Women's Baptist Missionary Association, Mrs. O. E. Howe, presiding. The report of the treasurer showed receipts for the year amounting to $7,708.55, $6,586.29 of which was equally divided between the Northern and Southern Conventions. The Wednesday afternoon session was given over to consideration of Sunday school work.

Thursday morning reports from various officers, committees and boards were presented, duly considered and adopted. As this is not a detailed report of all the actions of the association, we will have to omit special mention of them interesting though they were. The last session was given over to the young people. All of the societies connected with Baptist churches in the District were represented, and when the roll was called a two-minute response was made by a representative chosen from each Union. The building was filled to capacity with enthusiastic young people some with gray hair but who were young in spirit and heart. The responses were bright, witty and to the point, and were greeted with hearty applause. The closing address was given by Rev. A. C. Dixon, of Baltimore. He took as his text and theme, "Stand still—Go forward." Dr. Dixon urged the young people to stand still in times of danger; to stand still until they received their direction from their Commander, and then go forward in Bible study, in prayer, in soul winning.

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

MAINE

EVANGELIST HARRY TAYLOR and his daughter have closed a series of meetings with the church at Ellsworth. Six people were baptized Dec. 17. A feature of the mission was the noon meetings held in the shoe factory.

EXECUTIVE SECRETARY MOWER called together his state workers for a conference at Waterville, Dec. 28. The evangelists and missionaries were present. In the afternoon of the conference, Chairman Harry S. Brown, of the State Laymen's Council, presented the plans of the council for special work in the organization of the men of the churches. The convention workers pledged their aid not only during January, which is the month specially designated for this work, but throughout the year.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

REV. H. H. WHITE closes his pastorate with the South Baptist Church, Laconia, Dec. 31. This church will offer attractive opportunity to a new pastor. It is one of the important churches. Mr. White began his new pastorate at Lebanon Jan. 7. The Lebanon church is fortunate in securing Mr. White. This church has been without a pastor but a short time since the resignation of Rev. C. L. Chamberlain who went to Dorchester, Mass.

THE UNION CHAPEL at West Rumney was recently destroyed by fire. For a long time this chapel has been supplied by the pastor of the Baptist church at Rumney. The building burned was insured and will be rebuilt at a cost of about $2500.

THE PETERBORO CHURCH, Rev. H. E. Danielson, pastor, will soon celebrate its one hundredth anniversary.

THE PEOPLE'S BAPTIST CHURCH of Portsmouth recently held installation services for its pastor, Rev. George B. Riley.

A PERMANENT INCOME FOR LIFE

Buy Life Annuities of THE AMERICAN BAPTIST HOME MISSION SOCIETY

For nearly fifty years The American Baptist Home Mission Society has been receiving gifts on the annuity plan, and our annuity fund at present (December 6, 1922), stands at $1,575,698.43, received from over 500 living annuitants. Many annuitants have been so well satisfied with this method of investing to advance the work of the Kingdom, that they have returned again and again with additional contributions representing savings which might have been otherwise invested.

ANNUITIES—ONE OR TWO LIVES

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent a year, payable semi-annually.

On one or two lives the rate varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent a year, payable semi-annually.

The rate always depends upon the age of the person when the gift is made. When the rate is once fixed, it never varies, but remains the same.

A survivorship agreement provides a permanent income for two lives. When you cease to enjoy its benefits the same income is continued throughout the lifetime of the relative or friend whose name follows yours in the agreement.

Samples of the single and survivorship agreements will be sent to you on request.

This way of investing in the work of The American Baptist Home Mission Society is proving very attractive to those who desire thus to provide for the Society during their lifetime but who also are so situated that they need a sure, even life income on their investment.

All those making wills, should remember that our corporate name is The American Baptist Home Mission Society

For booklet, sample contract, and survivorship rate tables, kindly address Secretary CHARLES L. WHITE, 23 East 26th Street, New York City.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

THE LADIES' SOCIETY of the Hungarian church, McKeesport, held its tenth year jubilee, Nov. 25. Important events in the history of the organization were reviewed. The society began with a few members whose persistent efforts have shown gratifying results. The treasurer's report showed for ten years' total receipts $3050, disbursements $3005. Among the speakers were Rev. W. C. Chappell, Mrs. F. W. Squibb, Mrs. A. Paulinly and Mrs. A. Stumpf. Music was rendered by the church band and the church choir. Refreshments were served.

FIRST, McKEESPORT, REV. J. S. BRAKER, pastor. The school was awarded the loving cup for having the largest enrollment in the Monongahela Valley School of Christian Education. With over 500 enrolled, the school had fifty-one students.

KNOXVILLE, REV. F. W. STANTON, pastor. Five were baptized Sunday evening, Dec. 17.

THE ANNUAL BROTHERHOOD BANQUET AT McCreery's, Dec. 8, was a pronounced success. Three hundred twenty-five people were present, representing many churches.

CRAFTEN, REV. JOSEPH YULE, pastor. A special offering received Sunday, Dec. 17, for the reduction of the debt on the parsonage amounted to $1,875.

REV. S. FLORENA, PASTOR OF THE Italian church, Jeannette, for the past six years, leaves for Boston, Mass., Jan. 1, having accepted a call to an Italian church in that city. Mr. Florena has done earnest and persistent work and, in spite of the unsettled conditions caused by the war, the church has made advancement in its membership, giving and program of activities.

A CHURCH OFFICERS' CONFERENCE to be conducted by Dr. F. A. Agar will be held at the Welsh Baptist Church, Pittsburgh, Sunday, Jan. 14. Invitations have been mailed to 1000 officers of the churches of the association. The day will be given to a discussion of the duties of church officials and the possibilities for service which each position affords.

WEST VIRGINIA

THE FIFTH AVENUE CHURCH, Huntington, recently celebrated its fiftieth anniversary. This church has had but two pastors—Rev. W. P. Walker who served for twenty-eight years and the present pastor, Rev. M. L. Wood, who has served for the past seventeen years. The membership today numbers 1,630, and the property is valued at $235,000.

Mississippi Valley

ILLINOIS

REV. A. E. BURCH of Kansas City, Mo., closed a successful meeting with the First Church of Urbana, Ill., Dec. 17. Rev. C. C. Long is pastor.

UNDER THE LEADERSHIP of Rev. A. D. McGlashan First Church, Elgin, has during the past twenty-three months experienced a continued and growing spiritual life. During this period 220 have applied for membership with no protracted evangelistic service. At the present time a number await baptism. At the Christmas services Mr. McGlashan was presented with a new watch by his friends, a like gift having been made to Mrs. McGlashan by her class of young women. Dr. George R. Stair, assisted by Mr. Floyd B. Johnson, opened a three weeks' evangelistic campaign Dec. 30. The meetings are well attended and growing.

FIRST CHURCH, CHAMPAIGN, called to the pastorate two years ago, Rev. W. B. Morris, who preached his first pastoral sermon Oct. 3, 1920. Since that time he has quietly worked to build up the spiritual forces of the membership and to establish a better foundation for church and Bible-school efficiency. Both departments have adopted new constitutions which have strengthened their effectiveness. Brother Morris is well known throughout the state because of his ten years' service for the state convention in the Sunday-school work. He has been hampered by illness and was compelled to recuperate for three months, returning to the pulpit Oct. 1. He feels greatly encouraged that his health will be fully restored. Wednesday evening, Dec. 13, was the annual meeting and roll-call of the church. Supper was served at 6:30 and the business session was opened at 7:30. The reports all showed increased interest and enthusiasm, besides every department had a fine financial balance with no outstanding debts. There is being installed a new lighting system which the Ladies' Aid is financing. The Bible school is increasing in interest, attendance and giving. In the spring duplex envelopes for class use were instituted, and it was found that both the school expense fund and the mission fund have been increased by this move. The Bible school gives $1 to the Hudson orphanage every Sunday and has a nice balance to start the new year with. The duplex system of envelopes for church giving is also proving a great success. The membership has increased its giving to the New World Movement this past year.

IOWA

EVANGELIST C. E. HILLIS of Kahoka, Mo., has begun a series of meetings with the First Church, Central City, Iowa. Rev. F. W. Ford is pastor.

SEPT. 17 FIRST CHURCH, Council Bluffs, broke all records during the present pastorate in Sunday-school attendance and collection. The same day was gathered $2,504.98 in cash in the "Joash Chest" to be applied on the building fund, making $27,000 in cash in the building fund and the promise of enough more by April 1 to make $31,000 cash. Plans have been adopted and it is hoped to be able to let the contract for the new meeting house about April 1. Nov. 10-12 a religious educational institute under the leadership of Rev. Victor N. Witter, of Des Moines, was held. Dec. 17 the pastor baptized six candidates. The church gave the pastor a well-filled purse at the close of the morning service, Dec. 24, the presentation speech being made by Henry Peterson. Sunday evening, Dec. 24 the Sunday school gave its Christmas program, missionary, and each of the classes brought gifts for the needy. The church sent a 200-pound box of clothing to Russia some time ago. Rev. J. Frederic Catlin, the pastor, is in his fifth year as pastor of the church and the church is responding in an encouraging manner under his leadership.

WISCONSIN

MARION LORAIN, two-year-old daughter of Rev. Vernon Wilson and Pauline Griggs Robbins, died at Hudson after a five-weeks' illness, early Christmas morning. A simple service was conducted by her father at Hudson. The body was laid to rest in the chapel of Oakland Cemetery at St. Paul, the home city of her parents.

NORTH DAKOTA

THE IMMANUEL CHURCH, Fargo, has made improvements on the church building. During the last three months the church has received thirteen new members and the Sunday school is the largest in the history of the church. Rev. C. W. Finwall is the pastor.

Obituary

MISS JOSEPHINE L. CRESSEY

Died in Des Moines, Iowa, Dec. 8, 1922, Miss Josephine L. Cressey, aged 77 years. Miss Cressey was the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Timothy R. Cressey. Her mother was the daughter of the late Rev. Dr. Jonathan Going, secretary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society and president of Granville College, Ohio, now Denison University. Miss Cressey's father was chaplain of the Second Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry and her five soldier brothers also saw active service during much of the Civil War, six from the one family. Miss Cressey, her parents and an only living sister moved to Des Moines some fifty years ago and there speedily identified themselves with the First Baptist Church. They remained there laboring diligently until moving elsewhere or called of God to their heavenly home. Both sisters were for many years teachers in the Des Moines public schools. Miss Emma took special rank in the primary department. Miss Josephine for several years was a teacher among the freedmen in Bishop College, Marshall, Texas. Caring for her aged mother, tortured for many years by inflammatory rheumatism in its excruciating forms and helpless, the ever-willing daughter suffered most patiently until God called the one to himself and permitted the other to serve and suffer until he should utter his own soul message, "Daughter of pain and sorrow, come home. I am faithful in all my promises." Miss Cressey's funeral was attended by Rev. Robert T. Craig, pastor of the First Baptist Church, of which she had been a member for many years. Also, many choice friends joined in tribute of gratitude and precious memories.

Santa Catharina. Thirty years ago the first Baptist church was organized in Pernambuco, North Brazil, with twelve members. Now there are in that city eleven churches, the majority of which own good church houses, pay their own native pastors and are altogether self-supporting. On a recent Sunday morning, the attendance at the four largest churches was 751, 529, 497, and 471, respectively. Just fifteen years ago the first Baptist day-school was begun in Pernambuco with three kinky heads. Within this short interval that same school has grown into the most commanding educational institution in all North Brazil, owning a magnificent and well equipped plant, centrally located, where about 900 of Brazil's brightest boys and girls are enrolled, many coming from the country's most influential families. In connection with the same institution there are a theological seminary and a training school, in which about 100 young men and women are preparing themselves as preachers and teachers. Within fifteen years this one school, of so humble a beginning, has multiplied itself into seventy, distributed among the strategic centers of the country and in which about 6,000 boys and girls are Pastors saying they themselves never knew so much of the missionary and denominational work in all their past lives as they have learned since the beginning of the New World Movement, and they know the same is true of their churches.

A new state secretary, Dr. H. Clarke Colebrook, has been appointed and we are anticipating a forward movement in the state work.

The prospects are clear for continued progress in all the kingdom work throughout the state.

Our needs are: A virile pastor for every vacant pulpit.

A state fund that will enable the convention to care for work among the foreigners. Another fund to help the struggling churches pay their mortgages. And a third fund to enable some churches in rapidly growing centers to make the necessary changes and improvements to meet the requirements.

Above all and through all we need the manifestation of the Spirit of Christ in all our work.

Give and Receive

It sounds paradoxical; yet it is true. You can both give and receive by taking out an annuity agreement with the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society.

An annuity agreement represents a gift made to the Foreign Mission Society in return for which the Society covenants to pay to the donor an annual income for as long as he or she may live. After death the net principal is used for the work of the Society. Rates of income range from 4 per cent to 9 per cent for single lives and from 4 per cent to 8.3 per cent on agreements covering two lives.

This form of gift constitutes a financial investment in a spiritual enterprise to which our Lord gave his life, and enables the donor to furnish substantial support to the work of the Society and at the same time, in view of financial needs, receive an income on the investment as long as the donor lives.

For information write to Home Secretary P. H. J. Lerrigo, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City. All communications will be treated sacredly confidential.

The State of New York

THE past year has been marked by definite changes. On June 1 the headquarters of the state convention was transferred from New York City to Syracuse. The wisdom of this change of location is already apparent in the increasing number of ministers and members of churches who are availing themselves of the opportunity of coming to the central location for special conferences in relation to the work.

The general director, the secretary and directors of departments of evangelism, religious education, including the children's division, and town and country church work, are already at the new headquarters and the state director of promotion is soon to transfer his office to the Syracuse location. This centralization of departments and close cooperation in a specific constructive program is part of a definite plan for the promotion of a great advance movement throughout the entire state.

The outlook for the coming year is most promising. One of the most encouraging features is in relation to the new state districts. There are several great city centers which, in the very nature of the case, will become district centers. From these centers there will radiate, to an entire district area, the enthusiasm of a united standard constructive program, and in the rural areas which are remote from the larger centers, there will also be established district centers, located in the most strategic position.

Special group conferences are to be held in all the districts during the coming year, and directors of departments will visit the areas of the state, giving special attention to the needs of each field in relation to the evangelism, education and extension.

Departmental conferences are to be held at headquarters at frequent intervals, where the city, town and country relationships will be carefully and conscientiously considered.

We are rejoicing in the victories of the past, holding precious the memory of those who have laid down their lives in willing witness, and in this present hour of enlarging privilege we shall lay hold upon the living issues of the great forward movement. We shall advance in "the unity of the Spirit and in the bond of peace."

WE HAVE achieved the securing of able pastors for several of our stronger churches; the organization of two new churches, and the erection of two new buildings during the year; harmonious and exceedingly helpful state gatherings this year.

The outlook for the new year is bright. Evangelism is to have the right of way. There are more calls for helpers than we can meet. We will most likely reach the level of last year in our missionary offerings.

We need more colporters and district missionaries. Large areas in this state are still without Christian churches and influences. We need several new church buildings and parsonages.

Grand Forks.

F. E. STOCKTON.

Ohio

THE year 1922 has witnessed a genuine and notable recrudescence of a sane and wholesome evangelistic spirit. The employment of a superintendent of evangelism, jointly supported by the Ohio Convention and the American Baptist Home Mission Society, has made possible a long series of interesting and fruitful week-end evangelistic missions and a veritable network of cooperative evangelistic campaigns, in which pastors have aided pastors and provoked one another to good works. The supremely important result has been an unusually large number of conversions and additions to the churches by baptisms, while interesting byproducts have been the discovery of his own evangelistic gifts by many a pastor and a new spirit of unity and cooperation among our ministry.

Side by side with this evangelistic interest and these evangelistic results we have noted a gratifying gradual waning of indifference and opposition to the New World Movement and a steadily increasing support of the denominational program as a result of a better comprehension of the denominational purpose.

We face 1923 without either a faithless pessimism or a foolish optimism but with an honest belief that the year will register some important advances over 1922.

We need for some vacant pulpits men who are well-equipped and thoroughly furnished unto every good work, men of vision and men with a program, men who will possess their souls in patience and "stay by the stuff" long enough to carry through to completion some constructive service. In general our men move too frequently. We acknowledge that this is often the fault of the churches. We therefore need patient churches as well as patient pastors.

T. F. CHAMBERS.

Oregon

OREGON work has been blessed in baptisms, benevolences and buildings. Our net gain is 11 per cent on our membership of which 9 per cent was by baptism. Our benevolences averaged over $10 per member including all nationalities, being nearly 40 per cent greater than in years previous to the New World Movement era. New buildings were projected, equaling almost the valuation of church property since 1844, when the first Baptist church west of the Rocky Mountains was organized at West Union, Ore. Most of these churches and parsonages will be completed before May, 1924. A general increase of pastors' salaries should also be mentioned. Linfield College opened its doors to the largest enrollment in its history. It presented an unusually strong faculty and closed the year last June with all indebtedness paid.

The outlook is very encouraging if unity, leadership, deepened consecration and widened vision of our churches and pastors is a criterion by which to judge.

Our urgent needs are to complete our building program; give adequate building and endowment to Linfield College; and vitalize our Christian experiences.

O. C. WRIGHT.

Pennsylvania

THE outstanding fact in Pennsylvania during the last year was the large increase added to our churches by baptism. This increase was more than 25 per cent over the previous year and was greater than for many years in the past. We believe that this was largely due to an awakening interest in evangelism and the adoption of practical and efficient plans strongly urged by our superintendent of evangelism in numerous conferences and in local churches. The meeting of our state convention in October was one of the most profitable and helpful in every way. There was a remarkable spirit of harmony that prevailed throughout the entire session.

The outlook for 1923 is encouraging. Evangelism is to the front, stewardship in the highest sense of the term is more and more taking hold upon the minds and hearts of our people. The financial situation is not as we would like to see it, but present indications point to a betterment along this line.

Our most pressing need for Pennsylvania is a larger number of well-equipped, consecrated young men for our rural fields. Men seem to be pressing into our larger towns and cities, but there are a number of churches in the country composed of people of a high order of intelligence, churches that need a minister who has the true conception of what it means to be a real pastor. These are fields that comparatively speaking, under proper leadership, will produce larger returns than our city churches. On the whole there is a spirit of optimism in the Keystone State.

Rhode Island

[T HAS been a year of change as well as achievement. After five years of efficient service as our general secretary we reluctantly released Rev. B. T. Livingston to become the executive head of the New England Evangelistic Association and later called Rev. William Reid, promotion director of the Massachusetts Convention to become our general secretary. He has entered upon the office and is winning his way into the hearts of the people.

Our state promotion work is well organized under eleven working committees who have been very active the past year. They report four regional conferences, other rallies and gatherings, a State Sunday-school convention and various other rallies and gatherings. The State Woman's Mission Society has helped greatly with its missionary literature and study classes. We have collected on the New World Movement pledges an encouraging amount, considering the Rhode Island is an industrial state and has passed through a year of many strikes and much disturbance of normal conditions. At latest accounts we stand first in the list of states as to percentage of collections made.

The outlook for 1923 presents many arduous tasks. Our state paper, the Rhode Island Baptist is a great help in promoting the work but can and should have a larger circulation. We need a wider reading of THE BAPTIST and the Watchman-Examiner. Our leading laymen have become interested in the establishment of Baptist home and articles of incorporation have already been secured. Such an institution is much needed and will be a feature of our next year's work likely to enjoy marked favor.

The pressing need of the hour is a better building for each of our two promising Italian churches. The American Baptist Home Mission Society has made generous financial appropriations to aid in building these needed new edifices. The Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society has promised a fine initial sum toward the cost of a Christian center for the Dean Street or Federal Hill enterprise. The state convention has purchased new sites for each church, and building plans are being drawn. The breaking of earth will occur at an early day. But we lack funds to complete either edifice and large giving by individuals must be sought. We have need of at least $51,000 to carry to completion these edifices as now planned.

WILLIAM REID.

Providence.

South Dakota

THE past year's work brought splendid results. With four exceptions, there were more baptisms than in any other single year of the convention's history. In spite of the exceptionally trying financial conditions—due to low prices on agricultural products and difficult shipping conditions—we gave the second largest amount to missions in our history.

Sioux Falls College has in process of construction a combined gymnasium and heating plant. When this is completed the college will have one of the best gymnasiums in the state. Recently an unnamed donor made a gift of $10,000 towards this building. A bequest of $60,000 was recently received from the Glidden estate, for the erection of a girls' dormitory, which will probably be erected next year.

One hundred and sixty acres of land was recently deeded to the college under an annuity agreement. The enrolment in the college department is much larger than usual.

The outlook for the work in the state for 1923 is bright. Our greatest need is for more men of training and consecration for our mission fields, and money to properly support them.

A TOWN FULL OF WIDOWS

Can you realize the affection, the loyalty, the self-sacrifice revealed in the following extract from the report of an eye-witness of conditions in Europe?

The men starved to death much sooner than the women. It takes more to keep a man alive, and it seems that women had greater power of resistance than men. To their honor the men refused to eat more than the women. The whole town was full of widows whose husbands had starved to death. After it was realized that the famine was sweeping away in this fashion the men who would have to do the hard work in the fields, women and children and all insisted that the men should eat enough to keep themselves alive even if the rest of the family died. Baptists have been feeding the entire population here for some time with grain purchased from the Nansen Committee.—W. O. Lewis, October, 1922.

To help as many destitute sufferers as possible in Russia and other countries of Europe, is part of the program of the Foreign Mission Society for relief work in Europe during the present winter and next spring.

An opportunity will be given to every Baptist church and Sunday school to take a special offering on Sunday, January 21, 1923.

According to an agreement with the Near East Relief, this offering, unless specifically designated otherwise, will be divided between European Relief and Near East Relief.

Send checks to George B. Huntington, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City, or to your State Collecting Agent, plainly designated Relief Offering.

achievement of the year. During the year all the floating and bonded debts have been wiped out, so that the school is now entirely free from debt. There are now 170 students enrolled. Last summer a school of religious education was conducted at the academy, which proved to be such a success that it has been decided to make this school one of the permanent features of the educational work. Last year's increase in church membership was a decided increase over the past few years.

The churches throughout the state are well-manned and are undertaking constructive programs, so the outlook for 1923 seems promising. The money for the New World Movement is also coming in fairly well.

The most pressing needs at present seem to be money with which to employ missionary and evangelistic workers, and also to build a new dormitory in which to house the students at Vermont Academy.

East Washington and North Idaho

WE ARE glad to report the erection of two new church buildings, the organization of a new Baptist church and the rebuilding of a church very nearly destroyed by fire, as follows:

The First Baptist Church of Buena, Wash., was organized this year and is reporting thirty new members received by baptism since its organization. A neat brick church edifice has been erected and is nearly paid for, the amount due being fully covered by good pledges. This church recently called Rev. W. H. White to become pastor. Brother White has recently taken to himself a wife, so that the church considers itself fortunate in its pastoral leadership. The chapel car, "Messenger of Peace," under the direction of Rev. and Mrs. Robert Gray, was with this church during the entire period of the formation of the organization and the erection of the new building, and we are much indebted to the Publication

Society for the valuable assistance thus rendered.

The Euclid Avenue Baptist Church of Spokane, Wash., has been worshipping for years in a shack which was a disgrace to the denomination. This church has shown a remarkable spirit of persistence and loyalty in the face of very discouraging odds and is just completing a splendid church building, adequate in every respect for the present and for a long time to come. The church is made up largely of railroad men who have suffered severely because of the railroad strike, but have shown a magnificent determination and persistence in the erection of their new building, a large part of the work having been contributed by the membership of the church. Pastor J. M. Nelson and his devoted wife and family have rendered valuable service in guiding the church through this splendid enterprise.

In October, 1921, the Baptist church building at Tekoa, Wash., was very nearly destroyed by fire. Insurance totaling $1900 has been collected and the church has finally decided to rebuild on the site of the former building, using such material as is available from the former church building. It is now engaged in erecting a modern bungalow type of building. Rev. John R. George, field missionary of the convention, is acting as supply pastor and guiding the church in this undertaking.

A large number of the churches on this field are reporting evangelistic meetings either already in progress or definitely planned for. A unique meeting of this character is now in progress at Pullman, Wash., under the direction of Pastor W. E. Monbeck, and the meetings are held four nights each week—Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday. This plan was worked out with the idea of securing the attendance of high-school and Washington state college students, as it would be much more convenient for them to attend on the nights mentioned than if the meetings were held consecutively. The plan seems to be working every way to the advantage of all concerned.

The majority of the churches in this convention are dependent upon farming for their income, and the disturbed financial and industrial conditions of this year have made it exceedingly difficult for those who have made New World Movement pledges to pay them. The income from these pledges has fallen to about one-fifth of the income of the last two years. There is, however, a fine spirit of cooperation and a disposition to put through the great denominational program in as far as the ability of the people is concerned.

A. H. BAILEY.

Western Washington

THE outstanding achievements in Western Washington for the past year were the erection of the two buildings in Seattle, for the Chinese Baptist Church and community center, and for the Japanese Baptist Church and community center. It was not expected that these two buildings would be erected within the same year, but circumstances made this Herculean task necessary. The total cost of these two buildings and lots was $81,250. The Japanese and Chinese people, with the help of their friends, raised $14,000; the Home Mission Society made a contribution of $20,000 and a loan of $10,000; the Woman's Home Mission Society made a gift of $2848.45, and the Western Washington Baptist Convention and Seattle Baptist Union contributed $34,000. These buildings are well adapted to the combination services for which they are intended, and are the best buildings for oriental work owned by any denomination in the West.

The outlook for the new year is whole some and encouraging. Nearly all of our churches are supplied with pastors and without exception these men are worthy and loyal. The churches are unanimously interested and cooperating in the denominational program. Business conditions are somewhat improved, unemployment is greatly diminished, money is more plentiful, the people are paying their debts and will be in better condition to meet their church pledges.

The most pressing needs of this convention include the following items: 50 per cent of the churches need to repair, enlarge or build church edifices. A new and adequate building for the University Church, Seattle, is imperative and must be constructed without delay. We also need funds to fill some places made vacant by retrenchment, especially the position of superintendent of evangelism and two district missionaries.

Wisconsin

Outstanding Achievements of Past Year

1. The adjustment of many minds to the program of the denomination and a better spirit of cooperation in putting it across. 96.4 per cent of Wisconsin Baptist churches are now cooperating in some manner with the New World Movement.

2. The canceling of some very burdensome debts.

3. A closer cooperation between the German and English-speaking bodies. Several former German churches have united with the regular associations.

4. The settlement of a very fine type of pastors in some of our rural districts, men of intelligence and business ability, made possible in a few cases by temporary aid from the state convention funds.

5. The spread of Baptist belief among the Poles through the secular press, the result of a controversy started by a Polish priest. Our Polish pastor in Milwaukee is now reaching 35,000 readers weekly with Baptist information.

6. Splendid development among our young people, shown by increased interest in Green Lake Assembly and the Young People's Convention at St. Paul.

7. The greatest forward look that Milwaukee Baptists have had in years.

8. The real uplifting of Christ through the ministry of our pastors, resulting in an increased number of baptisms.

The Outlook for 1923

1. Bigger and better Sunday schools.

2. A real school of methods for religious work under the auspices of the Milwaukee City Union.

3. A number of improved and new buildings.

4. The opening of new fields, especially in the city.

5. A fine spirit of harmony.

6. The development of more laymen for kingdom tasks.

The Most Pressing Needs

1. The everlasting teaching of stewardship, until every Baptist realizes his debt to God.

2. A sense of personal responsibility on the part of the men and women of our churches for the salvation of the lost.

West Virginia

IN SEVERAL ways the past year has shown marked advancement. During the year 1922 more than 5,000 persons have come into the West Virginia churches by conversion and baptism. This has been the second best year in our history. Also, it was a fine year in the matter of giving. The records show nearly $200,000 for the year to Baptist missions, education, etc., at home and abroad. The work has made fine advancement also in Christian education and in Sunday-school and mission work. The missionary program of the state has been limited because of askings in the original budget of the New World Movement were inadequate.

The outlook for 1923 is quite hopeful so far as the program of work in the state is concerned. There is a better spirit of harmony prevailing among the people and an earnest desire on the part of many for an enlarged program of work. West Virginia has suffered greatly from the financial reaction. Improvement along this line would enable the Baptists of the state to make the new year the best in their history.

There are many pressing needs at the present time. The financing of our educational institutions—Broadus and Anderson; enlarged giving to ministerial education and a greatly enlarged program for missions and evangelism are among the outstanding needs.

Germany

f their brethren. We Baptists in Germany have learned that we must now reach the Word of God more diligently than ever before. In our old, but also in our new ways—often with enormous sacrifice—we are pushing evangelistic work among the masses. We have widened our work among young people. Twenty-one pioneers have been sent out as missionaries from house to house. We have distributed thousands of tracts and other Christian papers. We have traveled around with a mission tent and caravan and sought to ring the bells of salvation as once Noah did before the great flood. God has blessed this work and many souls were saved and have been added to our church.

Our prospects for 1923 are very dark. We look at them only from a human point of view. Never was the dearth in our country so heavy. Never did our churches suffer such need. Many of our pastors have had to give up their church work and return to their former profession in order to earn enough to keep their families. Some of our best mission workers can only be kept going with the greatest difficulty and anxious men mourn, as once Hagar did over Ishmael, "Let me not see the death of the child." Our homes of rest, which have served as a haven for those who were in need for body and soul cannot open their doors any longer without special help. Our deaconess houses must be restricted on every side. Our pastors' college in Hamburg is in great danger and distress. In hundreds of Baptist families hunger and nakedness are peering in at the windows. And the old doctors, appointed by the government of all Europe and its surroundings, are now holding the tenth consultation at the deathbed of Germany and one could wonderingly ask: "Is the patient really still alive, in spite of the many tried remedies?" And the eyes of man are dull and heavy, and hearts are sinking in hopelessness! And yet "faith is the victory," our prospects are as great as our God, as firm and sure as his promises, as confident as brother love. We will not die. We are fighting against a bankruptcy of all our mission work. It eats into our hearts like a cancer, it stings like an adder that Satan should succeed in setting his foot upon our Baptist work, and we believe and hope in faith, as well as in defiance and rebellion. With shaking hands we raise our banner, and with trembling voices we cry, "The sword of the Lord and of Gideon!" When did God ever disappoint wrestling faith? And he will not disappoint us. Daniel will yet be rescued from the teeth of the lion. The Lord is almighty and he is true. Hallelujah!

Our principal needs are stronger faith in God; more fullness of the Holy Ghost; more enthusiasm for the cross of Calvary; more self-sacrifice; more firmness and faithfulness to the fundamental truths of Christ; more grace to be laid into the earth as a seed-corn, that must first die, in order that it may bear fruit. The gospel bedewed with the tears of a consecrated life and with the sweat of hard and earnest work is a power of God that can move the world! Oh that we might know more of this. In deep humility we bow before the Lord and ask for this gift. Shall he not grant us our request?

But our brethren in America can help us. How? I. Pray for us. As parents pray at the bed of a sick child. Pray for our life, for our faith and for our endurance.

2. Retain your love for us, even when you see us now in beggar's guise.

3. Reckon us still to the family of the Baptists, even when our pockets are empty and our clothes ragged. Poverty makes timid and shy!

4. Have patience with us and nourish us with brotherly love, even if it should be far longer than is generally necessary. It is not our fault, if we are so slow in recovering.

5. Send men full of the Spirit to visit our churches—those who do not need to travel by express and have not got their return ticket in the waistcoat pocket, but have time to give to one who is lying wounded by the wayside. That will encourage us.

6. Look on the Baptist mission in Germany as one of the principal forts in Europe; commission your most capable and broad-hearted secretaries to strengthen and help this oppressed fort.

7. Place some of your means at our disposal. We shall not ask or take more than we really need for the Lord's use. Our poor paper mark will be cast, together with your dollar note into God's treasury! We are always ready to point out where it is most needed. We have those who are experienced in mission work and know exactly.

8. As American Baptists, do not act like the overwise diplomats of Europe. Help us before we die—you will spare the burial costs and the lamentation: "Consummation est!"

With hearty greetings and the deep-felt thanks of all who have been cheered and blessed through your brotherly love and help.

Baptists in Brazil

matriculated. Soon after the school in Pernambuco was begun, the Baptist College and Seminary in Rio began its career in a rented building, and in a most modest way. Notwithstanding the pitiful lack of equipment in the beginning, and the unceasing opposition of the Roman Catholic clergy, the story of the development of this central educational institution for Southern Brazil, sounds as romantic as a chapter from "Gulliver's Travels."

The year just closing will go on record perhaps as the most notable in the history of our Brazilian work. Our national convention, which took place in Rio de Janeiro in June was the largest, the most enthusiastic, and the most important so far held. Every part of this vast field was represented. Some who came from the most distant sections required three months for the round trip. Never before have we been visited by so many prominent, interested and interesting Baptists from the homeland, among them Secretary J. F. Love of Richmond, Va., whose sojourn of two months in our midst, will, without doubt, greatly contribute to our future development. The visit of Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Hughes, for the opening of the great Brazilian Centennial, on Sept. 7, was looked forward to with unwonted expectation by Baptists, but, unfortunately, our distinguished brethren were unable to attend any functions outside of the government program, much to our disappointment. It is quite worthy of note also that the missionary reinforcements received during the year have brought the number of Baptist missionaries in Brazil up to an even 100, including both sexes, which should mean much for evangelical Christianity in this land where the Cross is worshipped rather than the Christ.

Brazilians are perhaps the most religious of the Latin peoples, and nearly everywhere they hear the Gospel gladly. There is much evidence of deep heart hunger on the part of the multitudes for the Bread of Life, and in some sections revival fires are breaking out. The future seems rich with the promise of a mighty ingathering. However, troublous times seem near, owing to the rapid rise to power of the Roman Catholic clergy, who are dominating every phase of the political life of the nation and making the constitution of the republic a mere scrap of paper. They are organizing their forces with the special purpose of opposing our evangelical propaganda. Already they have made it impossible to publish articles in our defense in the public press of the country, and no one can dare say that we shall not yet have a return of the inquisition in Brazil, which is just now celebrating with much pomp the first centenary of its political independence, in the presence of the honored representatives of all the leading nations of the earth, while the nation itself, spiritually, is being manacled, hand and foot, and made the abject slave of a power that for insatiable greed and heartless despotism, is without a parallel in the world's history. We do not forget, however, that He that is for us is greater than they that are against us.

Our needs? How manifold and pressing! But without doubt the most outstanding is that of trained native workers for the whitened harvest, and also that of intercessors in the homeland who, by their prayers, will help us to win out for Christ.

A Few More Orphans Make Triumphal Entry into the Near East Relief Orphanage Through American Generosity

Bring Them In—Keep Them In

What It Is Doing

64,107 children being cared for in orphanages, and more than 124 others fed one meal a day. 50,000 children in orphanages in Turkish territory have recently been moved to places of safety. 20,000 people are receiving training in the trades at industrial center. 87,000 hospitals are conducted and 59 clinics or relief stations with 148,728 patients monthly. 16 homes have been established for women rescued from harems. 118,000 acres of land are under Near East control by Government grant for agricultural training, and for crops. 25,000 tons of food, clothing and supplies were sent last year valued $5,000,000 $73,000,000 in money has been raised to date for food, clothing and supplies. 300 American Relief workers are engaged, part of them volunteering their services.

What You Can Do

You can help, and every American ought to help. No other country is in a position to give much to rescue these ancient Christian races from extermination. To America alone can these people look for relief. 1,000,000 lives have been saved, it is estimated by the work of Near East Relief since it was organized in 1915, the date of the first recent Armenian massacres. 1,250,000 refugees are now fleeing for their lives. Another 1,250,000 are in imminent peril, and may be compelled to evacuate their homes.

Remember January 21st

The ARMENIAN CHRISTMAS SUNDAY, January 21st, is recommended by the Baptist Advisory Committee on Near East Relief as a Field Day on which this worthy cause may be presented and offerings received in our churches and Sunday Schools.

This date is for those that are not cooperating in a Community Campaign on another date.

This appeal is being combined with our appeal for European Relief. Offerings will be divided between the two causes.

The Northern Baptist Convention, Foreign Mission Society, and the American Baptist Publication Society, all heartily endorse the Near East Relief.

Fill in pledge below and mail to the Foreign Mission Society, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York, or to the Baptist State Collecting Agent. (Your Near East gift percentage will be sent to the National Near East Relief to be allocated back to your state and community.)

Fresh from the Field

Harry D. Clark was ordained at Decatur, Ind., Jan. 2. The moderator was Rev. H. N. Spear and the clerk Rev. H. G. Hamilton.

Rev. Theodore M. Hofmeister of the First Church, Greenfield, Ohio, has resigned after two and a half years of service and returns to the evangelistic field. His new address will be South Solon, Ohio.

Mr. George E. Fisher, well-known as organist and director of music at the Lake Avenue Church, Rochester, has by vote of the trustees been granted a leave of absence for one year. He will go abroad for special study. He has served the Lake Avenue Church thirty-one years and has made a great contribution to its work. He sailed from New York Jan. 11.

The Alaska Agricultural College and School of Mines began its first year's work in September. It is the first technical school to be established in Alaska and the most northern institution of its kind. It is located at Fairbanks. It is gratifying to know that with these increased educational facilities the Christian churches are keeping pace in promoting the moral and religious training of the people of that great country.

In July we printed a report of the Sunday school convention which was held in Kansas City. Our correspondent quoted Dr. Ralph E. Diffendorfer of New York as follows: "Thousands of American Indian girls and boys have no religious education because denominational agencies use the Indians to advertise home missions rather than make Christian citizens of their children." Dr. Bruce Kinney took up the matter with Dr. Diffendorfer who denied that he had ever made the statement, and he ought to be authority. Perhaps what he really said would not have made as good "copy."

In discussing new educational needs, President Harry Pratt Judson, of the University of Chicago, said at the recent convocation: "The new century needs new organization of college work. The only object of entrance conditions should be to test whether students can do the college work. Very much of the red tape should be eliminated. Graduation is too long deferred. The only land in the world where so much time is spent on preliminaries is the United States. Further, tests of excellence are too low. None should be admitted to college work but those who really want intellectual training and are capable of taking it. None should be permitted to continue in it but those who take it well. Learning in homeopathic doses is not of great value. An institution of learning is primarily for those who want learning, without regard to sex, or race or social status. Are we to conduct an institution of learning or an amusement park?"

The Ao Naga tribe in the hills of Assam is soon to have its first printed translation of Second Corinthians, Romans, Galatians, Ephesians and Philipians. The Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society has granted $300 from the Jubilee Oriental Literature Fund, as a revolving fund in care of Miss E. May Stevenson, for the publishing and printing of these Scriptures, together with five books previously translated and printed in the Ao Naga language. The first portions were translated by the Rev. E. W. Clark, and subsequent ones by the Rev. W. F. Dowd, the Rev. S. W. Rivenburg, and the Rev. R. B. Longwell. It is planned to translate and print the entire New Testament as fast as possible. Mr. Longwell is editing the work. The Lota Nagas, another tribe of the Assam hills, have not a word of Scripture nor a hymn book in their language.

Rev. Francis C. Stifler, pastor of the church at Wilmette, a suburb of Chicago, has served during the past year as the chairman of the Wilmette Church Council. The seven Protestant churches in this prosperous community have carried on throughout the year a publicity campaign. From the point of view of the churches, this publicity has brought very satisfactory results.

Rev. W. A. Elliott is assisting Rev. Chas. F. Mathews of the First Church, Topeka, Kan., in special meetings. The First Church, Ottawa, Kan., of which Mr. Elliott has been pastor for sixteen years held its annual meeting New Year's Day. The clerk reported the largest number of additions ever received in a single year. One hundred eighty-nine persons, ninety-eight of the number by baptism, united with the church last year. The financial reports were gratifying. $13,000 was raised for the New World Movement and $10,000 for the current expenses.

The sacrifices and generous giving of the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the "I Will Maintain" campaign brought the total income of the board of foreign missions and the board of home missions and church extension of the Methodist Episcopal church to within $380,000 of what it was last year thus preventing the necessity for a very extreme cut in the appropriations for 1923.

Rev. Alfred Stokes Watson, of Vine-land, N. J., began his work with the Market Street Church, Zanesville, Ohio, Jan. 1.

"Zion's Herald" "maintained by and in the interest of the Methodist Episcopal Church of New England," on Jan. 9 passed the century mark. On that date in 1823 there was published in Boston number one of volume one. Zion's Herald is a stalwart Christian journal and has rendered a great service to the Christian world.

On January 4, 1923, an ordination service was held at the Wealthy Street Church, Grand Rapids, Mich. R. K. Valentine, J. C. Witty, O. Van Single, G. Knoll and F. Woltz were set apart to the gospel ministry. Dr. O. W. Van Osdel preached the ordination sermon and Rev. John Betlem was clerk.

Takahashi San, a Japanese girl who has had Bible training in our mission schools, is teaching Christian hymns to the little girls in the factory at Himeji where she is now doing office work. At the request of the manager, she has been interesting these little girls in singing. (They work thirteen hours a day and have little relaxation.) The Christian hymns she learned at school were the ones she chose to teach them. The girls loved the songs, and wished to give a concert to interest the older girls, many of whom were much opposed to Christianity. Miss Amy Acock was asked to give a little Christian talk. The head of the factory not only gave his consent but presided at the meeting. The concert was held in the big auditorium of the factory and the

They Want It Every Week

In Rio Piedras, Porto Rico, there is a missionary training school. Martha Howell says, "From time to time a copy of THE BAPTIST gets into our hands, either a borrowed or a passed on copy. . . . Our young women students are able to take much of their work in English since English is so generally spoken and studied in Porto Rico now and they would appreciate THE BAPTIST every week." Who will provide a copy of THE BAPTIST for these future Baptist workers in Porto Rico?

Killam's Kollum

Real Missionary Work

Rev. Herbert Ford, missionary in charge of the Caguss-Cayey district in Porto Rico writes: "I wish our native pastors could have THE BAPTIST regularly. Nothing that I can think of would keep them more in touch with the denominational program and stimulate them to share in it. If you could find some one to pay for even ten or twelve it would be a great help. I will send the names. These men have very meager salaries." Find some one! Of course we can. Our Baptist folks act when they see a real opportunity for service. We shall expect to send to every native pastor who reads English a subscription to THE BAPTIST for one year. Who will care for the training school and these pastors? If your check is too late to fill this particular need we know a number of pastors in the states who have been forced to discontinue their subscriptions. They know the lack of it cripples their work. We guarantee to place your money where it will do real service.

Is This The Answer?

THE BAPTIST offered six months' subscription to the individual giving us the best answer to Dr. H. K. Carroll's question as to the reason for the relatively small circulation of Baptist newspapers. He said: "It is a phenomenon for which I can offer no explanation." Our good friend T. M. Blakslee of Ames, Iowa, sends the first answer. "The Baptist press is a species of the same genus as our educational institutions. For a time Baptists said: 'We have a Baptist Bible.' That is enough. Others need an educated ministry to explain why they do not follow New Testament teachings. Unfortunately this view still lingers in some quarters. The attitude of some Baptists toward our denominational press for which Dr. Carroll wishes us to account is a milder form of the view of Primitive Baptists, who about the year 1835 split off from the regular Baptists because they held that no authority for missionary societies, Sunday schools or theological seminaries could be found in the New Testament. The Baptist demand for New Testament precedent is good but it can be carried too far. The great commission has two parts. The first is the authority for Baptist missions. The second part for Baptist schools and press." This is a good answer. Is it the answer?

IS YOUR UMBRELLA READY?

Once upon a time the crops of a certain village were burning up for lack of rain. So the townsfolk all met at the Baptist church to pray for showers. And among their number was one little girl who really believed. For she brought her umbrella!

In This Our Hour of Need

The call goes forth to Baptist womanhood to pray. During the first eight months of this year the payments on pledges amounted to about four million dollars less than the sum due. And this at a time when the denomination is already struggling under a deficit from last year of over two and a half million dollars. We can pray this money into our treasuries if we ask believing.

FEBRUARY FIRST

has been set as the opening day for a three months' prayer campaign. Let the women gather weekly in groups before prayer meetings or church services. But let us pray regularly, unceasingly, and trustingly.

Behold I am the Lord; is there anything too hard for me?—Jer. 32:27 audience of 1000 factory "hands" gave perfect attention. Who can estimate the influence of this one little Japanese girl in spreading the gospel of Jesus Christ!

Rev. W. P. Robinson has resigned as pastor of the church at Madison, N. H.

The First Church, Wakefield, Mass., extended a unanimous call to Rev. Harvey J. Moore of Keokuk, Iowa. He has accepted the call and will begin his new work Feb. 1. Mr. Moore began his work in Keokuk late in the year 1918. He had previously held the pastorate at Somerville, Mass.

The executive board of the Columbia Association has advised Dr. W. C. Bitting, corresponding secretary of the Northern Baptist Convention, that it is impossible for Washington to entertain the annual meeting next May. After diligent investigation W. W. Everett, chairman of the entertainment committee finds that there is no chance of having the convention hall in even a "near state" of completion and there is no other adequate building available for the sessions of the convention. This announcement will be a disappointment to many. The executive committee hopes to make an early announcement of place and time of meeting of the next convention.

The Colorado Baptist Bulletin reports that Rev. Clifton Fowler heretofore a Baptist minister and others associated with the Denver Bible Institute have at last come out into the open and revealed their purpose in attacking by wholesale leaders of our missionary organizations to the end that they might organize a non-denominational church in Denver. It says that several of the city churches will contribute a small number of members to this "non-descript, open door, free-lance organization."

The First Church, Madison, Wis., Rev. J. Sherman Wallace, minister, is celebrating its seventy-fifth anniversary. Among the speakers from out of town we note the names of Superintendent A. LeGrand, Dr. Vernon S. Phillips and Dr. Donald D. McLaurin.

Action by Executive Committee Federal Council of Churches at Annual Meeting, Indianapolis, Dec. 13-15

By W. C. BITTING

Reports from fifty observers representing the Federal Council supplemented and checked by the statements of representatives of economic, commercial and political organizations, make it plain that unless the United States comes to the aid of Europe the world is threatened with chaos.

It needs only an ordinary contact with continental Europe to make clear the fact that its political problems are fundamentally economic and moral, that the European nations can never meet the conditions caused by war, in which the United States was a participant, without the sympathetic counsel and economic help of the United States.

If, as seems not improbable, the nations of the world revert to pre-war policies of economic imperialism supported by rival armaments, then a new war is only a matter of time.

We therefore appeal to the churches to become centers of public education on the moral necessity of the United States assuming its full share of responsibility in international tasks.

Our government should either avail itself of existing provisions for organized international cooperation or present some better way.

We believe that the United States should definitely associate itself with the International Court of Justice now established at the Hague, in which we see the consummation of many decades of American desires and efforts for international peace through justice based on law.

We urge that the United States also associate itself fully, without delay, with the humanitarian commissions of the League of Nations, now affording the most effective agency for dealing with the immediate non-political tasks confronting all Christian people.

We voice the gratitude of the churches of America for the success attending the conference on limitation of armament convened by our government and we urge our government to take steps towards the convening of a second conference to deal with the economic reconstruction of the western world.

Above all would we declare that the hope of a warless world does not rest on organizations and conferences alone. Back of economic and political disorders lie fear, suspicion and selfishness. The ultimate remedy for such evils must be spiritual. The nations of the world must be brought to accept a new way of life, the one revealed by our Lord Jesus Christ. They must learn that to give justice is better and wiser than to fight for rights.

The Baptist

The Day

TO the German militarist of a decade ago, it is said, the words Der Tag meant but one thing, the day when the imperial plans for the triumph of his country should culminate in victory. To the maiden the Day means but one thing, the time set amid the roses of June for her wedding. And to the Christian who takes his religion at all seriously the words have but one meaning—what the apostle calls “the day of salvation.” The Christian looks back to his own conversion-day, that time when for him all life’s purposes and significance were transformed, when

“With that stoop of the soul which in bending up—raises it too,
The submission of man’s nothing-perfect to God’s all-complete,”

he took Jesus Christ into his life as Saviour, Lord, Master of his soul.

But there is another aspect of the phrase; the day of salvation which means so much to the Christian himself must, by some subtle necessity of his very being, be brought also to his brother, to his dear child, to his neighbor, to the stranger, to the alien. Christianity which does not propagate itself must die, rather—it is dead! It is of the very nature of salvation that it urges us to seek the saving of another and another as long as any soul wanders his sad and Christless way. This month of January for some of us brings our conversion-anniversary and to all of us it brings New Year solemnity and contrition, and resolutions to make our religion a more vital force in our own lives and in other lives.

On the first Sunday of the present month in one of our oldest and largest Chicago churches, at its morning service overflowing into the galleries, the pastor was somehow moved to abandon his sermon, inviting the congregation to use the time in telling their Christian experience. A wonderful hour ensued; gray-haired men and women, vigorous young people, and children eagerly rose here and there over the church, each with his personal story; voices long silent tremblingly joined in, and the meeting so unexpected and unprecedented for such a time and place could scarcely be closed for the communion service which was to follow. But in that service, we may be sure, as to the travelers to Emmaus, with hearts burning within them Christ “was made known to them in the breaking of the bread.” How we wish we could have been there on that Lord’s Day morning!

The opening weeks of each new year are, in the experience of the churches, found to be the time above all others for the work of evangelism, for bringing the issue of salvation appealingly and effectively before those who have never committed themselves to Christ. The distractions of the holiday season are past; the coming of a new year with tolling midnight bell and shrilling whistle has sobered and set thinking many a heedless or preoccupied soul; the inventories and budgeting and other planning for a new year of activity in secular affairs all suggest a similar survey of one’s inner life and its adjustment to what God and our own consciences tell us we should be. It is a serious and alarming thing that many of our churches are shifting the center of gravity in evangelistic effort to Easter time. For one thing it lets the precious weeks of natural opportunity and of the year’s fresh beginnings go by unutilized; for another thing those brought to a profession of faith in the spring have only a brief time until the summer lassitude, vacation distractions, and the slowing down of all church activities bring their severe ordeal to the young convert, and the “rally day” in October fails to reawaken in him the interest which had so slender an opportunity of becoming established.

A still more serious consideration is that the plan of postponing evangelistic effort until spring and then making it to consist largely in the gathering of those who have arrived at a certain age and who will consent to join their associates in forming a “class for baptism at Easter” has a tendency, at least, toward the conception of the liturgical bodies with whom the coming into the church is rather a matter of graduation at a given age after a catechetical course than that of an individual choice of Christ and of change in heart and life-purpose. It is not at all a question of sensational revivals and highly emotional experiences, but whether the new Testament conception of conversion for which we have always stood, the insistence upon clear evidence of a personal choice and experience of the grace of God, as opposed to the promise of a parent or the sacramental act of a priest, shall be abandoned or slurred over. It is well for us to make use for evangelistic purposes of the Passion Week and Easter time with all of their sacred associations, and to have the ordinance of baptism administered on that occasion, since we of all others have preserved the original ordinance with all of its rich symbolism of death and resurrection. But let us not postpone our evangelistic endeavor until that belated season, nor delay baptism, nor fail to have each candidate for himself give clear evidence of the new life in Christ.

THE true watchword of evangelism is that exigent monosyllable—NOW. The apostle, in words that go back into Old Testament time, declares that “Now is the day of salvation.” There are really no date limits to the offer of salvation that we can discover, save that in the constitution of the human soul the neglect of decision brings gradually an inability to decide; the pathways of choice become so trampled down that they harden into impotency; and not to choose finally becomes as fatal as to choose not to take Christ. This means that the earliest possible choice should be secured. The pastors who are making every week of the year and every day of the week, days of lookout for that psychological moment when they may win a new recruit for Christ and righteousness are the wise ones who, an ancient authority declares, "shall shine as the stars for ever and ever." Many of our pastors and Sunday-school teachers and whole-souled brotherhood men are doing that very thing. Our evangelistic department of the Convention is alert to that very opportunity and gives its aid far and wide to that end. There are many individual churches whose steady ingatherings and special seasons of evangelism, directed by the pastors themselves, yield in the course of a year greater results than many largely-advertised evangelistic campaigns. But there is a place for many types of evangelism, "that by all means we may save some."

It is a splendid thing to begin some special evangelistic work in the fall which shall continue throughout the year. Some of our churches have made their "White Christmas" to result in the gift of many lives to Christ. At any rate the year 1923 is a white page open before us; shall we not make it the greatest year for the winning of hearts to our Lord, and for the stirring of the baptismal waters, that Northern Baptists have ever seen?

In the Name of Justice

WHEN you capture the heart you capture the man. No conquest is permanent unless the citadel of the soul is taken. Out of the heart are the issues of life and many acts of human conduct can be understood only in the light of the individual's ruling passion.

What is it that keeps our ministers steadily and cheerfully on their jobs which, in many if not most instances, carry an altogether inadequate financial return? Laymen often fail to appreciate the motives which determine the answer to this question. A low type of vaudeville actor with a few crude jokes as his stock in trade will draw a better salary than a high type of minister whose work is a blessing to the whole community in which he lives. We often hear the minister charged with weakness or a lack of business sense in accepting a position which makes him dependent upon gratuities for his living.

We have lived in a parsonage. We have been privileged to visit the homes of more than 500 pastors. Take them as a group we believe them to be the finest, most unselfish men with whom we have ever had to do. Most of them with their training, their ability to meet people and present a cause could command more pay in other lines of effort. Why do they stick? It may be because of a sense of duty but this does not tell the whole story. They are enamoured of their task. They delight in their work. They have compensations which have no metallic ring. They have a passion to serve.

Many of our best laymen are coming to appreciate more highly the service of the ministers of the gospel. They are being told by modern business prophets that preachers are a greater safeguard to community and business life than policemen. Under these circumstances laymen will soon make it their business to see that the minister's salary at least compares favorably with that of the man with a star.

Future Denominational Program

WISDOM has been shown in the appointment of a representative committee on future denominational program. President Taylor was instructed to name such a committee by the Northern Baptist Convention in Indianapolis. Two sessions have already been held and the ground has been cleared for a comprehensive report at the next meeting of the convention. This committee deeply appreciates the serious and responsible nature of its task and has undertaken it in the spirit of prayer and in the sincere desire to serve the denomination. Elsewhere in this issue the chairman makes an appeal for two things: first, for the fervent prayers of our Baptist people. It will be necessary for this committee to appraise the present situation in the whole field of operations of Northern Baptists. The task also calls for a forecast of conditions at the close of the five-year period. The second request is for suggestions, for the committee desires to know fully the mind of the denomination. It is made clear that any member of a Baptist church within the bounds of our convention is invited to offer constructive suggestions for the future denominational program. This action upon the part of the committee will generally commend itself. These brethren are not charged with the task of shaping a program for independent corporations, which are to operate apart from the churches. They are to think through a program of activities for the churches themselves. The work of missions at home and abroad, of evangelization, education and various lines of social service, is the work of the more than 10,000 churches of the Northern Baptist Convention and these churches are now formally invited to have a direct part in formulating the plans for our growing work. The early appointment of the committee will give us a whole year after its report is made to familiarize the churches with its details.

The Political Prisoners

PRESIDENT HARDING has commuted the sentences of six of the sixty prisoners in Federal prisons for espionage. These men are to leave the country and never return. The matter of the release of political prisoners has dragged. Last summer the president told a representative committee of citizens who called upon him concerning the matter that he hoped to have all the data necessary to a disposition of the remaining cases in his hands within sixty days. The sentences of the men remaining in prison range from five to twenty years each. All of the European countries long since released their prisoners guilty of the same offenses. Are there facts concerning these men of which the public is uninformed? Are they guilty of more heinous crimes than the expression of opinions detrimental to the progress of the war? If so the publication of all the facts will save us from cringing under the charge that in their treatment we have an illustration of "autocratic democracy."

"He Never Quit"

A TABLET to the memory of Capt. David Thomas Hanson was recently unveiled at Northwestern University. It does honor "to an average man." The Congregationalist commenting upon this event says:

"Hanson had an average standing at college of B plus, but he failed to make Phi Beta Kappa. At football he played four years with the scrubs, but he never made 'the team.' He took part in all college activities, but he was never president of a club. But when the war with Spain came, he volunteered, while still in college. He took a postgraduate degree in medicine and entered the medical corps of the United States army. In the World War he went to the aid of a wounded man and was killed. He was awarded the croix de guerre after his death.

"In his address at the unveiling the president emphasized how Hanson played football year after year without ever hearing his name at the end of a college cheer; how he 'plugged away' at his studies without ever receiving a 'high stand' award; how he simply did his duty always and everywhere.

"This is the significance of the legend on the tablet:

"He played four years on the scrubs—he never quit."

"Brilliance has its place, but the church and the world at large are needing chiefly today the men and women who will accept hard, unrewarding tasks, with little praise and small encouragement—and never quit."

The Alabama Baptist Again!

UNDER the caption "Who Are to Remain Baptists Only" the editor of the Alabama Baptist says:

"Among our brethren in the North the Baptist camps seem to be splitting into various factions. Some are fundamentalists, others evangelicals, others progressives and others yet are radicals, or, as some call them, modernists.

"So far, in the South, there are only fundamentalists, but the fundamentalists in the South and in the North are quite different. In the North they claim to be the orthodox among the Baptists, but fundamentalism in the South appears to be a kind of coalition of the orthodox of several denominations.

"A queer thing about Southern Baptist fundamentalism is that it rails mightily at heterodoxy among Baptists, yet forms an alliance with people of other faiths whose doctrines and polity are clearly at variance with the whole Baptist position.

"It is a funny world in which we are living and strange times we have fallen upon. Incidentally we are wondering who are going to remain Baptists, only. We have heard of the Montanists, Donatists, Novatians, Albigenians, Petrobusians, Paulicians, et cetera (ancient peoples who held the Baptist tenets), and have wondered if the future historian will be forced to classify our people by this multitude of misnomers by which they call themselves at the present time.

"It all strikes this writer with positive and soulful pain. For just at the very time, and indeed the only time in the history of the world, when the united impact of American Baptists was to be brought to bear on all Europe and the world this internal strife began.

"And where has it all gotten our brethren of the North? No where. And insofar as the discussion has entered the South, where has it gotten us? No where at all, and will not get us anywhere.

"Just be a Baptist Christian, a good one, and let the wind blow the balance of the names by which Baptists are calling themselves wheresoever it listeth."

Factiousness Is Heresy

VERY few of the readers of THE BAPTIST ever heard of Thomas Gataker, but his words quoted in a book bearing date of 1645, given here in modern spelling, are a spiritual testimony applicable to 1923 and any other year.

"I love not siding in God's church, among Christ's ministers especially. I love not, I am for this man, and I am for that man: I am for this side and I am for that side. The Apostle himself liked it not, I Cor. 1:12. Rom. 16:18. I love not holding the faith of Christ with respect of persons. Another Apostle forbids it, James 2:1. I love not that any be tied to follow any one man, or any number of men whatsoever in all things. The Apostles themselves required it not in matter of fact, I Cor. 11:1, nor may any now living in matters of faith. Hence proceeded schisms, and factions and uncharitable censures, many times, of those as unsound, that are, it may be, more sincere, have at least as good a share in Christ, as those that so censure them. And surely if the words heresy and heretic were rightly understood, or if they be so taken (as I suppose them to be constantly used in Scripture . . .) the one for faction, the other for a factious person, none, I fear, will be found more truly guilty of heresy, or better to deserve the title of heretic, than those who . . . are so prone to condemn all as heretics, and tainted with heresy in their sense, that is, as men cut off from Christ, and having no interest in him, who do not in all matters of practice comply, or in all points of doctrine concur with themselves. Of their side, Lord, let me never be; let my soul never enter into their secret. Neither is it, nor shall ever be my desire, either so to pin my faith upon the sleeve of any part or party, or to engage my judgment to any mere man's or men's opinions (the pen-men of holy writ only excepted) as to admit hand over head, whatsoever he or they shall hold and maintain: nor yet again to refuse or reject any truth, which by the light that God shall be pleased to lend me, I shall be able to descry in the writing of any, though otherwise never so erroneous or unsound."

A few of the sentences are a little involved, but the main testimony is never obscure. Was a more biting irony ever directed against a complaisant orthodoxy—save by Jesus himself—than in the prayer, "Let my soul never enter into their secret"? Was any seventeenth century mind better prepared to face the scientific revolution of the modern world than the one which phrased the last sentence in the paragraph quoted?

Proof of the Deity of Jesus Christ

As shown in the acceptance of acts of worship and adoration recorded in the New Testament

By CHARLES H. FORWARD

I USE the word "deity" advisedly instead of the word "divinity." Formerly this word was considered definite enough but now some men claim to be divine, in the same sense as Jesus, different only in degree, but I think no one of sound mind claims to possess or be Deity.

As a Scripture reading and basis of the argument let us consider the second appearance of Jesus to the disciples, after his resurrection, as recorded in the twentieth chapter of John beginning at the twenty-fourth verse:

"But Thomas, one of the twelve, called Didymus, was not with them when Jesus came.

"The other disciples therefore said unto him, We have seen the Lord. But he said unto them, Except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe.

"And after eight days again his disciples were within, and Thomas with them; then came Jesus, the doors being shut and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be unto you.

"Then saith he to Thomas, Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side; and be not faithless but believing.

"And Thomas answered and said unto him, My Lord and my God.

"And Jesus saith unto him, Thomas, because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed; blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed."

The Master's question to his disciples, "What think ye of Christ?" was of the utmost importance when propounded and has continued ever since so to be and will so continue, at least as long as time lasts.

Three Views

I think there can only be three views taken as to the standing and position of Jesus Christ: either he was

1. A deceiver, or
2. Deceived, or
3. Was just what he claimed to be.

I think comparatively few at the present time claim he was a deceiver in view of his gracious life, his helpfulness, sacrifice, stern adherence to duty and his shameful death. Such belief takes from him any claim to reverence, worship or even respect.

The series of articles on "The Person of Christ" by Dr. Frederic C. Spurr has attracted wide attention and brought many warm commendations. As announced, this series is to be followed by others upon vital Christian doctrines. Some weeks ago we received from Mr. Charles H. Forward, an attorney in Wisconsin, an article on the deity of Christ as shown in the worship and adoration accorded him. We believe our readers will be interested in the presentation of the New Testament evidence by this layman.

If he was deceived, that places him in the category of weak, credulous mankind and excites in us only pity, and the results of his life since that time, imparting to others so much faith, hope and heroism would not indicate any such character.

His Claim

I think more and more as his character is studied that the thought of men is coming to the position that he was in truth what he claimed himself to be, and if his claim could be definitely ascertained most questions concerning him would be settled.

In attempting to define the claims made by him, however, objection is made that we cannot definitely determine what they were; that he left no written statement and no writings at all but that his sayings and claims depend to a certain extent, perhaps largely, upon the recollections of his disciples and the preservation of the same by them.

My thought was called to the line of argument which I am attempting to present by a remark made by a certain preacher that in the New Testament Jesus made very little claim to being the Son of God; and while I cannot understand why a student of the New Testament should make such a remark, I propose at this time to examine the acts of Jesus as recorded and see what they demonstrate as to his position. Facts can often be related with more certainty and in more detail that words or statements could be remembered. In the affairs of life the acts of men result in presumptions and some times in conclusive presumption, that they will not be allowed to deny by words and this is the thought I wish to present.

In passing, however, I think it well to call attention to the fact as recorded in the Gospel that at the time the persons to whom he spoke whether the common people or those in authority, seemed to have no difficulty in understanding the claim; he made for himself. Two instances will suffice.

Take one scene in the tenth chapter of John. Jesus had been speaking to the multitude gathered around him the wonderful words of the sheepfold and the shepherd and his power to lay down his life and take it up again and there was a division among the Jews and a discussion concerning this person before them.

"Then came the Jews round about him, and said unto him, How long dost thou make us to doubt? If thou be the Christ, tell us plainly," and as they stood listening he continued his lesson as before about his sheep and about eternal life and during his talk used an expression of just six words, namely, "I and my Father are one," and immediately that crowd of listening Jews became an infuriated mob. Stones were taken up and they stood round in a threatening attitude about to hurl them at him when the calm voice of the Master was heard saying, "Many good works have I shewed you from my Father; for which of those works do ye stone me?"; and the Jews answered him and it seems as though their reply must have come almost like the snarl of encircling wolves closing in on their prey, "For a good work we stone thee not; but for blasphemy, and because that thou, being a man, makest thyself God."

"Thou Hast Said"

Again, take the scene recorded in the twenty-sixth chapter of Matthew when Jesus Christ was before the council,

"And the high priest answered and said unto him, I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ the Son of God.

"Jesus saith unto him, Thou hast said; nevertheless I say unto you Hereafter shall ye see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of power and coming in the clouds of heaven. Then the high priest rent his clothes, saying, He has spoken blasphemy; what further need have we of witnesses? behold, now ye have heard his blasphemy, What think ye? They answered and said, He is guilty of death."

I. His followers did not permit such acts of worship to be accorded to them.

In the tenth chapter of Acts, after Peter had his vision and had gone with the soldiers to Caesarea to see Cornelius it is recorded:

"And as Peter was coming in, Cornelius met him, and fell down at his feet, and worshiped him. But Peter took him up, saying, Stand up; I myself also am a man."

"In the Likeness of Men"

In the fourteenth chapter of Acts, after the healing of the cripple, the people lifted up their voices saying, "The gods have come down to us in the likeness of men. Then the priests of Jupiter . . . brought oxen and garlands into the gate and would have done sacrifice with the people which when the apostles Barnabas and Paul saw they rent their clothes and ran n among the people saying, Sirs, why do ye these things? We also are men of like passions with you, . . . and with these sayings scarce restrained they the people that they had not done sacrifice unto them."

II. The Angel of the Revelation would not permit such worship. Two very similar events are recorded in the nineteenth and twenty-second chapter of Revelation.

"And I, John saw these things, and heard them, And when I had heard and seen, I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which shewed me these things.

"Then saith he unto me, See thou to it not: for I am thy fellow-servant and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of his book; worship God."

Jesus' View

III. It certainly is of the utmost importance to know Jesus' view upon his subject and we find it clearly expressed in the fourth chapters of Matthew and Luke in which is recorded the temptation in the wilderness and the devil taking him up on a high mountain and showing him the kingdoms of the world, saying unto him: "All these things will I give thee if thou wilt fall down and worship me."

"Then saith Jesus to him, Get thee hence Satan for it is written Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God and him only shalt thou serve."

IV. Jesus was worshiped very early.

The second chapter of Matthew states the visit of the Wise Men "and when they were come into the house, they saw the young child with Mary his mother and fell down and worshiped him."

The Upward Look

LIKE a precious jewel, God is lost amid the dust and din of the earthly. The qualities of faith, hope, courage and love are always the result of lofty vision. We only interpret the present in the light of the eternal and the local in the greatness of the infinite. These words of the prophet urge us to broader outlooks and larger judgments. However, they are not an invitation for us to become "visionaries" as there is practical work to be done. We are to win victory through endeavor, but attainment does not come unless there is the vision of victory. It is a vision in order to labor—not a vision to take the place of labor. If our tasks are to take on nobility we must have this lofty vision. When we apply this principle to God's providential leading, we see that God works on a great scale. His handiwork reveals a big design. The grandeur of God's work explains many of our perplexities. We are puzzled because we persist in the downward look. The upward look inspires us for the daily task. All great work has been done under the inspiration of the long vision. All who work for eternity have a vision, as did the cathedral builders of the Middle Ages. By this upward look we strengthen our own faith and resolution. There is One in authority who is near and dear to us. We have his revelation in Jesus Christ, in whom is revealed God's purpose for man. In Christ we are sharers in God's vast designs and all his promises. He is remaking the world. He is remaking man, and we have to place ourselves in line with his purpose. Look up and you will be lifted up! Your redemption and your destiny come not from beneath, but from above.—ARTHUR T. FOWLER.

I wish to call your attention to most of the incidents wherein he was consciously worshiped and observe his attitude towards these acts. Some of the times he spake, others he only acted. Nowhere is it recorded that he reproved or rebuked any one from worshiping him but seemed with dignity to accept the same as though he were rightfully entitled to what he had declared should only be rendered to God.

1. Matthew 8: "When he was come down from the mountain, great multitudes followed him. And behold, there came a leper and worshiped him, saying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean. And Jesus put forth his hand and touched him, saying, I will; be thou clean. And immediately his leprosy was cleansed."

2. Matthew 9: "While he spake these things unto them, behold, there came a certain ruler and worshiped him, saying, My daughter is even now dead; but come and lay thy hands upon her, and she shall live. And Jesus arose and followed him and so did his disciples," and the wonderful miracle of raising the maid from the dead was performed.

"Thou Art the Son of God"

3. In Matthew 14 is recorded the scene of the stilling of the waves and the ceasing of the winds to blow, "Then they that were in the ship came and worshiped him saying, Of a truth thou art the Son of God."

4. The fifteenth chapter of Matthew gives the woman of Canaan who appears in behalf of her daughter grievously vexed with the devil and in the scene it is described "Then came she and worshiped him saying, Lord, help me . . . and her daughter was made whole from that hour."

Clothed and in His Right Mind

5. In the fifth chapter of Mark is given that pathetic incident of a man with an unclean spirit whom no man could bind, not even with chain-fetters and chains were plucked asunder and he was always in the mountains and tombs crying and cutting himself with stones, and yet this disordered and disturbed personality saw something in the Master to desire "and when he saw Jesus afar off he ran and worshiped him." No favors or help did he ask and then follows that strange conversation, partly between Jesus the spirit and the man, which finally resulted in the demoniac "sitting and clothed and in his right mind."

6. In the ninth chapter of John is given the healing of the blind man who was cast out by the people and "Jesus heard that they had cast him out and when he had found him, he said unto him, Dost thou believe on the Son of God? He answered and said, who is he, Lord, that I might believe on him? And Jesus said unto him, Thou hast both seen him and it is he that talketh with thee. And he said, Lord, I believe. And he worshiped him."

7. In Matthew 28, the women after the resurrection ran to bring the disciples word: "And as they went to tell the disciples behold Jesus met them, saying All hail, and they came and held him by the feet and worshiped him." Then said Jesus unto them, Be not afraid; go tell my brethren that they go into Galilee and there shall they see me."

8. Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them, and when they saw him they worshiped him . . . and Jesus came and spake unto them saying, "All power is given unto me in heaven and earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

Let us return to the Scripture lesson with which we started which in some respects is the strongest incident related.

Thomas after the test had been submitted to him was satisfied that his risen Lord, the Conqueror of Death, was before him, to him the proof was enough and he addressed him as Lord and God.

Did he hesitate after using the quite familiar terms "my Lord" before proceeding with the rest of his sentence and statement "and my God?" We do not know. Thomas has been called the doubter, and by some has been quite severely criticized, but to him first of all, of those chosen as disciples, was it given to look into the face of his Master and see Deity, and unrebuked he made his great confession.

Value of Psychology to the Minister

An address delivered at Newton Theological Institution

By WOODMAN BRADBURY

IN THIS glad moment, with the seal of your faithful studies in your hands, I come to you with a novel exhortation. It is, Be a scientist. I mean this literally. I do not mean merely that you should exemplify the stern virtues of the scientist; nor that you should have an avocation, an interest in some favorite science. Rather I mean that all of you should study the same science, become first-hand investigators in it, looking on your parish as a laboratory and making your own observations, analyses and deductions. Do you ask what this science is? You have already guessed it, for it is that science which deals most closely with life and bears so intimately upon a minister's work—psychology. I urge this scientific study in the interest of more persuasive preaching.

"Know Thyself"

Because psychology is the study of human nature, it is very old; for men have always been interested in themselves. The Greeks said, "Know thyself" and that was the foundation of knowledge. Yet down to very recent years psychology was hardly more than introspection. It was a branch of philosophy, speculative and deductive, not a science in the strict modern meaning of that term. With William James and the laboratory method came in the new science, so revolutionary in its results, so unexpectedly fruitful in its applications.

These applications are interesting and important. Munsterberg shows how to apply psychological principles in the law courts, detecting perjury and false witness. Binet measures the various powers of the mind and gives tests that are invaluable for educators. Freud and his school cure long-standing ills of the body by healing the disordered mind. As the United States army sifted would-be aviators by psychological tests, so expert counsel can be secured today in any college for guidance into the profession for which one is best fitted. The business man has not been slow to see the manifold help which the new science affords him. Nor should the minister.

Let me briefly point out two truths important to the preacher. The first is that people differ greatly. There is wide diversity of mental constitution among individuals. In the old command, "Know thyself," the assumption is that from one you can learn all, that all normal souls are alike—which is now seen to be untrue. Souls differ more than faces. There is no uniformity. Within the limits of any congregation there is wide variety.

In a certain modern school where few text-books are used, a little girl very bright and intelligent in most lines, was unaccountably dull in other work. Psychological tests were made and it was discovered that the child had no aural memory at all. Her associative tracts responded only to visual sensations. Written work was accurately done but oral work was beyond her capacity. As a result of the tests her school life changed from the shame-faced boredom of stupidity to an eager intelligence.

No "Average" Person

There is no "average" person. If this class should form a ring, the average position would be the center a spot occupied by nobody. If, then I should aim an arrow at the average I would hit nobody. Has that ever happened in our preaching? As the aged Jacob saw each one of his sons "separate from his brethren," so the wise teacher must educate and the effective minister must preach with distinct individuals in mind.

We think of our sermon as a "message." God is its author, we say, and we are but the messengers. But I contend that the person addressed is an important party in the transaction. Let him not be overlooked. The recipient is as important as the author or the bearer. If the recipient has not received it is as if the sender had not sent. We must learn so to preach that every person in the congregation will get his "message."

Baptists Stand—

1. For the supremacy of the New Testament as the authoritative word of Christ, supreme because of his exclusive headship. No creeds, councils, church between the believer and Christ; between the divine Word and our obligation.

2. For soul liberty (not toleration). Responsibility only to God in religious matters. Freedom. No union of church and state. Voluntaryism. No state support. No persecution. No inequality before the law. No "disabilities."

3. For a spiritual church. No baptismal regeneration. Regeneration by the Spirit of God before any church ordinances, before the first step to church membership. We may be inconsistent in conduct and faulty in discipline, but we cannot be wrong in our conception of a New Testament church. Hence our teaching about baptism.

—Lemuel Moss.

Recall President Tucker's remark to a young minister who had just preached a singularly fresh, strong and well finished sermon: "You seemed more interested in your subject than in your people." A pointed and often needed criticism! It sometimes seems as if we preachers were preaching to ourselves. We forget that the figures of speech, the literary quotation, the scientific allusion, the philosophic question, so apropos to our own thought, so challenging and compelling to our own reason and emotion, may be entirely irrelevant to the particular people looking up to us for something understandable and helpful. "When," asked Henry Ward Beecher, "were we ever commanded to preach for the salvation of the sermon?"

The second truth I would emphasize is the small place that reason holds in persuasion. The latest writers show that desire is the root of action and that desire is most easily aroused by imagination. Of the three factors in persuasion—intellectual, emotional and imaginative—the intellectual is the least important and the imaginative the most. We flatter the rational element by making arguments and marshalling reasons; but our actions are determined by our desires.

Now this is of immeasurable importance to the preacher, for persuasion is essential to a sermon. The address is not a sermon if the persuasion element is missing.

Argument is of little use. It confirms those who believe, it leaves the rest unmoved. Imagination must fire emotion and emotion move the will; after which the intellect may come around with good and valid reasons for the fait accompli. It is no longer a cynicism to say that our reason is given us to justify what we want to do. We can persuade people only when we have learned how they are moved, what excites mental activity, what ideas will produce the desired emotions and what emotions will induce the will to act as we desire.

How can we learn this psychology of persuasion? We learn general rules and principles through books and reports, and we get specific instances in novels and biographies; but our chief and best source will be in our scientific study of the people that compose our parish. What do they live for, what are their hopes and fears, what excites them to anger or to sacrifice, what makes them laugh or weep? What do they love and what do they hate? What are they thinking about all day? We can learn these facts only by daily intercourse with them. Learned discussions with professors and conversations with congenial friends are no substitute. The preacher cannot reach the minds and hearts of his people until he knows them in their every-day clothes and their every-day minds. It is not enough to listen to them as they speak in prayer meeting or your own home, for there they are trying to talk in your language. Study them in the home and shop, the field, the office and the factory. Get them to talk. Yours is to listen and to learn their hopes, aims, thoughts, likes and dislikes, what amuses them, what they do with their leisure, how they regard their work, what they expect of life, what they want in life to come—these and all other opinions and feelings which are the accompaniment and environment of their daily living.

The preacher, then, must be a psychologist, a real scientist. By no shorter or easier method can he learn to persuade men. What matters it to be an eloquent orator if your eloquence falls on unhearing ears? What value in being a deep thinker if your thoughts do not reach the minds of your hearers? What concern to be a flaming prophet if your message cannot touch the hearts and wills of those who listen? Study the individuals of your parish, then your gifts of wisdom, power and imagination will wing your message straight to its target.

Broadus, lecturing here at our seminary on "The History of Preaching," declared that two qualities had marked all the great preachers of the ages, namely, knowledge of the gospel and knowledge of human nature. The former one gets in the seminary and from books, the latter from mingling with people. Become expert readers of the thoughts and intents of the heart that you may be skilful persuaders and great soul-winners. Two comments relating to Jesus should be placed side by side, as cause and effect: "He knew what was in man" and "The common people heard him gladly."

I Saw the Children Coming

ROSCOE GILMORE SCOTT

GOD gave me eyes of vision and I saw the children coming,
The children of the ages with their merriment and tears;
I marked their vast parading—some blew horns and some a'drumming;
I viewed the strong and eager and the timid with their fears;
The frail ones kindled pity and I paused to breathe a blessing;
I saw the mischief-maker and a madcap by his side;
And here a soft-eyed wee one to a doll her love confessing,
And there a sturdy soldier quite erect and prim with pride.

I heard a Prophet crying to a hundred generations:
"Behold the children coming to be kings of all the earth;
To bring their gifts of purity and love to all the nations;
To lift a thousand burdens with their touch of holy mirth."

God gave me eyes of vision and I looked upon the highway;
'Twas crowded with the children of the ages, faring forth;
And every moment's watching brought new faces from the by-way—
The brown-skinned from the south shores and the ruddy from the north;
The sea-born and the hill-son went a'tramping off together;
The prince-chap seized the pauper's boy and led him by the hand;
And near a silk-sashed maiden danced a lassie from the heather;
I viewed them coming—coming on—an endless band.

I heard a Mother, kneeling in the shadow of a byway;
"The children's feet are all unshod and unguessed perils wait;
For poisoned thong and jagged rock lie farther down the highway—
O little Lad of Nazareth, I pray Thee, come not late!"

The Responsibility of Baptist Laymen for Our Denominational Program

By FRED W. FREEMAN

IN OUR scheme of church management, which we hold to be that which was revealed by our Lord in the New Testament, it goes without saying that in all spiritual affairs of the church the pastor is unquestionably the leader. By the same token it follows in a free and spiritual democracy that no man can be a leader without a group to lead.

In all practical affairs of a denominational program, the most that the preacher can do is to inform and inspire his congregation. It is, and will always be, true that the measure of his success in such matters is limited by the response that he is able to get from the laymen of his congregation. Since a denominational program involves practical support in terms of money, it inevitably falls on the men of the congregation to set the standards of accomplishment in their particular church.

Many people have misquoted the text from the Old Testament to read, "Like priest, like people," when in fact it is "Like people, like priest."

No man can honestly face his duty as a steward in the kingdom of God and leave the denominational program either to the ministers or women of the congregation, or to the preachers and women. No program of a denomination can succeed that does not enlist the intelligent and devoted approval and cooperation of the laymen in their respective churches.

No "Men's Work," "Women's Work," "Preacher's Work"

The denominational life will be ultimately determined by the character and number of the laymen who participate in the making of the program and in putting over the program of their denomination. That is true, whether you think of the program in terms of the individual church, the local association of churches, the state convention or the Northern Baptist Convention. Any wise program among laymen will be based on the primary idea of all denominational programs from the local church out to the ends of the earth, and it would be a misfortune if any man conceives himself to be discharging his duties as a layman, if he identifies himself with some brotherhood or layman's organization having to do with what is presumably men's work only. There is no "men's work" and "women's work" and "preacher's work" in the kingdom. We are all kings and priests unto God and responsible to the extent of our ability for the on-going of the entire kingdom.

The greatest weakness in our present denominational program lies in the fact that so many of our laymen satisfy themselves as being fairly good members and supporters of their local church, who know little and apparently care nothing for the denominational program as set up in our larger state and national organizations. The crying need is for men of affairs to take seriously the responsibility of stewardship for all the program of the denomination and put themselves in position to serve where their capacities and opportunities qualify them for service.

It is extremely desirable that an increasingly large number of our laymen take an interest in our general denominational meeting which was never more important than for the period lying just before us, because we are now approaching the close of the five-year period covered by the New World Movement. At our next Northern convention we must look to the setting up of a denominational program which will take up the work where we find it at the end of the present program as designated by the New World Movement.

The experiences through which we have passed in this movement ought to qualify us for making a great step forward in the realm of cooperation. We should retain every element of good that this period has revealed and developed, and also should be frank to acknowledge the weaknesses and mistakes that this experience has revealed and developed.

It is preeminently the time for men of responsibility in the churches to take their fair share in the responsibility of making a program, as well as supporting and making a success of it after it is made. Much of our misunderstanding and lost motion in the past has been due to the fact that there has been a much smaller number of builders of the program than was necessary to carry the program over to success after it was made up.

The genius of our Baptist thinking and practice is that the constituency as a whole must understand and approve the program before they will be greatly enthused in the support of it. This fact, well known to all of us, constitutes the heart of the appeal for our great, strong, intelligent Baptist laymen to give the weight of their influence and a measure of their time and constructive ability to the re-forming and extending of a program which must have consideration and decision within the next year.

If this can be done generally and fraternally, our denominational affairs ought to have the largest support that they have ever had from our constituents. The world's need is so great and our doors of opportunity so wide and numerous that it constitutes a call of inescapable responsibility and duty for our laymen.

An increasing number of Rhode Island churches making the annual canvass in a way that is calculated to insure success. For example, a church sent a covering letter to its adherents breathing thankfulness and fellowship, outlining the denominational program and asking cooperation. Cards were enclosed which itemized the budget and solicited pledges for local support and the denominational program. Then on a given Sunday trained solicitors visited every member of the church and parish, and asked for a pledge.

About a year and a half ago Rev. A. B. Bowser of Ford City, Pa., opened a mission Bible school in an Italian settlement of 300 people across the Allegheny river. No religious work was being done among them and only a few of the people came across the river to attend the Catholic church. The small public school building was offered for the use of the mission. Mr. Bowser and several volunteers from the Ford City church have carried on the work faithfully. He has spent some time calling in the homes and has gained the confidence of the people. The Christmas exercises were appreciated by the people who crowded the building. Twenty-three of the Italian children gave recitations, their first recitations. A box of candy and toy were given each child. The work has reached the point where Mr. Bowser needs the assistance of a missionary worker.

Committee on Future Denominational Program

THE Northern Baptist Convention, at its meeting in Indianapolis, instructed President Taylor to appoint a committee composed of fifteen members to consider the whole matter of future denominational program, and report at the meeting of the convention to be held in May.

The committee deeply appreciates the serious and responsible nature of its task, and has undertaken it in the spirit of prayer, and in the sincere desire to serve the denomination. Two meetings have been held and numerous sub-committees are at work on various matters entrusted to them. Other meetings are arranged for the immediate future.

The committee desires aid and cooperation. First of all, in its behalf, I ask for the prayers of all our people. How urgent our need of "the wisdom that is from above"! Then, at the request of the committee, I invite suggestions. We want to know as fully as we may, the mind of the denomination, and any suggestion with regard to future policy from any member of any Baptist church within the Northern Baptist Convention will be gratefully received, and earnestly considered by the committee. Surely if we pray and counsel together God will make his will plain, and thus bring us into unity of spirit and action.

Replies to this request may be addressed to me at Hamilton, N. Y., and it will facilitate the work of the committee if they may be sent in promptly.

J. F. VICHERT,

Chairman of the Committee of Future Denominational Program.

Books that Interpret the Twentieth Century

"Great books do not help kill time, for they strive to give time and eternity a meaning."

By FRANK LEONARD ANDERSON

"AMERICANS mostly read books to kill time, to make more money or to gain prestige—the last also a version of money-making. Yet great books meet none of these needs. They do not help kill time, for they strive to give time and eternity a meaning; they generally despise money, because it fulfills so few needs of the human soul." . . . "The problem is not to make Americans read. They do read, terribly, gluttonously, narcotically. The problem is to make them read something better." Mr. Leon Whipple puts the above mirror up before the American reader in the November Survey Graphic. He has an evident strain of pessimism in his article. But there is a reason for that, easily discovered when one dips into some of the food for the mind that is served the American public according to the literary menu endorsed by some reviewers and publishers. And yet maybe the books that are most popular are the least valuable as reveilers of the deeper movements of the soul.

The books commented on in this article are but samples of those available as helps to the busy man or woman who wants to get in non-technical language and in brief compass books that can be called reliable attempts to make clear the great movements of today.

Not "Heavy" but Worth-while

The specialist's needs have not been considered in the selection of the volumes. The busy, thinking, wide-awake pastor, teacher in the church, intelligent business man, the one who actually wants to know the age in which he is forced to live—these have been in the writer's mind. There is not a "heavy" book in the list, yet they are all worth-while.

The list carries the major departments of life and thought, not being confined to books on religious subjects. This is done because in order to know even religion we must have some knowledge of the more general thoughts of men. He who knows only religion knows not religion. He who knows only science, knows not science. It is a pleasure always to introduce friends, especially those who have been helpful and kind to us. The same is true of books. The volumes named were not selected from a bibliography; they were chosen from among the books that the reviewer has handled with his hands, whose pages have been made his own by underscores here and there as his eye has caught the gripping thought expressed in the sentence. He was also given the coveted privilege of naming and noticing a few titles that have survived at least a half dozen years and still give promise of future usefulness.

I. Histories. The Great War made history a necessity. It started people on the trail of discovering causes of what was happening. They had felt secure just because they had not known the history of Europe since the French Revolution. Yes, they know about Napoleon—but how many understood what he did for Europe? They knew a few great men and a few great events but they did not appreciate the great movements leading up to the war—movements that great men and great events interpreted, but did not wholly bring about. The historian is appreciated today. Even a specialist in fiction-writing has turned historian. The popularity of his two volumes may have been due to the fact that he was able to use his imagination and personal prejudices with the same freedom from sources that he is allowed in writing his novels. A great historian says, "The roots of the present lie deep in the past and nothing in the past is dead to the man who would learn how the present comes to be what it is." There is the realm of history. It helps us to know the age in which we live. That is a valuable contribution. Willis Mason West in "Human Progress" covers the world's history in 700 pages written in a style as liquid as a brook. In 134 pages he carries the progress of man from his prehistoric beginnings till the Reformation. He does not burden the reader with details. He shows how the world's previous life and thought led up to what took place in Europe in the early part of the dedicated to the Allies is written from the world point of view of our history. The author is a master in writing history. He senses our unity as well as the great internal changes that have taken place. There is no paralyzing backward look for the golden age. There is change, radical change, in our history. Whether it is for the better or for the worse the reader must decide; the historian traces the movements with a sure, steady hand. Prof. Arthur Meier Schlesinger, of the University of Iowa, in his "New Viewpoints in American History" discusses such topics as the Influence of Immigration, the States Rights Fetish, Economic Influences, the Decline of Aristocracy, the Role of Women, the Riddle of the Parties, etc. We question whether a more thought-awakening or practical book on our history has appeared for a decade or two. In spite of a few unaccountable errors the volume can be read as an interpretation by a deep and thorough student of the American people. It should be said that he accomplishes his task in 287 pages.

The Social Problem

II. Social Science. Professor Ellwood in "The Social Problem" approaches the problem that influences all our thinking from the historical viewpoint, thus showing how many cooperating forces have placed it where we find it today. The biological, economic, ideal and educational elements in the solution are taken up in turn without overburdening the reader with details. The author emphasizes the ideal and spiritual as necessary factors in the solution. We know few better introductions to the subject than this helpful contribution to the literature that is becoming so cumbersome. The layman can read the book without fear of contact with the doctrinaire.

"The Physical Basis of Society" by Professor Kelsey, of the University of Pennsylvania, is more than an ordinary discussion of vital subjects that interest men today. Look at this list of topics: Earth and Man, Mutual Aid and the Struggle for Existence, Evolution of Man, Heredity, Race Differences, Sex Differences, The Nature of Progress, and so on. Those are real up-to-date subjects, and, what is more, the man who talks about them is an authority. The style and illustrations make the book live. The preacher can find more helpful illustrations for his sermons from this book than from the ordinary, uncertain homiletical magazine of illustrations—and more reliable, too. It should be read by all who, not having time to read much on the topics named, call for short discussions of what is so vital in the understanding of the times.

III. Religion and Ethics. The books already noted must not be regarded as outside of these two phases of life, although not so classified. Dean Willard L. Sperry, of Harvard, has not only instructed us in matters of theology and the church; he has positively made it interesting in the 178 pages of "The Disciplines of Liberty." He discusses such ordinary topics as: What Is a Christian? The Historical Jesus and the Problem of Religious Authority; Is Christianity Practicable? The Scientific Method and the Religious Spirit, in language as delightful as that of the most

A Star

WHAT is a star? We do not know—

A line of poetry; a strain
Of music; or a flame, blown, swept,
Caught up from some forgotten
lane;

A poor man's prayer; or but an act
Of mercy; maybe a wild rose
Which an archangel dropped before
The gate of Paradise—who knows?

—EVELYN HARDY, in Scribner's.

sixteenth century. Dr. West shows his appreciation of the meaning of the French Revolution and Napoleonic era for the history of Europe and the world in seventy-five illuminating pages. In thirty pages the author gives us the high spots in the history of England and the industrial revolution. When the reader has read those pages he feels and knows that a new force had been released that was more radical than the French Revolution in its bearing on human thought in economics and in politics. The significance of Bismarck and the organization of the German empire in 1871 becomes as clear as crystal to the student after careful reading. There is not a dull sentence. The world war and what followed is covered in 100 pages. His treatment of that event is what you might expect. He shows how the past history led up to it, and how the bungling settlements may produce another or other catastrophes unless the world changes its spirit and method in dealing with international affairs. This volume will not get the notice that the work of an English fiction-historian has received. But the reader can be calmer in mind as to the interpretations. Dr. West writes history.

The intelligent man of today calls for a world view of things. Dr. West's volume gives that. Americans call for a re-interpretation of their own special history. There are two volumes, each of about 300 pages, that can furnish this help. Prof. Max Farrand in "The Development of the United States" traces our history from Colonization to World Power. The book excellent of novelists. The book "gets you" at once and holds you till you are through. Then you sigh for more. You wonder how a man could put so much good sense in so small a volume and say it so well. If our theologians would do what Dean Sperry has done the fiction writers would have to improve, not only in their style but especially in the matter which they give. The dean has written on big, deep subjects in a manner that will make all his readers thankful for his service.

"What Jesus Thought of Himself" by Anson Phelps Stokes, of Yale, appeared a few years ago. The reviewer read it through—only 114 pages—and since then has suggested the volume to many of his friends. The human side of Jesus Christ and the divine side of Jesus Christ are the main divisions of his treatment. Under the last heading he speaks of Christ as the Master of the Past, Master of the Present, Master of the Future. He closes the volume with the words of John 20:31. The book will help many because of its simplicity of treatment in language that all can understand.

A More Than Ordinary Treatment

"The Experience of God in Modern Life" by Professor Lyman, formerly of Oberlin, now of Union Seminary, is more than an ordinary treatment of so profound a subject. Note the headings of the three chapters of the book: The Experience of God and the Development of Personality, The Experience of God and Social Progress, and The Experience of God and Cosmic Evolution. About fifty pages are given to each chapter. Not many writers have interpreted the real meaning of the immanence of God as Dr. Lyman has. To him God is the creative, transforming, guiding power in all and through all. It is a practical book that enlightens the mind, warms the heart and makes men courageous because God is with them.

"Christian Faith and Human Relations" is The Stephen Greene Lectures in the Newton Theological Institution for 1920-1921. The subjects and lecturers are as follows: The Christian Faith and the Family, William C. Bitting, D.D.; The Christian Faith and the Life of the Community, Dean Shailer Mathews; The Christian Faith and the State, President William D. MacKenzie; The Christian Faith and Industry, Hon. Roger W. Babson; The Christian Spirit and International Relations, Edward C. Moore, D.D. The subjects discussed and the names of the lecturers guarantee not only the timeliness of the book but its authoritative utterance. Judging by this initial series in the foundation, we are confident that much light and power will be given to the world from Newton. We congratulate the institution on this opportunity to serve in this special way.

There are two other books—older than any named so far—that we must at least name. Professor Arthur C. McGiffert's "Protestant Thought before Kant" and "The Rise of Modern Religious Ideas" are indispensable to the man who wants to know his own generation. These volumes are the foundations of such a study. In the first named the reader becomes acquainted not only with the positive contributions of the reformers, he also appreciates how far away they were from what we think of as modern. In the second volume one gets a clear statement of the changes that have taken place since the days of Luther and Calvin. One soon sees the difference between the sixteenth and the twentieth centuries.

IV. Evolution. Every one is thinking about evolution these days. Some mention Darwin, maybe as often as Paul. The papers in reporting sermons prefer Darwin material rather than Pauline. This seems to be a good time to suggest some brief books that explain what evolution is and what it means. Of making of books on evolution there is no end and much reading of them is often a weariness to the flesh—as well as to the nerves. One volume already named—in fact many of them—discusses the subject. But there are two books written by Christians who are themselves scientists. The one is entitled "Evolution" and is written by J. Arthur Thomson. It is a little book of 250 pages. You can read it through in a week by reading an hour a day. The reading of this book would help many to get the gist of the subject. Then there is "The Meaning of Evolution" by Samuel C. Schmucker, professor of biology in the Normal School at West Chester, Pennsylvania. The book is easy to read. There are no big scientific terms whatever used. A pupil in the eighth grade could grasp the meaning of every sentence. He is a Christian. He appreciates the permanent value of the earliest chapters of Genesis. They teach, he says, "that there is a God," "that this great God has created the universe and that he cares for his people." And "God . . . demands righteousness of his people." There are many other writers on this much-discussed question, but we have chosen these two because they are God-fearing men who know God and who try to find out how he works in nature and in man.

It is past time to quit. But if the reader knows what the writer has resisted in the matter of referring to other authorities or in the interpretation more fully of those chosen for notice, he would be sympathetic with the writer's effort to make this short. But the reader must not pity the writer for the latter has had a good time reading the books named. He does not pity the man or woman who reads what has helped him to understand our age. Of course it is not necessary to accept everything that an author says in order to ask people to read him. The writer is urging people to read these and other books like them, that there may be a better understanding of our day in order that we may intelligently criticize or commend what the day brings to our attention and that matters of vital concern shall demand something else than an innocuous neutrality. To be fair to the times we must know them. Books are helpers in our need.

Jesus Talks About Money—A Bible Study

By HORACE T. HOUF

CHRISTIANS have found from the study of the Bible and other sources that a few inescapable principles govern the Christian's conduct in the getting and using of money. These principles are: 1. God is the absolute owner of all things. 2. Men are trustees, stewards of the things of life. 3. This stewardship ought to be acknowledged. 4. Adequate acknowledgment requires the setting aside of one-tenth for kingdom uses, and the administering of the remainder as a trust from God. These principles are firmly rooted in the teaching of Jesus. Since for the Christian he is the final authority it is profitable to learn what he says when he talks about money. The unflinching use of our money as the stewards of God is his requirement. He states in various ways the need for stewardship.

1. Gratitude prompts it. Jesus believed that since God has done so much in every way for Christians they must in return do their best for him and their brothers. Paul saw this clearly and stated it in II Cor. 8:7-9: "You know the grace of Christ that though he was rich, for your sakes he became poor that through his poverty you might be rich." Jesus many times urged this motive upon his followers. God does thus and so. Believers must be like him. In Matt. 10:8, when sending the twelve out to preach and heal, he said, "Freely ye have received, freely give." What God had done for them merited passing on to others in need. Again in Matt. 18:23-34, he tells of a king who came to deal with two of his debtors. One heavy debtor was in dire straits and sought leniency. He got it. Then he refused leniency to one indebted to him. In refusing to act in a kingly manner himself he forfeited the kindness of the king. So said Jesus, does the receiver of God's goodness who withholds it from others. If we honestly appreciate God's many goodnesses to us, we must pass them on.

2. Others need it. To Jesus the needs of others were a claim of God. The way to please him was to feed the hungry and clothe the naked. All are so entirely receivers from God that the sharing of what we have is natural and necessary. The refusal to share involves us in ingratitude, unbrotherliness and unwillingness to further God's program of relief and redemption. In Luke 16:19-31 Jesus tells of the consequences of such hard selfishness. Perhaps Dives was not responsible for the woes of Lazarus. The point is, he did nothing to relieve them. Inevitably he reaped the fruits of his callousness and neglect. The needs of others require our stewardship.

3. You need it. But Lazarus was not the only needy person in the transaction. Dives needed Lazarus about as much as Lazarus needed him. When those who have, refuse their obligations to those who have not, they thereby reject their own opportunities for keeping their own souls alive. The beggar was a godsend, as things then stood, if only Dives could have seen it. When we get and harbor for ourselves, disregarding the needs of the less fortunate, we shrivel our souls and dry up the fountains of life within us. Jesus clearly taught it in Luke 12:15-21 where he tells of the foolish rich farmer and what he came to before God. We dare not refuse our stewardship if we are keen to grow in spirit and in life.

4. Common shrewdness demands stewardship. No man who takes life seriously is willing to fritter away the golden hours of his days as they come and go. They are precious because they are potential in so many ways. No man willingly allows money he controls to lie idle. He sets it at work that it may yield a return. No serious man is willing to spare himself all participation in the burdens of life when his thought and energies are called for by a world in need. Jesus

Struggling On

A story of endurance and perseverance

By HAROLD GIBSON

STUDENT life in Russia today is indescribably wretched especially in Samara, Saratov and Kazan, where the famine has been ravaging, and is now almost as bad in the Ukraine, South Russia and Siberia.

The students of Moscow and Petrograd are undoubtedly in a better position than their fellow students of other universities. No famine conditions prevail in these two cities; employment is easier to obtain; housing is not so difficult and there is a fuller measure of social life. But even for these students life is very hard; the great majority are badly in need of clothing and many are quite destitute.

Food conditions are by no means normal because too little grain was sown, but what was sown has yielded a good harvest. Yet the consequences of the famine will be acutely felt. Food and all the necessities of life are very expensive; as the supplies are gradually used up they will become still more expensive, so that for most of the students they will be quite unobtainable. In former times the parents of the students contributed something toward their maintenance, and this allowance was supplemented by the students' own earnings in office work or the giving of lessons or something of that kind. Now the majority of the parents have the greatest difficulty in maintaining themselves and are quite unable to make an education allowance to their children. The other source of income is cut off by the fact that there is very little commercial or industrial activity as yet, and practically no one can afford private lessons for the younger children. These conditions have prevailed for the past two years and the only way by which the students have been able to carry on has been by the self-sacrifice of their parents in selling everything that they could possibly do without. Now there is nothing more to sell.

Government Help Limited

The government has helped a large number of students by giving them a monthly food packet and they will doubtless continue this help to some of the medical and technical students. It is impossible to give it to every one. The majority of students who have just assembled at the universities for the new academical year know full well that they will get no help from the government, that they will receive no allowance from their parents, that they have nothing to sell and that employment will be difficult to obtain. Faced with such facts it would not have been surprising to find the universities half empty. Some students have given up the struggle and gone to find an easier life on the railways, in the mines, in the fields or in some form of trade. The majority have come up again, determined to pursue their search after knowledge in spite of everything and just hoping that they will not ultimately be defeated by the grim struggle for existence.

They are prepared to do any kind of work. The men chop and saw wood, work as porters in stations and warehouses and on the quays, paint houses, act as night watchmen and in fact turn their hands to any job that will allow them time for study and bring in an honest ruble. The girls go out as washerwomen, maids in hospitals and other institutions, waitresses in restaurants, clerks in offices, workers in relief stations, assistants in shops. Having a surprising amount of energy and enterprise, many of them do heavy work which would naturally be regarded as essentially work for men. They even sweep snow from the railways. I know one attractive medical student who for some time paid her way by sweeping the streets. This is not so very surprising because this work is generally done by women in Russia, but it indicates how willing the girl students are to undertake any task which will enable them to continue their studies.

By these means the students hope to secure their daily food and some of them will undoubtedly succeed, but many of them will fail to get regular employment and for days the only food they will receive will be what their fellow students give them or what they can find in the streets or elsewhere.

And so they struggle on!

No Plans for Clothes

But if the struggle for daily bread is going to be so desperate, how do they propose to provide themselves with clothing? They simply don't propose. They have just sufficient clothing to present a decent appearance and they fondly hope that it will keep together for another year as it has done for the past several years. Of course if the winter is a hard one there will be many days when they simply cannot go out in their worn shoes and thin clothes; but then perhaps the winter will be a mild one; if it is not perhaps some one will lend them something warm sometimes.

So they reason with themselves, but the fact is that scarcely any of them can go through the winter without suffering terribly from cold. Very few have good boots, few have warm coats, not many have a good suit or frock; the great majority are short of underclothing and some have none.

Many of the cases of typhus among students last winter were undoubtedly due to the fact that they were unable to change their underclothing often enough, and the chalk which they had to use for soap was ineffective. Last winter it not infrequently happened that a few students pooled their resources, purchased one good pair of boots of large size and then arranged their work so that they could wear them in turn. These facts sufficiently illustrate the clothing question without going into further details, and it is only necessary to bear them in mind and picture the student so clothed tramping along a Russian street several feet deep in snow and with the thermometer registering below zero to realize how desperate the struggle will be.

But still they struggle on!

Looking for lodgings is always a weary business even in a prosperous country and under the most favorable circumstances. In a country where most people are in difficulties and the would-be lodger arrives looking distinctly hungry, carrying all his worldly goods in a very small handbag, having very little money and no certain remunerative job, it can readily be imagined that the finding of a suitable apartment is by no means an insignificant part of the struggle which is here described. The truth is that very few students do find a suitable apartment. Some of them live at home, and they are all right; some of them are housed in communal houses, and they are well off; but most of them have to find lodgings wherever they can, which often means sharing a tiny room with some other students or with some members of the landlady's family. These rooms are frequently in bad need of repair; unless the students provide the fuel they remain unheated. The lighting is of course an extra. So when the student has provided himself with food and some clothing he must find some fuel and light or else go without. He often goes without! First thing in the morning he can generally manage to get a glass of weak tea because there is sure to be a samovar going in the house, or in one near by; then he goes to his daily work. At four o'clock he hurries back to his lodging to get his dinner, which must first be cooked on a little iron stove which is thoroughly capable of filling the room with soot and smoke but quite incapable of properly cooking rye cakes and thoroughly boiling potato and millet gruel at the same time. At five o'clock he goes to lectures in a chilly lecture room. At eight or nine he returns to his cheerless lodging to try to study by the light of a home-made lamp. This is a true description of the life of many a Russian student today. To all this the shortage of books and the scarcity of scholastic material generally must be added. In some cases the students have been compelled to make notes on their class room walls; and in speaking of the shortage of books a well known professor of science said "One book has to serve my whole class, which makes the work unsystematic."

And yet they struggle on!

The Incentive

Why? Because their desire for knowledge is so real and true that nothing will deter them. They believe that their country stands in need of educated men and women. And so it does! Russia needs more doctors, more scientists, more qualified engineers, more teachers for an extended educational system, more trained thinkers in every department of her social and economic life.

It is these considerations coupled with the proved quality of the students as described in this article which encourages European student relief to believe that when these facts are known there will be sufficient funds forthcoming from the educated men and women of the world to enable them to carry on the work, which they have successfully begun of feeding and clothing the neediest of the Russian students, and supplying library and laboratory equipment sufficient to insure that the Russian universities shall be able to continue their work.

Probably one-tenth of the Russian students are living well; three-tenths are living tolerably; the other six-tenths are those who have been described as "struggling on" and it is for these that help is needed.

Are the Geisha Girls Slandered?

By DOUGLAS GILBERT HARING

IN a recent issue THE BAPTIST quotes Julian Street to the effect that missionary propaganda has ruined the good name of the Japanese geisha girl and the editor suggests that some of our Japan force take up the question.

Somehow Mr. Street's words have a strangely familiar ring. He has said nothing new. Those who like to whitewash obvious evils always blame religious workers for having discovered that something is not good and pure and needs improvement. Not long ago a bulletin published by the Girard Bank of Philadelphia assured us with (unsigned) confidence that the Chinese had already a beautiful philosophy of life and the missionaries were simply messing up the idyllic life of the Orient by trying to teach Christianity.

If my memory serves me right, the East India Company had the same sort of thing to say when Carey and Judson and other early missionaries began the planting of Christianity in the Orient. Some of the "good church people" of Carey's day, for similar reasons, thought Carey was doing wrong to try to preach to the heathen. The missionaries have always been painted as meddlers who represent the Orient as bad so they can get larger contributions from their home churches; then the accusers usually go on to state that, having received these princely gifts from gullible Christian people back home, the missionaries live in magnificent houses, surrounded by armies of servants and idling away their days in luxury.

Such Talk Cheap

Such talk is cheap. Any one can hear it in the smoking room of any ocean liner. Any one can hear it by visiting the clubs of the far Eastern cities and listening to the gossip that goes with the whisky and soda of our hard-working "missionaries of trade." One can get it by the yard from the returned tourist who never saw a missionary but is sure they are a bad thing for the Orient. The tourist might have seen a missionary had he tried, but missionaries are not to be found in the places the tourist visits, unless perchance his wife is with him and his itinerary is altered in consequence. Then there are the tourists who don't return; who prefer to remain in the Orient till police, or collectors of alimony, or outraged wives and husbands back home forget about them. There are those who have no desire to go back to America till prohibition is over or till bootleggers' prices come down and their goods are dependable. The Orient is full of Americans of these various classes and their chorus of complaint swells into one grand harmony when the missionary is under discussion. On that point and on the evils of prohibition they can all unite with vigor and picturesqueness of phrase.

I will give Mr. Street the benefit of the doubt and say that he has probably avoided all such people carefully in his Oriental travels. I know by experience that no white man can go through the Orient and altogether avoid such noxious individuals as I have mentioned; every boat, every hotel lobby, every club is full of them. But Mr. Street has doubtless seen through them and weighed their words with their personal bias in mind. Mr. Street has confined himself to the company of the business men of the other type—for there are many American business men in the Orient who are not fugitives from justice or alimony, who do not live on rye and rum, who are decent, honest Christian men. But I do not see how he could have gained his impressions of missionaries and geisha girls from the latter type of men. I have known not a few of this better class of Americans-away-from-home, and have always found them sympathetic with the missionaries, and also have discovered that they at least do not seek out the companionship of the geisha girls while in Japan.

So much for the atmosphere in which Mr. Street's opinions may have been formed. How about the geisha, the real point of the argument?

Better than the opinions of missionaries in the present case would be the opinions of Japanese subjects who had no bias either way. It is most significant that no geisha is ever allowed to be present at any function at which the emperor or imperial family, or members of the higher nobility are to be present. If the geisha be so virtuous; if she be as innocent as her little girl manners and her dainty appearance would indicate, why may she never gaze upon royalty?

During the Japanese occupation of Eastern Siberia, a certain Japanese general received a gift of cigarettes from the emperor, in recognition of services he had rendered. He inadvertently presented a geisha with one of these cigarettes and she smoked it with gusto. Result? A terrible scandal (for details see Japan daily papers of a year or two ago) and the degradation of the general in rank, with other punishments. The geisha hardly seem to be considered "good form" in high Japanese circles.

A year or so ago a book was published in England that was promptly suppressed in Japan and some other countries. It was entitled "Kimono" and has recently enjoyed considerable vogue in the United States. However one-sided that book may be in its portrayal of Japanese life, it has the fidelity of a steel engraving as far as it goes. It shows only one part of the picture, but one who has lived in Japan knows before he has read much of that book that its writer has a wealth of experience of Japanese life; more in fact than Mr. Street could ever pretend to possess. His picture of the geisha is far from alluring, and he portrays as well the horror which rises in the bosom of a respectable Japanese woman upon being likened to a geisha. No decent woman would think of wearing clothing, for instance, like that worn by the geisha. I wonder if Mr. Street can talk Japanese and has been able to hear and judge for himself the significance of the references to geisha in the daily conversation of all sorts of people? Can he understand the repartee by which geisha entertain their guests, and if so would he like his daughter to hear it?

Theory and Practice

Theoretically, the geisha are not prostitutes. But the regulations covering the places which shall be occupied by geisha are strikingly like those governing other classes of prostitutes, and the makers of the law seem to have the two closely associated in their minds. It is taken for granted everywhere that there are three classes of prostitutes, viz.,

1. The "Jigoku" (literally "hell") or unlicensed prostitutes.
2. The "Shogi" or licensed prostitutes.
3. The "Geisha," professional dancers and singers.

The theme of the commoner sort of Japanese novel is often the attempt of a poor, innocent little geisha to keep straight amid all the temptations of her life. She may succeed—in the novels.

A common joke in Japanese conversation is the fondness of the westerners visiting Japan for geisha and other prostitutes. The nature of this joke precludes the thought of the geisha as merely innocent little singing girls. I doubt if many of the people Mr. Street met would honestly maintain the virtue of the geisha. Either he is blind to the facts or his desire to discredit the missionaries got the better of him. I suspect the latter, for the missionary movement is under fire all the time from the sort of foreigners who infest the ports of the Orient, and it would be impossible for Mr. Street to fail to hear the common slanders against missionaries.

I have the privilege of close acquaintance with quite a number of Japanese and have heard their estimate of the geisha. It differs from that of Mr. Street, who is plainly more conversant with the tourist routes than the homes and conversation of the mass of the Japanese people. It is significant that more than one young man of my acquaintance has found it necessary to sacrifice his position on becoming a Christian, because geisha figured so much in the duties of his job. Were the geisha as innocent as Mr. Street suggests this would hardly be necessary.

Space forbids, and perhaps the readers of THE BAPTIST would resent, a detailed account of the geisha and prostitute system of Japan. I have at hand copies of the laws dealing with such subjects, and fairly up-to-date statistics that would be staggering in print. I am prepared to back up my statements against Mr. Street

The Letters I Have Not Sent

*I HAVE written them, keen, and sarcastic, and long,
With righteously wrathful intent,
Not a stroke undeserved nor a censure too strong;
And some, alas! some of them went!*

*I have written them, challenging, eager to fight,
All hot with a merited ire;
And some of them chanced to be kept over night,
And mailed, the next day,—in the fire!*

*Ah, blessed the letters that happily go
On errands of kindness bent;
But much of my peace and my fortune I owe
To the letters I never have sent.*

The Baptist Situation in Russia

THE Baptist movement in Russia started from two principal sources. The first was mainly German and had its rise among the peasants in the south; the second was mainly British, and had its origin among the nobility of the north. The churches of the first group bear the name Baptist. The members of the second group have preferred to be called by a name which is usually translated into English as "Evangelical Christians," but which really means gospel Christians. The word Baptist did not exist in the Russian language until it was introduced into the language recently by the Baptists. At first, the two movements differed more than they do now and were independent of each other. But now that both have spread all over Russia and both have churches often in the same cities, the question of union has had to be faced. Our brethren in Russia are anxious that the Baptists outside of Russia should understand this. We are not to think there has been a division where there was once union. There were two wholly independent movements which are now seeking to unite. They have worked out a common confession of faith and many other details of a complete union. It is believed they will ultimately be able to unite and go forward with great strength and enthusiasm.

The Baptists who bear the name Baptist have as their leaders, Vasil Pavloff, who has preached the gospel with great power all over Russia as well as in neighboring countries, and his son Paul Pavloff. It is difficult to get accurate statistics in Russia, but I feel safe in saying that this group of Baptists have in round numbers 5,000 churches with 500,000 members. They have a denominational paper, a book store and a publishing house. Their publishing house, which is at Moscow, was closed last summer by the government for some fancied violation of Soviet law, and was still closed when I was there last October.

The Baptists who are known as "Evangelical Christians" have in round numbers 3,000 churches, 5,000 preachers, and 500,000 members. Their leader is Ivan S. Prokhanoff. This group publishes several papers, has published a song book which is used by both groups, and has lately reopened a school for the training of preachers in Petrograd which now has thirty students and will soon have more.

Our people in Russia suffered much from persecution before the revolution. Many sealed their faith with martyrdom in prison or in exile. While there has been little open persecution by the Soviet government, there has not been unlimited freedom. Prokhanoff was imprisoned several months recently. The government has forbidden the teaching of religion to children until they are eighteen years of age. And the famine has taken a heavy toll in our churches.

In many places there seems to be a great hunger for the word of God. A new movement has sprung up inside the old Orthodox Church known as the "Living Church." It is difficult to know just how much of it is sincere. Some say it is a mere tool in the hands of the bolsheviks to divide the Orthodox Church.

France

THERE are two things of sufficient interest to be noted. One is the relief work the Baptists have done in France; the other is the meeting of the French Baptist Congress.

(1) As a result of the visit of Dr. J. H. Franklin to war-torn France early in 1919, the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society decided to have a share in the reconstruction program. The London Conference of 1920 decided upon a Baptist relief scheme for all of Europe. Since that time, though having no mission interests in France, Southern Baptists have generously cooperated in supplying the needs of those who were suffering as a result of the war. Rev. Oliva Brouillette, pastor of the French Baptist Church in Salem, Mass., who had worked for the Y. M. C. A. among the French troops during the war, was chosen to direct the work. In four places where practically everything had been destroyed and near where we had had churches before the war, ground was purchased and foyers were constructed resembling Y. M. C. A. huts. These places served as centers of a varied and helpful activity. Not only was much done to feed and clothe the needy, but the work of these foyers did much to keep up the spirits of those who, sad at heart, were returning to rebuild their ruined homes. This work made a deep impression and has been copied by others.

We have helped in the support of 1200 war orphans and several tons of clothing have been distributed. Farmers have been furnished with threshing machines, mowing machines, plows, carts, seed-sowing machines and horses. Maps and school supplies have been given to forty public schools. Christmas presents have been given to 5,000 children. Various persons who have broken down as the result of exposure during the war have been sent to the hospitals. Children that were undernourished and ready to fall sick have been sent for a few weeks to the mountains, always after a thorough medical examination. For this good work American Baptists have given already 1,107,875 francs which represents over $88,000. Brouillette is closing his work at the end of the year and returning to the states. Hereafter, relief funds will be administered by a committee of French Baptists.

(2) The Baptist Congress of France (we would call it a convention), which met Nov. 1, was important in several respects. The spirit of the meeting was good. There has been a spirit of revival in the devastated areas especially. At this meeting, twenty-four churches reported. There had been sixty-four baptisms. There are six students in a theological school in Paris. There was deep interest in the Cameroun mission. After the German Baptists ceased to work in this field, the Paris Missionary Society undertook to care for things. The society has already sent out one young French Baptist and Baptist affair there are kept intact. A representative of the society spoke at the congress and a collection broke out and over 700 francs were raised. The churches had already given during the year to this work. The laymen took prominent part on the program. A committee was chosen to act as a board for the coming year composed of four laymen and three pastors, representing seven churches.

Czecho-Slovak Conference

THERE are thirty and some Czech and Slovak Baptist churches and missions scattered in the North from Connecticut to Minnesota. These churches, besides being members of local English organizations, are united in a general Czecho-Slovak Baptist Conference of America, which meets annually.

The reports of the last conference or convention held in the Slovak church in Minneapolis last June, show a decided progress. The attendance of the convention was larger than ever before. There were 174 additions by baptism; total number of members is 1,751, with 2,388 enrolled in the Sunday schools. Total contributions were $28,244, including $3,972 for the New World Movement. Our people are mostly laborers and mechanics.

An important accomplishment is that our conference was reorganized on a stronger basis. We are for closer cooperation between individual churches. The strong must help the weak. A goal was set to raise a fund of $5,000 into the conference treasury. Out of this fund we are to aid weak churches, publish church literature, aid our students, and carry on the general work of the conference. An executive committee was elected with power to act during the conference year. The beneficial influence of this is already being felt.

Great stress was laid upon the choice of ministers and missionary workers. It was decided a greater precaution must be taken before ordaining a man for the ministry. Only men of sterling Christian character and fair education are desired. We ask our American brethren, where concerned, to cooperate with us in this respect.

It was proposed that our conference publish a translation of the New Hampshire Confession of Faith, but the motion did not pass, and the matter was left to the individual churches.

A Czecho-Slovak Baptist Ministers' Association was formed.

Much interest was shown in Baptist literature in which we are poor. Pravda (The Truth) a Baptist monthly published in Chicago became the official organ of our conference. It publishes articles in both Czech and Slovak languages.

Our greatest need is well trained, devoted Christian workers. Several of our churches are without pastors. We have six Slovak men in training at the International Baptist Seminary. We pray the Lord of the harvest to send laborers into his field.

We are thankful to our American brethren for sending Drs. Taylor, Jones and Abernethy, and Mr. Shephard to Czecho-Slovakia. We hear from our brethren that they have done wonderful work over there, and brought us good news.

With bright hope we look into the future eager to do the Master's will.

The Value of a Christian College

Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that need not be ashamed, handling aright the word of God.—2 Timothy 2:15

By S. FRASER LANGFORD

EDUCATION is a word to conjure with, but there are many who do not rightly understand its meaning. It is not the ability to use words of large dimensions. The other day a Negro came to a milkman and said, "Ah wants a quaht ob sanctified milk." "Huh! What yo' mean is pacified milk." "Look heah, when Ah wants inflammation, Ah'll specify."

The uneducated man when he finds the axe is dull puts more force behind the blow. The educated man sharpens the axe and lengthens his leverage.

What Is Education?

A true education in law consists not so much in knowing the law as knowing where to find it. Immanuel Kant taught us that man becomes man only through the process of education. And Huxley defines it as the instruction of the intellect in the laws of nature. Some years ago David Starr Jordan said, "The universities of Europe have shaped the civilization of the world." But he might say today that some of the universities of Europe have shattered the civilization of the world. It is of exceeding great importance, therefore, that we have the right kind of university.

True education has a moral quality attached to it, for moral qualities inhere in the laws of the universe. As one man has phrased it, "True culture impresses the whole man, and Christian culture represents the only ideal of education."

Mary Lyon, of Holyoke, was educated in the truest sense of the word when she said, "There is nothing, young ladies, which I so much fear as that I shall not know my duty, or that knowing it, I shall not do it." Paul stressed this in the text we have quoted; he showed us that education must be related to religion in his injunction "study to show thyself approved unto God." Those who try to think through the laws of the universe can't leave out the Great Thinker behind it all.

The Beginning of Religious Education

Beginning with the sons of the prophets gathered in the presence of Elijah on through the days of the rabbinical schools, persisting as a faint beacon light through the dark ages when Luther lent his scholarship and piety to that kind of work, down to the present day, there have always existed what might be called Christian colleges. In our own city we are fortunate in having one of these Christian colleges. Rightly understood it is one of the greatest assets which a city can have. It is true that it is a denominational college in the sense that it is fostered by the Baptist denomination and practically the entire responsibility for its maintenance rests upon that body. One of the largest contributions which the Baptists can make to the future of this city, and to the world at large, will be to blend here in happy, helpful, wholesome fashion religion and education.

Macaulay tells us that nine-tenths of the calamities which have befallen the human race had no other origin than the union of high intelligence with low desires. Man's failure to blend religion with education has brought this about. A true education must have the religious element. James McCosh tells us that Christianity has been the mother of all modern education.

It was during an interview which I had with a graduate of this university who was also a postgraduate of a great eastern university, that he gave utterance to this telling tribute to the religious value of our own local school. He said in the University of Redlands was maintained a deep interest in the religious life of the students. In the great eastern university there was no interest or supervision over the religious development of the scholar. It was not uncommon to see fathers supply their sons with liquor as they left them at the college gate; the professors had turned their studies into smoke houses, and there were regular trips of the bootleggers through the dormitories taking orders from the students. Gambling was common. The contrast between the two universities in this light strengthens our conviction that religion should be blended with education.

Is Denominational Control Helpful?

There are some, perhaps, who feel that the institution might be better if freed from denominational control. The relationship to the denomination must be sustained as the best means of preserving the religious element in education. But why object to the word denomination? If the denominator of a problem in arithmetic is lost, you have lost all hope of solving the problem. To eliminate the denomina-

*HE'S helping me now—this moment,
Though I may not see it or hear,
Perhaps by a friend far distant,
Perhaps by a stranger near,
Perhaps by a spoken message,
Perhaps by the printed word;
In ways that I know and know not,
I have the help of the Lord.*

*He's keeping me now,—this moment,
However I need it most,
Perhaps by a single angel,
Perhaps by a mighty host,
Perhaps by the chain that frets me,
Or the walls that shut me in;
In ways that I know and know not,
He keeps me from harm or sin.*

*He's guiding me now—this moment
In pathways easy or hard,
Perhaps by a door wide open,
Perhaps by a door fast barred,
Perhaps by a joy withholden,
Perhaps by a gladness given;
In ways that I know and know not,
He's leading me up to heaven.*

*He's using me now—this moment, tor of the Baptist conscience and Baptist sense of responsibility for solving the great problem of religious education, would be a calamity to be dreaded rather than a denouement to be desired. This university bars no student from its class rooms, whatever may be his creed or race; but students of other denominations, who desire to obtain its high moral advantages, should be willing to accept the university as it is—a Baptist university, for the Baptist ideals have been written into its charter and, more than that, they have been written into its character. To ask silence as to these ideals would certainly be an ungracious request and these ideals were never in such need of emphasis as today. We have historically stood for the Bible as our law and the container of our creed, and as our final authority in all matters related to faith and practice. R. B. Stevens paid this glowing tribute to the Bible as the predominating book in all literature saying, "It is commonplace to say that the best types of English and American literature have turned largely to the Bible for their themes and figures, and especially for their style. Tennyson is said to have over 2,000 references to it, and Browning 700, and Shakespeare refers to the Bible so much that many people cannot tell whether a given quotation is from the Bible or Shakespeare."

It is eminently fitting, therefore, that our university should have a chair devoted to the study of this Book of books. Baptists have stood for regeneration and the new birth from above as the basis of church membership. Such a theme is worthy of university study as it bears on the preservation of racial and religious ideals. They have placed this requirement at the gateway or church membership, just as the United States has placed restrictive tests at Ellis Island for all immigrants desiring to enter our land. They have believed that a pure church and a pure nation can best be maintained by requiring tests of admission, rather than letting the world into it like a flood. Just as surely as our national life will deteriorate should we flood it with the anarchistic elements of European society, so will our churches unless we guard the portals of their membership. Surely this principle is worth preserving. We ask evidence of the new birth, and when we have the evidence that men have passed from death unto life, that they have been born again, we admit them. The historic story of this struggle would furnish rich food for scholarship.

Water the Symbol

We have stood for believer's baptism as a symbol of the death of the old life and resurrection of the new. We have insisted in season and out of season that no priestly incantations or the sprinkling of the holy water can cleanse the human heart. Only the sacrificial love of Jesus can accomplish that end, and water is the symbol which pictures to the outward world the inward change.

We have stood for the separation of state—taxes from church support, and for the largest measure of civil and religious liberty. The historic significance and interest attached to this emphasis would be worthy of the research of the greatest minds of the denomination, and would be worthy of the endowment of a chair in the university for this purpose alone. Walter Rauschenbusch, than whom there was no greater church historian in the United States, devoted much of his time to this absorbing theme.

We stand for education and evangelism and world-wide missionary endeavor. The day is coming when we as Baptists are going to appraise these principles at their true worth. Forbid that we should hide our heads in shame and seek some isolated corner if men poke their finger at us and cry, Sectarian. If it be sectarian to have given Thomas Jefferson the ideas for his interrelation and federation of free and independent states out of a Virginia association of Baptist churches; and if it be sectarian to have inspired in President Warren G. Harding the idea of an association of nations, from the same association of Baptist churches, then let us be called sectarians but we will take the name given to us in derision and we will make it glow with a new significance. If it be wrong to maintain principles which have produced Charles Evans Hughes, Warren G. Harding, David Lloyd George, Charles Hadden Spurgeon, then we shall admit frankly that we deserve the name sectarian. We are not sectarian in the sense that we refuse liberty of conscience to others, for we have ever insisted on full and untrammelled religious liberty to all. These glorious principles ought to survive and be emphasized for their effect upon the world.

Its Strong Plea

The plea which the Christian college makes to the support of men is surely a strong one. First of all it provides an atmosphere favorable to the development of the Christian life. It would be difficult to estimate all the complex forces in the making of character, but in a Christian school, such as the University of Redlands, character is blended with scholarship. And though we are not ashamed of the splendid architecture of our buildings, and the up-to-date equipment of our laboratories, the personality of our professors still emerges as the chief asset of our institution. Mark Hopkins at one end of the log and a student at the other end of a log made a true university, just as did Louis Agassiz in a barn and the boys on whose impressionable hearts he inscribed the great truths that he had discovered in his study of nature. Some of you who are parents may be saying atmosphere is nothing, material equipment is everything; if a man can't climb over his environment let him die. But the same parent would not think of exposing a rose to the rigor of an arctic winter and saying, "Now then, if you can't bring your bud to the bloom you must die." Common sense would expect him to place it in a more favorable climate. Environment has much to do, not only with the making of degenerates, but with the production of Christian character. In a Christian college you will find an atmosphere favorable not only to culture but to character; not only upon intellect, but upon integrity. You will not find in the curriculum French novels so salacious that the pupils will rise up in protest against having to read the unclean. Neither do you find the human deities of the Greeks studied to the exclusion of God, whose wisdom is holy and undefiled. In the Christian university you will find its teachers blending moral instruction with the highest scholarship, and without timidity mentioning the superb morality of Jesus, and exemplifying in their own lives a humble dependence upon the Son of God as a means of attaining the morality which we admire. Here you will not find that the protest of those unfriendly to our religion avails. No race hostile to his glorious name can have power enough to eliminate the name which is above every other name. There is still fresh in our minds the doubtful triumph of the Hebrew race in eliminating Christmas hymns in the schools of New York City, because they contained the name which is above every name. Here you will find the Bible read, not as a choice collection of literary gems alone, but as the word of God possessing authority over the individual. You will find the authority of conscience recognized, and in the Christian character of its teachers you will find exemplified the lines of Tennyson:

"And indeed he seems to be Scarce other than my king's ideal knight Who revered his conscience as his king."

Value to the Denomination

Such a school as the University of Redlands makes a large return to the denomination which gave it birth. Recently the Baptists startled the religious world with their rapid numerical increase, now over 6,000,000. History shows us, says one writer, that a given denomination prospers in a given section just in proportion as its educational institutions prosper.

The president of an eastern college by careful inquiry found that four-fifths of the theological students and home and foreign missionaries come from the Christian colleges; or eighty and nine-tenths of our theological students and eighty-four and three-tenths of our foreign missionaries. One very prominent educational center in California gave but one minister to the Baptist denomination in twenty years; and to all denominations, including the Catholic, it has given but seventeen. And in those days it had a student body of between 4,000 and 5,000 students.

One per cent of our American men are college graduates. Yet out of this 1 per cent has come 55 per cent of our presidents, 36 per cent of our members of congress, 47 per cent of our speakers of the house, 56 per cent of vice-presidents, 62 per cent of secretaries of state, 50 per cent of secretaries of treasury, 69 per cent of justices of Supreme Court. One single western college founded in 1854 contributed two United States senators, two governors, three United States officers, four congressmen, twelve college presidents, thirty-two college professors, seven orators, eight editors, thirteen superintendents of schools, 101 public school teachers, seventy-five preachers, nine missionaries, nine generals, seventeen physicians, thirteen lawyers, forty-six business men, thirteen farmers, four Y. M. C. A. secretaries.

The Future

And may the day never come when the Baptist churches will lose their interest in it, or the generous citizens of other denominations than our own, who looking upon it from a broad, humanitarian point of view, deem it worthy of their support, but the chief responsibility for its maintenance rests upon us.

President O. W. Thompson, of the Ohio State University, said, "I express the deep conviction that the church will make a great mistake if it loosens its hold on the colleges; and the further conviction that there ought to be no change of control dictated by the simple desire to get money."

President Faunce added still another important word to this question of a Christian college: "The church may say 'Education is no longer in our hands'; and the state may say, 'On all religious matters we are silent.' The striking statement of this possible divorce of religion and education constitutes the reason for a Christian college."

The Stewardship Library

By WILLIAM A. HILL

A new library of eighteen volumes on stewardship has been added to the revised model missionary libraries prepared by the department of missionary education. This library has been selected after counsel with leaders in our own and other denominations and after careful study of the literature materials already in print. We commend this library to the consideration of pastors, teachers, churches, Sunday schools, reading and study groups. The library is classified and consists of the following books:

Study Books

- *"You and Yours"—Morrill. Revell, 60 cents and $1.
- *"The Spirit of Service"—Lee. Revell, 35 cents.
- "The New Christian"—Cushman. Epworth League, 25 and 50 cents.
- "Stewardship and Missions"—Cook. Judson Press, 35 and 50 cents.
- "Money the Acid Test"—McConaughy. M. E. M., 50 and 75 cents.

Story Books

- "The Victory of Mary Christopher"—Calkins. M. E. Book Con., 50 cents.
- "The Centenary at Old First"—Calkins. M. E. Book Con., $1.75.
- "Ganga Dass"—Calkins. Abingdon Press, 35 cents.

Stewardship Principles

- "A Man and His Money"—Calkins. M. E. Book Con., $1.
- "Stewardship Starting Points"—Calkins. M. E. Book Con., 35 cents.
- "Stewardship and Life"—Agar. Revell, 75 cents.
- "The Withered Fig Tree"—Potat. Judson Press, $1.
- "Enduring Investments"—Babson. Macmillan, 75 cents.
- "The Larger Stewardship"—Cook. Judson Press, $1.
- "The Message of Stewardship"—Cushman. M. E. Book Con., $1.
- "Life as a Stewardship"—Morrill. Hubbard Press, 25 cents.

Stewardship Experiences

- "Adventures in Stewardship"—Cushman and Belling. Abingdon Press, 50 cents.
- "American Tithers"—Saylor. M. E. Book Con., 25 cents.

The two books starred at the head of the list are the two books authorized and recommended as textbooks for stewardship study classes. The stewardship committee, appointed a year ago, has examined these two books and authorized them as textbooks on stewardship.

The Chimney Corner

The Spruce Tree and The Novelist

By WILLIAM M. CLEMENS

THE man behind the records asserts that there were 8,500 books published in the United States in 1921. One thousand of these books were novels and one thousand novelists, more or less, sent forth their romance and their chatter of love and daisies and moonlight and starry heavens and other things, like a cloud of winged insects on our defenseless heads. Very well! There is another side to the picture. Paper makes novels readable and salable. Spruce trees make paper. One spruce tree makes half a cord of wood, and half a cord of wood makes five hundred pounds of paper. A novel weighs a pound. One spruce tree makes five hundred books. Nine leading novels during 1921 sold in the aggregate 1,000,000 copies, and it required 2,000 spruce trees to make them. The other 991 novels of 1921 had an average sale of 1,000 copies each, or 991,000 copies. Say another 2000 spruce trees. In other words, 4000 spruce trees were carried off by the storm of fiction sweeping over the country from Kennebunkport to Santa Barbara.

"The Man of the Forest" felled 550 spruce trees in a single year. "The Portygee" swept away 750. "The River's End" destroyed a forest of 600. "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" cut 650 of the spruces, and "The Top of the World" took his little ax and 600 trees went a-toppling. But looking still farther backward, we find "Eben Holden" chopping down 1000 spruce trees, and "Richard Carvel" ruthlessly denuding our forests of as many more.

Our historical novelist is the acknowledged enemy to the science of forestry. He is making a barren waste of our beautiful woodlands. He is a harvester of stubble and brush and scrub land. His appetite for the spruce trees remains unsatisfied. And his method—the way he does it—'tis simple—simplicity itself. He takes his pen in hand. He writes:

Gadzooks!

A spruce tree falls.

"Their swords clashed!"

Two spruce trees fall.

"I love you, oh, how I love you!"

And the wind sweeps through the forest and the spruce trees groan. With every tear a tree. With every kiss a tree. With every drop of his life's blood a spruce tree bleeds. And when the fnis is written over all, still again the spruce tree falls.

The bureau of forestry is in despair. There is no hope for the spruce. The mills grind slowly but the books come exceedingly fast. The chief forester of the nation sees his finish. Novels to the right of him and novels to the left of him and the spruce trees falling to the north, to the west—ever falling. Soon there will be nought of spruce to fall, and gone will be the office of the forester, and gone his salary and his annual report. Save, oh save the spruce tree, novelist; put away thy pen and preserve the forests of our ancestors. For what bettereth a novelist if he gaineth a reputation for blood and history and loseth his last spruce tree? It is more wise to tear out the hair of the heroine than to pull up the roots of the spruce. Cut off the hero in his youth rather than the spruce in its prime. And look ye, novelist, promise to sin no more; give back our spruce trees and all will be forgiven.

—The Bookman.

With the Compliments of the Author

"NOW we come to a very singular matter. If one should be asked to state in three words the business of an author one might with fair accuracy say: To be articulate. And yet (so far as I know) no author has yet given voice in print to one of the most constant of his tribulations," writes Robert Cortes Holliday in the Bookman. "The matter is this—and any author, I think, will be glad to see it published: practically no one not in some way connected with the production of books seems to be in the least aware that an author does not have supplied to him quite free of cost an unlimited quantity of his own books to hand out here and there all day long. Not a bit of it. He has to buy 'em, just like anybody else.

"True, it is provided in the contract between an author and his publisher that 'the author shall be entitled to receive on the day of publication of said book' as many as perhaps six or eight 'free copies.' Any one who has a mother, father, wife, child, brother, sister and a neighbor or two can figure out how long it would take him to give away half a dozen copies of a book of his.

"Needles and pins, needles and pins; when a young person publishes a book (oftentimes) his trouble begins. What customarily happens? The great event is approaching. The entire family connection is on tiptoe. Yes, indeed; the remotest cousins of the author, each and every one, have been promised an 'auto-graphed' copy of what is abundantly alluded to throughout the immediate neighborhood as his 'first book.' That a long line of succeeding volumes is directly to follow is, of course, understood.

"Then there are all the author's friends among his contemporaries, and those elders to whom he is in some way beholden. He makes a list of them. My, what a number! Perhaps he can drop a few names. But this seems pretty difficult to do. Every one he has down, he feels, has in one way or another a part in his life, or has had a part in his life. Each one, as you might say, deserves a copy of this BOOK; no one of them, in a manner of speaking, should be deprived of his reward for being a relative or friend of the author. And then there are those (not a few, indeed!) who merit a copy in a somewhat backhanded way—persons who (he suspects) have rather failed to be aware of what he was destined to amount to. This is his hour of triumphal reckoning with them. . . .

"I have known of quite well-bred young women (of the literary hero worshipping type) who, having by the most casual of introductions met but the day before (oh my! fifteen minutes before) an author of the day, ask him, with glowing eyes, if he hasn't a 'spare' copy of his book that they may have. As lightly as though one should say to another: 'You haven't a loose match about you, have you?' And as though the person asked might reply: 'Why, yes; here's a whole bunch of 'em; I've plenty more.' Yes; it would seem that in many minds an author is pictured as having large stores of his own books under his desk, probably a whole room full of them at home, like a publisher's stock room. Whereas, in fact, I've known authors who didn't have a complete set of their own books. . . .

"Now that what has been said has been said, a good many people will know what awful things they have done. Many a young person will melt in her tracks from shame to think that she has asked an illustrious stranger to go and buy something for her. And many who didn't know that anything in particular had been given them will be aware that they have been made regular presents."

Further on in his interesting article, of which only excerpts are given here, Mr. Holliday speaks of authors who write more than their autographs in the front of presentation copies:

"One of the most entertaining and prolific inscribers of books is Mr. Chesterton. Here are a couple of his playfully serious inscriptions. In a copy of 'The Napoleon of Notting Hill':

"This is a bad book on a good subject; and that is a pathetic sight. The tragedy is that now I have once done the thing badly I cannot do it again well. I can only ask the reader when he has waded through all the weary melodrama and elephantine irrelevance of the writing to pause a little on the central idea and reflect how much better he would have expressed it. Then he will see with the eye of vision what I saw: the return of primal things, the village suddenly in the midst of a corrupt city."

"In a copy of 'What's Wrong with the World,' a most characteristic specimen:

"Somewhere in this badly written book the truth is really imbedded. I know it is there, because I put it there, but in going through it again I can't find it."

The Young Reserves

What the Postman Brought

HERE are three of the letters which are long enough to be of interest to all of us; sometimes the letters come without any address up in the corner. From now on I am going to keep a list of names and addresses of every Baptist boy and girl who writes me, so won't you please put your street number very plainly on the letter? It is fun to hear from you, and the letters which will interest all of us will always appear in these columns. Your contests about the people-who-carried-Christmas are just reaching me, so next week watch for the winner!

Newark, N. J.

Dear Miss Applegarth,
My sister and I helped "Rush a Ship to Russia." We gave stockings, mittens, some underwear and a blanket. I keep wondering who has them now. I am in the seventh grade and my sister is in the sixth. We try to guess all the puzzles you put on your page, and save our answers for the next time to see if we were right. My brother helps. He is old. He is fourteen. He is in high school, but he reads your page. We hope you will have a nice Thanksgiving.

Very sincerely yours,

Clarice Treat.
Boston, Mass.
Jan. 3, 1923.

Dear Young Reserves,
My name is Samuel Bryan. I live in Boston with my grandmother. She has a horse and a coachman like people used to have instead of an automobile. I had a very nice Christmas, did you? I had a sled and some skates, a big brown sweater and a cap with ear warmers. Then I had lots of books. I had "Hans Brinker and The Silver Skates," did you ever read it? It is about Holland and I liked it a lot. Then I had "India Ink-lings," and I like the drawings. It is about a girl named Machamma in India and a boy named Manikam, and I liked the hen, too. Most hens aren't so intelligent. I liked the chapter about the Tin Lizzy and the chapter about how grandfather ate his relatives. We took up an offering for India in our Sunday school and I promised a dollar so now I must earn it. I like this page a lot, don't you? I am,

Yours truly,

Samuel Bryan.

Milwaukee.
Dec. 19, 1922.

Dear Miss Applegarth,
Thank you for the suggestion, and I will do it. I can earn money in another nice way, too, for I have made little boxes covered with birch bark from a tree my father cut down. I nailed little pine cones around the edges and filled the boxes with pine tree tips and holly with a bow of red ribbon. I have sold four of them so now I have money for the Negroes. I think because their color is black Jesus expects us not to notice their color. I only have spoken to two in all my life, once our coal was brought by a colored man and once on the train there was a waiter in the car where we had luncheon. He was very nice to me. I liked the stories about the Negroes we had in Sunday school. Down underneath their color they are like us. I hope you will have a merry Christmas. It still seems a long ways off doesn't it?

Very lovingly your little new friend,
Margery Case.

The Exploits of Little Miss Missionary

Chapter II. The Boy Who Was to Eat His Grandmother
By "Bud"

LITTLE Miss Missionary felt as if her insides were being jolted out. The bullock cart went at the fast rate (fast rate for India) of four miles an hour. Little Miss Missionary was going to the village of the Three Palms. She felt rather excited because they were quite near the village but of course sedate little missionaries like she was weren't supposed to jump up and down from excitement.

In half an hour they were in the village surrounded by a crowd of eager natives. "Does your hair come off?" "How many wives has your husband?" "What are those baskets on your feet?" "Where did you get those gods that you fasten on your sari?"

Little Miss Missionary answered all the questions and when she said she wasn't married the proud and haughty Brahman priest said, "See, I told you she was an outcaste."

Little Miss Missionary then told a boy standing near to carry her trunk into a little house she bought. The boy turned red and said, "I can't" and ran off. She found out later that instead of telling him to take her trunk in she had told him to eat his grandmother. Finally after the hubbub had ceased and Little Miss Missionary thought herself alone she looked up and there stood the little Hindu boy that she had asked to do the ridiculous task. "Mem Sahib, will you please let me stay with you? I am without a mother and a father and am so lonely. I will do all your work for you." Little Miss Missionary suddenly remembered a little boy in America just like this one (only he wasn't so black and dirty) so she said "Yes." She named him Sahli.

The Denominational Race

The great denominational race is now well under way with 1700 entries. To date, Illinois leads all states in class one—states having more than 300 Baptist schools; Southern California leads in class two—states which have more than 100 schools; Montana leads in class three—states with less than 100 Baptist schools, and Buffalo leads all cities with 73 per cent enrolled.

Illinois State Bulletin reveals their spirit:

"Illinois is swinging into line in fine shape. We ran seventh last month and now we are fourth in the list of states. But the best thing about the campaign is not our standing but the great interest shown. At the beginning we had messages as follows: 'Our pastor is heartily in favor of this movement.' 'Assuring you that our pastor and I will do our best to put our school on the map.'

"Then came the first reports. Some conducted workers' conference on Oct. 3, the church prayer meeting for the school on the fourth and the banquet on the fifth, rally day on the eighth. Others make mention of a record attendance on rally day and new pupils enrolled as a result. Some are putting on a canvass for members; others are remodeling the school plant and creating department rooms. Some are bringing about closer cooperation between church and school.

"In some cases the school has grown so that new teachers were needed and for these special receptions were held. Some report larger attendance and devoted teachers. One school set a goal for membership and attendance from October to April. Evidently many schools were not accustomed to annual banquets at this season of the year and they mention unusual interest and work as a result. The creation of new junior and intermediate departments are fine features of the campaign."

Mississippi enjoys the unenviable distinction of being the only state in the Union which by constitutional provision prohibits the bequeathing of property to charitable objects. No person dying as a resident of that state can have his property by his own intention do good after he is gone. An attempt will be made at the next general election to have this situation remedied.

Young People's Work

Topic for February 4

WHAT IS THE CHIEF VALUE OF A BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION OR SOCIETY?

I Tim. 6:11-16

(BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S DAY)

The Object of the Organization

"The object of this organization shall be the unification of Baptist Young People; their increased spirituality; their stimulation in Christian service; their edification in Scripture knowledge; their instruction in Baptist doctrine and history; and their enlistment in all missionary activity through existing denominational organization."

Points of Emphasis

1. Unification. The young people's society, if properly functioning, is one of the greatest unifying agencies of the church. Here the young people of the various departments come together in a meeting all their own. They learn to work together for a common purpose.

2. Increases spirituality. Through prayer, testimony and various expressional activities, the spiritual life grows. The young people's society furnishes the greatest opportunity within the church for such growth.

3. Christian service. The young people's society is the training camp of the local church. The young people are not only training for service, they are training in service. The various objectives of the society furnish the necessary stimulus for Christian service.

4. Scripture knowledge. Through topic discussion, Scripture reading, etc., there is edification in Scripture knowledge—not merely the learning of a few passages for the purpose of quoting them on occasion, but an understanding of the meaning of the passages.

5. Instruction in Baptist doctrine and history. There are a few broadminded souls who do not consider it necessary to instruct our young people in these things. If Baptists are to do their share of the world's work, the oncoming generations must know what a wonderful heritage is theirs.

6. Enlistment. Baptists are interested in carrying out the Great Commission. Instruction in missionary plans and programs leads to an intelligent cooperative effort. The society furnishes an unusual opportunity in this regard.

7. Through denominational organization. There is no greater need in Baptist work today than that of pulling together. Deep-seated prejudices have come to the front; a non-cooperative spirit has taken hold of some; others simply do not care. Meantime, our great benevolent organizations are suffering. There is retrenchment in missionary endeavor. Faithful missionaries are kept at home. Why? In part, because Baptists have not learned the art of cooperation.

These pages are for all Baptist young people's organizations. Send news items on activities, organizations, plans and methods of work for publication in THE BAPTIST to James Asa White, General Secretary, 125 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Such a state of affairs is a challenge to all red-blooded young people, to grow a generation of men and women who know how to get on together, even though they do not agree in details, and do not like each other's methods.

Discussion Questions

PLACE OF THE SOCIETY IN THE CHURCH

1. Is the B. Y. P. U. necessary?
2. Can the Sunday school do the work of the B. Y. P. U.?
3. Can the organized class do the work of the B. Y. P. U.?
4. The place of the B. Y. P. U. in church activities?
5. Relation of pastor to the B. Y. P. U.?
6. Attitude of deacon to the B. Y. P. U.?
7. Attitude of Sunday-school superintendent to B. Y. P. U.?

ORGANIZATION OF THE CHURCH

8. How many young people are necessary to have a B. Y. P. U.?
9. How proceed in organization?
10. What is meant by the group plan?
11. Why have the group plan at all?
12. Difference between active and associate members?
13. Should there be many associate members?
14. Should the pastor be a member of a group?
15. Should the president be a member of a group?

16. Should there be an age limit?
17. What is the best literature?
18. Can the union do good work in a church auditorium?
19. What are the advantages of a special room?
20. Should the union have a library?
21. What is a standard union? Name some values.
22. When should a union divide into two unions?
23. Should there be more than one president?

Doings of the Younger Set

WE RECOMMEND: "That a continuous effort be made to win young people to Christ and the church, with special emphasis upon the subject of evangelism during the period of March 18 to April 1, 1923." (B. Y. P. U. Board Report.)

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETIES desiring to form personal worker's classes for a study of evangelism should secure a copy of "The Evangelism of Youth" by Gage. Order from the American Baptist Publication Society, price 75 cents. A careful reading of this little book will warm the hearts of those who should be about their Master's business.

THE B. Y. P. U. RALLY of the Collingswood (Ontario) Association was held with the Calvary Baptist Church, Nov. 24. Mr. Hodgson, president of the Inter-provincial B. Y. P. U., was the chief speaker.

THE STUDENTS of Broadus College have recently organized a college B. Y. P. U. This means that the young folks of West Virginia, who attend Broadus, will have a fine opportunity for religious expression. Congratulations!

THE MOUNT AUBURN UNION of Ohio conducts a study class on Sunday evenings just before supper. The B. Y. P. U. manual is being used and there are sixteen taking the course. After supper at the church, the devotional meeting is held with an attendance of about thirty-five. Try this on your union!

"EVERY UNION A TITHERS' BAND" is the slogan of the Baptist young people of Georgia. Mr. H. Lewis Battis is the efficient state secretary.

DR. J. D. SPRINGSTON, director of religious education, has recently conducted conferences on Sunday-school and young people's work in a number of churches in Arizona.

SALINA, KANSAS, has a week-day school of religion. It started Oct. 11. The first eight grades of public school are dismissed Wednesday in four groups. The children go to the churches of their choice for religious instruction. The Baptist school has reached an enrolment of 189.

One of the moving spirits in the Boston Convention preparation, is Rev. F. F. Peterson. Young people's organizations expecting to send delegates to the convention should write to Dr. Peterson, Ford Building, Boston, Mass.

Religious Education

The Problem of Religious Education

By WILLIAM PIERSON MERRILL

When a boy or girl goes from his home church to spend from four to seven years at educational institutions, and comes back disturbed in his faith and uncertain in his beliefs, out of touch with the church, it is not just or wise for the church to throw the entire blame back upon the college. Why did not that church foresee the problem that boy was to face? Why did it not present the Christian religion to him in terms compatible with the truth as it would come to him in school and college? The Christian religion is capable of being stated in such a way that it can live in hearty and self-respecting fellowship with modern science. And the church is not beginning to meet its grave responsibility for oversight of the souls of its youth, until it is going to the extreme limit of possibility in presenting the truth of Christ in terms that do not clash with the truth of modern science.

I speak out of many years of experience with college youth at summer conferences. I have found very many young men and women earnestly religious at heart, loving Christ and wanting to serve him, who have told me that it seemed utterly impossible to go back to their home churches and fit into the life and work of those churches. They would not be welcome there unless they would submit their minds to a yoke of traditional belief, impossible to be worn by any one trained in modern science. It is not strange that so many young people come back from the colleges and fail to serve the church, when they are placed so often between a static orthodoxy at home and a scornful agnosticism at college. It is the business of the church, for the sake of Christ and in the very spirit of the missionary enterprise, to put the gospel in language and thought-forms which will meet the needs of these young men and women.

In any church where the attempt is being made to hold knowledge and religion together and to show that essential Christianity can get on well with modern science, some of the older people, settled in their view, contented with the statements and forms they have always known, may grow restive at times over the continual stirring of these new ideas. Let them remember that one of the first concerns of the church is to minister to the growing spiritual life of the young. It was Christ who set the child in the midst. No preacher and no church is rightly discharging the function of Christian ministry today, who is not most concerned with the spiritual culture of the young.

We must take more seriously than we have the work of religious education in the church. In the present confused state of religious training, with the utterly inadequate recognition of religion in our day schools, it is impossible to overestimate the importance of the Sunday school, slight though its contribution may seem to be. It is one of the first responsibilities confronting every Christian, one of the first calls to which he should hearken, that if he have the slightest capacity for Sunday-school teaching or leadership, he shall give himself, in the spirit of Christ, to be used and spent in that work. It is a very grave fact that it is becoming increasingly difficult to get cultured, trained people to engage in this work of teaching the young. Christians ought to leap at such opportunities. Every one ought to be eager to get into this work of the religious training of the young.

We cannot forget that one of the significant elements of Jesus' own gospel is his interest and confidence in the young. "Of such," he said, "is the kingdom of heaven." We know that he meant not only that the children when they die go to the arms of God our father, he meant something far more immediate than that. He was talking of the kingdom of heaven on earth, and he was telling us that the surest way to bring that kingdom is to take care of the children. Sometimes there passes before one's imagination the vision of a world in which, whatever might happen to the older people, proper care was taken of the entire younger generation. Then one sees the value and meaning of that simple saying, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." There is no finer ideal that we can keep before our minds as Americans or as Christians, than that voiced in the great verse from Isaiah, "And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of thy children; and in righteousness shalt thou be established." Let us so live and so labor that that ideal may begin to come true in our land.—From a sermon preached in the Brick Presbyterian Church, New York.

The Seeing Eye

*A CURVE in the road and a hillside
Clear cut against the sky;
A tall tree tossed by autumn wind,
And a white cloud riding high;
Ten men went along that road;
And all but one passed by.*

*He saw the hill and the tree and the cloud
With an artist's mind and eye;
And he put them down on canvas
For the other nine men to buy.*

International Sunday School Lesson for Feb. 4

THE GRACE OF GRATITUDE

Lesson: Luke 17:11-19. Golden Text: Psalms 100:4

Introductory

The time of the lesson is March, 30 A. D., and the place, the "borders of Samaria and Galilee." The healing of the lepers took place on Jesus' last journey to Jerusalem. Luke's purpose is to give events in logical order; they may not always follow chronologically.

The Lesson

Wherever Jesus went the maimed, the ill, the outcast crossed his path. He never failed to see them. Now on this last journey to Jerusalem, ten lepers met him as he entered a certain village. Word had come to them that their village lay in the course of Jesus' travels and they were waiting for him. They stood afar off, as the law required of them, and together they lifted up their voices to cry, "Jesus, Master, have mercy on us!" In their common affliction these ten were united and spoke as one man even though one of them was a Samaritan, with whom the other nine, Jews, would not have associated in the ordinary walks of life. Jesus' answer to the appeal was: "Go and show yourselves unto the priests." Before a leper could again take his place in the life of the community, he must be pronounced by the priests healed. There was no questioning on the part of the ten. The fact that they were to show themselves to the priests assured them of healing. And "as they went, they were cleansed." Imagine their eagerness to get to the priests and receive the word that would pronounce them free from the most dreaded disease, and no longer ostracized from home and friends. But one, the Samaritan, paused when he saw that he was healed. There was a duty to perform, even before the cleansing rites of the priest. He turned back, glorifying God with a loud voice (the voice of one sick with leprosy is weak) and he fell upon his face at Jesus' feet in thanksgiving. But Jesus said, "Were not ten cleansed? But where are the nine?" To the Samaritan he said, "Arise, and go thy way: thy faith hath made thee whole."

Leading Thoughts

1. Down the years has come the poignant question: "Where are the nine?"
2. As they obeyed they were healed. 3. The one who took time to turn back received a blessing that the other nine, speeding to the priests for purification rites, missed.
4. "Thank you" is a little phrase that greatly graces life.

Our Own Folks

A Business Life for the Kingdom.

By WALLACE ST. JOHN

The literary and business interests of the extensive mission of the American Baptists in Burma have centered for forty-one years in the person of Frank D. Phinney. The mission initiated the literatures for the Szaw Karen, Pwo Karen, Kachin and Chin peoples and has done the bulk of the literary work for them all until the recent days in which various Szaw Karen publishing enterprises have been started by the Karen people. The Rangoon Baptist Mission Press has also entered largely into the publishing work of the Burman, Shan and Talain languages as well as done much high grade work in English printing.

In 1881 when Mr. Phinney, fresh from college, reached Rangoon and took charge of the printing business the work was being carried on in contracted, stuffy quarters near the river end of narrow Barr Street. One half of his stupendous and expanding energies were spent under these limiting and depressing conditions. The present fine building began to rise in 1903.

This publishing and book-distributing work was so general in its application to the many-sided activities of the mission and so central in its relation to the workers in Burma that it gradually became the nucleus about which the financial, legal and shipping interests for the enormous and varied operations of the mission gathered. Mr. Phinney became an expert machinist with the latest presses to set and keep in motion, with linotypes in various languages and the many problems of getting skilled labor done by the workers at hand, many of whom have to be communicated with through oriental languages. Only lately has he been supported by more than one or two or at most three American workers. He became an expert linguist and was familiar with the requisites of good printing in the various languages he was engaged in printing, though not used to conversation in all of them.

His treasury office became a bank and called for great familiarity with oriental and European banking principles and practices. Operations of exchange where considerable amounts of money were involved have demanded the closest attention of financiers during and since the great war. As attorney for the mission properties in Burma, Mr. Phinney was familiar with Indian law respecting property and represented the mission interests to the provincial government. He was able to secure these interests almost without exception by the friendliest methods.

Mr. Phinney has stood high in the circles of big business in the great port of Rangoon. He has been prominent in the board of trade. At times the provincial government has requested him to act upon important committees, notably the Port Trust of Rangoon and the Council of the University of Rangoon.

In his conspicuous business position Mr. Phinney was the representative of the Burma mission to whom officials of both the British and American governments were most apt to apply when general public matters respecting mission interests arose. He set and maintained a high standard in printing so that the job office has been overtaxed with orders for the best grade of work. The book salesroom has long been the best equipped and most attractive salesroom in the city. Missionaries have been delighted with the courteous treatment they regularly received from him and have rejoiced in the knowledge that the business and legal interests of the mission were being represented to the public by one whose manner was refined and gracious.

Notwithstanding Mr. Phinney's interests were so divergently and variously directed and his energies absorbed in great undertakings he maintained a scholarly mind. He was thorough in investigation and has often been asked to go into difficult questions and apply his methodical and penetrating mind to their solution and has done so to the satisfaction of all. At his daily post of duty he repiled with exceeding rapidity to the showers of questions that fell, but when an obscure problem arose he was the last to give up inquiry and did not close up his mind to any modifying consideration.

The most significant feature in Mr. Phinney's eminently successful life has been the merging of his personal and domestic interests into the interests of the kingdom. In the most complete sense he buried his life in the big business of serving a numerous people. To any one of the great banking or commercial companies of Rangoon his services for a decade would have been worth a comfortable fortune, but he lived in the most economical way on the meager sustaining income of an ordinary missionary and he did it most cheerfully. In the remarkable life of Frank D. Phinney God has added to the revelation of his will for men of great power and high motives.

The Country Fair at Shanghai College

By HENRY HUIZINGA

Thousands of people thronged the campus of Shanghai College all day Saturday to see the country fair. Most of them came from the surrounding villages, and it was especially for them that the fair was planned. Many came in motor cars and carriages from Shanghai, among whom were large numbers of the alumni and ex-students of the institution.

The exhibition consisted of a large variety of articles, from motor cars to rabbits. The Hudford garage, representing Messrs. Dodge and Seymour, had a grand motor car on exhibition, which interested the students and some of their rich friends very much; and if they did not succeed in selling Hudson Supersixes to the village people, it was not the fault of the cars.

A fine exhibition of sample seeds and farm products was displayed by the college of agriculture and forestry of the University of Nanking. Likewise the Southeastern University had a similar display, with samples of soils and fertilizers, and a detailed exhibit of photographs and samples comparing American and Chinese cotton, much to the advantage of the former.

Good exhibits of knitted work, embroidery and toys of various sorts that are made in their industrial department, were shown by the Yangtseepoo Social Center. The women from nearby villages, working under the direction of Mrs. Elam J. Anderson, contributed excellent samples of needlework to the show. Even the college kindergarten, consisting of country village children, and the Gate School, and village schools conducted by Shanghai College students in Shen Ka-hong and elsewhere, had modest exhibits.

The science department of the college showed the village people the mysteries of radio sending and receiving stations; and in another room had a food exhibit, with various kinds of edibles, among them eggs marked "One hundred years old," and priced "three for ten cents." (If the hens who laid those eggs had sold them for cash, and put the money out at compound interest, what a heritage for their descendants!) Several of the cooks of the American families on the campus had baked bread, cake and pastries for the exhibition, and those who got prizes were very proud of their achievement.

The department of biology showed us rabbits, guinea pigs, goats and a fine collection of fowls of the best breeds—white leghorns, blue andalusians, black minorcas, Plymouth rock, light brahmas.

The floral display of chrysanthemums and roses was beautiful. The laundry, the barber shop and the shoemaker showed their best wares and some of their working processes.

Perhaps the best exhibit of educational charts and models for the exhibition was sent by the Commercial Press of Shanghai. The council of health education, of 4 Quinsan Gardens, had also a useful set of charts.

Everywhere there were cheerful students who patiently explained to groups of interested country people what the charts and other exhibits were intended to teach.

In the afternoon large mass meetings were held both in the Science Lecture Hall and in the chapel. At the former there were moving pictures and at the latter there were the usual sleight of hand and other performances that always delight a Chinese audience. The alumni and ex-students, together with members of the faculty, had tea and social gathering at President White's house.

The crowds of people seemed interested and happy all day, and it is the hope of both students and faculty that the fair will help further to open the hearts of the people to the gospel message and to the educational efforts which the college is trying to promulgate in the villages around.

First Church Los Angeles

By Mrs. J. M. BROUGH
Eight years have passed since Dr. and Mrs. Francis began their ministry with First Church of Los Angeles. On a recent evening a large number of members and friends attended a church reception given in honor of the happy event. It was an hour of warm and loving appreciation, an hour of thanksgiving for these eight years of such distinguished leadership, and for such a gracious ministry of service.

In his anniversary sermon Dr. Francis said, "These eight years spent with this church have been the swiftest, most strenuous, happiest, and most fruitful years in my ministry. The troubles that other pastors report with deacons, trustees, Sunday-school officers, woman's and young people's societies, I know nothing about by experience. These have been eight years of loving cooperation."

When Dr. Francis came to this church, its membership numbered 734, today there are 1735 members; then, the church budget was $7,000, while last year $140,412 or $88 per member was contributed for church purposes. The year before the New World Movement $4,600 was with difficulty raised for benevolences; last year $35,000 was contributed for the Movement and more than $5,000 for benevolences. The outlook for the present year indicates still larger giving. Why this remarkable increase? The New World Movement plus Dr. Francis' ministry! Both by precept and example the pastor has led his people to such a clear conception of individual stewardship, that this church which is not wealthy, has become rich in vision and in treasures laid up "where moth and rust doth not corrupt"

The Sunday school is so large as to demand all available space even to the occupying of rooms in two adjacent buildings. Sunday morning congregations overflow into an adjoining room. Plans have been held recently, covering a period of ten weeks. Specialists were secured to lead discussions on such subjects as: Teacher training; missions in the Sunday school; music in the Sunday school; young people's activities; story telling. The Woman's Missionary Society of nine circles, has for its aim "Every woman in the church at work for the Master, and its motto, "Pray for powers equal to your tasks." This year twenty young women have united with the church from the Corner Club—our city business girl's organization, which is under the leadership of Mrs. Neth. During the last three months there have been distributed 800 copies of leaflets, "The Stewardship of the Unspeakable Gift," and "Criminal Tribes of India"; also many copies of the prayer cycle and Missions.

Highly favored has the church been in the ministry of its junior pastor, Rev. O. U. Chapman and his wife. They have the uplook, the outlook and the ever-helping hand. Miss Eaton, church secretary, keeps a thousand strings vibrating in harmony from her tower room. The spirit of loyalty to God, to the denomination, and to each other, is the wholesome atmosphere in which this great church family serves.

A Chicago Letter

By J. W. WEDDELL

What I have tried to do as Ohio correspondent, giving an inside glimpse of things for readers of THE BAPTIST, I should like to do just now in a way for the lakeside metropolis, the center of things generally. Having just finished a bit of acting pastoral work at Irving Park, Chicago, and seen a good man, Rev. Guy C. Crippen settled on the varied work of a thriving constituency, the writer has been free for a time to visit a little among the churches near at hand and learn anew the lines of our metropolitan work. It is almost a new city, since those days, nearly two score years ago, when as the first secretary of Baptist city missions I used to go about with the map of the city churches under my arm, helping to plant new branches here and there. That was the day of simple church extension. It is more akin to foreign mission work now, but under Dr. Benj. Otto's vigorous secretaryship has come to be the administration of a great ecclesiastical diocese—the Baptist Executive Council of Chicago, which is really the big association of Chicago churches in their broad lines of work. W. G.

Brimson is the efficient president of the council. The association itself is eighty-seven years old and numbers ninety-one churches in Chicago and near vicinity. Dr. R. N. Van Doren, moderator, has been succeeded by our layman friend, prominent in the Young People's Union, of which Dr. J. A. White is the general secretary, Mr. Edwin Phelps.

The Ministers' Conference

In former Standard days, when I was connected with that family Baptist paper of the West under Goodman & Dickerson, it used to fall to my lot, as junior to Dr. Justin A. Smith, our mentor of denominational journalism, the first thing on Monday morning to report the meeting of the pastors. It was the last thing that went in before the paper came to press, and with many the doings of the ministers was the first thing turned to when the paper arrived. People were interested in what was going on in Chicago. What was Dr. Henson doing, and Lawrence and Perrin? What kind of an overflowing congregation had Dr. Lorimer the day before? A little while before it was Everts, and Galusha Anderson, and Cheney and Parker and Burhoe and others dear to our hearts. Those were great days. We met for a while at 71 Randolph where Dr. Bladsell and the Publication Society were. Later at the Grand Pacific Hotel. What wit and wisdom were there! I remember one time the moderator had the temerity to reprimand Dr. Henson for coming in late to a discussion on pastoral work. The genial doctor announced, "While you men have been talking about it, I have been out doing some of it." Now we meet in rather limited quarters, considering our numbers, at the Publication Society rooms, 125 N. Wabash, and we invite speakers from afar and near. Recently is was Dr. James M. Gray with his exegetical skill. The moderator is Dr. J. J. Ross of the Second Church, about to leave us for old Ruggles Street in Boston, a fitting place for such an expounder of the word as Dr. Ross is. Dr. P. J. Stackhouse of the First Church is vice-moderator and Rev. A. H. Gage of the Religious Education Department, is secretary.

Among the Churches

I went to the Second Church the other day to say goodbye to Dr. Ross ere he leaves for the East. It is not quite so breezy a body as it used to be at Morgan and Monroe—a veritable beehive with Aunt Lizzie Aiken a kind of queen bee, in my student days. But it is a busy scene of activity still, a union of several churches—the old Second, and Fourth and Centennial. Here are some of our outstanding lay members—Byrne, and Braubrook, and Bolger and Frazer and a host of noble women. The Sunday school is an inspiration. I was present on Promotion Day. Dr. Ross gave us a great exposition out of Colossians—he can do it.

I looked in and had a little part in the service at Immanuel. It is coming up like a new Phoenix, Chicago fire was a blessing in disguise, and so they are beginning to feel about the structural collapse at Immanuel last summer. March next will see a new and elegant edifice finished out to the street front on Michigan Avenue. Here is an enthusiastic flock set for the helping of the people, a center of charity and cheer to all. I used to think that there was nothing finer than to see Johnston Myers among his workers and his "stations" at Ninth street, Cincinnati. I saw a close approach to it on "watch night" at Immanuel.

are in progress for a much needed new church building. $75,000 has been pledged as a Foundation Fund, $47,000 of which has been paid, the balance to be met at an early date.

A school of missions is now in progress—four classes studying four books under expert teachers; 300 or more are in attendance. In these classes the young people's societies have so heartily cooperated as to deserve much credit for the success and inspiration of these weeks of study. A series of well attended conferences helpful to Sunday-school workers

The work of Immanuel centers in an almost church-deserted section of the city. Dr. Johnston Myers is a king among his people. They are giving the denomination a plant, close to the heart of the city which may well be a headquarters for all our Baptist work. Morgan Park, which is my home again now, with its sweet memories of student days, is a splendid specimen of progressive suburban work. It gives nobly; as much to others as to its own thriving work, and it is united cordially under its alert and kindly pastor, Dr. Chas R. Osborn.

Annual Meeting of Central District

The annual meeting of Central District of the Woman's American Baptist Home and Foreign Mission Societies will be held in St. Louis April 24-25. The St. Louis Baptist Missionary and Benevolent Union has invited the district for this meeting, the place chosen being the Third Baptist Church. A fine program is being planned which should attract a representative attendance of our women from the states of Michigan, Missouri and Illinois.

CONNECTICUT

REV. D. A. PITT, PASTOR of Central Baptist Church, Norwich, was the preacher at the week of prayer services of all the Protestant churches in the city of Meriden, held in the Main Street Baptist Church, Jan. 1-5.

THE LOTUS MALE QUARTET with Miss Caliste Conant, entertainer, all of Boston, presented a delightful program in the Southington Baptist Church Dec. 28. Net proceeds amounted to $214. The money is being used for better church equipment. Rev. G. C. Laudenslager has begun his sixth year as pastor of the church. Mr. and Mrs. Laudenslager's leadership is being felt, not only in the church but throughout the town and state.

CENTRAL CHURCH, NORWICH, Rev. D. A. Pitt, pastor, was crowded on Christmas eve and hundreds turned away. Interest centered in the pageant "The Birth of Christ" by Rev. C. N. Arbuckle. So profound has been the impression made by the presentation of this pageant that it is to be given annually. The New Year's eve service drew a large audience also. Christmas music was rendered by request. The young people provided an interesting program from nine to ten. Rev. Joseph Palmer, religious work secretary, Y. M. C. A., Hartford, brought the new year's message. The church is looking forward to the coming of Rev. Yorke A. King, Boston, who is to lead the church in the business of evangelism, Jan. 24-Feb. 4.

REV. F. S. CLARK, for three years pastor at Rowayton, has resigned to accept a call to a church in Ohio. This change will take Mr. and Mrs. Clark nearer to both the son and daughter, who are attending colleges in the Middle West. Five candidates were recently baptized and received into the church.

REV. JAMES MCGEE, PASTOR of Calvary Church, New Haven, was the speaker before the Rotary Club, Hartford, Jan. 2.

REV. H. J. WHITE, PASTOR First Church, Hartford, baptized two candidates on Dec. 24.

REV. P. S. COLLINS HAS resigned at Bozrah, to take effect April 30.

AT SOUTH BAPTIST CHURCH, Hartford, Rev. J. N. Lackey, pastor, a successful school of missions has closed. On Sunday evening, Dec. 24, U. S. Senator Uphaw of Georgia was the speaker. For two hours he held the large audience spell bound.

MEMORIAL CHURCH, HARTFORD, is highly successful in its conduct of a junior church which meets at the hour of the regular service on Sunday morning. The pastor, Rev. Manford W. Schuh, finds that the church for the younger folk is increasing the attendance at the regular service of the church.

REV. W. B. REED, PASTOR of Shiloh Church, Hartford, since 1916 has been called to Zion Church, Philadelphia, which has a membership of 1500. As yet Dr. Reed has not rendered a decision in the matter.

VERMONT

ON DEC. 17 AT THE CLOSE of two weeks of special meetings in which the pastor of the North Springfield Church, Rev. E. C. Weeks, was assisted by Rev. W. F. Sturtevant, sixteen were received into the church by baptism, making twenty-eight received into this church during the thirteen months of the present pastorate.

THE BELLOW FALLS CHURCH, Rev. J. M. Maxwell, pastor, held its annual meeting on Jan. 2. About 100 were present for the supper, after which most encouraging reports were given of the work in the different departments of the church. Over $1000 has been raised for improvements to the church property and for clearing the indebtedness. The resident membership of the church is about 100, and the pastor reported the average attendance at the morning services for 1922 as seventy-nine.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Townshend Church, Rev. W. H. Nobbs, pastor, was held Dec. 29, when dinner was served to seventy-nine people. The reports showed progress in all lines of the work. This church is making a good record in the Sunday and missionary reading courses. At Christmas the pastor received tokens of the appreciation of the citizens of the town for the community service which he has rendered.

THE OUTLOOK for the Huntington Church, Rev. G. H. Grey, pastor, continues to be most encouraging. The Christian Endeavor Society with eighteen active and eighteen associate members is doing good work. The pastor is now conducting evening services at Huntington Center every other Sunday and is also holding occasional services at Hanksville.

REV. S. W. SCHURMAN of Oldtown, Maine, has accepted the call of the church at St. Albans and expects to begin his work there about February 1.

REV. WILLIAM C. ROGERS of Brooklyn, N. Y., has accepted the call of the Starkeboro Church and will begin his work on January 7.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Burlington, Rev. William J. Ford, pastor, fittingly observed the last night of the old year. The service began at 7:30 with a communion service, after which the roll was called with 225 responses. An intermission of an hour followed when the company adjourned to the parlors of the church, where light refreshments were served and a social time enjoyed. At 10:45 the people reassembled in the church auditorium for a watch-night service. The steadily increasing congregations which Dr. Ford addresses each week bear testimony to the hold which he is gaining upon the church and community.

CONDITIONS IN THE WINDSOR Church, Rev. Christian Peterson, pastor, have not been as encouraging for a long time. The Sunday school has more than doubled. A mission circle and also a ladies' aid have been organized and are doing good work. A choir of twelve voices is rendering splendid service.

RHODE ISLAND

LONSDALE: The Lonsdale Church remembered at Christmas time its pastor, Rev. J. A. Mitchell, by presenting to him a gift of $100 in gold. Mrs. Mitchell was given a Christmas basket. The work is progressing at this church; the pastor reports thirty additions to the church since last March; twenty-four by baptism and six by letter.

WOONSOCKET: First Church, Rev. W. W. Barker, pastor, celebrated Christmas with a White Gift service. A Christmas pageant was given at the evening service followed by the presentation of white gifts by the various departments of the Sunday-school for the King's birthday.

TIVERTON: Central Church observed its annual meeting of the church on Monday, Jan. 1, at 4:00 p. m. The roll-call of the church and reports of officers of all departments covered the afternoon program. The annual family fellowship supper was served at 6 followed by the evening social exercises. This church is doing progressive work under the leadership of Rev. Silas P. Perry.

PROVIDENCE: BROADWAY: Plans for a school of religious education are now completed and Broadway is looking forward to a profitable season of religious education in the next few weeks.

PROVIDENCE, CALVARY: A father and son banquet was held on Monday evening, Jan. 8. The attendance was over 200 and a splendid program and good supper were enjoyed by all. A similar banquet for mothers and daughters will be held on Monday evening, Jan. 15. Another series of Chautauqua programs such as were so greatly enjoyed last year, will be given again this year. U. S. Senator Upshaw, from Georgia, will be the speaker at the first session on Monday evening, Jan. 22.

EAST GREENWICH: The East Greenwich Church showed its appreciation of Pastor West at Christmas by presenting him with a pension in the Ministers' and Missionaries' Benefit Board.

THE BIBLE SCHOOLS of the Italian churches, the Federal Hill and First, held splendid Christmas services. A joyous spirit reigned at both the gatherings. Whole families were there and all were given a cordial welcome. How those children sang the Christmas hymns of the church! The entire program would have done credit to an English-speaking school. The secretary and his wife were present and the entire program was carried off with such quiet dignity and reverence they were profoundly stirred.

MASSACHUSETTS

THE STRONG OLD CHURCH at Wakefield has at last found the linchpin and attached itself to Rev. Harvey J. Moore who has been pastor five years at First Church, Keokuk, Iowa, and previously had a successful pastorate with the First Church, Somerville, Mass. The call was hearty and unanimous and so was the acceptance. Emphatically does the man fit the church, and the opportunity. Everything points to a greater strength than ever for that strong church. Pastor Moore is a graduate of Des Moines and Newton.

REV. JAMES E. NORCROSS began his pastorate at the Trinity Church, Arlington, Jan. 7. Five miles from the heart of Boston, in a neighborhood attractive and rapidly filling in with the best material for church building, it affords an inviting prospect for a man who has scaled so many mountains, and charmed so many assemblies. Trinity ought to become one of our sturdiest suburban churches.

THE FIRST CHURCH, WATERTOWN, has regretfully accepted the resignation of Dr. Charles H. Day who has made so good a record there in a pastorate of seventeen years. July 1 will end Dr. Day's service. This is a noteworthy pastorate under these restless modern conditions. Doubtless after so long a pull a respite will be welcomed by the minister. Then a downright good and wearable preacher and leader will be available for some wise church.

OUR NEGRO BROTHERS of the Massachusetts Avenue Baptist Church, Cambridge, recently have purchased a fine property—the edifice of the Swedish Congregational Church. It is a modern brick building, with Hutchings pipe organ, and a seating capacity of nearly 1000. The incoming of many Negro families into the district heartens the church and pastor for this advance. Pastor E. E. Thompson is a Denison graduate, with the added experience of Y. M. C. A. war work, and of a former pastorate in Dayton, Ohio.

SPECIAL DAILY EVANGELISTIC SERVICES for two weeks are being held in Tremont Temple under the leadership of Dr. Massee. Effort is made to enlist all Baptist churches in the region through their delegations, that the fire may be scattered abroad. Thus far winter weather of unusual severity, with avalanches of snow, are interfering, but an earnest spirit and more favorable weather will conquer.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE has been sharply prodding some prohibition officials who do not prohibit. Names are mentioned and dismissals are demanded. There was such pile-driving plainness of speech about it that all the papers gave it first-page publicity, and scare-heads. How much more shall we get?

NEW JERSEY

Fifty Years a Sunday School Superintendent

An event which is almost unique in Sunday-school history was celebrated recently at the North Church, Camden, when Mr. F. Wayland Ayer completed fifty years of service as superintendent of the Sunday school.

The great auditorium of the church was crowded to overflowing. One of the most impressive features of the service was the singing by fifty children from the primary department. As they filed past the veteran superintendent each placed a pink rose in his hand. A gold paper weight inscribed with a message of appreciation and bearing in relief the dome of the church was presented to Mr. Ayer by the school.

Notwithstanding an absorbingly busy life as head of the largest and oldest advertising firm in the world, as bank president, director of various companies, president for twenty-five years of the New Jersey State Convention and for one term of the Northern Baptist Convention, Mr. Ayer has given to the school the same careful and exacting attention that he has given to his business. Some one remarked to him one day that his church took considerable time from his business to which he replied, "The church is an important part of my business."

More than once he has traveled all night Saturday to keep his appointment with his scholars on Sunday, returning again Sunday evening to finish his business in the distant city.

Numerous letters of congratulation were received among which were letters from Dr. John R. Mott, Presidents Frederick Taylor, Fauce and Clarence A. Barbour, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and Chief Justice William H. Taft. Mr. Taft said in part: "I have known Mr. Ayer for a good many years, and have valued his friendship. I have valued him as a conscientious member of the community and one who felt his responsibility and effectively met it and discharged his duty. Sunday schools are a most important part of our general education. Education without ethical and religious accompaniment does not make for the best citizenship. Religion will save the state, and without it the future of the state is discouraging. This does not mean that we need a state church or sectarian education in public schools, but it means that we should exert ourselves in every way to see to it that our children, as they grow up and receive their general education, should also be made to know and feel religion's inspiration, not only in the home but in the Sunday school. It is really a great record of useful service to which Mr. Ayer can look back, that for half a century he has been engaged in Sunday-school work."

Mississippi Valley

ILLINOIS

NOKOMIS CHURCH, J. A. Ishmael, pastor, held a two-weeks' meeting beginning Sunday, Nov. 26, conducted by Rev. M. E. Powley and Prof. M. W. Lankin, of Meadville, Mo. As a result of this meeting the pastor baptized four men into the fellowship of the church. The work of the church is moving along fine so far.

REV. L. M. WESTRATE has been pastor at Macomb for about four years. He has been very successful in evangelistic work, having held three successful revival meetings, doing all the preaching himself. He has increased the membership about 100 since he became pastor.

CANTON IS A BEAUTIFUL little city of about 12,000 people. It has good business and is a wealthy place. The Baptist church was at one time the strongest Baptist church in the state of Illinois. The church reports 553 members. Rev. Charles H. Gray became pastor a little more than two years ago. The church recently asked him to resign. He closed his work Dec. 10. He rented a soft drinks parlor, about two blocks from the Baptist church and organized a Gospel Mission Society. He drew after him twenty-three members of the church and some of the Sunday school. Dr. E. P. Brand of Normal has been supplying the church since the pastor left. The church has an old meeting house, thoroughly modernized and in good condition. It has a good parsonage. The membership seems harmonious and in good condition. The congregations, Sunday school and B. Y. P. U. are fine. The church hopes to locate a pastor soon. There is a fine field in Canton for a successful pastorate.

REV. EDWARD L. BAYLIS, pastor of the Normal Church for nearly three years, received a hearty call to become pastor of the Winchester church. He resigned at Normal to take effect Feb. 28. He leaves the Normal Church in fine condition.

REV. JOSEPH C. HAZEN closed his pastorate of nearly seven years with First church, Peoria, Dec. 31. A farewell reception was tendered Dr. and Mrs. Hazen, Tuesday evening, Jan. 2, at the church and was attended not only by members of the church but by hosts of friends outside its fellowship, with whom Dr. Hazen was very popular. He held affiliations with many societies in the city and some of them arranged farewell meetings for him, apart from that of the church. In leaving to become pastor of the North Orange church, N. J., Dr. Hazen parts with a church that is united by a strong tie of Christian sympathy and love. His service to the denomination in this city and state, and the country at large as a member of the Promotion Board of the Northern Baptists, was rendered with tact and patience. The good wishes and prayers of the Peoria church follow him. The pastoral interests of the church are being looked after by Rev. J. V. Whiting who for some time has been associate pastor with Dr. Hazen.

OHIO

WORK AT THE MONROEVILLE CHURCH IS progressing, notwithstanding the pastor can give only part-time service to this field. This church is not large, but many of its members are loyal and devoted. The church held a Christmas social, Dec. 22, at which time every one there received a present. A delightful and helpful program was carried out. There was a surprise for the pastor and wife, when Brother Drake with a few well chosen remarks presented them with $50 as a gift from the church. Plans are being formulated to hold evangelistic services the last of this month or some time next month.

COLUMBUS, The nine Baptist churches in this city according to reports are making steady growth. The First Church, of which Dr. Rittenhouse is pastor, reports a number of additions and considerable interest in the radio broadcasting of its services. The Central Church, Rev. Wm. Peiffer pastor, engaged in special meetings for four weeks just before the holidays with good attendance and results. The Hildreth Church has provided its pastor Rev. G. B. Billerson with a fine home in the form of a modern parsonage. The Tabernacle Church sold its property and bought another from another denomination giving the church a better location for its work. Rev. J. S. Sowers, the pastor, has purchased a home on the new field. Hillcrest is building a new house for its pastor Rev. E. McFarlane. It also plans enlargement of its house of worship. Rev. Chas. Bebb, of Hibbard Avenue has plans which will provide better Sunday-school and social equipment. Linden Avenue and pastor Rev. V. P. Powell are greatly encouraged by largely increased attendance and a 100 per cent increase in financial receipts. Rev. G. R. Robbins, pastor at Memorial, spent the holidays in Nashville. His resignation or any one else, and perhaps to back up stronger ones than I have made here.

This article would not be complete unless I should add that the Japanese conscience is beginning to awaken with regard to this ancient evil. Christianity is the chief force contributing to this awakening. There are still geisha at public entertainments of all sorts, but there are now many people who protest against opening a new railroad line, a new bridge or a public building with "wine, women and song" as of old.

If the missionary is up to his job he is making an attack on the evils of any society in which he finds himself. If he reports on the situation to his supporters, he usually paints the situation far less black than it is, both for the sake of "good taste" and because he loves the people for whom he works and tends to defend them against others. If the missionaries err, it is usually in painting the situation too rosy, rather than in blackening the character of the people they visit in order to raise funds. The missionary is never adequately paid, housed or supported and the tales about the luxury in which missionaries live appear to have their origin in the bar-rooms of the port cities of the East, and in the places whence comes the anti-Christian propaganda that meets the missionary constantly on his field and has lately made its way back to the homelands.

If Mr. Street or any one else will give specific facts, with names and dates, of missionaries who indulge in untrue statements about geisha or any one else, for the sake of raising funds, I am sure the mission societies of the various churches will be glad to deal with such information.

Jesus Talks on Money

observed that sort of shrewdness among men and called their attention to it. In Matt. 25:14-29 he says the kingdom of God is like a man who gave talents in to the keeping of his servants, to one man five talents, to another two and to another one. From each man he required a return. All good sense recognizes that was right. They were intrusted with money; returns on the investment were expected. So are we, Jesus said. But Jesus went further. He saw and taught that in this world as it is we can so use what we have that it will assure us in the life to come vast returns. To him living for this world only was nothing more than death itself. Money here means opportunity to develop ourselves as its masters, to actually help men in need, and to accumulate for ourselves heavenly treasures. Study Luke 16:1-10 and you will see the point Jesus was making. If we are shrewd in this as in many other things, the future will be our storehouse and the dwelling-place of hope.

5. God expects it of us. So Jesus taught. Men do not need to be told to labor for gain in this world. They will seek money and rightly so. But beyond it their hearts must seek treasure in heaven. The one may well become a means to the other. Jesus reminded his followers of this, Matt. 6:19, 20. He saw as all see that this world makes many demands upon us. They are natural and legitimate. But again they do not relax the claims of God, Luke 20:25. The great danger is always that present needs seem so constant and so urgent that they tend to obsess us. Because they are immediate and necessary they swallow up all else. We accept what seems inevitable and become covetous. Luke 12:15 ff. For offsetting this tendency, this temptation, nothing will avail but the determined practice of the ways of the Samaritan whom Jesus warmly commended. In Luke 10:30-37 he tells us that the Samaritan laid aside class quibbles and personally ministered to the man in need. He went further and gave money to complete that ministry. We are to do likewise. Once at least Jesus placed his approval on the then common practice of tithing as a practicable way of stewardship. He found some things objectionable about the Pharisees: they were careless about justice and mercy and love toward God, but their tithing he said was commendable, Matt. 23:23. This they ought to do without leaving the other undone. Face to face with the selfish temptation of coveting and harboring money, and with the equally serious one of neglecting neighbors that need us, Jesus gave us once for all the great principle of stewardship: "Seek first the kingdom of God and all things else will be added to you." Matt. 6:33.

It was in this way that Jesus talked

How Long Could You Live on Watermelons?

Dr. W. O. Lewis, our own Baptist representative in Europe, visited Russia in October and sent back a report of conditions. The following is an extract from his report:

The fall sowing this year is the smallest on record. In many cases, the land has been unplowed so long, that it is difficult for even a team of five horses to break up the ground. It is estimated that Russia is 3¼ million short on horses. In Saratov province alone, it would take 200,000 horses to bring the number up to what it was in 1914. In one district in Saratov, an American Relief Administration supervisor told me that 25 per cent of the people have enough food to last through the winter; 25 per cent can live until December 1st of this year; 50 per cent have nothing now but watermelons.

To help as many destitute sufferers as possible in Russia and other countries of Europe, is part of the program of the Foreign Mission Society for relief work in Europe during the present winter and next spring.

An opportunity will be given to every Baptist church and Sunday school to take a special offering on Sunday, January 21, 1923.

According to an agreement with the Near East Relief, this offering, unless specifically designated otherwise, will be divided between European Relief and Near East Relief.

Send checks to George B. Huntington, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City, or to your State Collecting Agent, plainly designated Relief Offering.

and lover of Jesus who has so helpfully rewritten and rearranged the Broadus Harmony of the Gospels. This up-to-date volume will be found of decided value by any student of the life of Christ.

The Moral Life and Religion, by James Ten Broeke. New York: Macmillan.

This book contains a scholarly and helpful presentation of a very important truth which it is well for any one to think through. It ably sets forth the conviction that morality and religion do and should interact to their common benefit. The author is dealing with a live subject in a thoughtful way.

Nerves and Personal Power, by D. Macdougall King. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co.

It is not essential to argue with all the scientific theories of the author of this volume in order to secure help from its pages. A careful reading will repay any one, but any sufferer from "nerves" or a painful ailment who desires help and has a basis of personal power on which to build will find that Dr. King has put into these pages a true philosophy on which life can be upbuilt.

The Heart of the Old Testament, by John R. Sampey, D.D., LL.D. New York: Doran Co.

An excellent mingling of popular material for Bible study with a scholarly presentation adapted for technical uses in high schools, colleges and seminaries. Dr. Sampey, in producing this volume, has given its readers a fresh basis for a belief in the supernatural origin of the Old Testament. The "Bird's Eye View of the Bible" comprising the last chapter is a valuable addition to the book.

Week-Day Religious Education, by Henry F. Cope, general secretary of the Religious Education Association. New York: Doran Co. $2 net.

In this volume are brought together the results of a thorough survey of the field of religious education with an examination of the underlying educational theory. There are also analyses of fields, types of work and special situations, with briefs on legal aspects and a series of cross-section study charts. It is a book which should prove of value to those interested in this line of work.

The Idea of God, by Prof. Clarence A. Beckwith of Chicago Theological Seminary. New York: Macmillan Co.

The author of this book has dared to face one of the great needs of present-day thought, namely, a definition of God. Taking the modern viewpoint that all ideas are a product of the conditions of the time in which they appear he sets forth a careful history of the development of the God idea. Material is drawn from many sources. He allows the Scriptures, experience, tradition, psychology and even metaphysics to make their respective contribution.

The result of this historical as well as critical approach gives the reader not only a broad survey of theological development but also a conception of God that functions in a vital way in the midst of present-day problems. It is seldom that one is able to find an interpretation of God that rings as true to the highest spiritual notes as this one does and at the same time has back of it the authority of human experience and a scientific view of the world.

Graded Bible Stories, by William James Mutch, professor of philosophy and religion in Ripon College. New York: Doran Co.

Book Three of this series has stories for grades five and six for ages from nine to twelve. Book Four is for grades seven and eight and for ages eleven to fourteen. The books are prefaced with directions to teachers and parents for the use of the stories. Careful work has been done here and the books should not be passed over by either teachers or parents who are desirous of giving the children under their care the best in biblical instruction.

"It Is to Laugh"

"I read that book you wrote about ancient history," said Lobrow, "and I can't say much for it; there are too many mistakes in it."

"How so?" inquired the surprised author.

"Well, one thing made me laugh. You said a guy named Epicurus was born in 342 B. C. and then a little further on you said he died in 270 B. C. That kills him off before he was born."

Bishop Bratton, at a dinner in Jackson, was genially patronized by a millionaire.

"I never go to church," the millionaire said. "I guess you've noticed that, bishop."

"Yes, I have noticed it," said Bishop Bratton gravely.

"I guess you wonder why I never go to church, don't you?" the millionaire pursued. "Well, I'll tell you why, bishop. There are so many hypocrites there."

"Oh, don't let that keep you away," said Bishop Bratton, smiling. "There is always room for one more."—Detroit Free Press.

WHAT CONSTITUTES GOOD CHURCH MUSIC

By THOMAS WHITNEY SURETTE

Church music must obey the law of fitness which dominates everything in our service; that is to say, it must be devotional and dignified. However grand and noble it may be, judged as pure music, however beautiful, however inspiring, if it fails to fulfil the conditions of fitness it cannot really be said to be good church music. If it has a secular flavor, if it is operatic, if it is dance-like and irrelevant, even if it is merely associated with things distinctly secular, it cannot be good church music. Perhaps if we look at the history of its development a moment we shall understand this better.

The first great period in church music culminated in the sixteenth century. At that time music was held almost exclusively as the possession of the Roman church. The music itself was of the most formal kind—almost mathematical; it was founded on what was thought at that time to be an essential law of composition, by which every part in it followed out from beginning to end a certain strict relation to all the others, and freedom in melody or treatment was unknown. You may hear this music nowadays in some of the Roman Catholic cathedrals of Europe, and while there is no gainsaying its beauty, yet it lacks the human quality by which the hearts of the people are moved and their souls uplifted. It was not intended that the worshiper should join in it; it was only a part of the splendid spectacle, but it had the great virtue of being always dignified and churchly. It was distinctly a product of the religious life of the time; it tallied with the prevailing tone of thought and belief, and because of this we feel that it was genuine and fine. It fails to fulfil our requirements today, not only because the form of our service is changed, but because there is a new spirit in it which requires a new musical expression. This quality of genuineness is absolutely essential to true art everywhere.

Music of the People

During all the time that this great school of the Roman church was flourishing, the music of the people—the folk song and the dance tune—was gradually, if slowly, taking on new qualities and being added to and beautified. Comparatively unnoticed by learned musicians, all this music lived in the hearts of the people; it did not influence the church style, for there was very little in common between them. Each was the expression of its own life; each was genuine.

Here, then, were two types of music—the sacred and the secular—co-existent but independent of each other; one the possession of holy men; to be listened to in the spirit of reverence and awe; the other the voice of the people—passionate, gay, joyful or sad—the companion of their solitude, the life of their feasts and holidays.

But can the two seemingly irreconcilable things be joined? Can we have in music the dignity and reverential beauty which worship demands, and at the same time those human qualities which seem inherently secular? Two things are necessary before this can result: first, that our religious life shall have taken on a more human quality; shall have come closer to the every-day life of the people; shall have cast off superstitions; shall have become nobler and more tender; that our services shall belong to the people rather than to the priest; shall not so much overawe us by their splendor as touch our hearts by their intimate relation to our own needs. The second requirement is fulfilled, in the nature of things, in the first; it is that there shall be men of musical genius, as there were in the old time, through whom this religious life may speak.

Both these requirements have been fulfilled. Our religious life, through the influence of the Reformation, has been humanized and has produced men who have fitly expressed it in music. Aye, and the relation which the present bears to the past is no less close in our music than it is in our religious life. Just as our present belief is the old belief with a new spirit, with freedom, with hope, with life in it, so our music is based on the old music, but is full of the spirit of our new time. We still cling to the formality of that old style sufficiently to retain the dignity and repose which were pre-eminently the qualities which distinguished the old music; at the same time we have acquired freedom of melody and of treatment. We still abjure the quirk and turns and suggestive rhythms of the dance; we still avoid the language of the street, and with it all we are human.

How to Know

How is one to know—one who has not studied the history of the development of church music; one who has not even been able to get a good training in the practical side of choir work and organ playing—what to select for his choir? Suppose the church is in an isolated part of the country and there is difficulty in obtaining music to look over; what can be done in such a case?

Suppose you were going to select a novel to read; how would you go about it? Wouldn't you make choice of a book by a man whom you knew to be a good writer—a man of reputation? Or suppose you wanted to buy a coat—wouldn't you go to a first-rate tailor—one who had had the necessary experience in his business? It's very much the same with anthems. You can't expect to get a good anthem from every would-be composer; not alone because he would not have the necessary musical ideas to put into it, but because, if he did have, he wouldn't know what to do with them.

To some people a tune is a tune and nothing more. It may be a street-catch or a noble theme from a symphony—it's all the same to them. But those who take in charge the music of a service for the worship of God have no right to be ignorant on this subject. It is too vital a matter. The shockingly indecorous things which are sung and played in many churches are a direct reproach against choir and church alike. It would make a painfully long list to set them all down. From "Oh, Promise Me," set to the hymn "Abide With Me," all through the list to the "William Tell" overture on the organ, they stand as a record we cannot look upon with pride or satisfaction. Pieces directly associated with the stage or concert-hall, sentimental ballads, popular gavottes and marches—all these one may hear continually. Not one of them is inherently religious; not one is prompted by, or expressive of religious feeling. With a perfect wealth of beautiful anthems and services to choose from—many of them so simple that almost any choir could master them—it is nothing less than lamentable that such things should be used.

One of the greatest causes for failure in our church music is the tendency of choir-masters to try pieces which are too ambitious. With the best intention in the world, a choir may be a dismal failure because of this error in judgment. Except in large churches, where there are singers of great ability, the music should be simple. It is better that this should be so for other reasons also; the nearer you get to the people the more you can do for them, and elaborate music is not near the people. This should be the guiding principle through the whole service. The chants, which were primarily intended for the congregation, are often rendered quite valueless to them by being pitched too high. When you put them down so that the highest note is C, or at the most D, men, women and children can and will sing them. The same thing applies to many hymn tunes.—The Musician.

was presented to the church recently but the membership refused to accept it. The Tenth Avenue Church, of which Rev. Vernon Phillips was pastor, for several years has not secured a successor.

WISCONSIN

STEVENS POINT CHURCH had a special business meeting to plan for the coming year at which nearly 200 were present. There was special rejoicing over the year's work because of the strike conditions in this railway city. Many of the members were out of work for several months, yet the year closed with all current expenses met and $1,000 added to the three we already had for our new Sunday-school building. Goals accepted were as follows: 300 in Sunday school; 100 additions to the church; advanced missionary instruction and giving for that cause. Some of the members are putting an orphan girl through normal school with all expenses paid; giving to the church every Lord's day a bouquet of flowers which are later given to the sick in the homes and hospital; the pastor's wife is to go to Old Mexico and California for six weeks' outing with all expenses paid. It is eighteen years since Rev. James Blake and his wife first came to this field, making in all sixteen full years of service on one field. As a token of appreciation the Ladies' Aid presented Mrs. Blake with a liberal check and to Mr. and Mrs. Blake a handsome silver tray. The church is united and it would seem that the present year is to be one of real service for the Master in this community.

KANSAS

FIRST CHURCH OF MINNEAPOLIS is in the midst of a building proposition that will double its capacity for usefulness in the community. Attendance upon all the services is increasing and the interest among the young people is noticeable. W. N. Reynolds and wife came here from Connecticut last August and are happy in their work. They are already planning to attend the Northern Baptist Convention at Washington, D. C. in May.

NEBRASKA

NEW YEAR'S DAY was a great day for the Baptists of Ansley. This church is a combination of three local interests, one centering in Ansley and two others between seven and ten miles east and west from the town, with a present membership of 281. To the pastorate of this church Rev. W. E. Darrow came Dec. 10. In a marvelous way the work is opening up under his leadership. A high school student was baptized into the membership of the church the fourth Sunday morning in December and on New Year's Day two other young people were baptized. A roll-call and home-coming service was held after a basket dinner served in the basement of the church. Despite bad weather and other hindering circumstances there were ninety responses at the roll-call. The Lord's Supper was observed after the roll-call. Instead of working simply to save the church, to sustain it financially and otherwise, the members decided by unanimous vote to serve the community. The out-stations will be organized for community service.

The church building at Ansley will be open on Saturdays for the comfort and convenience of members and others in the communities served by the out-stations. A Baptist brotherhood will soon be organized in Ansley. Special evangelistic meetings with Mr. Darrow as preacher, will be held at the out-stations, beginning at Ash Canon, the first Sunday in January, these to be followed by meetings in Ansley a few weeks before Easter.

Obituary

ELLEN P. FIRST

Ellen P. First died Dec. 29, at Rock Island, Ill. Born in Onondago County, N. Y., Dec. 25, 1842. Moved to Bristol, Kenosha County, Wisconsin, when two and one-half years old and lived there until married to Rev. H. C. First. She was her husband's efficient helper in pastorates at Plainfield and Barry, Ill. and Kearney, Neb. The family lived at Upper Alton, Ill. during the ten years that her husband was superintendent of state missions. In 1904 Mr. and Mrs. First moved to Rock Island, Ill. The survivors are her husband; a son, Dr. F. H. First, a physician in Rock Island; a daughter, Georgia P. First, who teaches Latin in the Rock Island high school; two sisters, Mrs. G. B. Cummings of Highland Park, Ill., and Mrs. Minnie Buckley of Phoenix, Arizona. Funeral service was from the home, Jan. 1, and was conducted by Mrs. First's pastor, Rev. G. A. Sheets. Burial was in the Rock Island cemetery.

Rev. WM. WILBER

Rev. Wm. Wilber was born in Marysville, Ohio, April 4, 1841 and died at Lankershim, a suburb of Los Angeles, Calif., Dec. 2, 1922. He held pastorates at Mingo and Richmond, Ohio, moved to Kansas where he was pastor at Columbus twice, Chetopa, Sterling, Nickerson and Coffeyville. Then he was district missionary for nearly ten years doing much effective evangelistic work. He was district missionary for two years in Wyoming and one year in Oregon. Later he was pastor at Scottsdale, Ariz. for several years. The last nine years he spent in retirement at Lankershim. He was married in 1867 to Mary A. Welch who survives him. He also leaves one son Willard M. Wilber of Los Angeles and a daughter, Mrs. C. H. Wikoff, of Chicago. His was a remarkable career of pioneer Christian usefulness.

The Gospel and the Meeting House

People in the scarcely settled regions and in the more remote areas of our country are not spiritually neglected. Frontier missionaries under appointment by the American Baptist Home Mission Society, missionaries in charge of chapel cars and colporteur missionaries under joint appointment of the Society and the Publication Society, as faithful agents of the Baptists of the North in their obedience to the Great Commission, are ministering to these widely scattered populations. Much of their work is done without buildings and local equipment.

Rural Community Work has been undertaken for the past three years with Directors of Town and Country Church Work in Michigan, New York, Northern California, Ohio and Nebraska. Demonstration Parishes in cooperation with State Conventions have been maintained in Minnesota, Nebraska and Wisconsin.

In this missionary program, the new Department of Architecture is rendering a needed service that makes it worthy of adequate support. Its studies are based on experiences by men active in church matters, who have had an architectural experience extending over many years. The Department is constantly studying all phases of such work and so arranging its plans as to enable churches to function efficiently. It continues to restudy the problem and to advise with the church until a solution satisfactory to all concerned has been reached. Consulting architectural service so far rendered has been on buildings costing from $5,000 to $500,000 each, and totalling in value in excess of $21,000,000.

Where the Baptist World Alliance Third Congress will be held when it meets in Stockholm, July 21-28, 1923. The building seats twenty-four hundred persons. The European Baptist Congress was held here in 1913.

Fresh from the Field

It is officially announced that Dr. George W. Truett, of Dallas, Texas, will deliver the sermon before the Baptist World Alliance in Stockholm next July.

Dr. E. S. Stucker began special meetings Jan. 14 with Rev. J. H. Skeen at the First Church, Boulder, Colo. The pastor plans a vigorous campaign of revival and evangelistic endeavor.

Prof. Frank M. McMurry, professor of elementary education in the Teachers College, Columbia University, on Jan. 18 delivered the fourth lecture on the Stephen Greene Foundation in the First Church, Newton Center, on "Methods of Study in Religious Education."

A million lives have been saved according to the estimate of several authorities in the Near East through the efforts of the Near East Relief. A handbook with full information is available without expense to all pastors. If you have not received a copy address 151 Fifth Ave., New York.

Mrs. Arthur B. Strickland, author and dramatist, whose impersonation at the vocational meeting in Chicago made a lasting impression upon those who heard her, is planning a western tour for the months of March and April. She will be available for engagements between Buffalo and Minneapolis at some time during those months. If any churches or woman's societies are interested in the possibility of securing Mrs. Strickland, they may reach her at 3646 N. Twenty-first St., Philadelphia, Pa., or they can secure more information about her from the Christian Americanization Department, 2969 Vernon Ave., Chicago.

The number of Baptists in Spain has doubled since the beginning of active work there by the Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention, two years ago, it is announced, and a theological seminary and Baptist paper have been projected there.

Four months ago Rev. A. M. Smith began his work with the Westwood Church, Cincinnati. The church was organized in 1821. There has been a good response to his leadership, the Sunday school showing 100 per cent in attendance and the financial receipts have doubled. A program on a much larger scale has been laid out for the coming year.

Rev. Clinton Wunder, pastor of the Temple Church, Rochester, N. Y., is preaching a series of sermons, "I believe Christian America must highly resolve in 1923 to build a Christian social order." The topics were: Capital and Labor, The Law and the People, The Race Question, Wealth and Poverty. The total attendance at the Temple September to December, 1921, was 21,749. For the same period in 1922, 29,288.

Dr. J. F. Watson of the West Washington Convention writes of the improved conditions in that section of the country, Business is better, employment is at the maximum, and there is more money in circulation. Nearly all of the churches are supplied with capable pastors and the churches are interested in the denominational program and anxious to see it succeed. Among the new pastors in that territory are Rev. E. H. Shanks at the Sixth Avenue Church, Tacoma; Rev. J.

Harvey Deere at the First Church, Everett; Rev. B. P. Richardson at the Queen Ann Church, Seattle, and Rev. E. O. Otto at Puyallup.

Dr. and Mrs. Cornelius Woelfkin of New York and their niece have the honor of being the first persons definitely to reserve accommodations on the official Baptist World Alliance ship "America," sailing June 30 for Europe. They will attend the Stockholm Conference in July and spend the remainder of the summer on the continent of Europe and in England.

Feb. 13 Miss Maude Royden will speak in Chicago at Orchestra Hall on "Can We Set the World in Order?" Miss Royden is a graduate of Oxford, and first became known as a social worker in the slums of Liverpool. She is the author of many social, economic and political pamphlets. Her first Chicago appearance will be under the auspices of the religious education committee of the Chicago Y. W. C. A.

The meeting of Baptists in Stockholm has awakened great interest in all sections of our country. THE BAPTIST has been bombarded by letters of inquiry and appeals for publicity. Rev. F. T. Barkman, Baptist headquarters, Los Angeles, is organizing a party to tour Europe leaving the United States about June 9 and arriving at Stockholm July 21 in time for the Baptist World Alliance. He writes, "Drs. Harper, Rider, Davies and Francis are assisting in organizing this party." He invites a few Baptists outside of Southern California to join with him. Dr. Judson B. Stockholm — Europe — The Holy Land

THE TEMPLE TOURS of Boston take pleasure in announcing in this connection two personally conducted tours for the summer of 1923. One is to include the Holy Land and Egypt, and both are to include Europe, with a week at Stockholm for the Baptist World Convention.

REV. HERBERT HINES, Pastor of the First Baptist Church, Kankakee, Illinois, will have charge of a wonderfully interesting and comprehensive tour that will include Egypt and Palestine, in addition to the convention and a fine European tour. Dr. Hines has spent years in study and travel abroad. He has a Ph.D. degree from the University of Chicago in Oriental Languages and History; he has covered Egypt and the Holy Land in an amazingly thorough way, and even speaks Arabic in addition to European languages; he is a devoted and scholarly man whose leadership should certainly be a great enhancement of the value of this trip. We think that in him we have found a prize.

Can you imagine better leadership for these tours? why our organization has grown so phenomenally. Last summer eighty-seven different conducted parties toured Europe under Temple Management. We have a large European organization that affords a specialized and real, not imaginary, European service. Taking efficient care of our parties is the sole and exclusive function of our large organization.

DR. JUDSON B. THOMAS, who is known to every active member of the Baptist denomination in this country, will have charge of a shorter and less expensive tour, covering Europe as thoroughly as it can be done in one season and including, of course, the Stockholm convention. Dr. Thomas was for 14 years District Secretary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, and for 12½ years was pastor of the Austin Baptist Church, of Chicago. Since his retirement (!) he has served as Acting Pastor of the Englewood Baptist Church, the largest white Baptist church in the state. He has traveled widely abroad and is a man possessing, not only commanding qualities of leadership, but a high degree of business ability.

The Temple Tours make a specialty of that. That is why our organization has grown so phenomenally. Last summer eighty-seven different conducted parties toured Europe under Temple Management. We have a large European organization that affords a specialized and real, not imaginary, European service. Taking efficient care of our parties is the sole and exclusive function of our large organization.

Who takes either of these tours will ever regret the choice. The sooner you can make up your mind, the better. Those who register first will have first choice of accommodations.

O You Methodists!

"Subscriptions received from 'Epworth Herald Day,' Dec. 3 to the end of business Dec. 30, 1922, reached these figures: Renewals 11,369; new subscriptions 23,916; total for the month, 35,285." This announcement appeared in the issue for Jan. 13 of the Epworth Herald, the paper in which Methodist young people are especially interested. We call this a good record. We congratulate those who have made it possible. Are Methodist young people more devoted to their churches than Baptist young people? Are they more loyal? We think not. They are however, better trained. Do the Baptist young people want two full pages in THE BAPTIST again this year? We will give them three if they will equal the record of the Epworth Leaguers. And—it could be done!

"Makes Me Discontented"

"I could live a quiet and contented life if it were not for the papers," writes a certain man. "THE BAPTIST is the worst offender of all. I get settled down to a rational Christian life and begin to enjoy my religion when your paper brings the story of some dire need and I'm all stirred up. I am going to stop the paper." That is a new one and the testimony is worth all that it costs. Why if every member of our Baptist churches got "stirred up" we would make quick work of the task of completing the New World Movement! But, brother, permit us a final word: You will never be any more dead than the day when you refuse to be "stirred up" for the glory of God and the good of men.

The Modest Contributor

On the whole genuine modesty is to be commended. But in some cases modesty is not the best policy. A case in point. It is not good policy to be so modest that you fail to sign your name when you send in a remittance in cash to cover your subscription. Your name, even though it is Smith, will make it a little more certain that you will get credit for the cash. Again, it is not good policy to send in glowing accounts of your church and pastor or sharp criticism of them and then fail to sign your name. We have just sold (to the junk man) several dollars' worth of old manuscripts and papers, some of which might have been printed had names been attached. Lastly, when you want to scorch the editor please sign your name so that when he meets a subscriber the editor will not have to wonder whether he is the man he ought to thrash.

Volume Three

We have lived through the third year and our chances to grow to maturity are thereby increased. The index is in this number. It is worth reading. Do not jump to the unwarranted conclusion that the rest of the material is not. An index is a feature in the year's work. Here in a broad way you see the sweep of interests represented by the paper. You find the names of scores of men and women in this and other lands who without silver or gold have given THE BAPTIST and its readers the best of their store of religious experience and hope. In the light of the index no one can charge THE BAPTIST with featuring one type of theology and one group of men. THE BAPTIST has been so widely representative that its editor has been asked to be a little more careful what brand of Baptists he features through the columns of the paper. We are glad that it is not the duty of an editor to put all the contributors through the "third degree" to determine the "brand."

Should Baptists Own a Headquarters?

By BENJAMIN OTTO

SO MUCH misunderstanding has been spread abroad by garbled and unauthorized statements in the Chicago Tribune and New York Times and by partial statements in THE BAPTIST and Watchman-Examiner, the former two leading to unwarranted criticism of a number of persons, and the latter two to incorrect conclusions by many, that the time for a frank statement of the facts cannot in justice to the denomination be delayed longer.

On April 19 a terrific windstorm swept over Chicago. One of the disasters following in its wake was the collapse of the stately spire of the Immanuel Baptist Church and the tearing down with it of the front wall of the building at Michigan Boulevard and Twenty-third Street—the last Baptist stronghold of Chicago's down town. For forty-one years that great church has withstood the growing tide of business which has swirled around it carrying to the suburbs a score of great churches. For twenty-seven years, under the masterful leadership of Dr. Johnston Myers, Immanuel with a current expense budget of $60,000, has stood firm, ministering to every human need and filling a unique place in the religious life of Chicago.

When the spire fell, the pastor's heart sank with it. Would this prove to be the end of this down town church also? Providences follow each other rapidly at times. Twenty-four hours had scarcely intervened before the business men of the neighborhood placed $3000 in cash, and the promise of more to follow. In the hands of the pastor with the encouragement, "carry on." The dust of the tower's fall had not yet settled when a squad of men of Wells Brothers Construction Company was sent from a building half a block distant to clear away the debris and protect the rest of the edifice. Wells Brothers—no finer Christian men to be found anywhere; A. E., treasurer of the Baptist Executive Council since its organization and active on many of its committees; F. A., since called to his reward, for many years chairman of the International Sunday School Committee and active in numerous other Christian enterprises.

Something Done

Something had to be done; but what? Wells Brothers summoned Max Dunning, prominent architect who frequently works with them. Simply to rebuild the front wall of the church on this valuable site, would have been the height of folly. A modern five story office building, 60x125 feet, extending out to the building line, was designed and begun, to cost approximately $225,000. Wells Brothers declared that if their profit on this contract should be so much as one dollar, they would regret it.

The laying of the corner-stone was an occasion to be remembered. The first story of the new building was up; the second well along. The fine architectural character of the structure, the blending of the churchly with the secular, but dominating the latter, was evident. Business men were there by the score; such men admire the heroic and venturesome. Representative Baptists from all parts of the city were there. Many of them gave money. More than $100,000 has been provided to date. Dr. Myers, the pastor,

A. E. Wells, builder, Max Dunning, architect, and Dr. Otto of the Executive Council, were the speakers.

Now in all of the steps thus far taken there was no thought or design regarding Baptist headquarters. The falling of the tower was an act of God; the erection of the office building under the favorable auspices attending it, an act of human wisdom. The perpetuation and broadening of the helpful ministries of Immanuel aided by increased income from the new building, were the keynote of every address at the corner-stone laying.

However, men began to think. And gradually the thought took shape in many minds: why commercialize any part of this property created by Baptist funds? Why not use it all for God and our beloved denomination?

At the meeting of the board of directors of the Baptist Executive Council on October 27, the superintendent suggested whether it might not be the part of wisdom for the board to consider the question of using the new Immanuel building for denominational rather than secular purposes and that possibly there would be found a willingness to locate the national headquarters of the denomination there, provided conditions proved favorable. A committee, consisting of two leading ministers and three business men, was immediately appointed. These men made a thorough study of the question from every angle open to them.

The Committee's Report

The report of this committee on Nov. 17 was a revelation and surprise, which even the best informed could hardly have hoped. They reported on the strictly modern and first class character of the construction of the new Immanuel office building; its adequacy to house the national as well as the local offices of the denomination; the possibility of providing additional office space, if needed, at moderate cost of construction, and last, but not least, the desire of Immanuel that their entire building might be used for religious purposes rather than commercial, and a willingness if the denomination saw fit to receive it, to make a free gift of their entire property to the denomination, without condition, save only that the building should be occupied for denominational purposes. A recommendation was also made that the council send its president, Mr. Brimmon, and superintendent, Dr. Otto, and Dr. Myers (Dr. Myers being unable to go, Mr. John Nuveen of Immanuel Church was substituted) to the meeting of the Finance Committee of the Northern Convention, to be held the following week in New York. These men were instructed to lay before that body the offer of Immanuel Church, and the expressed judgment of the Executive Council, as representative of the Baptists of Chicago, that the Finance Committee give favorable consideration to this proposed gift, so that, if not all at once and immediately, then at least gradually and in course of time, the national offices of our societies might be transferred to Chicago, and to this new building as their own permanent home.

In their statement to the Finance Committee, the Chicago representatives set forth the following facts:

a) Immanuel Church is not a dependent organization but a going concern with the largest current expense budget of any Chicago Baptist church, $60,000.

b) The generosity of the offer. A conservative valuation of the Immanuel property, when completed, is $625,000; and exclusive of the amount of $120,000 borrowed to finance the new project, is approximately $500,000.

c) The probable increase in value. Dependable business men calculate that the valuation will reach $1,000,000 within ten years.

d) The strategic location of Chicago, closer to the center of Baptist constituency. This means a saving to the denomination of thousands of dollars in railroad transportation.

e) The saving of at least $75,000 annually, and possibly more, in office rents to the denomination.

f) The strategical advantage to the denomination of possessing a great, attractive, religious center of its own, devoted entirely to Christian uses in a conspicuous location, where more than 200,000 people pass daily.

A Visit to Chicago

In spite of a variety of other pressing business the Finance Committee devoted the larger part of the first day of its meeting and a part of the next to hearing the statements of the Chicago men and interrogating them on specific points. They then appointed Dr. Chas. L. White, Samuel Bryant, Geo. W. Coleman, and A. M. Harris, a committee to visit Chicago. Only two of the committee, Dr. White and Samuel Bryant, were able to undertake the journey. They visited Chicago the following Monday, inspected the Immanuel property, and conferred with Dr. Myers and Mr. Nuveen, and Mr. Elsdon, a Chicago attorney. Mr. A. M. Harris, who came to Chicago December 1 to attend the

The American Schoolteacher

THREE forces dominate the moral and religious life of America; they are the parent, the preacher, the teacher; and we are not at all prepared to assert that this order is the order of importance. During ten months of the year and more waking hours than are spent under any other influence, it is the teacher who has charge of the thinking and the developmental processes of our child, from the day when with a smile on the face but a little choke in the throat we watch him start out upon the long years of his climb up education hill.

There are twenty-two millions in our common schools, more than two millions more in high schools, and in professional and other schools enough to bring the number of the army of American scholars up to twenty-five millions, with perhaps a million teachers. Our common schools alone cost a billion dollars a year. Is there any other business in America so vast? There certainly is no other around which all the life of the American home revolves so unswervingly as it does about the sound of the school bell or whatever it is in these days that takes its place. The mother patiently as she may, and the father, grumblingly if he must, submit themselves to the tyranny of the school schedule and adjust their downittings and their uprisings thereto.

The great majority of the teachers to whom we entrust the destinies of the children dearer to us than anything else in the world are women, some of them mere slips of girls yet taking on the dignity and authority of the teacher, others of them mature and wise in the art of directing the turbulent life of an American school-room where all races and social strata the most diverse are represented. Do we give the teacher her due in our thought and grateful remembrance? Do we remember her when we come to kneel down with our children in the night-time prayer?

Even while this is being written there lies in her darkened home awaiting the last journey to a grave beside her mother, the form of one who, beginning as a young girl of seventeen, taught for fifty-three years, giving the last thirty years to teaching and executive work in the schools of Chicago. Earlier she served as dean of women in Baptist colleges, but the last generation of her life was given to the work in the great cosmopolitan city among the children of foreigners, whose love and confidence she gained and who in numerous cases owed to her interest and influence their splendid advancement in all that makes the true American. Descendent of prominent colonial ancestors, she was in her own person a Christianization and Americanization society. A little lad said of her, "It is easier to do things when she is here."

And there comes to mind another who has given her life to this difficult, delicate task of informing the mind, and shaping the ideals of the ones who are to determine the character of the America that is to be. Is it strange that when we find ourselves utterly prostrated over the task of personally conducting a single lively child of our own flesh and blood for a few hours, a teacher with forty of mixed breed and breeding left in her charge for long hours at a time and for the long months of many years, should find heart, brain and nerve ready to go on strike? Have you ever observed some patient teacher piloting a band of school children through a museum or through the parks for a little outing? Yet we have seen teachers after a lifetime of their work still sweet, serene and capable.

It is true that some young teachers enter the work with no sanguine expectation of its continuance, and that many most promising young teachers are sequestered from their teaching vocation by the strenuous plea of some young man, who is quite likely to be the new Baptist preacher. But in many such cases the home is the gainer for the experience of the teaching, and the schools win a constant and understanding friend in the wife and mother who has had first-hand acquaintance with the teacher's task.

How can the church help the teacher, and how can the church ally itself with the school for the mutual advantage of both? These are days of anxiety for parents, pastors and teachers; grave problems have arisen in the schools, as in all our present day life, from the breaking up of the safe habitudes which protected society before the world war. We hear of elopements and marriage between girls and boys of tender age, and of escapades still more distressing; but this is also a day when men and women are showing strange reversion to barbarism, when fair murderesses are quite sure of immunity from punishment for their sanguinary sports. We must not lose our heads over any of these problems, but much may be saved of future sorrow and gained for future rejoicing if church and school will draw nearer to each other; the pastor, the parent and the teacher facing the great common task together.

OUR American schools began under the fostering care of religion. The great Ordinance of 1787, under which our nation entered upon its career of expansion, declares: "Religion, morality and knowledge being necessary to the happiness and well-being of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged." Then and for many decades the schools were almost a part of the church. Many a Baptist pastor conducted a school in his home or in the lecture-room of his church. John M. Peck established many schools throughout Missouri and Illinois in the region of St. Louis. Wisely we have made the schooling of the young the business of the state, which alone can make it adequate and compulsory; but in some way our Protestant churches should take to their hearts again our schools. The most efficient and wholly unobjectionable way is in securing teachers of Christian character, culture, tenderness and common sense and then standing by them in every way while they handle and shape the most precious product of this land of fabulous wealth.

Have we idealized the schoolteacher? A little, perhaps, but then we must also idealize a little the American mother in order to forget the short-skirted, berouged, feather-headed ones who cultivate the movies and trust their homes to luck. Who can blame the schoolteacher if she sometimes—not always—prefers her hundred dollar job to some sixty dollar young man? Thank God, our daughters no longer are compelled to marry the first light-weight young fellow or widower with six children who asks them. But there are multitudes of women teachers, missionaries and social workers today who devote themselves to their life-work as singly and more sensibly than any nun. They are the vestal virgins of our republic, guarding the light of knowledge and high ideals for the coming race.

We would refuse the most of the special days urged by well-meaning organizations on our churches, but we would have two preeminent days sacredly observed each year,—Mother's Day and Teacher's Day.

Atlantic City, May, 1923

ELSEWHERE in this issue is the official announcement that the next meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention will be held in Atlantic City. Washington found that it was not physically possible to get its convention hall in even a "near state" of completion and so notified the executive committee of the convention. That committee is to be congratulated on its prompt action in view of the exigencies of the situation.

It is not unkind to say that the convention is forming the habit of losing its way to its appointed place of meeting. Two years ago we headed for Winona Lake and landed at Des Moines. A year ago we started for Seattle and got as far as Indianapolis; this year the nation's capital was our goal and we are supposed to land at the nation's most famous watering place.

This series of happenings showing a miscarriage of our plans is not a mere coincidence. It is a symptom of a condition which will become more marked each year. The meeting of Northern Baptists has become a gathering of the first class. Few cities are prepared to entertain such a gathering. Then, too, there is a change in the attitude of many cities, we might say most cities, in the matter of conventions. There are few that will bid for a convention and those few are cities which are known as "convention" or "resort cities."

We have discussed the matter of a rotation of these annual meetings with a few fixed centers and with fixed dates. This matter has been dismissed. We are from the nature of the case bound to find a more satisfactory method than the present "emergency" method of determining the places of our gatherings. There will be wide-spread disappointment that we are not to meet in Washington. The necessity of turning to Atlantic City may interfere with the commonly accepted understanding that we are to meet in Philadelphia in 1924 to take part in the celebration of the centennial of the Publication Society. We may have a crowd at Atlantic City, but we cannot have a truly representative gathering in any city on either coast. We must not forget that there are Baptists west of Chicago and that in influence they are a growing factor in our denominational life. Special railroad rates will be secured and we will meet you at Atlantic City in May.

Dr. Burton, President

IN the merited honor which has come to Dr. Ernest D. Burton as announced elsewhere, it is well to recall something of the service which he has quietly done for the denomination. It was his early desire, frustrated by considerations of health, to go to the foreign field, and he has never lost his deep interest in that work, having served for several most important years as chairman of our foreign mission board, and having under other auspices made two extensive trips to China for a survey of educational conditions there, bringing reports which will affect the destiny of that vast nation for centuries. As chairman of our board of education he has secured the raising of standards and the more adequate equipment of all American Baptist schools. And it was Dr. Burton who, with unsparing pains, masterly insight, and the fullest consultation of the denomination at large ever given to a project, formulated the plan for a General Promotion Board, thus unifying the missionary work of Northern Baptists without disturbing vested interests or destroying any useful function of state or national societies. This great feature of our denominational life is quite independent of the Hundred Million Campaign which was evolved spontaneously at the Denver Convention for the succeeding five years. Doctor Burton, as great in modesty as in efficiency, deserves the gratitude of the denomination for all time.

"Organize, Deputize, Supervise"

"REMEMBER the three magic words," says Arthur Brisbane in the Chicago Herald Examiner, "organize, deputize, supervise." These words were uttered as a warning to men who "try to do it all." They are no plea for a weak "let George do it" spirit. They call for the planning of one's work and the organization of one's life. There is a call for that rare gift of selecting, training and inspiring of other workers. They call for work by deputation. Even after the plan has been perfected and the deputies trained one may fail by assuming that then responsibility ends. The careful, sympathetic "check up" must be made to see that the work is properly and promptly done. No group of men is in greater danger of being submerged by details than the pastors of our churches. It is often easier to do a particular piece of work one's self than to find another to do it. When, however, we have called out another, created in him a desire to serve and then given counsel and help along the way we have rendered double service—the task has been accomplished and new forces have been released in the life of another.

Methodist "Law-Breaking"

THE great temple of the First Methodist Church in Chicago is already looming above the commercial temples of the loop. Its tower rises to a height greater than that of the Washington monument. This great building will become the headquarters of Methodism, where all the great interests of the church will center. Under the above title the Northwestern Christian Advocate answers the criticism of the Christian Century.

"The Christian Century is grieved that the Methodists of Chicago should 'break the law' in exceeding the building limit of 400 feet in the erection of their Chicago Temple. Not even technically was the ordinance 'broken.' The only body of men who may control the building ordinance of Chicago is the council, and to give special permit to exceed the height allowed in an ordinance is no more of a 'break' than would be the act of blocking a highway for hours with a house-moving project when consent had been secured.

"In spirit the law was not broken. The commercial or business part of the building keeps well within the prescribed limit. The tower and spire shut out neither light nor air; and, more to the point, they do not bring one additional 'loop' tenant into the overcrowded mile square. On the other hand, they add beauty and dignity to the austere surroundings. The vaulting tower and tapering spire, tipped with a revolving cross, will be a more potent factor in creating thoughts of God in the minds of innumerable thousands than all the skyscrapers of the city combined.

"It is an added investment of several hundreds of thousands of dollars that Methodists are only too willing to make for the general welfare and of which the public seems to be cordially appreciative. Some day, when the sky line of Chicago shall reveal lofty towers here and there, lending grace and beauty to the architectural effect, even the Christian Century will rejoice that the Chicago Temple was an inspirer of it all."

The March Into Germany

INFORMED people are not surprised by France's march into Germany. The wonder is that it has been so long delayed after being so definitely foreshadowed. But no one is well enough informed to see what the end shall be. France has determined to go it alone regardless of world opinion. She feels that the world does not understand her position and wilfully refuses to share her emotion, and she has, therefore, decided to make the best of the power she possesses to prove herself still to be a factor in world affairs. Any nation choosing that course could become a factor in world affairs. It means, as the trouble ostensibly between Greece and Turkey meant, that France is cutting loose from her allies.

The cause is simple: Germany has not delivered to France the amount of coal allotted to her under the reparations agreement. It is so simple that in America it is difficult to understand what it means. It means principally that with Germany herself suffering from a serious fuel shortage, German workmen revolt at the thought of digging coal the year round and sending it to France. There can be no question that, having rendered French mines useless by the scientifically fiendish devastation of war, Germany is bound to repay. But that is not the only element of the question. Of two men in a fight, the attacker should be compelled to make good, but if the attacker himself is in the hospital because of the wounds he received in his attack, there is also the question of ability to perform; and that is the situation in Europe.

It all comes to this, probably, that the loom of fate is weaving the strands of further unsettlement and disaster. The situation must be considered as a whole, and not as merely French or German, and, of course, this is impossible for any European country to do. This incident may pass for the present without apparent result. It appears to have been diplomatically managed thus far. But in the future it spells the lineup of a new Mediterranean alliance with Poland, Roumania and Turkey certainly with France, a line across Southern Europe, broken only by the possible refusal of Italy to take part.

Today it is possible to observe almost hour by hour a resistless destiny setting the scene for the real Armageddon, the Last War, of which the Great War was the preparatory chapter. The Great War was fought by ill-assorted allies who normally would not have been allies. Now the natural allies will find each other, and not the least surprising element of the new alignment will probably be that Germany, perhaps separated from some of her present kingdoms, will be lined up with her former enemies, allies of Britain and America. Rightly or wrongly, that seems to be the way the finger is pointing.—Dearborn Independent.

Coué and Christ

EMILE COUÉ, the now famous French pharmacist and psychologist, is in this country making a somewhat novel application of the results of the researches of the therapeutic neurologists of the Nancy school. Our correspondence indicates a widespread interest in the results of the clinics now being held. John T. Cowan of the Prospect Avenue Church, Buffalo, comes forward with the following suggestion:

"Psycho-analysis has become a fad. Coué has arrived in New York and his message is featured in our magazines and newspapers. He tells us that health comes through the power of suggestion. There is a soul of truth not only in every error as Carlyle has pointed out but also a grain of truth in every passing fancy. In speaking of the means to physical health has he not given us a clue to the path to spiritual vigor? Would there not be a stabilizing and strengthening influence in our lives amidst the strain and fret of care if our first thought of the morning and the last thought of evening was the yearning prayer 'Every day, in every way, I want to be more and more like Christ.' Abnormality of self-consciousness would give place to the normality of divine consciousness and we would be transformed 'from glory to glory'."

Some Contacts of the Acts

Excerpts from an address on the Stephen Greene Foundation at Newton Seminary

By SIR WILLIAM M. RAMSAY

I WISH to bring before your minds the naturalness—the humanity—what one might almost call the ordinary human character of the men who are described in the Book of the Acts. I should like you to think of them—not as Apostles and men raised above the world around, but as men living among other men. And nothing is more convincing to me of the truth of the Gospels than the total difference in spirit that there is between the character, the conduct, the life of Jesus, and the life of the greatest of the Apostles.

The Book of the Acts contains many punishments; the narrative describing death—sudden and terrible—or other physical deprivations, but whereas the Apostles became in many cases angry and felt themselves obliged to inflict punishment, there is nothing of that kind connected with the life of Jesus. The idea of punishment falls away wherever he moves.

Wandering Scholars

Now in the life of the Roman world, as it is described with marvelous accuracy in the Acts of the Apostles, one of the most striking features is one that is familiar to every student and scholar—namely, the abundance of wandering scholars—men who were going about the world teaching, offering lectures and trying to attract an audience. Generally their object was to establish themselves in a position of settled income in some city. Sometimes they were traveling merely for interest in the world, for study or for the purpose of learning.

Among those wandering scholars there were men of very widely diverse character. Some of them were purely imposters, making money by tricks and legerdemain, while others were great teachers of philosophy, such as Athenodorus of Tarsus, who made, as I believe, a great impression on the mind of Paul in his youth. In the narrative of Acts these wandering scholars appear frequently, and generally they are of the lower type. For example, in Chapter VIII, when Philip went to Samaria there was a magician who practiced the art of magic, and who called himself "The Power of God that is Great." He was the incarnation—the special in-

This abstract of an address by Sir William Ramsay on "Some Contacts of the Acts" is of unusual interest at this time.

A number of our readers are planning a visit to Bible lands following the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance in Stockholm in July.

Mr. Ramsay makes one see conditions as they were in the days of the Apostles. As we read we see the people and face the interesting situations of the days of Paul's missionary labors.

The address was given on the Stephen Greene Foundation at Newton Theological Institution and is now published and copyrighted.

carnation of the great power of God; so he taught the people and was a noted figure.

It is an interesting fact to note the impression that this new teaching made, even on such a man. Simon himself also believed, and being baptized, he continued with Philip; and beholding signs and great miracles wrought, he was amazed.

Now there came down from Jerusalem the Apostle Peter, and Peter showed even greater power. You will observe the stress that there is always laid on the idea of power. The kingdom of God is not in word but in power, and it was the power which Philip first, and afterwards

Peter, showed which impressed Simon, the Magian, so deeply.

Simon came to Peter, the leader and chief of the new faith so far as there was any head, and offered money to buy this power. The poor wretch was really not acting contrary to the ordinary idea of the times. He had in his mind the idea that there was behind this power a special teaching, and he wanted to secure it to himself. It is just as if one of the students in this seminary should come to the president privately and offer him a large sum of money to get some special high-class and impressive teaching. In both cases the answer would be the same—"Thy silver perish with thee,"—because it was thought to obtain the gift of God with money. It was not that there was at the time the idea that there should not be regular payment of the teachers in the church. The laborer is worthy of his hire, but the crime here lay in the attempt to cheat the others—to get something that Simon's neighbors were not able to get and to buy themselves.

The Praise of Others

You will notice in that chapter that Peter is described as so much the most impressive figure in the narrative, and that there is a tendency among modern scholars to invent the idea that wherever any particular Apostle is playing an especially conspicuous part, this is to be traced back to him as the ultimate authority. To my mind it is the very opposite. In the one case where we know with absolute certainty that one Apostle, and one alone, is the authority for a narrative about himself, it is a narrative which throws light on the weakness of his nature. Peter is the one person who could tell the story of his denials of Christ. The story comes from him, and you have there, not the exaltation of Peter, but the very opposite. Here in this case it appears to be that Philip is the authority, and if you read the narrative with this idea in your mind you are struck with the modesty with which the narrative is expressed.

It comes to the historian, Luke, on the authority of Philip, who was a personal friend. It is recorded by Luke very much in the words in

GOD give us men. A time like this demands
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith and ready hands.
Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy;
Men who possess opinions and a will;
Men who have honor; men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagogue
And damn his treacherous flatteries without winking;
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog,
In public duty and in private thinking.
For while the rabble, with their thumb-worn creeds,
Their large professions and their little deeds,
Mingle in selfish strife, lo! Freedom weeps, Wrong rules the land, and waiting Justice sleeps.

which he received it from Philip, and it describes Philip, not as the great man of the Samaritan incident, but as quite secondary.

Now in reading the Book of the Acts we are apt to miss a great deal. This book was written for readers who were familiar with all the names and generally with the incidents recorded. I would compare it with a recent life of Mr. Roosevelt. The criticism was passed in an English journal that the book must be much more interesting to American readers than to British readers because there were so many names which meant nothing to Britons, while were unknown personalities; whereas in America every person was a known figure and every person aroused by the mere mention of his name a conception of his life history, and people were interested to know the exact relation in which he stood to the greatest of modern Americans.

Barnabas and Saul

I will now ask you to pass on to another narrative. Paul and Barnabas, or—as they should be called at that stage—Barnabas and Saul, left Syrian Antioch and came towards the West, through Cyprus. They made a complete progress through the island, but nothing that was especially worthy of being recorded occurred until they came to Paphos, the capital of the island—the residence of the Roman governor of the province.

The governor is a figure of great interest to the men of that time on account of the fact that he was in the first place a member of one of the greatest and wealthiest of the noble Roman families. In the second place, he was a man interested in philosophy and in learning. He heard the two new teachers—two new lecturers, who professed to describe the nature of God, the nature of good and evil, and the whole system of moral philosophy of a new kind—who had come to the city. He sent for them in order to hear what they had to say, and evidently he was very much impressed by what they said.

Elymas

There was in his train another of those wandering scholars. All three—Barnabas, Saul and this third one—Elymas (Bar-Jesus), were ranked by the outer world as being wandering teachers—teachers looking for a situation, looking for instruction; and Elymas had a very pleasant situation. He was in the train of the Roman governor. He had many opportunities of acquiring a good deal of money in the form of tips and bribes, because every person in the East who seeks to approach a great man always tries to find some intermediary and to give this intermediary money to facilitate his business with the man in authority.

An Indignant Paul

Elymas saw that his position was in danger. He was afraid that he might be turned out and the new teachers might be installed in his place as members of the train of the great and wealthy Roman Pro-Consul. And he sought to maintain his

Saving Your Soul

YOU cannot save your own soul alone; you save it by making use of it. The only goodness is serviceable goodness. Religion kept for itself will decay. Truth is vague and helpless until it is lived out. To preserve the freshness of the vision of God in your own soul, you must impart it to others. Think day by day not of what others should do for you, but what you can do for others. This call comes to you today. What the service shall be God will teach you. Come to Christ; be spiritual; forsake your sins, not alone for yourself but for the sake of others! It is a terrible thing to have seen the vision, to have heard the call, but not to respond to the cry of need at your door! There is no greater happiness than for you, out of your love to Christ for the mercy he has shown you, to help to save your neighbor's soul!

The day is wearing on to night,
Heaven and hell are grappling in the fight,
Lend a hand, man! Strike for the right!

—Arthur T. Fowler.

position by an argument which is not quoted by Luke. Luke omits entirely to describe what he said, and he omits on purpose. The intention was to turn aside the Pro-Consul from believing; and then Saul, who is also called Paul, stepped forward, and you must imagine the scene.

You can never understand rightly any of the narratives in this book unless you get a clear idea in your mind of the relative position of the speakers—a clear idea in your mind of the surroundings. Paul was filled with indignation, and he stepped forward as the principal person. Hitherto Barnabas, a stately, dignified, gracious figure, had been the greatest man in the church of Syrian Antioch, and was the leader of this mission; but now in this crisis Paul stepped forward and fixed his eyes on the magician and said, "Oh, full of all guile and of villainy! Thou son of the devil! Thou enemy of all righteousness! Wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord?"

Now you must acknowledge that that is very strong language, and it is not language that is justified in ordinary conversation. Paul was a practiced, highly educated and highly trained man; and he was practiced especially in recent years in defending the faith, but there was something peculiarly offensive in what Bar-Jesus said. It was in the court of the Pro-Consul, surrounded by the elite of society of Paphos that this scene occurred; and Paul, who showed himself on many occasions so polished and was able to maintain his position with dignity and courtesy in the presence of kings and great men—here on this occasion is guilty of what you might call a breach of good manners. It could only be justified by power. No person is justified in speaking like this unless he goes on to act. "And now, behold the hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun for a season." And there fell on Elymas a mist and a darkness, and he went about seeking some one to lead him by the hand. . . .

"A Certain Slave Girl"

In a third case in which the teachers of the new religion are brought into close relationship with the magician, the lower type of teacher, the practitioner of mere magic arts, is in Chapter Sixteen. "A certain slave girl, having a spirit of divination, met us; which brought her masters much gain by soothsaying." She told fortunes and all that she earned was the property of her owners. It always seems to me that this little slave girl is one of the most pathetic figures in the whole of the New Testament. She stands out prominently and yet nothing seems to justify the importance attached to her; but she followed Paul day after day, calling out—"These men are servants of the Most High God, which proclaim to you the way of salvation," and she did this until Paul became annoyed and said to the spirit in her—"I charge thee in the name of Jesus Christ to come out of her, and it came out that very hour." The power that was in her departed. You must imagine that a person in such a position must be possessed of some peculiar sensitiveness. She was able to read thought; to gather quickly a conception of the character, the probable career of those who consulted her and to tell their fortune through this power. But when her masters saw that the hope of their gain was gone, they laid hold on Paul and Silas and took them before the magistrates . . .

It was in Ephesus that the next incident of contact between the Christians and the magicians—the teachers and practicers of magic is described. "There were seven sons of one Sceva, a Jew—a chief priest, which sought to exorcise and to use the name of the Lord Jesus and the evil spirit answered and said unto them—'Jesus I know and Paul I know, but who are you?' And the man in whom the evil spirit was leaped on them and mastered them and prevailed against them so that they fled out of that house naked and wounded." You observe here the sons of Sceva trying to get the power without paying for it. Simon of Samaria at least was willing to pay a fair price. There is something reasonable about his conduct, but these men attempt to get the power without paying for it all. They listen—they catch a few words—they learn the power that the name of Jesus has in the cases of diabolical possession, and they try to use that name and suffer accordingly.

Now it is not unnatural, it is quite in accordance with the character of society, that there should be so many cases of contact between this new teaching and the magicians. These low-class teachers abounded everywhere. People were all eager to get their fortunes told, to have the future read to them, to have their desires to know the nature of things—to know the future—satisfied, to have relations with their lost children. There were any number in every town of this class of person. Contact was inevitable between the new faith and these people.

And you notice also how frequently punishment occurs. That is a marked feature of the second period in the history of Christianity. In the first period you have the one gracious, perfect character of the Redeemer. The thought of such action as was found by the Apostle to be necessary is entirely inconsistent with the life and action of Jesus. You take, for example, the remarkable incident of the punishment of Ananias and Saphira. At first sight it certainly appears terribly severe punishment. It has only recently occurred in my study of the inscriptions recording the religion of the time that there must have been a practice among the Pagans of exaggerating their gifts to their own religion. Case after case occurs in which any subscription that is given seems to be multiplied by ten, and this misrepresentation of one's devotion to one's own religion was an evil in society at the time, which the Apostles felt must be stamped upon at the very beginning.

REV. H. DANIELSON, PASTOR FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH, STOCKHOLM

REV. K. A. MODEN,
SECRETARY BAPTIST MISSION BOARD

RICHARD BENGTSSON,
VICE PRESIDENT BAPTIST MISSION BOARD

Will Your Church Be Represented at Stockholm?

THE World Baptist Congress at Stockholm, July 21-27, promises to be the most representative gathering ever held by our denomination, and it is believed it will prove to be the most far-reaching in its influence. Hundreds of our churches should begin immediately to plan to be represented. Thousands of members are abundantly able to make the trip at the reasonable rates announced by the committee to promote attendance. They would return to their churches with a better preparation for service, and with a vision of world conditions and opportunities which would enrich the life of their churches. It is conceivable that a spirit may be generated at Stockholm, which if transmitted to our churches, would help to inspire our denomination to far larger achievements than ever before. Think of the value of a thousand or more Northern Baptists returning home, aflame with enthusiasm for kingdom tasks! THE BAPTIST suggests that in every church a mid-week service be devoted to prayer for the great gathering at Stockholm, and to a discussion of steps necessary to secure proper representation at the congress. If necessary, the church should meet a part of the expense of the trip, and the delegates will return with a sense of obligation to share with the church the blessing received. Of course, many pastors should be assisted if they cannot personally meet the cost of the journey, and we hope the churches will count it a privilege thus to honor their ministers, but the laymen and the good women too should go to Stockholm in large numbers.

Europe as a Mission Field

By JAMES H. FRANKLIN

THE question as to how Europe may properly be regarded as a mission field is quite natural and is altogether appropriate. Every country in Europe, as far east as Siberia and Russia, as far west as Spain and Portugal, as far north as Norway and Sweden, and as far south as Italy and Greece, even to the bounaries of Turkey, is by tradition and profession a Christian nation. Why then should any American missionary body regard Europe as in any sense a mission field?

Why A Mission Field

Were not all the peoples in Europe in the possession of the Christian faith long before Columbus discovered America? Moreover, is it not true that historically America received even evangelical Christianity through such heroic souls as the Huguenots of France, by way of England and Holland? Is not the soul of America still lighted by fires that were built around the bodies of great reformers in Europe? Have not European Christians sent out some of the most heroic and useful missionaries who ever labored in the Orient, in Africa and in other parts of the world? Why then think of Europe as a mission field at all? Perhaps I may attempt to answer that question from the viewpoint of one of the Baptist mission bodies in America, which for nearly a century has shown an interest in the progress of Baptist churches in European countries.

It is true that there are many millions of members of the various Christian churches in Europe. It is true, too, that the torches of evangelical Christianity were held high in some of those lands before there were any churches in America. But it is true also that the religious atmosphere was usually too close over Europe in general for the torches to burn bright there. Autocratic churches, in league with governments, were quick to brand as heretics those who proclaimed doctrines which flourished when preached in America, and which today are accepted here by almost all evangelical Christians. In the free air of America the sparks which were wafted across the Atlantic burst into bright flames in every direction, but, unfortunately, the conditions, which drove to America the bands of earnest souls (not always consistent) in quest of complete religious liberty, continued in Europe for centuries, and, frankly, they have not entirely passed away even yet. Here in America, under the leadership of Roger Williams, the founder of the earliest Baptist congregation in the New World, the first successful effort was made to establish "a free church in a free state." Historians agree that this was one of the epoch-marking events in human history—perhaps the most significant in recent centuries for the emancipation of the soul of man.

Those Who Have Prospered

Among those who have prospered here in America have been the Baptists who, although making their strongest appeal to the common people, are now recognized as having been unsurpassed leaders in the struggle for the separation of church and state, for the doctrine of a regenerate church membership and the competency under God of every soul to make its own decision in matters of religion, unhampered by the dictation of pope, by council, by priest, by church or by man-made creed.

Numerically, the Baptists have become a great people in America, possibly eight million strong, with large missionary agencies, many institutions of learning, a few outstanding statesmen and no little material wealth. For many years they have heard the cry of their spiritual kinsmen in Europe, who have been fighting the battles our fathers fought. They have been fighting them in the face of the opposition, and oftentimes the persecution, of the state churches. American Baptists believe that those principles are essential to the best religious development of mankind, and they feel it their duty to furnish encouragement to those in other lands who are struggling in defense of such principles. The American Baptist Foreign Mission Society does not send missionaries as such to Europe, but by the Southern Baptists of America. In Czecho-Slovakia the Foreign Mission Society cooperates with the Baptists of Great Britain and Sweden in rendering assistance, and in the Baltic States with the Baptists of Great Britain and Canada. Southern Baptists of America have accepted responsibility for rendering assistance to the Baptist groups in Spain, Portugal, Italy, Jugo-Slavia, Hungary and Roumania. The German-speaking Baptists of America are rendering assistance in Austria, Bulgaria and a part of Poland. It is anticipated that various groups will render assistance in Russia whenever the barriers are removed.

Fraternal Visitors

Beginning with Prof. Ira Chase of Newton Theological Institution, who went to France in 1832, American Baptists have sent many fraternal visitors to their denominational kinsmen in Europe. Among the most notable was Dr. Barnas Sears of Hamilton, N. Y., who baptized J. G. Oncken and a few others in the River Elbe near Hamburg, which historically was the beginning of the modern Baptist movement in Germany, from which streams of influence have gone out to almost every other part of northern, eastern and southeastern Europe.

Through the years the secretaries of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society have made personal investigations in various parts of Europe. Soon after the armistice was signed, one of them was sent to France to ascertain what Northern Baptists should undertake in the reconstruction work which was so urgently required. Before the war Dr. Jacob Heinrichs was sent to Russia to investigate carefully the situation in that country, and in the summer of 1920 he was sent on a special mission to the German-speaking Baptists in Alsace-Lorraine, and to Germany itself. In 1919 Dr. Charles A. Brooks was sent to explore the situation throughout Europe, and, after a year of investigations, he joined Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke, now Baptist commissioner for Europe, in making a survey which furnished the Baptist conference in London in 1920 the basis for its deliberations. At present Dr. W. O. Lewis is the society's special representative in Europe. The recent visits of Dr. Frederick Taylor, Dr. Carter Helm Jones, Dr. W. S. Abernethy and Mr. W. T. Sheppard are all well known to the denomination.

A Time of Gladness

Northern Baptists have been glad to join others in a program of relief work in Europe in recent years. Rather large sums of money have been contributed for the purchase of food for distribution in various lands. Recently, under the slogans "Fill a Ship in Fellowship" and "Rush a Ship to Russia," vast quantities of clothing have been shipped to European lands for distribution among the suffering peoples, without regard to racial or political differences. Our people have been glad indeed to render such practical service. We believe that, when their delegates visit Stockholm next July, they will be glad that they have been privileged to render assistance in Sweden and elsewhere in Europe.

Things to Guard

By R. M. WEST

GUARD your character first and your flesh for character's sake. Guard your brother first and yourself for your brother's sake. Guard humanity first and government for humanity's sake. Guard your patrons first and your business for the patrons' sake. So will you make life a service, and the serving life succeeds.

Guard faith; for doubt and fear and lust and ignorance will make constant war against it. Guard hope; for disappointment and delay and menace and difficulty will tend to turn it into despair. Guard love; for selfishness and misunderstanding and scandal and half-truths will seek to murder it.

As long as faith, hope and love abide so long life, home and government are safe.

Guard these three, they will be to you more than pleasure or great wealth.

it does greet with a cheer their brethren who are standing for soul freedom and a personal experience in religion, as opposed to the ecclesiastical dictatorship of overwhelming majorities still satisfied with a union of church and state, priestcraft and sacramentarianism.

While the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society does not send missionaries to Europe, it has been glad to cooperate in very practical ways with indigenous and completely autonomous groups of Baptists in France and Belgium, Germany, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Czecho-Slovakia, Poland, Latvia, Esthonia and Lithuania. Before the war small contributions were made to Baptists in Russia, as was true with reference to those in Finland, now assisted by the Baptists of Great Britain and Sweden, and with a few in Spain, now assisted

The Third Congress of the Baptist World Alliance

THE third congress of the Baptist World Alliance will be held in Stockholm, Sweden, July 21-28, 1923, as decided by the alliance committee, which gathered in London July, 1922.

The congress should have been held earlier but the awful war and its consequences have hindered. The first Baptist congress was held in London, 1905, and the second in Philadelphia, 1911.

It was thought advisable by the committee that the third congress should be held in some neutral land in Europe. At the congress of 1911, all believed that the next congress was to be held in Germany. But events since then have made it necessary that some other place should be selected. That place became Sweden, which besides England and Russia has the strongest contingent of Baptists found in any land in Europe. The Swedish Baptists are more than 60,000 in number.

When the Swedish Baptists heard that the leaders of the Baptist World Alliance sympathized with the idea of holding the congress at Stockholm they dared to extend an invitation, which was accepted. It may be a rather too big undertaking for us, who are not a very strong denomination, and live in a comparatively small land. We have, however, some little experience in arranging an international meeting. The second European Baptist Congress was held in Stockholm in 1913, and there were then quite a number of people with us. Even some Americans took part in that Congress.

Preparations

The Swedish Baptists are now preparing for receiving the Baptist World Congress of 1923. Several committees have been elected, namely a general committee, an executive committee, a press committee, and several others.

The Baptist Congress will be held in "Immanuelskyrkan." It seats 2,400 people. The European Baptist Congress was held in the same place. Thus a good many persons already know about the church.

Quite a big college building, "Högre Realtaroverket" will be used for committee meetings and the Baptist exhibition. The building also contains an assembly hall seating about 800 people. It is situated only three or four minutes' walk from "Immanuelskyrkan."

"Bethelkapellet," the place of worship of the First Baptist Church in Stockholm, is not far away from "Immanuelskyrkan."

Among many others who will do their best to prepare for the congress is Rev. C. E. Benander, D.D., president of the Bethel Seminary. He is a Colgate man. For more than thirty years he has been a professor in the theological seminary and since 1906 president of that institution. He is a scholarly man and highly esteemed among the Swedish Baptists.

Another is Rev. Hjalmar Danielson, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Stockholm, the largest Baptist church in Sweden. Mr. Danielson is one of our most eloquent speakers.

Rev. K. A.-Modén, secretary of the Baptist mission board, knows several languages. He possesses great executive power. The very heaviest burden of preparations for the congress is laid upon him, though he will have help from many hands.

Mr. Richard Bengtsson, is a successful business man. He is vice-president of the Swedish Baptist Union, and much interested in Christian work.

Rev. J. Bystrom, D.D., is president of the Swedish Baptist Union. He is a Colgate man. In earlier years he was a pastor. For more than thirty years he has been editor of Vecko-Posten, the official organ of the Swedish Baptists.

The "America"

The Official Ship for Stockholm Delegates

THE special committee created by the executive committee of the Northern Baptist Convention to promote attendance at the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance at Stockholm, Sweden, late in July, 1923, has given very careful study to the problem of transportation, and is pleased to announce that the "America" of the United States Line, sailing under the American flag, from New York, June 30, for European ports, has been selected as the official ship. The "America," which ranks next to the "George Washington" among the ships of the United States lines, is just about to be converted into a one-cabin vessel, which means that it will be the largest vessel of any line on which passengers may enjoy the best accommodations on the ship at the intermediate rates. Its length is nearly 700 feet, its decks are very wide and long, many of its cabins unusually large, and its social halls are spacious. On the "America" the rates each way for the trans-Atlantic voyage will be about $145 and up per berth, according to the character of the accommodations desired and the number of passengers occupying a room. Railway travel and other expenses of journey from port of landing to Stockholm is not included in these rates. The total cost of journey from New York to Stockholm and return by direct routes and including hotel bill during the congress, ship fees, passport and incidental expenses, need not exceed $500—perhaps less.

The "America" will accommodate about 800 cabin passengers, and already several hundred berths on this vessel are being reserved for Northern Baptist delegates alone. As many more will be reserved as may be required in the light of early developments. It is hoped that our Southern brethren will join in making the "America" the official ship of American Baptists to the meeting at Stockholm. The "America" may be made another "Ship of Fellowship" to Europe. Many will desire to enjoy such fellowship across the Atlantic. Probably lectures, Sunday services and stereopticon entertainments on deck will be arranged with a view to preparing the delegates to receive the largest benefits from their visit to Stockholm and other sections of Europe.

The sailing date of the "America," June 30, seems to be most convenient for the larger number intending to go to Stockholm. The schedule will allow for a brief visit to the British Isles or some section of Northern Europe en route to Stockholm. The "America" calls at Plymouth, England, July 8; Cherbourg, France, July 9; and is due at Bremen, Germany, July 10. Passengers may leave the ship at any port for tours before opening of meeting at Stockholm.

Accommodations have been reserved also for our people on several steamers sailing at earlier dates—the "Pittsburgh" June 19, and the "Albania," June 6 (for those wishing to leave soon after the meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention). And berths have been reserved for the few who will wish to sail at the last minute and reach Stockholm immediately before the opening of the congress. The American Express Company is also reserving space on several steamers for the return voyages in August and September, to meet the desires of the delegates.

The American Express Company, which has been chosen as the official agency of our committee in making arrangements for the travel of delegates to Stockholm, is arranging a series of tours in Europe at moderate rates, which may be taken by those who desire to be personally conducted; but any one may reserve passage on the "America" through the American Express Company regardless of plans for travel in Europe. It is hoped, therefore, that private parties which are now forming will communicate with the American Express Company with reference to passage on the "America." A booklet giving full information is now being printed, which may be secured about January 15 from the office of the American Express Company in any of the following cities: Atlanta, Baltimore, Birmingham, Boston, Buffalo, Chicago, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Dallas, Denver, Detroit, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Montreal, Newark, New Orleans, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Portland, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Seattle, St. Louis, Washington, D. C. Meanwhile, information may be secured and reservations may be made by communicating with Mr. W. B. Lippard, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City. By reason of the American Express Company's many offices in America and principal European centers, it is especially well fitted to serve as our committee's officially appointed agent. Reservations should be made as early as possible.

What May We Expect from Stockholm?

By JAMES H. FRANKLIN

THE Baptists of the world are asked to send delegates to Stockholm, Sweden, next July, for a third meeting of the Baptist World Alliance. In America, as elsewhere, much is being done to call attention to the meeting and to promote attendance. Surely there should be some very good reason for asking busy men and women to give a month of their time and to cross the Atlantic, in order to attend such a gathering. What have we a right to expect from the third World Baptist Congress? Much will depend upon the purpose which prompts us in our preparations, and the spirit in which we go to Stockholm.

The congress in London in 1906, and the one in Philadelphia in 1911, did much to promote a better acquaintance among the Baptists of the world; and that in itself is valuable. Acquaintance with each other removes misunderstandings and promotes affection and esteem. It lessens perilous provincialism and increases the sense of brotherhood among men of all races. This means a larger denominational solidarity, which is desirable and useful. At the same time it means a larger international fellowship, which is essential to international concord. Only as individuals are ready to cross the seas and ascertain the problems and best purposes of other men can they really develop international fellowship and such a sense of brotherhood as will lift mankind above the prejudices that poison the life of the world. If nothing more than a better acquaintance with each other could be expected, that in itself would justify another Baptist World Congress.

It is understood that a deliverance will be made at Stockholm which will attempt to interpret our historic Baptist principles in the light of present day conditions. The tides of democratic aspiration are affecting the thought of men regarding religion as well as regarding other phases of life, and any denomination whose practice and principles offer guidance is sure of a wide hearing. Autocracy is being undermined, and, while the immediate result seems to be wide-spread chaos, men everywhere are groping for a solution. We believe that our historic principles are required at this hour. If we can prove our disinterested purpose, and that we have no desire except to serve the world in fraternal spirit, a valuable contribution to the world's thought and to the advancement of the kingdom of God may be made at Stockholm.

We need to ascertain how Baptists in various parts of the world may cooperate more effectively in the propagation of principles which justify our existence as a denomination. This will involve a fresh study of the future of the Baptist World Alliance. No one would be willing to create a central body with any kind of overlordship, in control of the policies of conventions, associations or boards. But it is not enough to have a meeting in which fraternal sentiment only is expressed, and in which we merely ratify our own convictions. We must ascertain how, under the banner of the cross, we may brigade our forces without lowering any regimental colors. We must ascertain how we can correlate and coordinate our own denominational activities, and thereby become a still stronger force in the kingdom of God. This need not lead to a policy of "splendid isolation." But we must learn to operate most usefully as a denomination as well as to cooperate with others who love the Christ in sincerity and truth.

We must expect that the few representatives who may be present from the mission fields of Africa and the Orient and of Latin America will be able to return to their work with a new consciousness of the strength and mission of Baptists, and will be able as well to communicate that consciousness to our spiritual kinsmen in many lands. Baptists everywhere need to realize afresh that their historic principles, when properly interpreted, do meet a deep yearning among thoughtful men of every race.

Of course, the congress should bring large encouragement to European Baptists. Few of us in America have known of their heroic struggles, in the face sometimes of imprisonment and other forms of opposition. But, weak in numbers, they have been the chief "dissenters" in several sections of Europe, which means that in several countries they have been the chief opponents of the union of church and state and the chief proponents of the doctrines of a regenerate church membership and the complete freedom of the human soul. There is a surprise in store for those not familiar with conditions among the Baptists in Europe. They will be pleased to discover men and women of heroic mould who have not been conspicuous in world affairs, partly because of the hindrances which are met by dissenting groups in Europe. We shall not need to leave Sweden to find sturdy Baptist Vikings. Indeed, Stockholm must be regarded as one of the two or three Baptist capitals of Europe. It is appropriate that it should be our Mecca this year.

We cannot meet representatives of every country in Europe face to face without experiencing an enlargement of sympathy for Europe as a whole, and thereby will come a benefit to America. A few days ago the writer of this article heard an address by one of the most distinguished Christian ministers of New York City, who spent several months last year in Europe. This minister did not hesitate to say that America is "the belated nation in international thinking." He boldly proclaimed that we have blocked the program of the world because we are not ready in our own souls for the service which is required of us. Whether this eminent minister's words are true or not, it would be helpful to our churches all over the land if a thousand or more of our people could study personally the conditions in Europe.

But the answer to the question as to what may be expected from the Baptist congress at Stockholm will depend upon something more than attendance, program and enthusiasm. The spirit in which we go to this world meeting of Baptists will determine in large measure the answer to our question. Perhaps more than ever before in our generation the general conditions in the world require that we should go to Stockholm in a spirit of humility and fraternity, and with a manifest desire to serve. All tendencies toward the flamboyant should be repressed. So far as possible, national and sectional lines should be obliterated, and we should go there as one great brotherhood. The prestige of Baptists will be enhanced in the minds of men of good-will everywhere in proportion as our purpose to serve is discovered.

The answer to our question will depend in a large measure, too, upon the preparation we make in prayer for our approach to what should be our Mount of Rededication. It behooves us to ask what the next generation will say was the result of the meeting at Stockholm. Let us have faith to hope and pray that somehow the historian will be able to record that at Stockholm, in 1923, Baptists of many lands, through their representatives who were conscious of the world's one great need, came together and gave themselves afresh to their Lord, and to the establishment of his reign in the life of men and nations.

Our Missionary Interest in Sweden

THE Baptist movement in Sweden, now just seventy-five years old, has been a strictly indigenous movement. At the same time it has received encouragement from America for many years and relations between the Baptists of Sweden and several of our own missionary organizations have been most fraternal, as is evident from the first few sentences in the address of Rev. C. E. Benander, president of Bethel Seminary at Stockholm, which was delivered at the second meeting of the Baptist World Alliance, at Philadelphia, in 1911:

"In speaking of Baptist work and influence as one of the agencies for the furtherance of true Christian life and principles in our home-land, we deem it befitting at the outset to call attention to the fact that Sweden has been, and is still, to some extent an American Baptist mission field. As early as 1855 the American Baptist Publication Society, of this city, great in its many noble achievements for the extension of the kingdom of heaven upon earth, was led to take loving and supporting care of the young Baptist child in our country, which at the time was poor, despised and persecuted.

"In 1866 the American Baptist Missionary Union, now the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, which, as we all know, is one of the regiments of honor in our Lord's great and victorious army of missions, planted its benign banner in Sweden. The substantial support of the union at once called into existence our seminary for the education of ministers, and also furnished means for sending out a considerable number of gospel messengers in various provinces. Thus the work, which was already begun, could be advanced with increased force and efficiency. Through the gracious blessing of God it was attended by an almost unequalled success, to which the history of our mission is known to bear abundant testimony. The work of sowing and reaping has been interchanging incessantly on the Swedish field.

"From this field my fellow-delegates and I have come to this world congress with hearts thrilling with harvest joy. Mindful of our Lord's words, 'That he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together,' we would especially call upon the representatives of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society and the American Baptist Publication Society to share this joy with us. The seed, sown under the auspices of these societies in Swedish ground, is of the true mustard species of the parable, and through the grace of God the tree has already grown large and rich in branches."

Our home mission agencies have made their contribution too, although indirectly. And the same is true of our schools. For instance, Dr. Benander, Dr. Bystrom and the late Dr. Broady, three of the ablest and most useful of the Swedish Baptist leaders, graduated at Colgate University and Hamilton Theological Seminary. On the other hand, the Baptists of Sweden have enriched our own Baptist work in America. They have furnished us a large group of our own missionaries also, and they have a vigorous foreign missionary society of their own at work in China and Africa.

For many years the Foreign Mission Society has proclaimed that probably no missionary investment of similar size has yielded larger returns for the kingdom of God than that made in cooperation with the Baptists of Sweden. The statement would appear to be justified. It is not strange that our missionary agencies take such pride in the fact that the Baptists of Sweden are to serve as hosts of the next meeting of the Baptist World Alliance, and that they are doing their best to promote interest in the congress.

The Cost of the Trip to Stockholm

MUCH will depend on the tastes of the delegates. Those who desire de luxe accommodations must pay for them. Those who plan tours in Europe before or after the congress must increase their estimates accordingly. And the individual who is not prepared to occupy a berth in a room with others must pay something extra for his ocean passage. But those who are prepared to travel economically, but comfortably, may go from New York to Stockholm direct and back to New York for as little as $450, including minimum rate berth on a comfortable ship, passport, ship fees, entertainment in Stockholm and incidental expenses en route. It is estimated that $500 would insure a considerable choice of accommodations on the ship, and possibly a bit of sight-seeing at several points between the port of landing and the city of Stockholm. At least, these are the figures announced by the committee to promote attendance. Delegates desiring extensive tours in Europe will be furnished guaranteed figures by tourist agencies or by any one of the leaders of numerous private parties now forming.

It is estimated that the Swedish Baptists of America will have a delegation at the Baptist congress in Stockholm which will be at least one hundred strong, and possibly two or three hundred. Thirty thousand members of Baptist churches in Sweden have moved to America in the course of the years and no better immigrants have come to our shores. For them there is always the lure of the northern lights of Scandinavia, but the year 1923 offers unusual reasons for a visit to their native land. First, the Jubilee Exposition at Gothenburg. Then comes the celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the organization of the first Baptist church in Sweden. Again, the Baptist Congress at Stockholm.

The Official Ship for Our Stockholm Delegates

THE Northern Baptist committee to promote attendance at the next meeting of the Baptist World Alliance has made a very happy choice of vessel as the official ship for our delegates. After nearly two months of investigation, the "America," of the United States Lines, under the American flag, has been chosen. The name itself is appealing, and the sentiment of sailing under the American flag is satisfying. We are told, too, that the "America" is the largest of all the ships on the Atlantic which will offer such moderate rates next summer. Indeed, it is far more spacious than many of the more expensive vessels. It is fortunate that the "America" is scheduled to sail from New York on June 30, which probably will be as convenient as any date for most of the delegates. The eastward tide of travel on the Atlantic is then at its height, and the committee is wise in making large reservations of space on several ships far in advance. The sailing date makes it possible for delegates to make any one of several brief tours in Europe before the congress opens at Stockholm.

There is just now another very strong reason why Baptists should consider the use of American ships. We are glad to be credited, together with other Christian bodies, with a large measure of responsibility for the enactment of our prohibition laws, which make it impossible for ships sailing under the American flag to sell intoxicating liquors. The shipping men tell us that this law affects seriously the travel on American vessels. When we consider that our votes are largely responsible for the prohibition laws, many will feel that they must patronize American ships whenever they can secure comfort and a convenient schedule on such vessels at moderate rates. The "America" meets all these conditions.

It should be clearly understood that no member of the committee to promote attendance is securing any personal benefit from the patronage that may be given to the official ship, or any other vessel. The committee's only interest is to provide comfortable accommodations for the delegates at the lowest cost, and to make such arrangements as will insure the best preparation for a successful congress. It was believed that ten days of fellowship between delegates from various sections of America, en route to Stockholm, would prove helpful in every way. The reservations already made on the "America" indicate that the selection of an official ship is appreciated. Accommodations at lowest rates may be reserved on the "America" by those who desire to travel independently in Europe, as well as by those joining parties.

If You Made a Journey to Jerusalem

The New World Movement in My Church

By A. H. C. MORSE, Pastor, First Baptist Church Denver, Colorado

THE church which I now serve was not celebrated for its missionary interests when I first made its acquaintance. That was in 1912, when upon invitation I visited this church with the view to settlement as pastor.

The Northern Baptist Convention met that year in Des Moines, Iowa; and upon the train trip from Denver to those meetings, I was accompanied by one of the deacons of the First Baptist Church. In the course of conversation he told me that he had been asked by the chairman of the finance committee to hunt out the proper officers of the convention, and show them why the missionary apportionment to this church should be largely reduced; that they were then giving about $3,000 per year, and that was too much! I did not raise any protest at that time. I did not figure it out, and show him that for a church of 1,000 members, that was only $3 per annum each, or much less than one cent per day. But I made a mental note of two things: that the church was evidently backward in missionary giving; and backward also in understanding, if they thought the apportionment to any individual church could be altered by the officers of the Northern Baptist Convention, and especially if they thought they could attend to these things at their annual meeting. I determined to begin at the first in missionary teaching.

The "Poor Fund"

Well, in a few weeks I returned to Denver as pastor of this noble church; and began at once some personal attention to its missionary interests. The annual Thanksgiving service was soon due; and because Thanksgiving Day is so distinctly American, I thought that the offering for that day should be devoted to some specified home missionary object. One of the deacons forthwith protested that the offering on Thanksgiving Day had always gone to the fellowship-fund of the church, or the "poor-fund," as he called it, and that it ought not to be diverted to other objects; and that it sometimes amounted to as much as $30! But it was diverted; and has been ever since. For the past three years, for instance, to the Near East Relief, the offering has averaged more than $1,000 per year.

Upon settlement as pastor, I soon discovered that this church, though the mother of all the Baptist churches in the city, had never given anything to city missions; and this I concluded should be our next reform. I, therefore, asked the missionary chairman to call his committee together; and suspecting my object, he demurred, but eventually the committee was assembled; and when I asked them to devote at least $300 per year to city missions, this man protested that to do so would be a misappropriation of missionary funds. But the sum was voted by the committee.

It then seemed to me that we ought to introduce duplex envelopes in our church; so that every one who used envelopes for current expense would have in his hand a missionary envelope also; and the empty side of the envelope would be a mute appeal to him to give to missionary objects. And to my utter amazement, the chairman protested against this innovation; and then said that if these envelopes were introduced, he would resign from the committee. The envelopes were introduced; but that man did not resign. His known gifts to the church, however, ceased from that moment!

Then came the New World Movement; and the sum apportioned to this church was amazing—$150,000—but we took hold of it with a will, and though the whole sum was not pledged then, nor even half pledged, we have done nobly, and have derived very great blessing in giving. And now almost every one is devoted to missionary interests. Let me mention some of the details:

First. We have now two missionary families, supported by the church, on the foreign fields.

Second. Our benevolences have steadily grown, and last year approximated $21,000; of which $18,000 was for the New World Movement; and this was about

The Touch of Human Hands

THE touch of human hands—

That is the boon we ask;

For groping, day by day,

Along the stony way,

We need the comrade heart

That understands,

And the warmth, the living warmth

Of human hands.

The touch of human hands—

Not vain, unthinking words,

Nor that cold charity

Which shuns our misery;

We seek a loyal friend

Who understands

And the warmth, the pulsing warmth

Of human hands.

The touch of human hands—

Such care as was in him

Who walked in Galilee

Beside the silver sea;

We need a patient guide

Who understands

And the warmth, the loving warmth

—Thomas Curtis Clark.

one-sixth of all that was given to that object in Colorado.

Third. A rising tide of missionary interest exists in church and Bible school, and the work of the women's organization was never so intense and sacrificial as at present.

Then I would mention some of the by-products of the work, and these I attribute very largely to our missionary spirit:

a. Our church membership has more than doubled.

b. Our gifts for current expenses have greatly increased. Whereas the amounts raised for all purposes when I first knew the church were about $13,000, they were last year more than $45,000; and the number of contributors is three times that of ten years ago.

c. Meantime a continuous spirit of revival has been upon us, so that in the past ten years 2,300 people have united with the church,—one-third of these by baptism. Baptism has become a weekly occurrence it having been administered in the past year for seven and one-half months without a break.

d. Our Bible school has grown until it now occupies all parts of our church; and two new rooms have recently been added, and a room in a hotel across the way has been rented.

e. Our young people's meetings are the best ever.

f. And to meet our growing conditions, a site for a new edifice has been both purchased and paid for, the thought being that only a new edifice will satisfy the expanding conditions of our work.

Some Advice

Finally, if I were asked for advice, I should say two or three things:

First: Don't be afraid of the big things; and especially don't be afraid that giving for missionary objects will react upon current expenses. It is the other way 'round.

Second: The pastor must be a missionary man; and he must keep missionary interests and missionary information constantly before the people.

Third: Have a strong missionary committee, and that of people who are acceptable to the church at large. They must be agreeable people, with agreeable ways; and people whose missionary talk will be supplemented by their own personal sacrifices in the interest of missions.

Fourth: Acceptability to the people is especially demanded of the chairman and treasurer of the missionary committee, for people will not place their monies in the hands of men whom they do not respect in their hearts.

And finally, do not be afraid to use a chart in the public worship. Estimate the sums needed, divide up the chart so as to meet the possibilities of all givers, and then get it! It can be done.

We believe in the New World Movement in this church. We are not done yet, but we are doing. And meantime, we feel that to the impulses generated by the New World Movement we must attribute much of the blessing that has now come to our church. Therefore, blessings on the New World Movement, and upon the convention that was daring enough to propose it!

The Ambridge Church, Pittsburgh, has received thirty-nine members during the nine months that Rev. Wm. H. Cutler has been pastor, and the Sunday-school attendance and finances have been doubled.

Valentino Panizzoli, pastor of St. John's Italian mission of Batavia, N. Y., was ordained by the First Church, Batavia. Twenty-eight delegates from the churches of the Genesee Association were present.

While many district associations have not yet sent in their returns on baptisms for 1922, a preliminary report on that subject compiled by the Publicity Department of the Baptist Seventy-five Million Campaign, shows that the local churches cooperating with the Southern Baptist Convention received 218,140 persons by baptism alone during the past year. It is believed when the final returns from all churches are in the showing will be considerably larger.

session he prepared the way by laying water and oil pipes ahead of the advancing army. It happened that the water pipe was extended into Jerusalem first, and the waters of the Nile actually poured into the city when the city fell. He had done something in piping water into Jerusalem that King Solomon and King David had failed to do. With the paved streets which will inevitably follow, the city will lose the charm of an unchangeable age, but it will be a more sanitary city in which to live.

It will never become the Mecca of those who seek an ideal climate. It is very hot in summer, and the rainy winter is bleak and cold. The English are building a hotel there which will make a stay in this holy place more endurable to those who cannot get away from the comforts the flesh demands; but until it is finished the only place for the girls who went in with the army as stenographers or secretaries is the House of World Friendship on the Upper Jaffa Road, a house over whose front door there hangs the blue triangle, telling those who venture so far from home that the Young Women's Christian Association has ventured ahead of them, engaged in cementing into friendship the meeting of the women of all racess and all belief in all quarters of the world.

Everything is high in Jerusalem. The best store is the American Colony store, but as 90 per cent of its stock is souvenirs it does not meet the demands of those who have come to Jerusalem to stay. Fuel is scarce. In the House of World Friendship the twelve guests huddle around a tiny stove in the dining-room, in which a small knot of wood is burned in the evening. There is not more, because there is not more to be had.

The twelve girls are English, French and Greek, working with the English army, or engaged in commercial purposes. There are no American girls in the number, the American girl in Jerusalem being of the tourist type.

"They are starting something that is going to be tremendously great," says Miss Edna Sandlin, general secretary of the national board, who recently returned from a visit to the Holy Land. "It is tremendously great in its prospects because of the cosmopolitan character of the girls it will interest. They are not many in numbers, but from what I have seen of them quality will make up for quantity. Those who are natives do not know of better conditions, but those, who are not, are facing constant hardship in order to carry on, and you know what an influence this has in the development of character."

Woman's Work in Czecho-Slovakia

By JOSEPH NOVOTNY

FIFTEEN happy children in the Peabody-Montgomery Home sing almost the whole day long. The passerby wonders and says: "What a happy youth these children have!" But these least ones in the kingdom of God did not experience much love in their lives before they went to live in the Peabody-Montgomery Home.

Madame Lydia Kolator came to America in 1921 from her home in Czecho-Slovakia and told the American Baptist women how they had tried to raise money for an orphanage for the little war orphans, and about the work they were trying to do for the women of that war ravaged country. Her appeal touched the hearts of American women, and through the Women's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society they offered their help to their Czecho-Slovak sisters.

The Peabody-Montgomery Home was opened in the spring of 1922. In Podhorany, Czecho-Slovakia, and as soon as it became known that this home was an established fact, the Czecho-Slovak Baptist women and even poor women outside our denomination, sent in large quantities of all kinds of supplies for the children. Often poor women brought the last they had so that the little war orphans might not suffer. Whenever the families in the neighborhood have any kind of harvest they remember the children in the orphanage and share their happiness with them.

The children appreciate every smile and kind word, for smiles and kind words were not plentiful in the lives they remember such a short time ago. Two little brothers were brought in from the woods where they had lived with their mother by stealing. They were wild little fellows and sometimes they quarrel and even bite each other. But Tonda's brother prays, "O God, help that Tonda may not bite again."

The children are all musical, true children of Dvorak's nation, and they have their own good children's choir. They have their own Bible circles, too, and one of the children is always the leader. Their prayers are original; they pray for what they feel is their need. Mr. and Mrs. Kolator's horses often take the children to school in bad weather, and one day not long ago one of the horses had his leg hurt. At the same time Mr. Kolator was hurt. That night the children prayed, "O God, help that the leg of the horse and uncle Kolator may be better." They go to sleep with the prayer, "O God, send thy angels to our little beds, and thy guards to our home."

Work among the women of Czecho-Slovakia is helping to bring the joy of the knowledge of Christ into many lives. Through the influence of one of the missionary nurses, many of the sad Magdalenes of Prague have determined never to go back to their old lives, and a collection has been started for a home for them.

Another of the missionaries was ill, and went home to rest. She was back in a few days with the explanation: "I cannot live without my work; it is a part of me; I shall cure myself in the work."

Miss Volcikova visited a wealthy woman who was ill. She listened to the songs and prayers and to the reading of the Bible, and then, sitting upright in her bed, she exclaimed, "I have a Bible somewhere in the house, but I never dreamed that it contained such treasures. Down in my heart I have a thirst for something like that." The woman learned to pray, and the whole family are now Christians.

Thus in the heart of Europe the American and the Czecho-Slovak Baptist women work together for the advancement of his kingdom.

funeral of the late Mr. F. A. Wells, inspected the Immanuel property, and learned the facts concerning the offer of the same to the denomination. Fourteen secretaries of state conventions, who met for conference in Chicago December 6 and 7, made an inspection of the Immanuel property and heard a full statement respecting the proffered gift, and drafted an expression of their favorable opinion regarding the same to be sent to the national societies in New York. Here the matter seems to rest for the present; further developments are awaited in the near future.

While the Immanuel Church indeed is the exclusive owner of the valuable property under question, this church is not the only party concerned in extending the invitation to the denomination to accept this great gift and to avail itself of the advantages outlined by the Chicago committee. The Executive Council of Chicago, which, at its own expense, commissioned its representatives to go to New York, was the actual initiator of the entire matter. Representative as it is of the more than ninety white churches of the city and suburbs, it seeks no advantage for itself. Interested as its members are in the whole work of the whole denomination, this statement is made that all the facts may be made known to all the people.

SHORT ON COGS

In THE BAPTIST for Nov. 25 Guy C. Crippen writes of the "Cog We Are Short." Most all Baptist ministers will agree with most all he writes; but some details need to be worked out, and it seems to me one "cog" in each state would be better than only one for the Northern Baptist Convention.

Brother Crippen says the "cog" should be free to visit pastorless churches.

Imagine the first call to be from Northern Maine and the next from Oregon.

In the Grand River Baptist Association in Michigan the minutes of 1921 show that fifteen churches reported and five did not report. At one time this year there were only five settled pastors in the association.

Some of the other churches had supplies, some not.

A "cog" could be easily kept busy in this one association. The state would furnish more than he could do and in the Northern Baptist Convention he would be swamped. Surely we are short on cogs.

WORLD-PEACE

But with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of earth . . . and righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins and faithfulness the girdle of his reins.—Isaiah 11: 4-5.

I notice in THE BAPTIST of Dec. 23 words quoted from the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America about a World Peace Sunday among other very good things: "The acceptance of a way of life not generally accepted in economic and international affairs—the way of brotherhood, of friendly cooperation and love. . ."

These are fine sentiments and lofty ideals, but to me it seems, that these sentiments and ideals cannot be practiced until we have radically changed our week-day policies, in business, social customs and political procedure.

Now as for business, how can we think of brotherhood and profits? Business must have profits to exist and prosper, and profits means adding to the cost of production, which again means increased cost to our brother who must, in order to exist, have those necessities, that the other brother, the businessman, has in his possession. This increasing cost has not added one iota to the value of the commodity needed. Thus the buyer, perchance the very producer of the very commodity in question, is paying a tribute to the businessman who should be his brother,—the business-brother being enriched by the profits received not to say extorted from the customer-brother, who by his hard labor has produced the material now under consideration and which he is compelled by his physical needs, to secure for his sustenance. If this customer thinks, and has all he can do to keep the wolf from the door, is it not reasonable to suppose that it causes him to think, that he is wronged?

What I have here spoken of is simply a small sample package of what the world's system of business is. If I should mention that our "rulers" have given millions, hundreds of millions of acres of land to corporations, called railroad companies, waterpower to others, the people's heritage all this, coal lands bartered away to coal barons, iron mines to steel trusts and oil lands to oil kings, and when the toilers who must needs have all these God-given resources, must buy them back it is at 100 to 500 per cent profits to arrogant bond and stock holders. Can it be wondered at, that this wrangles in his soul and in place of creating a "brotherhood" feeling it produces alienation and disgust? These are only part of the wrongs that our so-called democracy fosters in America, once the home of the oppressed and wronged in all nations.

It is often said "America alone can save Europe." "If America shall save Europe, she must," in the words of Dr. Rabi Stephen Wise, "first save her own soul!"

"With righteousness shall he judge the poor." Yes, when we, his church purchased by the precious blood of Christ, shall take our place beside him "whose right it is to rule" and shall give the poor of earth their righteous share of earth's bounties and when we have learned to reprove with equity for the meek slaves of capitalism, there will be brotherhood like that of the First Baptist Church of Jerusalem—Acts 2, 3 and 4.

Righteousness must become the girdle of our loins! Righteousness must be our strength and faithfulness the banner of our liberated sons of God. Until the church of Christ shall open the prisons of the oppressed, lift the chains of want and penury from the ancient and lowly and establish equity on earth, there can be no thought of real brotherhood. But in the words of Dr. Edward Judson, our beloved and sainted brother, it will have to be willing, like its Master, to go out into the world "without money and without scrip" touching the heart, lives and consciences of the lowly ones of earth.—When with the apostle Peter it can say, "What I have I give thee" "then shall the lame leap like the hart," the blind shall see God's fatherhood in the true brotherhood of the world and shall say, "We will go up with you to the house of God."

SHE WILL GET OUT TO KEEP PEACE

Having been an active member of several Baptist churches in several states for fifty years, to give my testimony and state my principles may not be amiss. Never having reached the point of knowing of a surety that I am infallible in my judgments these views must be taken with a grain of salt.

Harmony is absolutely necessary to success in the home or church. I may not always agree with the other members of my family. I'll do my best to guide my children until they become of age for I am morally and legally responsible for them and I love them as my own life. Then if they can live their lives better apart from their home it is their privilege and duty to go from it though it strain my heartstrings in the separation.

In the church—the Christian home—it is the same. Our opinions may differ. If a pastor or layman ask for my opinion, I give it. Sometimes if I discover I do not agree with the majority I do not give it.

I never vote against a proposition the majority favor nor ever intend to unless I consider it a sin.

I may be accused of smoothing things over. I still have no quarrel with the accuser.

I am a Baptist and I know why; but, I do not want to "work so hard being a Baptist that I have no time to be a Christian."

I have often been in churches where much friction existed. I have never been a party to it nor do I ever expect to be. Before I will do that I will move if the Lord makes it possible.

I like the text "Blessed are the peacemakers for they shall be called the children of God."

Print and Prejudice

POETRY still rhymed at the end of the line when Blaisdell Adair began sending contributions to "The Silent Voice." Because of the name and a certain teasing quality in the verses neither the Senior Editor nor the Junior Editor could determine whether the poet was male or female. Not that it mattered particularly, but it was a magazine with a peculiarly friendly spirit and it was an embarrassment to reply to the sundry communications enclosed with the poems, using—perhaps—a wrong and discourteous prefix. The older gentleman, being somewhat sentimental, was all for having her a lady; the younger gentleman, being a practical body, wasted no spare moments on personalities, but clapped the contributions into print, sent off a check for manuscripts accepted and thought no more about it. Such is youth.

But in the course of time—for instance, after that gallant poem beginning "Straight as a tree am I"—various letters began wending their red-stamped way to the office addressed to Mr. B. Adair, in care of the editors, who forwarded them whimsically, the Senior Editor smiling disappointedly into his mustache because the consensus of opinion had made the poet a man. So be it! He spent a calm week-end.

Then came that flaming startling thing: "Of all the kisses I have had"—letters began arriving for Miss Adair. Smiles wreathed the face of one editor; the other looked disdainful: "What in the name of sense do they find to write about?" said he in his ruthless young way. The rising generation is ever scornful of enthusiasms. But it was foolish of him to feel immune, for there soon came from Blaisdell Adair five really amazing poems—gorgeous, breath-taking, all-enveloping bits of sheer loveliness about love that left you very misty-eyed and tender, hide it as you might. The cheeks grew correspondingly larger as the volume of mail also increased, hopefully directed to Mr. or Miss or even Mrs. Blaisdell Adair, according to the susceptibility of the writer. The Senior Editor took his pen in hand and wrote a scrawl which was in itself a compliment to the unknown person: "Can't you divulge it even to me whether you are a man or woman?"

But that was the summer that Blaisdell Adair went to South America, and presumably the inquiry ended in the dead-letter office for all the answer it received. The poems, however, grew ever more subtly intense; here was some one who certainly knew love: tempestuous, exquisite, on the heights, in the depths, love-that-loved-details (e. g. "That withered rose you kissed is ashes now," "To me you are the sunrise, dear, And all the stars at night," "The hearth-fire leaps to welcome you; My heart leaps, too") and love-that-stopped-at-no-sacrifice, as witness those gaunt verses starting:

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

"I gave you all the meat, today,
There was none left for me," they were bafflingly strange experiences caged in metered lines. People thrilled and shuddered, and spinsters felt that life was a pretty empty business for some and unfairly passionate for others.

In the midst of all this interest came her letter: "Of course I am a woman; why all this gossip? Am coming to New York either twelfth or thirteenth about some future work. Would appreciate an interview."

It became a matter of terrible panic to either of the editors if anything called them out of the office. Suppose they missed her! Any one with that unlimited capacity for exalted passion, . . . S. E. and J. E. each wore their smartest suits and choicest neckties on the twelfth and thirteenth instant. They each wished the other hadn't. But J. E. had somewhat the best of the impressiveness, due to a silk shirt—it was in the days when silk shirts were scandalous extravagances. The Senior Editor almost swooned at sight of it, and had all he could do to be civil. The sheer impudence of it!

And as luck would have it, the silk shirt got its innings first. For S. E. was at luncheon—even the eager grow hollow, and at 1:53 by the office clock he hemmed and hawed, then said he guessed he'd get a bite to eat, after all. Only gone a minute, etc.

It was in that moment she came. When the office boy announced her the Junior Editor did all the regulation things: he smoothed his hair, straightened his tie, shot his cuffs, and rose to stand gracefully behind his swivel chair. But in spite of his preparedness she completely took his breath away as she swept into the room.

"You! Are you the editor? You're nothing but a Boy. About twenty at the outside. I greatly prefer to deal with some one more mature!"

"I'm thirty-one!" gasped the unfortunate young gentleman, somewhat tartly, "and really rather competent in spite of my looks. Perhaps you would prefer waiting for the Senior Editor—he's lunching, but he'll be back almost at once, if you will kindly be seated."

"I haven't time to wait, but I will be back in one hour," the astounding Miss Adair replied, as she swept out—her exit and entrance all done in one breath, as it were.

The Junior Editor was still swaying gracefully over the back of his chair when his superior came back from luncheon.

"Hal, my boy, you look ill! What is it?" "She has been here!" he announced dramatically.

"And gone?"

"And gone!"

"But, my dear boy, I ate with my watch open on the table beside me, and I was gone only eleven and a half minutes—just a hasty gobble. What do you mean by saying that she has gone?"

"It is what grammarians call a simple declarative sentence, sir; all I can add to it is that she will be here again in an hour. One hour, as she precisely specified. She prefers dealing with maturity in the person of a Senior Editor. She ran a scathing eye over me. I am too young!"

A lovely glow permeated the older editor's entire being. Life was a very gracious affair, after all. You spent the morning sickening over the lack of a silk shirt, and in the afternoon of the same day you agreed with Solomon and the preacher that all is vanity. He smoothed his hair and straightened his necktie.

"What is she like?" he asked with tell-tale nonchalance.

"Like? Not like any one I ever saw before, certainly—"

"I suspected it! Young?"

"You've got me! She's one of those persons so—"

"U'mm! U'mm! I know exactly what you mean; curious, isn't it? Is she pretty?"

"Not a bit! But unforgettable, once you've seen her—"

"U'mm! And tall?"

"Oh, decidedly!"

"Slender?"

"Absolutely!"

"Well-dressed?"

Here there came a stammer: "I-I didn't notice her clothes—"

The editor smiled contentedly. All his presentiments had come true: it was for this that he had remained a bachelor all his days, waiting for some one just past first youth, with an unforgettably striking appearance, slim vigor . . . he was well content to wait . . . he shot his cuffs, straightened his tie, smoothed his hair. And if you must know it, his heart did several calamitous things, not to be blamed to an exceedingly hasty luncheon. One needed only to have read the poems of Blaisdell Adair to have reconstructed a future of such felicity that—

Knock!

(Where on earth is that good-for-nothing office boy?) It had not been in his plan to open the door like a lackey; hastily he arose and stood swaying gracefully over the back of his swivel chair: "Come in!" he called in deep sonorous accent.

Alas! it was an agent! Inwardly he resented the unspeakable creature coming at this particular moment with her Boston bag bulging with a litter of pamphlets and her horrible smooth-flowing harangue already begun—"I shall have the woman on my hands all afternoon if I'm not careful!" he groaned.)

With amazing adroitness, born of despair, he lurched forward like Horatius-at-the-bridge and stemmed the onslaught: "Madam, it is of no use! I have no earthly needs as editor, citizen or man, which can be met by the thing or things which you wish to foist upon me. So please do not waste your time and my own by this exasperating recital which you are beginning. I have no doubt your wares are unrivalled in their field and that no self-respecting person should be without them. But the truth of the matter is that I have the most important interview of my career ahead of me at any moment now, and I cannot have my peace of mind shattered. So the longer you stay here trying to get a word in edgewise, the more prejudiced I am getting. Permit me to wish you good-day without further fuss!" And, with neatness and dispatch, he waved her out of the door.

"A narrow escape!" he ejaculated, weakly. "An Amazon like that, breathing fire and brimstone, aching to stuff me into that disreputable Boston bag of hers! Only a grim creature such as she could lug around that bag." Then, shrugging his shoulders, he dismissed the frumpish interlude, and engaged himself in the pleasanter task of coaxing his scattered locks into a more e pluribus unum state, meanwhile practicing facially the degree of cordiality he would dare to employ in greeting her. ("First impressions matter most; these poets are a curious lot, susceptible, childlike in their approaches—") inside: "Congratulations, old man! You went me one better. I don't believe you let her even peep! You're a wise old bird!"

The door opened. J. E. poked his head

The Wise Old Bird preened himself suavely: "Oh, that critter? You wonder what induces any firm to set a woman like that loose on their public. Impossible. Combination beanpole-Tennyson's-brook. That office boy is going to get a piece of my mind for letting her get past him."

The Junior Editor sat down at his desk and took up the routine of life. The Senior Editor glared at his innocent back, wondering how to waft this substantial cumberer off the face of the map. Two minutes passed; three; six; ten; twenty; thirty; forty; forty-one; forty-three. He fell to remembering certain lovely bits of her verse—

"Strange! You love the looks of me,
The tip of my ear, curve of my cheek. . ."

Ridiculously he began wishing that he had worn low shoes. High ones might seem too old-gentlemanly. . . . Fifty minutes. The suspense grew unbearable. Neither his hair nor his tie could stand another stroke. "Hal, she's thrown us over. She's fifty-two minutes late."

"She? She, who?"

"Miss Adair," he answered stiffly, injured at this appalling indifference to the Great Impending Event.

"Blaisdell Adair!" the younger man murmured with an almost penitential suffering, "but, my dear fellow, I thought you knew. It was she whom you bustled out of the door . . . the Amazon . . . the beanpole . . . Tennyson's brook . . ."

"That agent-person?" asked the editor with a near-sob as he saw house and home and crickets-on-the-hearth vanishing into thin air.

"Even so! I marvelled at your abominable rashness. . . ."

They were very gentle with each other, as only persons can be who have just escaped from fire and sword and sudden death!

2. It was Irenaeus and Pothinus who brought it to France (before 177 A. D.).

3. Ansgar who took it to Scandinavia (about 827).

4. Augustine who brought it to England (in 597).

5. Patrick who evangelized Ireland (in 440).

6. Ninian made the missionary conquest of the Southern Picts about 397 but I do not think he was Irish, so Columba is probably the better name to give although he came later, about 565, is known as "The Apostle of Caledonia."

7. Robert Moffat first brought Christianity to Central Africa in 1816, followed by David Livingstone in 1841 (married Mr. Moffat's daughter.)

8. Raymond(us) Lull brought it to northern Africa about 1310.

9. Bartholemew Ziegenbalg carried it to India in 1705.

10. The Englishmen who came over with Captain John Smith in 1608 to found the colony of Virginia brought it to America. A little Episcopal chapel built two days after they landed was the first church here. But of course it was the Pilgrims in 1620 who especially brought it to America, because they loved religion so dearly.

12. It was Roger Williams, an American Baptist, who first carried it to the red Indians after the year 1631.

(Collin ends his letter: "I have had a great old time looking these up. It was a fine idea, and the book I found the most in is called 'Two Thousand Years of Missions Before Carey.' I hope you will have another contest soon.")

Another Contest Is On

Collin wishes there was a new contest. There is! You will read about it in THE BAPTIST for January 13, about our new name. Shall we still be "Young Reserves" or change to something else? A prize for the best name chosen. Everybody try this, at once! But think about it very seriously first.

The bureau of education in the department of the interior at Washington has prepared a bulletin giving the names of moving pictures of national, educational, health and economic work in the United States that can be obtained by schools and churches. If there is a Baptist church using a moving picture machine that would like this type of information, write directly to the commissioner of education, Washington, D. C.

Contest Awards

YOU will remember that before Christmas we had a contest on "The Christmas Present That Is Always Being Handed Down" suggested by the following quotations:—"It was the Jew (1) who brought the gospel to Rome, a Roman (2) who took it to France, a Frenchman (3) who took it to Scandinavia, a Roman (4) who brought it to England, a Scotchman (5) who evangelized Ireland and an Irishman (6) who, in turn, made the missionary conquest of Scotland. A Scotchman (7) brought Christianity to Central Africa, a Spaniard (8) brought it to northern Africa, a German (9) carried it to India, Englishmen (10) brought it to America, an American Baptist (11) who first carried it to the red Indians. No people have received Christianity except at the hands of an alien."

The contest consisted in discovering who these famous missionaries are who have carried Christmas around the world. The lists are simply splendid, showing what a busy holiday season you have spent searching through histories and encyclopedias for your answers. The prize goes to Collin Smith; very honorable mention is due to Lydia Pratt (Boston, Mass.) and Donald Fickett (Janesville, Wis.) whose lists both show an unusual amount of thought, too! It is a curious thing that every one who sent in a list this time is thirteen years old!

LESSONS FROM THE PSALMS

(2) The Testimony Psalm.

Ps. 145: 1-21

(CONSECRATION MEETING)

Testimony has played an important part in the development of religion. This was true throughout the Old Testament history and especially so with the early Christian church. The singing of songs and the bearing of personal testimony by the early Christians was perhaps one of the greatest means for the spread of the Gospel in the early days.

Testimony of the right sort should be a part of the life of present-day Christianity. By this I do not mean a formal testimony in the same phraseology often heard in the mid-week prayer meetings in the churches, but a persistent daily expression of the life in word and deed, both on special occasions and in ordinary tasks of the day.

"Every day will I bless thee."

Let us note something of the character of this psalm. The writer bears testimony:

1. To Jehovah's majesty. As the psalmist meditated upon the wondrous works of the world, his mind reached beyond these to a personal God whose glorious majesty is evident in his handiwork.

2. To Jehovah's goodness. To the psalmist the Maker of heaven and earth was not an impersonal being away off in the distance, but one who comes into immediate contact with human life and manifests his characteristics to man.

"Jehovah is good to all; and his tender mercies are over all his works."

3. To Jehovah's helpfulness. The psalmist was a human being with the failures, hopes and aspirations of humanity. There were times in his life, as in the lives of us moderns, when he failed. He recognized the need of a higher power.

"Jehovah upholdeth all that fall, and raiseth up all those that are bowed down."

4. Of Jehovah's nearness. Although glorious in his majesty and a great ruler of the universe, Jehovah comes to dwell within the human heart. He is within calling distance to all who need him and will call upon him.

"Jehovah is nigh unto all them that call upon him, to all that call upon him in truth."

Consecration Meeting

On the first Sunday of the new year a unique consecration service was held by the senior B. Y. P. U. of the First Church of Kankakee, Ill. The chairs were arranged in a circle in the center of the room and each person was given an unlighted candle. The pastor, Dr. Herbert Hines, made a brief talk on "Consecration," challenging the society to consecrate itself to the best year of its his-

Baptist World Alliance

According to the program for the Baptist World Alliance meeting in Stockholm, Sweden, Tuesday afternoon, July 24, will be given over to a conference of representatives of young people's organizations.

Persons expecting to go to Stockholm should communicate with Mr. W. B. Lippard, American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

tory. The lights were turned out and the leader lighted four candles on the table to symbolize the four loyalties to which he challenged the young people: Loyalty to Christ, to the church, to the B. Y. P. U. work, to the B. Y. P. U. president. The newly elected president, Blanche Mitchell, then spoke impressively, consecrating her life to Christ, and her efforts for the coming months to the young people's society. Her candle was then lighted and she lighted the candles of others who spoke following her. As the young people consecrated themselves, they lighted their candles from some one who had spoken before them. Soon the room was well lighted by the candles of those who made a personal testimony of loyalty to the Master. The young people then rose, sang two verses of "Jesus Calls Us," had a prayer of consecration and joined hands around the circle to sing in closing, "Blessed be the tie that binds." It was a very impressive meeting and the society is going to do better work because of it.

IRENE WESLEY.

Dr. F. F. Peterson of Boston, Director of Religious Education for Massachusetts writes: "At a meeting held at West Somerville the other night we planned our meeting of the executive committee, and adopted as our slogan for New England 4000 delegates, 100 per cent of the 100 societies of Greater Boston, and have the matter under way."

"We have received a very strong endorsement from the State Christian Endeavor Union, and their state field worker stands ready to help us in our promotion. You see we are going to be back of this proposition 100 per cent."

Northern California

The San Jose B. Y. P. U. Association, in Northern California, held a New Year's rally in San Jose on Jan. 1. The rally consisted of an afternoon and evening session, also a banquet served at 6:30.

In the afternoon various phases of B. Y. P. U. work were presented, and reports given by each society of the association on the membership of their society and the number of members present at the rally, also their percentage on the standard of excellence. Pennants were awarded to the societies having the best percentage attendance and the highest standing on the standard of excellence. At this session also, Rev. Theodore Feildbrave, a Hindu, brought to the young people a message from India. The banquet was followed by a humorous reading and songs boosting for the summer assembly at Asilomar in July.

The main feature of the evening session was an inspirational address by Rev. Bryant Wilson, pastor of First Church, Sacramento, in which he challenged the young people to a year of worth-while service.

Approximately 200 were in attendance. As each one registered he was presented with a button on which was written his name, this forming a basis for acquaintanceship.

Brooklyn and Long Island Young People's Union

Mr. L. R. Cooper, convention committee chairman writes: "Our union is getting busy on the Boston Convention. We have made quite a number of our plans, somewhat tentatively, of course, but we are eager to go right ahead. Our slogan is "B in Boston" and we are clamoring for 500 young people to go in the Brooklyn delegation. That is our goal, a high one it is true, and one that we may not reach; but we believe in "hitching our wagon to a star."

Here and There

THE MILWAUKEE BAPTIST SCHOOL OF Methods was held January 22-26, 1923. General Secretary White, President Mark F. Sanborn, and Director A. H. Gage of Chicago, were among the speakers secured. Rev. C. A. Boyd, director of religious education for Wisconsin served as dean of the school.

THE "B. Y. P. U. Messenger" of Detroit, carries the following item: "The city union has drawn heavily upon the department of education. We feel that the progress of our unions justifies all that we have put into this work. They have increased in membership from 1,600 to almost 2,300. They have organized the city into five districts, which will enable the city officers to do intensive work with

International Sunday School Lesson for February 11

THE SPIRIT OF PRAYER

Lesson: Luke 18:1-14. Golden Text: Psalm 51:17.

Introductory

The place is Perea; the time, March 30 A. D. Following the verses of last Sunday's lesson, Jesus describes the suddenness of the second coming. Then are given the two parables on prayer.

The Lesson

The first parable illustrates the value of persistence in prayer—"men ought always to pray and not to faint." Jesus tells the story of the widow who made appeal after appeal to a judge that he avenge her of her adversary. For a long while the judge turned a deaf ear to her entreaty but at last he said, "Because the widow troubleth me, I will avenge her lest she wear me out by her continual coming." The lesson Jesus points out is: "Shall not God avenge his elect that cry to him day and night?"

The second parable he spoke unto certain ones who were over-confident of their own righteousness and who "set all others at nought." As an example he cites the Pharisee who went up into the temple to pray, but whose "prayer" consisted of a recital of his good traits and deeds and a thanksgiving that he was not as other men. In contrast to this was the real prayer of the publican who in greatest humility begged God's mercy upon himself a sinner. The lesson drawn from this parable is: "Every one that exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

Leading Thoughts

1. No man questions the efficacy of prayer who prays persistently and believingly. 2. If we have not it is because we ask not. 3. He who is positive that he is not as the Pharisee should remember the Pharisee's boast that he was not as the publican.

The Great Baptist School Race

The first lap of the great race is over and we know that Kansas is victor in class one, Southern California in class two and Idaho in class three.

But there are other laps yet to run and the chances for dark horses and surprises are still fine! The states which have so far been unable to reach leading places, may, by painstaking and enthusiastic work, crowd the leaders aside and come in under the wire at the next convention.

This is not said with any thought of false encouragement, for there are very definite goals which must be attained within the next few months and any state may still carry off the honors.

Three goals must be attained before the May convention and the honors will go to the leaders in all the three divisions who report the largest proportionate number of schools attaining these objectives:

1. Registration by formal vote.
2. Four study meetings of the workers' conference, and
3. Substantial attainment in at least three objectives, in order to qualify as an accredited school.

A Dramatized Sermon

By M. W. PULLEN

Once a month, the third Sunday night, I present a dramatized sermon which has been so successful in getting the religious message across, in interesting the people of my constituency in Bible study and in filling my church auditorium at every service that I am wondering if there may not be other pastors who might like to know what this will do in the great field of preaching.

Since we have been having dramatized preaching we have almost doubled our church membership, largely by baptism. Also the convicting power of the sermons has been so great that there have been ten young people who have definitely and publicly dedicated themselves to Christian work as a life work and are now studying with that aim.

We have presented "The Book of Ruth," "Queen Esther," "The Life of Moses" and "The Prodigal Son," each of which has been typical in scenery, dress and speech. Our church is essentially a young people's church. We have about 100 young men and women in their late teens and early twenties from which to choose the casts. They realize in this movement a challenge to get back to the Bible, to bring about a better understanding of the Scriptures, and they enter into their parts in a truly reverential spirit. For a half hour preceding the production, they are on their knees in prayer, and I may say that the religious feeling predominates throughout the presentation.

each group. On January 4 our first annual city-wide B. Y. P. U. banquet was held at Woodward Avenue Baptist Church. This was the greatest gathering of its kind in the history of the city union. There were 500 present."

THE PRESIDENT of the Western Washington B. Y. P. U. states that the attendance for the New Year's Rally ran close to the thousand mark.

WHEREVER BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE have the opportunity to get into action themselves, we are having but little difficulty in programs of enlistment and extension. Departments of religious education will probably do considerable towards stabilizing religious education methods, but such a department must give place for large initiative on the part of young people themselves.

THE LINCOLN PARK CHURCH, Cincinnati, Ohio, has organized a Service Legion for those who still need training in devotional study and expression, but who are beyond the ages of the regular young people's society. Pastor Atwater says this organization is solving a good many problems.

YOUNG PEOPLE who have made pledges to the New World Movement should see to it that these pledges are paid. Those who are in position to pay, and will not, must find a satisfactory answer to the question "Will a man rob God?"

CLEVELAND, OHIO, young people are in the midst of a red-hot membership campaign. The suggestion has come from several sources that we have a "Bigger and Better B. Y. P. U. Campaign." Well, it is on! Buckeye young people are up and doing. Mr. Wilson A. Holmes is state director.

VERMONT ASSEMBLY will be held at Saxton's River, June 19-30. This is the location of Vermont Academy.

VIRGINIA YOUNG PEOPLE have organized a large number of unions since the meeting of the Southern Baptist Convention. Over 4,000 have been organized throughout the South. Virginia Assembly will be held at Virginia Beach, beginning July 4.

MONTREAL, CANADA, Baptist Sunday-schools held their annual rally at Olivet Church, New Year's Day. Every school in the city was represented. Rev. C. G. Smith was the speaker.

GEORGIA YOUNG FOLKS are out for 6,000 titheers by the time of their Atlanta Convention. "Every union a titheers' band" is the state slogan.

FREEDOM, INDIANA, Association of young people has organized eighteen new B. Y. P. U.'s in less than three months. Robert Strange is the Hive-wire president.

WEST VIRGINIA BAPTIST SUMMER Assembly will be held at Philippi, the home of Broadus College, August 7-13, 1923.

MICHIGAN YOUNG PEOPLE have joined with the women's organization of the state in a campaign for a woman's dormitory at Kalamazoo College.

Our Own Folks

Northern Baptist Convention to Meet at Atlantic City

At the last meeting of the Executive Committee of the Northern Baptist Convention, Nov. 2, 1922, fear was expressed that Washington, D. C., would not be able to entertain the meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention, May 23-30, because of the lack of a meeting place. Definite word has been received from the executive committee of the Columbia Association of the District of Columbia that the Baptists of Washington could not entertain the convention because there was no place in which to hold the meeting. The Convention Hall will not be in shape for the meeting.

In order that the convention might not be without a meeting place, I accordingly wrote to Atlantic City soon after the meeting of the executive committee. When the communication was received from the brethren in Washington, a correspondence vote was taken and the members of the executive committee have voted that the convention shall meet at Atlantic City, May 23-30. We shall have all accommodations for that meeting. Unfortunately the Chalfonte and Hadden Hall Hotels have been booked full by Pennsylvania Bankers, May 23-25, but no one need fear inability to get accommodations at Atlantic City.

W. C. BITTING, Sec'y.

Resolutions Passed at Immanuel

A special meeting of Immanuel Baptist Church was held Wednesday evening, Jan. 10, 1923, at the close of the prayer meeting, in accordance with a notice for such meeting duly read from the pulpit at the Sunday morning services Jan. 7. Meeting having been called to order, Dr. Johnston Myers, pastor, presiding, the following resolution was presented by Mr. John Nuveen:

Whereas, It has come up as a matter for discussion between officials of the Northern Baptist Convention and certain officials of the Immanuel Baptist Church as to whether the church would be willing to devote its property to larger and more extended use by the entire Baptist denomination and,

Whereas, Immanuel Baptist Church is enlarging its buildings and erecting a large office structure on its Michigan Avenue frontage which it prefers not to commercialize but is desirous to devote its entire property exclusively to the advancement of Christ's kingdom and is furthermore desirous to have our Baptist denomination with its various organizations occupy and use the buildings with us to the fullest and largest extent possible.

Therefore, Be it resolved, that this church hereby approves the action heretofore taken by our pastor, Johnston Myers and our treasurer, John Nuveen, in offering on behalf of this church, to donate its property to the Baptist denomination for Baptist uses.

Further Resolved, That our said pastor and treasurer be, and they are hereby authorized and requested, with the advice and aid of Attorney James G. Elsdon, to continue negotiations with the officials of the Northern Baptist Convention, or with any committee appointed by such convention, or by its officials, for the express purpose of carrying out and giving effect to such desires of the church, by the transfer of its property to the general uses of the Baptist denomination, and especially as represented by the Northern Baptist Convention, to be used as headquarters by said convention, and the several Baptist societies cooperating with and composing it, or any one or more of such convention and societies.

I, Samuel Leland, church clerk of the Immanuel Baptist Church, do hereby certify that the above is a true copy of a resolution passed at a special meeting of the Immanuel Baptist Church duly called and held Wednesday evening, January 10, 1923.

SAMUEL LEELAND, Church Clerk.
Chicago, Jan. 11, 1923.

Dr. Clifford as Passive Register

Dr. Clifford made his fifty-seventh appearance as a passive register before the Paddington magistrates on Friday. The venerable minister read the following address:

"Your Worship: In appearing to 'show cause' why we still protest against the sectarian portion of the Education Act, we not only complain of the unjust legislation of 1902-3, but also of the attempts being made to increase that wrong and to extend the area over which it is spread.

"Within the last two years bold and determined attempts have been made, and are still being pushed forward, to destroy the great Education Act of 1870 root and branch, and to open the Council or non-sectarian schools to the aggressive activities of the different denominations. This cannot be endured. It immensely aggravates the present position, and will, we doubt not, be resisted by the teachers, the parents, and by citizens generally.

"This policy is being strenuously advocated at a time when the education authorities are economizing in every direction, except that of aid to sectarianism and sacerdotalism. Everything else may be cut down. That must not be touched. On the contrary, it is to be vastly increased. Children's meals and maintenance grants may be reduced, their prizes may be dropped, the cost of books and apparatus may be lessened, schools may go without cleaning and painting, free places in secondary schools must be fewer, special schools for the crippled and mentally defective may be closed, medical service may be starved; but the injustice of charging the whole of the ratepayers with the cost of sectarian teaching must be maintained.

"It is against this wrong to the citizens, to the ratepayers, to the teachers and to the state that we once more declare our conscientious and determined opposition.

"It is a policy which we regard as essentially unpatriotic, destructive of the springs and sources of national progress, as well as being a violation of the fundamental rights of the civic conscience.

"J. CLIFFORD."

The presiding magistrate congratulated Dr. Clifford on his improved health and eyesight, and added that in these cases the Bench could only issue the usual order.—British Weekly.

NEW YORK

REV. J. AUSTIN HUNTLEY, pastor of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, Troy, has been called to the First Church, Moncton, New Brunswick. Dr. Huntley has been pastor of the Fifth Avenue Church for four years and a half, coming to it from the First Church of Calgary, Alberta, Canada. The First Church, Moncton, has a membership of 1200, a new church edifice with seating capacity for 1300 and modern school rooms and a new parsonage never yet occupied. Dr. Huntley is a native of the Maritime Provinces and is intimately acquainted with the leaders and the work of the denomination in Canada. The large congregations in this new field in a rapidly growing city will give him ample opportunity for his best gifts. A movement to unite the Fifth Avenue and First Churches of Troy is being renewed. They occupy practically the same field in the downtown section and a consolidation would be greatly to the advantage of the Baptist interests in the city of Troy.

WASHINGTON HEIGHTS CHURCH, New York City, will celebrate its one hundredth anniversary Oct. 3, 1923. At the annual meeting, Jan. 10, reports showed the church never in better condition. The church has increasing opportunity for service, as due to the high-rent situation, the normal number of Protestants moving into the neighborhood has been seriously curtailed, our Jewish friends being the only ones who could pay the price. Special services, beginning March 5 and continuing ten days, will be conducted by Rev. Charles Herbert Rust of Immanuel Church of Scranton, in cooperation with the pastor, Rev. Harold Pattison. Prayer meetings will be in centers all over the city to which members of the church will be invited, Feb. 23 and March 2, in preparation for these services. Mr.

Pattison has been giving a series of sermons on varied biographies on Sunday evenings, calling out good audiences. The subjects of this series presented a wide range. A men's Bible class has been organized with Mr. N. G. Lenington, teacher. The annual church fair under the direction of Mrs. W. J. Bisselle, was successful in spite of the inclement weather and a good sum of money was raised. The New Year's prayer meeting was held at 7 A. M. Jan. 1, in the lecture-room, with Hon. John Kirkland Clark, leader, and the motto "Begin the New Year Right." Miss Mary L. Chapin has been secured as visitor for the church and Bible school. Dr. Pattison will preach at the Northfield Schools on Feb. 11. His place will be taken by Rev. A. G. Lawson on that Sunday.

SUNDAY, DEC. 31, for the Richmond Hill Church, in New York City, marked the completion of six years of the pastorate of Rev. Rolla E. Hunt, who began his work with this church, Jan. 1, 1917, coming from the pastorate of the First Baptist Church of Summit, N. J. Gleanings from the pastor's anniversary sermon: Weddings, 72; funerals, 91. Members received into the church, 280; by baptism, 135. Present membership, 507. Net gain in membership, 135. Money raised for all purposes during 1917, $7,602; during 1922, $32,760; total for six years, $150,000; annual average for the six years, $25,000. Ideals: That we may study and teach the truth, have reverent, dignified and helpful worship, and by prayer and service release great spiritual forces which shall bring blessing to the entire community. In March 1920, pastor and people had the joy of dedicating a new building, including auditorium, parish house and gymnasium, erected at a cost of about $85,000. Including $7,500 received from the Baptist Church Extension Society of Brooklyn and Queens, payments of members and friends of the church (including affiliated organizations) have reduced the entire indebtedness to a little less than $25,000, the major portion of which is provided for by pledges maturing in May, 1925. At the Christmas entertainment of the Bible School, Friday evening, Dec. 29, Deacon George H. LeCount, in behalf of the deacons and trustees, presented to the pastor a beautiful watch.

AT THE REGULAR MONTHLY MEETING OF the Baptist Ministers' Conference of Troy, Albany and vicinity, held in the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, Troy, Monday, Jan. 8, the resignation of Rev. J. Austin Huntley, as president of the conference was accepted with deep regret. Mr. Huntley, who has been the pastor of the Fifth Avenue Church, Troy, for several years, has accepted a call to the church in Moncton, New Brunswick, where he will begin his pastorate February first. Following the regular business session, at which a paper on "The Minister and Evangelist" was read by Rev. Edgar C. Smith, of Schenectady, the women of the church served a luncheon. Rev. Marshall Sewell presided and words of appreciation of Dr. Huntley and his work were spoken by Dr. Prentice, Dr. Rogers and Dr. Lauderbaugh, members of the missionary committee of which Dr. Huntley was the chairman. Following Dr. Huntley's response to these words, the conference was adjourned by Dr. F. K. Singiser with prayer.

SUNDAY, JAN. 7 was observed at First Church of Medina, in celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the dedication of the present building. The anniversary sermon was preached by Dr. Justin W. Nixon, of Rochester, from the text "On this rock, I build my church." Luncheon was served to the congregation after the morning service. The anniversary service was held at 2:30 in the afternoon. A historical sketch was given by Dr. Emily Swett. The Medina church was organized in 1829. The church has, at present, ten members who were members at the time of the dedication. These responded to the roll-call with reminiscent remarks. The present membership of the church is 664. Former pastor Frank L. Latham spoke on "The Church as I Knew It." Mr. Latham was pastor for sixteen years and is at present living in Medina and is a member of the church. Pastor J. J. Allen conducted the services and spoke on "What Does the Future Hold." He presented the report of the Advisory Board of the church concerning a new building project. Stereopticon pictures of the proposed building were shown. The cost is estimated at $80,000 and when completed will give Medina one of the most modern and complete Bible-school buildings in the East. The annual business meeting of the church was held Tuesday evening, Jan. 7. Reports from all organizations indicate a healthy condition financially, materially and spiritually. All obligations are met and a fine spirit of enthusiasm is evident. Repairs have been made costing $2000, including a new garage. During the year thirty-six have been received by baptism. The church indicated its appreciation of the pastor by raising his salary $500. Mr. Allen begins his fourth year Feb. 1. The attendance at church and Bible school is good. The Medina Church is a strong missionary organization and the home church of Dr. James M. Baker of Ongole, S. India.

splendid prospects. The pastors are all supported by a noble company of consecrated men and women. Many of the churches held watch-night services and their houses of worship were crowded to the doors. The waters of baptism are being frequently stirred and it looks as though 1923 would be a banner year among the Baptist churches of this city.

UNDER THE INSPIRING LEADERSHIP of its new pastor, Dr. Le Roy Dakin, the Baptist Temple is a bee-hive of Christian activity. This coming fall the church will celebrate its centennial and it is expected that not the least noteworthy feature of the celebration will be the burning of a mortgage of $19,000 and the clearing of all encumbrance on the church property.

IN THE MIDST OF GENERAL Christmas rejoicing, Dr. H. Francis Perry surprised and saddened his congregation and the Baptist brotherhood by presenting his resignation on the last Sabbath of the year. For eight years Dr. Perry has wrought magnificently as pastor of the Church of the Redeemer. Over 400 new members have been added to the membership and a house of worship built at a cost of $85,000. Plans are under way for the erection of a Sabbath-school building at a cost of some $45,000 for which more than one-half the amount needed has been subscribed. Dr. Perry is one of the strong and efficient denominational leaders. Recently he served with great acceptance as president of the Greater New York Ministerial Conference. Dr. Perry plans to spend a few months in Miami, Fla. In the fall he hopes and expects to re-enter the pastorate. He will be greatly missed in this city where he is so well beloved. He leaves the Church of the Redeemer in splendid condition for his successor. Dr. Perry will spend the summer months in Chautauqua, N. Y. and may be addressed there at Weir Inn. He closes his pastorate in Brooklyn Feb. 1.

RUM AND ROME are thoroughly entrenched in this city and in Albany the state capital. Two years ago Judge Miller was elected governor. It is generally conceded that he made one of the most efficient governors New York has ever had. This fall he was defeated by the man whom he defeated two years ago and his opponent received a phenomenal majority of over 400,000. He has a large personal following and is probably 200,000 votes stronger than his party in the state. Already it is announced that plans are being formed to conduct an intensive and scientific campaign for the purpose of making him the next national standard bearer of his party. Governor Smith is a devout Roman Catholic and devotedly "wet." He was the candidate of the liquor interests and the Roman Catholic church. It is well for the Protestants and the Evangelical Christians of this country to know and to know in time just the nature of the battle that is ahead of them.—D. B. CHENEY.

VERMONT

TUESDAY, JAN. 2, WAS A BUSY day at Vermont State Convention headquarters. The board of trustees of Vermont Academy met at 10 o'clock. At this meeting encouraging reports were given by the secretary and the treasurer, showing that at the present time there are 167 students in the school, while 175 have been enrolled this year. At 12 o'clock a luncheon was served at the New Sherwood Hotel to members of the boards of trustees of Vermont Academy and of Vermont State Convention and also to twenty ladies from all sections of the state who met at this time to consider the matter of organizing a woman's mission society for the state. This matter was presented at the luncheon and discussed by the women present. Having agreed that such an organization should be effected, a constitution was adopted and a committee of seven made up of one representative of each of the associations was appointed to select temporary officers to serve until the convention in May. Dr. J. Y. Aitchison, executive secretary of the General Board of Promotion, was present and spoke briefly. Dr. Aitchison expressed his satisfaction over the action taken by the women in organizing a woman's Baptist mission society and predicted greater usefulness because of the organization. At 2 o'clock the trustees of the convention met in the convention board room in Masonic Temple, there being seventeen members of the board and twelve visitors present. After the routine business and the making of some appropriations, the time was given to a discussion of the convention budget and the payment of the same. Dr. Aitchison was present at this meeting. After a full and lengthy discussion—the meeting lasting five hours—it was unanimously decided that no part of the permanent funds or the income from the permanent funds could be reckoned on a pro rata basis, as it must be kept intact for work in Vermont, in harmony with the desire of the donors. A definite amount to be received from the offerings of the churches was agreed upon, this amount to be received on a pro rata basis with the national societies and other organizations for the balance of the New World period, until May 1, 1924. A hearty vote of thanks was extended to Dr. Aitchison for the helpful service which he rendered.

MASSACHUSETTS

THE STOUGHTON STREET CHURCH presented a most impressive missionary pageant last Sunday evening commemorating the life services of twenty-four men and women who have gone out of this church into Christian world service, in home and foreign lands. A memorial tablet was unveiled inscribed with their names, and the pageant, prepared by Miss Darling of Stoughton Street Church, portrayed the great scenes in Baptist world missions from the manger scene, till the sending out and return of the missionaries of this church, each bringing many followers. It has been suggested that many churches might like to commemorate their Christian world workers in a similar way.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

ONE HUNDRETH ANNIVERSARIES are becoming somewhat common in New Hampshire Baptist churches. The church at Peterborough so celebrated recently. There was a sermon by the pastor, Rev. H. E. Danielson, and a historical sketch by the clerk, Miss Flora J. Tubbs. Letters were read by out-of-town members. Greetings were read from former pastors, Rev. James Francis of Los Angeles, Cal., and from Revs. A. J. Nordland, Massachusetts, G. W. Whipple of Texas and Carl Bergman of South Dakota. A baptism followed these exercises. The Peterborough church, although much smaller than in former years, continues to serve the community as efficiently as any church in the town.

A TEACHER TRAINING CLASS has been organized in the Exeter church. The First Baptist church at Manchester has two such classes, each one being conducted by a college graduate. Other churches are not amiss in this important branch of work.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE of the board of the convention held its regular meeting Jan. 4. The meeting was an important one. The committee had the unpleasant task of making a second 25 per cent cut in the state convention budget, necessary because there is about 25 per cent less money coming in from New World Movement pledges than one year ago.

REV. H. R. WHITELOCK, pastor of the People's Tabernacle church, Manchester, has been unanimously elected chaplain of the New Hampshire legislature which is now in biennial session.

MAINE

THOMASTON: In a memorial service on Sunday evening, Jan. 7, a portrait of Dr. William A. Newcombe, for thirty years pastor of the First Baptist Church, was unveiled. A remarkable ministry received a fitting recognition in the thought and plans of the young pastor, Rev. Roy Hilton Short, and the continued loving appreciation of the church and town that Dr. Newcombe so long served. The hymns in which his own strong soul found expression for his faith, were sung. A tribute, tender, eloquent and true, was paid by Dr. Irving B. Mower, executive secretary of the United Baptist Convention of Maine. The portrait painted by Champin of Boston, was unveiled by Deacon Edward Brown. It was provided by members of the church and citizens of Thomaston. The work of Pastor Short has the reliable quality which gives confidence, and also the forward purpose which makes new attainment possible. The Sunday school has doubled its membership. Attendance at all church services has increased and the service of the church to the community at large is constantly broadening.

LAKE VIEW: A picturesque instance of practical Christianity is the work at Lake View and the camps in the big woods, made possible by the American Thread Co., under the management of Hon. Edwin M. Hamlin, of Milo, president of the United Baptist Convention of Maine. The new pastor, Rev. L. G. Perry, lately of Dexter, is encouraged in his work at Lake View by recent conversions and is now undertaking his trips through the woods camps and finds pleasant reception, though many of the woodsmen are French Catholics. It is possible that later in the season he may have the aid of Rev. Filemon Novitsky, Maine's missionary to the Russians, and Rev. Auguste Bocquel, pastor of the French church at Waterville.

RHODE ISLAND

THE SEVENTH YEAR of the publication of the Rhode Island Baptist begins with the January issue in magazine form. Certain advantages will accrue from this change. It is planned to publish ten numbers a year, one to include the minutes of the anniversaries which will be sent to every subscriber. It is interesting to note that apparently without a concerted movement this form of publication has been adopted by the greater number of the state papers. The Rhode Island Baptist will endeavor to continue to be a worthy member of this "newsy" family.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

REV. ARTHUR B. STRICKLAND, superintendent of evangelism for Pennsylvania, has written a series of studies for use in preparing the churches for evangelistic campaigns. They are being published by the state mission society under the title "A School of Evangelism." Mrs. Strickland is an earnest co-worker with her husband in advancing the Christian cause.

THE FACTORYVILLE CHURCH has had a successful evangelistic campaign under the direction of Brethren H. Wyse Jones and John Gillis. Thirteen were baptized Dec. 28 and it is probable that as many more will be received within the next few weeks.

THE MEMORIAL CHURCH, Reading, under the leadership of the pastor, Darlington R. Kulp, is giving attention to the development of its young people. The pastor has an evening meeting with them regularly.

Senior and junior World-Wide Guilds and a training class for teachers are contributing to their usefulness in missionary and Bible school work.

REV. THOS. ELLIOTT of South Church, Chester, has accepted a call to Lee Park Tabernacle of Wilkes Barre, and expects to begin work there on March 1.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

HOMESTEAD, FIRST CHURCH, Chas. E. Griffin, pastor: Four months of the present pastorate have passed with many evidences of the divine favor upon the church. The interest is well sustained and growing audiences wait upon the ministry of the Word. December 24, seven were baptized, making 14 by baptism, Jan. 7 nine received the hand of fellowship making twenty-four additions in the four months. The recasting of the financial system has resulted in a new and increased interest in both current expenses and missions. The finances are in the most hopeful condition they have been for many months and an enlarged program for the year is being launched with much enthusiasm.

WEST VIRGINIA

THE SERVICE SUNDAY MORNING, Jan. 7, at First Church, Richwood, was a scene of much rejoicing because the debt of $6,100 on the latest addition to the building was lifted and the note burned. The pastor, Rev. E. R. Raycroft, found a debt of $8,000 burdening the work when he came on the field not quite two years ago. The unified budget system was then adopted and through it about $1,900 was paid off; but recently the pastor did the unusual by getting out among the people personally and raised the whole balance in cash though the people are not wealthy. The church expressed its appreciation by presenting him with a substantial cash gift. This is only one of many evidences of divine favor upon us in the past two years. There have been about 100 additions to the church in that time.

A Combined Income and Gift

YOU would like to help the Ministers and Missionaries Benefit Board in providing for our aged ministers and missionaries. This has been neglected too long. But you need your income. You are just the one to whom the Board's Gift Agreements (Annuity Bonds) appeal.

WHAT ARE THEY?

The Board agrees to take your gift and pay you an annual income as long as you live. The rates vary according to age up to 9%. At your decease your gift becomes a part of the Permanent Fund.

ARE THEY SAFE?

Your investment is protected by the entire assets of the Board. Can you think of anything stronger?

THEY SAVE YOU

- 1—All anxiety about investing. (One of our leading ministers took a $5,000 bond a few days ago. He said he could no longer bear the responsibility of investing.)
- 2—Trouble in settling your Estate. You are your own executor.
- 3—Fear that your money may not go where you want it to go.

And You Will Receive a High Income as Long as You Live

Joint Bonds also are issued providing for two lives. No form or formalities. Simply send check, state age and address, and the Bond will be sent. Bonds already issued vary in amount from $100 to $80,000.

wolf and six helpers. The pastor of the First Baptist Church was chosen chairman of the committee by all the twenty-four cooperating churches. The church has now returned to its usual work with renewed zeal. The interest in missionary work was never greater and the Bible school continues to grow. Crowds attend the evening service and the ordinance of baptism is administered almost every Sunday evening. Rev. Warren L. Steeves, pastor, writes for two papers of the city. Short articles with an illustration and pointed application appear weekly in one of the city papers; the Sunday-school lesson is expounded by Mr. Steeves each week in the other paper.

REV. GEO. M. HULME has resigned as pastor of Trinity Church of Barborton, to take effect the first Sunday in May. Mr. Hulme is the first regular pastor of this church. Some time ago this band of workers bought four lots in a residential district on the main thoroughfare leading out of Barborton and into Akron. During the past year an all-steel tabernacle has been erected on the church site—this a tentative structure. The membership, though small, has doubled during the brief pastorate of Mr. Hulme. Several leading citizens foster this movement. Geo. E. Ford, Lloyd St., Barborton, is the clerk. Mr. Hulme expects again to take up the work of an evangelist.

MICHIGAN

TEMPLE CHURCH, DETROIT, was recently favored with a visit from Dr. Allyn K. Foster who spoke at the morning service and at the Bible school. His addresses were masterpieces and produced great good. Out of an attendance of more than 1,000 in the Bible school that day 110 signed cards signifying their intention to come into the Christian life and enter the church. Many of these have since been baptized. His address to the school on "Consider the lilies of the field how they grow" went home to the hearts of the young in a wonderful way. Few men have the gifts of Dr. Foster in presenting the claims of Jesus Christ upon young life and as a denomination we should pray much for this servant of God as he goes among our colleges.

ILLINOIS

THE ATLANTA CHURCH is still pastorless. The meeting house is in fine condition. They have a good parsonage and give a living support. Dr. E. P. Brand of Normal supplied them four Sundays recently. They hope to locate a pastor soon.

REV. H. F. JONES, OF MACOMB, has been pastor at Whites Grove and Pleasant Grove churches in the Peoria Association for nearly four years. Whites Grove has become self-supporting, but Pleasant Grove has become greatly weakened by the removal of members. Dr. D. O. Hopkins will aid in special meetings there in the near future.

THE SECOND ANNUAL FOUNDERS' DAY of the Baptist Missionary Training School, Chicago, will be observed Thursday, Feb. 1, 1923. There will be an afternoon session from 2:30-5 and a reception from 5:30-6:30. Dinner will be served at 6:30, price 75 cents. The evening program will follow with good speakers and music. Dr. J. J. Ross, pastor of the Second Church, will be the speaker of the evening. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

Woman's Mission Union

Mission Union (Chicago Association) met Jan. 9 with the Second Church,

Chicago. The meeting was well attended, the estimate being over 500, with the pastors and their wives as guests. The morning program consisted of addresses by Mrs. Adah H. Boyce, missionary supervisor for the W. A. B. H. M. S. for Central District, and Mr. A. E. Bigelow, who has spent many years as a missionary to the Philippines. As Dr. J. J. Ross, pastor of the Second Church, expects to take up his work in Boston in the near future, the president, Mrs. Fales, on behalf of the union, expressed the deep regret of all at losing Dr. and Mrs. Ross, to which both responded.

In the afternoon a symposium on the "Denominational Situation" was presented: (1) "In its relation to Chicago." In dealing with this phase of the question, Dr. Benjamin Otto, superintendent of the Baptist Executive Council of Chicago, especially urged that in dealing with our foreign-born population, "we should do to others as we would have them do to us." (2) "In its relation to the state," which was taken up by Dr. A. E. Peterson, Illinois state director of promotion. In the third topic in this group, "In its relation to the nation," Mrs. Andrew MacLeish called attention to the benefits already derived by our churches from participation in the New World Movement. The devotional period, a fitting climax to the symposium, was conducted by Dr. Judson B. Thomas. Announcements of future denominational happenings were made, the most outstanding being a conference of the union, set for January 16, and the meetings of the Foreign Mission Society, to be held in Chicago February 11-14, with a joint meeting with Mission Union on Tuesday, Feb. 13, at the Belden Avenue Baptist Church.

KANSAS

THE LIBERAL CHURCH, under the pastoral care of Rev. John R. Pennington, is closing the best year in its history. More than 100 have been added to the membership during the year, fifty by profession and baptism. This makes 185 during the pastorate of twenty-two months. The church congregations have been steadily increasing until there is not sufficient room to accommodate them. Plans are developing whereby the building will be greatly enlarged.

NEBRASKA

Oct. 8-Nov. 5, Trinity Church, Omaha, Rev. Charles F. Holler, pastor, conducted one of the largest single church meetings ever held in the city. While evangelistic in character, it was not primarily an evangelistic campaign, but an attempt on the part of Trinity church to extend its influence in such a way as to do a greater work. A great campaign of advertising was inaugurated and a big tent was pitched on a vacant lot near to the church. The main street of the city, having a car line passing by the big tent, was strung overhead, from side to side for two whole blocks north and south of the tent, with hundreds of flags and many-colored pennants; large two-colored posters were put up in every conspicuous place far and near, and the windows of all resident members and all possible stores were decorated with advertising posters and cards; cards advertising the meetings were displayed in every street car in the whole city. Arrangements were made with a local paper to purchase and mail 5,000 copies of the paper upon condition that extra space would be given to announcements of the meetings. Special cuts were made, appropriate to the purpose, and one whole page was given to reading matter about the Baptist church and these meetings. There was more than a half page additional of special display in the way of pictures. There were also 2,000 postcards sent through the mails. The Lewis party, of Indiana, were engaged as special evangelists, a great chorus choir was organized, children's meetings were announced in the public schools, the members of the church were trained and acted as special workers and the great campaign was carried through resulting in a wonderful uplift and benefit to the church and an increase in membership and spiritual growth not alone to Trinity Church, but to the churches of almost every faith in the community. One of the converts, who has had two years of college in preparation for the Catholic priesthood, announces in addition to his conversion a definite call to the Christian ministry, and has already preached acceptably to a large congregation in Trinity Church. He is now in correspondence with several Baptist schools to determine where he shall complete his education and training for his life work.

IOWA

ON NEW YEAR'S DAY THE members of Walnut Street Church, Waterloo, held their annual business meeting. It was one of the best annual meetings the church ever held. Gratifying reports were given by the different officers of the church. The Sunday school enrolled in the "Bigger and Better Sunday School Movement" this fall, and the report given was encouraging from the standpoint of finances, as well as average attendance. The work done in the intermediate department under the leadership of Mr. Bert Rogers is worthy of special mention. Every department is in an exceptionally fine condition. The women of the church are to be commended for their splendid report. Rev. Robt. N. MacDonald has been pastor here nine months. He has placed special emphasis upon his preaching and responsive congregations have been the result. The church is moving forward in an all-around, aggressive work, and the work is progressing under his leadership. Rev. A. H. Gage's book "Evangelism of Youth" is suggested by the pastor as a valuable book in arranging a program of evangelism for the next three months.

SOUTH DAKOTA

THE LORD HAS BEEN GIVING a gracious revival to the church at Brookings. Four years of steady work have resulted in a splendid spiritual movement upon a solid biblical basis. In November Rev. A. A. Holzer, a converted Jew who conducts a large Hebrew mission in Philadelphia, was secured as evangelist. He was with the church three weeks. His messages were greatly blessed. A revival spirit was on before he came. Three men were converted and so the church was in fine condition for work. Following the meetings there has been no let-down of the spirit. Sixteen have been baptized, six others are awaiting the ordinance and many others seem near to the point of coming in with us. The hand of fellowship was given to twenty-two at the largest celebration of the Lord's Supper which the church has had. At the annual meeting of the church $1,000 was added to the current expense budget, $400 of this going to a pastor's assistant. State college is located here and a marked and blessed work of grace is going on in the Baptist group of the college. They are formed into the Baptist College Club and are fitting up a room in the church as their Saturday night home-coming place.

WYOMING

FIRST CHURCH, CASPER, has had a full work during the fall. The pastor returned from a late vacation in time for the service the last Sunday in September. Since that date there have been fifty-two received into the membership of the church, a large number of these by baptism. There is no Y. M. C. A. building in Casper. In view of this the pastor, assisted by one of his leading young men has fostered the Casper Basketball League with twelve of the leading industries of the city represented with teams. Double headers are held three evenings a week. A vast number of fine young college men are playing on the teams. A men's night in the new gymnasium, a women's night as well as hours for many of the larger classes of the Bible school and departments of the church keep the gymnasium in constant use. At the Christmas celebration on

DEAD BABIES IN GARBAGE WAGONS

Have you a little baby in your home—child, grandchild, nephew or niece? Then read this report of what happened in interior Russia during the famine:

In the evening the children who had died during the day were gathered together and placed in heaps outside. A garbage cart stopped during the night and the baby bodies were loaded in.—General Relief Committee Bulletin.

To help as many destitute sufferers as possible in Russia and other countries of Europe, is part of the program of the Foreign Mission Society for relief work in Europe during the present winter and next spring.

An opportunity was given to every Baptist church and Sunday school to take a special offering last Sunday, January 21, 1923.

According to an agreement with the Near East Relief, this offering, unless specifically designated otherwise, will be divided between European Relief and Near East Relief.

If you have not already done so, send a check to George B. Huntington, Treasurer, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City, or to your State Collecting Agent, plainly designated Relief Offering.

cago and for a long period district secretary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, will conduct a tour of Europe. Dr. Herbert Hines, pastor at Kankakee, Ill., plans a more extensive trip including Palestine and Egypt. He speaks French, German and Arabic and is familiar with the countries to be visited. The Chicago ministers' conference expressed its appreciation and approval of the tour of Drs. Thomas and Hines. Dr. W. T. Elmore, pastor of the First Church, Lincoln, Neb., has arranged a tour including Stockholm. The party will sail June 7 from New York City and will be gone seventy-two days. Dr. Robert A. Ashworth of Yonkers, New York, is directing a Baptist World Congress Tour. His party will sail June 30. Dr. Ashworth is too well known to need an introduction. He will make an ideal leader for his party. Dr. W. S. Abernethy of Calvary Church, Washington, is also getting up a party. Details of his plans have not been received to date.

The Burlington Church, Salt Lake City, is building a new edifice. The building will be erected in units, the first of which is now in the course of construction. The other units consisting of an auditorium, social room and gymnasium, will be built as fast as money is available for the purpose.

A school of religious education is being conducted by the board of religious education of the First Church, Joliet, Ill. This school is a high-grade, week-night, normal college for the training of religious workers and is open to members of all denominations. Upon the faculty are Prof. Willard R. Jewell, assistant director of vocational training of the University of Chicago, and director of religious education in the First Church, Joliet; Prof. Maurice J. Neuberg and Miss Verle Morrow. The present enrolment is sixty-eight representing twelve different Bible schools.

Harry Pratt Judson, president of the University of Chicago since 1907, and a member of its faculty since 1892, in order that he may devote his time to completing certain investigations and to preparing certain publications which it has been impracticable to carry on under the pressure of administration responsibilities, has decided to retire from the presidency of the university on Feb. 20, 1923, the sixteenth anniversary of his election to the presidency. At the same time he resigns as professor and head of the department of political science and as trustee of the university, thus withdrawing from the institution which he has served for nearly a generation. The board of trustees, with cordial unanimity, has conferred upon him the honorary title of president emeritus and has offered the acting presidency to Ernest D. Burton, professor and head of the department of New Testament and early Christian literature and director of the libraries, who has accepted it.

Church News

Saturday night before Christmas the church and friends among the citizens of Casper surprised the pastor by driving a closed car up to the entrance of the gymnasium and giving him a sales receipt informing him that the car was his. The work is throbbing with energy.

Pacific Coast

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

REV. T. B. FRIZELLE of the First Church, Fresno, baptized twelve persons from the Mexican mission in Fresno. The Mexican work under the leadership of Rev. F. Q. Martinez is prospering and others have been received for baptism. The Mexican pastor has recently held special evangelistic services at Malaga, Dinuba, and other places in the San Joaquin Valley.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

MANY MEMBERS of the Covina Church are using the daily Bible readings and subjects for prayer as suggested by the Promotion Board. The church as a whole observed the month of stewardship and of evangelism; there have been three accessions to our membership. Arrangements are almost perfected for a six weeks' school of religion. At Christmas time special stress was laid on the giving of gifts. Sunday-school children contributed toys, and the older ones useful articles. These were sent, with some money, to the Christian Center in Los Angeles. Christmas Eve services were in charge of the young people who put on a pageant, arranged by Rev. C. D. Eddy, representing some of the principal events in the life of Christ. Much praise must be given Mr. Eddy for his untiring work. Miss Clara Converse who has been at the head of the Baptist Girls' School in Tokio, Japan, for thirty years and was visiting two of her Japanese Christian pupils, who are married and living in this vicinity, spent one Sunday morning with the church and an afternoon with the women. The men's club of the city presented Pastor C. D. Eddy with a handsome leather easy chair, as a token of their appreciation of the work he has done for the community.

Country-Cross Roads and Crowded Cities

The State Mission work of Northern Baptists extends from the cross-roads of the open country to the very heart of the crowded cities. It is a constantly enlarging and upbuilding force.

Work of the Pioneers

"Let us go into the next towns," said Jesus. Missions are always projecting adventures into new territories. The Colorado Convention organized eighteen new Baptist churches last year. Another western state reports twenty strategic opportunities for immediate advance. Nor is the frontier confined to the West. New England is now a field for new pioneers.

Revisits and Revivals

The counsel of Paul is still good for our practice. "Let us go again and visit our brethren in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and see how they do." The re-visit for review and revival has an important part in all permanent advance. To rally a discouraged church is more difficult than to start a new one. Each State has found the process essential in its plans for the development of self-governing, self-supporting and self-propagating churches.

For the New Americans

In addition to its work of aiding feeble churches, Massachusetts now supports twenty-eight missions to new Americans. Wisconsin, Minnesota and the Dakotas serve the Danes, Germans, Italians, Norwegians, Poles and Swedes. Our Pacific Coast forces labor effectively with Chinese, Japanese and other Orientals. The Mexican population stretches from Kansas City to Los Angeles. All the complexity of World Missions is found in some of our states.

Help Us Safe-Guard the Future!

If Baptists are to make missionary conquests at home and abroad, they must not fail adequately to support their State Mission enterprise with all its varied responsibilities and all its manifold tasks.
